THE PRINCIPAL NAVI- GATIONS, VOYAGES, TRAFFIQUES AND DISCOVEries of the English Nation, made by Sea or ouer-land, to the remote and farthest distant quarters of the Earth, at any time within the compasse of these 1600 yerres:

Diuided into three feuerall Volumes, according to the positions of the Regions, whereunto they were directed.

The first Volume containeth the worthy Discoueries, &c. of the English toward the North and Northeast by Sea, as of Lapland, Scirkfinia, Corelia, the Baie of S. Nicolas, the Isles of Colgoieue, Vaigatz, and Nona Zembla, toward the great Riuer Ob, with the mighty Empire of Russia, the Caspian Sea, Georgia, Armenia, Media, Persia, Boghar in Bactria, and diuers kingdomes of Tartaria:

Together with many notable monuments and testimonies of the ancient forren trades, and of the warrelike and other shipping of this Realme of England in former ages,

Whereunto is annexed a brieife Commentary of the true state of Island, and of the Northren Seas and lands situate that way: As also the memorable defeat of the Spanish huge Armada, Anno 1588.

¶ The second Volume comprehendeth the principall Nauigations, Voyages, Traffiques, and discoueries of the English Nation made by Sea or ouer-land, to the South and South-east parts of the World, as well within as without the Streight of Gibraltar, at any time within the compasse of these 1600.
yerres: Diuided into two feuerall parts, &c.

ANNO 1599.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE MY SINGV- LAR GOOD LORD, THE LORD

CHARLES HOWARD, Erle of Nottingham, Baron of Effingham, Knight of the noble Order of the Garter, Lord high Admirall of England, Ireland, and Wales, &c. one of her Maiesties most honourable priuie Counsell.

Ight Honourable and my very good Lord, after I had long since published in Print many Nauigations and Discoueries of Strangers in diuers languages, as well here at London, as in the citie of Paris, during my fise yeeres abode in France, with the woorthie Knight Sir Edward Stafford your brother in lawe, her Maiesties most prudent and carefull Ambassador ligier with the French King: and had waded on still farther and farther in the sweet studie of the historie of Cosmographie,

I began at length to conceiue, that with diligent obseruation, some thing might be gathered which might commend our nation for their high courage and singular actiuitie in the Search and Discouerie of the most vnknown quarters of the world. Howbeit, seeing no man to step forth to vndertake the recording of so many memorable actions, but euery man to fo-low his priuate affaires: the ardent loue of my countrey deuoured all difficulties, and as it were with a sharpe goad prouoked me and thrust me forward into this most troublesome and painfull action. And after great charges and infinite cares, after many watchings, toiles, and trauels, and wearying out of my weake body; at length I haue collected three seuerall Volumes of the English Nauigations, Traffiques, and Discoueries, to strange, remote, and farre distant coun-treys. Which worke of mine I haue not included within the compasse of things onely done in these latter dayes, as though little or nothing woorthie of memorie had bene performed in former ages; but mounting aloft by the space of many hundred yeeres, haue brought to light many very rare and worthy monuments, which long haue lien miserably scattered in mustie corners, & rechelessly hidden in mistie darkenesse, and were very like for the greatest part to haue bene buried in perpetuall obliuion: The first Volume of this worke I haue thus for the present brought to light, reseruing the other two vntill the next Spring, when by Gods grace they shall come to the Presse. In the meane season bethinking my selfe of some munificent and bountifull Patrone, I called to mind your honorable Lordship, who both in regard of my particular obligation, and also in respect of the subiect and matter, might iustly challenge the Patronage thereof. For first I remembred how much I was bound, and how deeply indebted for my yongest brother Edmund Hackluyt, to whom for the space of foure whole yeeres your Lordship committed the gouernment and instruction of that honorable yong noble man, your sonne & heite apparant, the lord Wil- liam Howard, of whose high spirit and wonderful towardlinesse full many a time hath he boasted vnto me. Secondly, the bounden duetie which I owe to your most deare sister the lady Sheffield, my singular good lady & honorable mistresse, admonished me to be mindfull of the renoumed familie of the Howards. Thirdly, when I found in the first Patent graunted by Queene Marie to the Moscouie companie, that my lord your father being then lord high Admirall of England, was one of the first fauourers and furtherers, with his purse and countenance, of the strange and wonderfull Discouerie of Russia, the chiefe contents of this present Volume, then I remēbred the sage saying of sweet Socrates, That sonnes ought not onely to be inheritors of their fathers substance, but also of their commendable vertues and honours. But what I speake I of your ancestors honors (which to say the truerh, are very great, and such as our Chronicles haue notably blazoned) when as your owne Heroicall actions from time to time haue shewed themselues so admirable, as no antiquitie hath afforded greater, and the future times will not in haste (I thinke) performe the like. To come to some particulars, when the Emperors sister, the spouse of Spaine, with a Fleete of an 130. sailes, stoutly and proudly passed the narrow Seas, your Lordship accompanied with ten ships onely of her Maiesties Nauie Roiall, enuironed their Fleet in most strange and warrelike sort, enforced them to stoope gallant, and to vaile their bonets for the Queene of England, and made them perfectly to vnderstand that olde speach of the prince of Poets;

sed tibi sorte datum.*

Yet after they had acknowledged their dutie, your lordship on her Maiesties behalfe conducted her safely through our English chanell, and performed all good offices of honor and humanitie to that forren Princeesse. At that time all England beholding your most honorable cariage of your selfe in that so weightie seruice, began to cast an extraordinarie eie vpon your lordship, and deeply to conceiue that singular hope which since by your most worthie & wonderfull seruice, your L. hath more then fully satisfied. I meane (among others) that glorious, triumphant, and thrise-happy victory atchieued against that huge and haultie Spanish Armada (which is notably described in the ende of this volume) wherein being chiefe and sole Commander vnder her sacred and roiall Maiestie, your noble gouernment and worthy behauior, your high wisdom, discretion and happinesse, accompanied with the heauenly blessing of the Almighty, are shewed most euidently to haue bene such, as all posteritie and succeeding ages shall neuer cease to sing and resound your infinite prayse and eternall commendations. As for the late renoumed expedition and honorable voyage vnto Cadiz, the vanquishing of part of the king of Spaines Armada, the destruction of the rich West Indian Fleete, the chasing of so many braue and gallant Gallies, the miraculous winning, sacking, and burning of that almost impregnable citie of Cadiz, the surprising of the towne of Faraon vpon the coast of Portugal, and other rare appendances of that enterprize, because they be hereafter so iudicially set downe, by a very graue and learned Gentleman, which was an eye witnesse in all that action, I referre your good L. to his faithfull report, wherein I trust (as much as in him lay) he hath wittingly deprived no man of his right. Vpon these and other the like considerations, I thought it fit and very conuenient to commend with all humilitie and reuerence this first part of our English Voiages & Discoueries vnto your Honors fauourable censure and patronage.

And here by the way most humbly crauing pardon, and alwayes submitting my poore opinion to your Lordships most deep and percing insight, especially in

in this matter, as being the father and principall fauourer of the English Nauigation, I trust it shall not be impertinent in passing by, to point at the meanes of breeding vp of skilfull Sea-men and Mariners in this Realme. Sithence your Lordship is not ignorant, that ships are to litle purpose without skilfull Sea-men; and since Sea-men are not bred vp to perfection of skill in much lesse time (as it is said) then in the time of two prentiships; and since no kinde of men of any profession in the common wealth passe their yeres in so great and continuall hazard of life; and since of so many, so few grow to gray heires: how needfull it is, that by way of Lectures and such like instructions, these ought to haue a better education, then hitherto they haue had; all wise men may easily iudge. When I call to minde, how many noble ships haue bene lost, how many worthy persons haue bene drenched in the sea, and how greatly this Realme hath bene impouerished by losse of great Ordinance and other rich commodities through the ignorance of our Sea-men, I haue greatly wished there were a Lecture of Nauigation read in this Citie, for the banishing of our former grosse ignorance in Marine causes, and for the increase and generall multiplying of the sea-knowledge in this age, wherein God hath raised so generall a desire in the youth of this Realme to discover all parts of the face of the earth, to this Realme in former ages not knowen. And, that it may appeare that this is no vaine fancie nor deuise of mine, it may please your Lordship to vnderstand, that the late Emperour Charles the fift, considering the rawnesse of his Sea-men, and the manifold shipwracks which they susteyned in passing and repassing betweene Spaine and the West Indies, with an high reach and great foresight, established not onely a Pilote Maior, for the examination of such as sought to take charge of ships in that voyage, but also founded a notable Lecture of the Art of Nauigation, which is read to this day in the Contractation house at Siuil. The readers of which Lecture haue not only carefully taught and instructed the Spanish Mariners by word of mouth, but also haue published sundry exact and worthy treatises concerning Marine causes, for the direction and encouragement of posteritie. The learned works of three of which readers, namely of Alonso de Chauvez, of Hieronymo de Chauvez; and of Roderigo Zamorano came long ago very happily to my hands, together with the straight and seuer examining of all such Masters as desire to take charge for the West Indies. Which when I first read and duely considered, it seemed to mee so excellent and so exact a course, as I greatly wished, that I might be so happy as to see the like order established here with vs. This matter, as it seemeth, tooke no light impression in the royall brest of that most renowned and victorious prince King Henry the eight of famous memory; who for the increase of knowledge in his Sea-men, with princely liberalitie erected three seuerall Guilds or brotherhoods, the one at Deptford here vpon the Thames, the other at Kingston vpon Hull, and the third at Newcastle vpon Tine: which last was established in the 28. yeere of his reigne. The chiefe motiues which induced his princely wisdom hereunto, himselfe expresseth in maner following. Vt magistri, marinarij, gubernatores, & alij officarij nauium, iuuentutem suam in exercitatione gubernationis nauium transigentes, mutilati, aut aliquo alio casu in paupertatem collapsi, aliquod releuamen ad eorum sustentationem habeant, quo non solum illi reficiantur, verum etiam alij iuuenes moueantur & instigentur ad eandem artem exercendam, ratione cuius, doctiores & aptiores fiant nauibus & alijs vasis nostris & aliorum quorumcunque in Mare gubernandis & manutenedis, tam pacis, quam belli tempore, cum opus postulet, &c. To descend a litle lower, king Edward the sixt that prince of peerelesse hope, with the aduise of his sage and prudent Counsaile, before he entred into the Northeasterne discovery, aduanced the worthy and excellent Sebastian Cabota to be grand Pilot of England, allowing him a most bountifull pension of 166.li.vj.s.viij.d. by the yeere during his life, as appeareth in his Letters Patents which are to be seene in the third part of my worke. And if God had granted him longer life, I doubt not but as he delt most royally in establishing that office of Pilote Maior (which not long after to the great hinderance of this Common wealth was miserably turned to other priuate vses) so his princely Maiestie would haue shewed himselfe no nigard in erecting, in imitation of Spaine, the like profitable Lecture of the Art of Nauigation. And surely when I considered of late the memorable bountie of sir Thomas Gresham, who being but a Merchant hath founded so many chargeable Lectures, and some of them also which are Mathematicall, tending to the aduancement of Marine causes; I nothing doubted of your Lordships forwardnes in settling and establishing of this Lecture; but rather when your Lordship shall see the noble and rare effects thereof, you will be heartily sory that all this while it hath not bene erected. As therefore our skill in Nauigation hath hitherto bene very much bettered and increased vnder the Admiraltie of your Lordship; so if this one thing be added thereunto, together with seuer and straight discipline, I doubt not but with Gods good blessing it will shortly grow to the hiest pitch and top of all perfection: which whensoever it shall come to passe, I assure my selfe it will turne to the infinite wealth and honour of our Countrey, to the prosperous and speedy discouery of many rich lands and territories of heathens and gentiles as yet vnknown, to the honest employment of many thousands of our idle people, to the great comfort and reioicing of our friends, to the terror, daunting and confusion of our foes. To ende this matter, let mee now I beseech you speake vnto your Lordship, as in times past the elder Scipio spake to Cornelius Scipio Africanus: Quod sis, Africane, alacrior ad tutandam Rempublicam, sic habeto: Omnibus, qui patriam conseruauerint, adiuerint, auxerint, certum esse in cælo, ac definitum locum, ubi beati auo sempiterno fruantur. It remaineth therefore, that as your Lordship from time to time vnder her most gracious and excellent Maiestie, haue shewed your selfe a valiant protectour, a carefull conseruer, and an happy enlarger of the honour and reputation of your Countrey; so at length you may enioy those celestial blessings, which are prepared to such as tread your steps, and seeke to aspire to such diuine and heroical vertues. And euen here I surcease, wishing all temporal and spirituall blessings of the life present and that which is to come to be powred out in most ample measure, not onely vpon your honourable Lordship, the noble and vertuous Lady your bedfellow, and those two rare iewels, your generous off-springs, but also vpon all the rest wheresoeuer of that your noble and renowned family. From London the 7. day of this present October 1598.

Your honours most humble alwayes to be commanded:

Richard Hakluyt Preacher.

HAuing for the benefit and honour of my Countrey zealously bestowed so many yerres, so much traueile and cost, to bring Antiquities smothered and buried in darke silence, to light, and to preserve certaine memorable exploits of late yeeres by our English nation atchieued, from the greedy and deuouring iawes of obliuion: to gather likewise, and as it were to incorporate into one body the torne and scattered limmes of our ancient and late Navigations by Sea, our voyages by land, and traffiques of merchandise by both: and hauing (so much as in me lieth) restored ech particular member, being before displaced, to their true ioynts and ligaments; I meane, by the helpe of Geographie and Chronologie (which I may call the Sunne and the Moone, the right eye and the left of all history) referred ech particular relation to the due time and place: I do this second time (friendly Reader, if not to satisfie, yet at least for the present to allay and hold in suspense thine expectation) presume to offer vnto thy view this first part of my threefold discourse. For the bringing of which into this homely and rough-hewen shape, which here thou seest; what restless nights, what painefull dayes, what heat, what cold I haue indured; how many long & chargeable iourneys I haue traueiled; how many famous libraries I haue searched into; what varietie of ancient and moderne writers I haue perused; what a number of old records, patents, priuileges, letters, &c. I haue redeemed from obscuritie and perishing; into how manifold acquaintance I haue entred; what expenses I haue not spared; and yet what faire opportunities of priuate gaine, preferment, and ease I haue neglected; albeit thy selfe canst hardly imagine, yet I by daily experience do finde & feele, and some of my entier friends can sufficiently testifie. Howbeit (as I told thee at the first) the honour and benefit of this Common weale wherein I liue and breathe, hath made all difficulties seeme easie, all pains and industrie pleasant, and all expenses of light value and moment vnto me.

For (to containe my selfe onely within the bounds of this present discourse, and in the midst thereof to begin) wil it not in all posteritie be as great a renouue vnto our English nation, to haue bene the first discoverers of a Sea beyond the North cape (neuer certainly known before) and of a conuenient passage into the huge Empire of Russia by the bay of S. Nicolas and the riuer of Duina; as for the Portugales to haue found a Sea beyond the Cape of Buona Esperanza, and so consequently a passage by Sea into the East Indies; or for the Italians and Spaniards to haue discovered vknownen landes so many hundred leagues Westward and Southwestward of the streits of Gibraltar, & of the pillars of Hercules? Be it granted that the renowned Portugale Vasquez de Gama trauesed the maine Ocean Southward of Africke: Did not Richard Chancellor and his mates performe the like Northward of Europe? Suppose that Columbus that noble and high-spirited Genuois escried vknownen landes to the Westward of Europe and Africke: Did not the valiant English knight sir Hugh Willoughby; did not the famous Pilots Stephen Burrough, Arthur Pet, and Charles Iackman accoast Noua Zembla, Colgoieue, and Vaigatz to the North of Europe and Asia? Howbeit you will say perhaps, not with the like golden successe, not with such deductions of Colonies, nor attaining of conquests. True it is, that our successe hath not bene correspondent vnto theirs: yet in this our attempt the vncertaintie of finding was farre greater, and the difficultie and danger of searching was no whit lesse. For hath not Herodotus (a man for his time, most skilfull and iudicial in Cosmographie, who writ aboue 2000. yeeres ago) in his 4. booke called Mel-

pomene, signified unto the Portugales in plaine termes; that Africa, except the small Isthmus between the Arabian gulfes and the Meditterran sea, was on all sides enuironed with the Ocean? And for the further confirmation thereof, doth he not make mention of one Neco an Egyptian King, who (for trials sake) sent a Fleet of Phoenicians downe the Red sea; who setting forth in Autumne and sailing Southward, till they had the Sunne at noonetide vpon their sterbourd (that is to say, hauing crossed the Equinoctial and the Southerne tropique) after a long Nauigation, directed their course to the North, and in the space of 3.yeeres enuironed all Africk, passing home through the Gaditan streites, and arriuing in Egypt? And doth not Plinie tel them, that noble Hanno, in the flourishing time and estate of Carthage, sailed from Gades in Spaine to the coast of Arabia foelix, and put downe his whole iournall in writing? Doth he not make mention, that in the time of Augustus Cesar, the wracke of certaine Spanish ships was found floating in the Arabian gulfes? And, not to be ouer-reidious in alleaging of testimonies, doth not Strabo in the 2.booke of his Geography, together with Cornelius Nepos and Plinie in the place beforenamed, agree all in one, that one Eudoxus fleeing from king Lathyrus, and valing downe the Arabian bay, sailed along, doubled the Southern point of Africk, and at length arriued at Gades? And what should I speake of the Spaniards? Was not diuine Plato (who liued so many ages ago, and plainly described their West Indies vnder the name of Atlantis) was not he (I say) in stead of a Cosmographer vnto them? Were not those Carthaginians mentioned by Aristotle lib. || de admirabil. auscult. their forerunners?
 And had they not Columbus to stirre them vp, and pricke them forward vnto their Westerne discoveries; yea, to be their chiefe loads-man and Pilot? Sithens therefore these two worthy Nations had those bright lampes of learning (I meane the most ancient and best Philosophers, Historiographers and Geographers) to shewe them light; and the load-starre of experience (to wit those great exploits and voyages layed vp in store and recorded) whereby to shape their course: what great attempt might they not presume to undertake? But alas our English nation, at the first setting forth for their Northeasterne discovery, were either altogether destitute of such cleare lights and inducements, or if they had any inkling at all, it was as misty as they found the Northren seas, and so obscure and ambiguous, that it was meet rather to deterre them, then to giue them encouragement.

But besides the foresaid vncertaintie, into what dangers and difficulties they plunged themselves, Animus meminisse horret, I tremble to recount. For first they were to expose themselves vnto the rigour of the sterne and uncouth Northren seas, and to make triall of the swelling waues and boistrous winds which there commonly do surge and blow:
 then were they to saile by the ragged and perilous coast of Norway, to frequent the un-haunted shoares of Finmark, to double the dreadfull and misty North cape, to beare with Willoughbies land, to run along within kenning of the Countreys of Lapland and Corelia, and as it were to open and unlocke the seuen-fold mouth of Duina. Moreouer, in their Northeasterly Nauigations, vpon the seas and by the coasts of Condora, Colgoi-eue, Petzora, Ioughoria, Samoedia, Noua Zembla, &c. and their passing and returne through the streits of Vaigatz, vnto what drifts of snow and mountaines of yce euen in Iune, Iuly, and August, vnto what hideous ouersals, vncertaine currents, darke mists and fogs, and diuers other fearefull inconueniences they were subiect and in danger of, I wish you rather to learne out of the voyages of sir Hugh Willoughbie, Stephen Burrough, Arthur Pet and the rest, then to expect in this place an endlesse catalogue thereof.
 And here by the way I cannot but highly commend the great industry and magnanimity of the Hollanders, who within these few yeeres haue discovered to 78.yea (as themselves affirme) to 81.degrees of Northerly latitude: yet with this prouiso; that our English nation led them the dance, brake the yce before them, and gaue them good leaue to light their candle at our torch. But nowe it is high time for vs to weigh our ancre, to hoise vp our sailes, to get cleare of these boistrous, frosty, and misty seas, and with all speede to direct our course for the milde, lightsome, temperate, and warme Atlantick Ocean, ouer which the Spaniards and Portugales haue made so many pleasant prosperous and golden voyages. And albeit I cannot deny, that both of them in their East and West Indian Navigations haue indured many tempests, dangers and shipwracks: yet this dare I boldly affirme; first that a great number of them haue satisfied their fame-thirsty and gold-thirsty mindes with that reputation and wealth, which made all perils and misadventures seeme tolerable vnto them; and secondly, that their first attempts (which in this comparison I doe onely stand vpon) were no whit more difficult and dangerous, then ours to the Northeast. For admit that the way was much longer, yet was it neuer barred with yce, mist, or darknes, but was at all seasons of the yeere open and Nauigable; yea and that for the most part with fortunate and fit gales of winde. Moreouer they had no forren prince to intercept or molest them, but their owne Townes, Islands, and maine lands to succour them. The Spaniards had the Canary Isles: and so had the Portugales the Isles of the Açores, of Porto sanro, of Madera, of Cape verd, the castle of Mina, the fruitfull and profitable Isle of S. Thomas, being all of them conueniently situated, and well fraught with commodities. And had they not continuall and yereley trade in some one part or other of Africa, for getting of slaues, for sugar, for Elephants teeth, graines, siluer, gold, and other precious wares, which serued as allurements to draw them on by little and little, and as proppes to stay them from giuing over their attempts? But now let vs leaue them and returne home vnto our selues.

In this first Volume (friendly Reader) besides our Northeasterne Discoveries by sea, and the memorable voyage of M. Christopher Hodson, and M. William Burrough, Anno 1570. to the Narue, wherein with merchants ships onely, they tooke fine strong and warrelike ships of the Freebooters, which lay within the sound of Denmark of purpose to intercept our English Fleece: besides all these (I say) thou maiest find here recorded, to the lasting honor of our nation, all their long and dangerous voyages for the aduancing of traffique by riuer and by land to all parts of the huge and wide Empire of Russia: as namely Richard Chancellor his first fortunate arriuall at Newnox, his passing vp the riuer of Dwina to the citie of Vologda for the space of 1100. versts, and from thence to Yaruslaue, Rostoue, Peraulaue, and so to the famous citie of Mosco, being 1500. versts trauell in all. Moreouer, here thou hast his voyage penned by himselfe (which I hold to be very authentical, & for the which I do acknowledge my selfe beholding vnto the excellent Librarie of the right honorable my lord Lumley) wherein he describeth in part the state of Russia, the maners of the people and their religion, the magnificence of the Court, the maiestie, power, and riches of the Emperour, and the gracious entertainment of himselfe. But if he being the first man, and not hauing so perfect intelligence as they that came after him, doeth not fullie satisfie your expectation in describing the foresayd countrey and people; I then referre you to Clement Adams his relation next following, to M. Ienkinsons discourse as touching that argument, to the smooth verses of M. George Turberville, and to a learned and excellent discourse set downe, pag. 475. of this volume, and the pages following. Vnto all which (if you please) you may adde Richard Iohnsons strange report of the Samoeds, pag. 283. But to returne to our voyages performed within the bounds of Russia, I suppose (among the rest) that difficult iourney of Southam and Sparke, from Colmogro and S. Nicholas Baie, vp the great riuer of Onega, and so by other riuers and lakes to the citie of Nouogrod velica vpon the West frontier of Russia, to be right woorthy of obseruation; as likewise that of Thomas Alcock from Mosco to Smolensko, and thence to Tirwill in Polonia, pag. 304. & that also of M. Hierome Horsey from Mosco to Vobsko, and so through Liefland to Riga, thence by the chiefe townes of Prussia and Pomerland to Rostok, and so to Hamburg, Breme, Emden, &c. Neither hath our nation bene contented onely thoroughly to search into all parts of the Inland, and to view the Northren, Southerne, and Westerne frontiers, but also by the riuers of Molcua, Occa and Volga, to visite Cazan and Astracan, the farthest Easterne and Southeasterne bounds of that huge Empire. And yet not containing themselves within all that maine circumference, they haue aduentured their persons, shippes, and goods, home-wards and outwards, foureteene times ouer the unknowne and dangerous Caspian sea; that valiant, wise, and personable gentleman M. Anthonie Ienkinson being their first ring-leader: who in Anno 1558. sailing from Astracan towards the East shore of the Caspian sea, and there arriuing at the port of Mangusla, travelled thence by Vrgence and Shelisur, and by the riuers of Oxus and Ardok, 40. dayes iourney ouer desert and wast countreys, to Boghar a principall citie of Baetria, being there & by the way friendly entertained, dismissed, and safely conducted by certaine Tartarian kings and Murfes. Then haue you a second Navigation of his performance to the South shore of the foresayd Caspian sea, together with his landing at Derbent, his arriual at Shabran, his proceeding vnto Shamaky, the great curtesie vouchsafed on him by Obdolowcan king of Hircan, his iourney after of 30. dayes Southward, by Yauate, Ardouil, and other townes and cities to Casben, being as then the seate imperiall of Shaugh Thamas the great Sophy of Persia, with diuers other notable accidents in his going forth, in his abode there, and in his returne home. Immediately after you haue set downe in fine seuerall voiajes the successe of M. Ienkinsons laudable and well-begun enterprise, vnder the foresayd Shaugh Thamas, vnder Shally Murzey the new king of Hircan, and lastly our traffique with Osman Basha the great Turkes lieutenant at Derbent. Moreouer, as in M. Ienkinsons trauel to Boghar the Tartars, with their territories, habitations, maner of lining, apparell, food, armour, &c. are most liuely represented vnto you: so likewise in the sixe Persian Iournals you may here and there obserue the state of that countrey, of the great Shaugh and of his subiects, together with their religion, lawes, customes, & maner of gouernment, their coines, weights and measures, the distances of places, the temperature of the climate and region, and the natural commodities and discommodities of the same.

Furthermore in this first Volume, all the Ambassages and Negotiations from her Maieestic to the Russian Emperour, or from him vnto her Maieestic, seemed by good right to challenge their due places of Record. As namely, first that of M. Randolph, 1568. then the employment of M. Ienkinson 1571. thirdly, Sir Ierome Bowes his honorable commission and ambassage 1582. and last of all the Ambassage of M. Doct. Fletcher 1588. Neither do we forget the Emperours first Ambassador Olep Napea, his arriual in Scotland, his most honourable entertainment and abode in England, and his dismissal into Ruffeland. In the second place we doe make mention of Stephen Tuerdico, and Pheodata Pogorella; thirdly, of Andrea Sauin; and lastly, of Pheodor Andrevich Phisemski. And to be brieft, I haue not omitted the Commissions, Letters, Priuileges, Instructions, Obseruations, or any other Particulars which might serue both in this age, and with all posteritie, either for presidents in such like princely and weightie actions to bee imitated, or as woorthie monuments in no wise to bee buried in silence. Finally, that nothing should be wanting which might adde any grace or shew of perfection vnto this discourse of Russia; I haue prefixed before the beginning thereof, the petigree and genealogie of the Russian Emperours and Dukes, gathered out of their owne Chronicles by a Polonian, containing in brieft many notable antiquities and much knowledge of those partes: as likewise about the conclusion, I haue signified in the branch of a letter, the last Emperour Pheodor Iuanowich his death, and the inauguration of Boris Pheodorowich vnto the Empire.

But that no man should imagine that our forren trades of merchandise haue bene comprised within some few yeeres, or at least wise haue not bene of any long continuance; let vs now withdraw our selues from our affaires in Russia, and ascending somewhat higher, let vs take a sleight suruey of our traffiques and negotiations in former ages. First therefore the Reader may haue recourse vnto the 124 page of this Volume, & there with great delight delight and admiration, consider out of the iudicial Historiographer Cornelius Tacitus, that the Citie of London fiftene hundred yeeres agoe in the time of Nero the Emperour, was most famous for multitude of merchants and concourse of people. In the pages following he may learne out of Venerable Beda, that almost 900. yeeres past, in the time of the Saxons, the said citie of London was multorum emporium populorum, a Mart-towne for many nations. There he may behold, out of William of Malmesburie, a league concluded betweene the most renoumed and victoricus Germane Emperour Carolus Magnus, and the Saxon king Offa, together with the sayd Charles his patronage and protection granted vnto all English merchants which in those dayes frequented his dominions. There may hee plainly see in an auncient testimonie translated out of the Saxon tongue, how our merchants were often woont for traffiques sake, so many hundred yeeres since, to crosse the wide Seas, and how their industry in so doing was recompensed. Tea, there mayest thou obserue (friendly Reader) what priuileges the Danish king Canutus obtained at Rome of Pope Iohn, of Conradus the Emperour, and of king Rudolphus for our English merchants Aduenturers of those times. Then if you shall thinke good to descend vnto the times and ages succeeding the conquest, there may you partly see what our state of merchandise was in the time of king Stephen and of his predecessor, and how the Citie of Bristol (which may seeme somewhat strange) was then greatly resorted vnto with ships from Norway and from Ireland. There may you see the friendly league betweene king Henry the second, and the famous Germane Emperour Friderick Barbarossa, and the gracious authorizing of both their merchäts to traffique in either of their dominions. And what need I to put you in mind of king Iohn his fauourable safe-conduct, whereby all forren merchants were to haue the same priuileges here in England, which our English merchants enioied abroad in their seuerall countreys. Or what should I signifie vnto you the entercourse of league and of other curtesies betweene king Henry the third, and Haquinus king of Norway; and likewise of the free trade of merchandise between their subiects: or tell you what fauours the citizens of Colen, of Lubek, and of all the Hanse-townes obtained of king Edward the first; or to what high endes and purposes the generall, large, and statelie Charter concerning all outlandish merchants whatsoeuer was by the same prince most graciously published? You are of your owne industry sufficiently able to conceiue of the letters & negociations which passed between K. Edward the 2. & Haquinus the Noruagian king; of our English merchants and their goods detained vpon arrest at Bergen in Norway; and also of the first ordination of a Staple, or of one onely settled Mart-towne for the vntering of English woolls & woollen fells, instituted by the sayd K. Edward last before named. All which (Reader) being thoroughly considered, I referre you then to the Ambassages, Letters, Traffiques, and prohibition of Traffiques, concluding and repealing of leagues, damages, reprisals, arrests, complaints, supplications, compositions and restitutions which happened in the time of king Richard the 2. and king Henry the 4. between the said kings and their subiects on the one partie; and Conradus de Zolner, Conradus de Iungingen, and Vlricus de Iungingen, three of the great masters of Prussia, and their subiects, with the common societie of the Hanse-townes on the other partie. In all which discourse you may note very many memorable things; as namely first the wise, discreet, and cautious dealing of the Ambassadors and Commissioners of both parts, then the wealth of the foresaid nations, and their manifold and most vsuall kinds of wares vntered in those dayes, as likewise the qualitie, burthen, and strength of their shipping, the number of their Mariners, the maner of their combates at sea, the number and names of the English townes which traded that way, with the particular places as well vpon the coast of Norway, as euery where within the sound of Denmark which they frequented; together with the inueterate malice and craftie crueltie of the Hanse. And because the name, office, and dignitie of the masters generall, or great Masters of Prussia would otherwise haue bene utterly darke and unknownen to the greater part of Readers, I haue set downe immediatly before the first Prussian ambassage, pagina 144 a brieft and orderly Catalogue of them all, contayning the first originall and institution of themselves and of their whole knightly order and brotherhood, with the increase of reuenues and wealth which befell them afterward in Italy and Germany and the great conquests which they atchieued vpon the infidels of Prussia, Samogitia, Curland, Liefland, Lituania, &c. also their decay and finall ouerthrow, partly by the reuolt of diuers Townes and Castles vnder their iurisdiction, and partly by the meanes of their next mightie neighbour the King of Poland.

After all these, out of 2. branches of 2. ancient statutes, is partly shewed our trade and the successe thereof with diuers forren Nations in the time of K. Henry the sixt.

Then followeth the true processe of English policie, I meane that excellent and pithy treatise de politia conseruatiua maris: which I cannot to any thing more fitly compare, then to the Emperour of Russia his palace called the golden Castle, and described by Richard Chancellor pag. 238. of this volume: whereof albeit the outward apparence was but homely and no whit correspondent to the name, yet was it within so beautified and adorned with the Emperour his maiesticall presence, with the honourable and great assembly of his rich-attired Peers and Senatours, with an inualluable and huge masse of gold and silver plate, & with other princely magnificence; that well might the eyes of the beholders be dazeled, and their cogitations astonished thereat. For indeed the exteriour habit of this our English politician, to wit, the harsh and vnaffected stile of his substantiall verses and the olde dialect of his wordes is such; as the first may seeme to haue bene whistled of Pans oaten pipe, and the second to haue proceeded from the mother of Euander: but take you off his vtmost weed, and beholde the comelinesse, beautie, and riches which lie hid within his inward sense and sentence; and you shall finde (I wisse) so much true and sound policy, so much delightfull and pertinent history, so many lively descriptions of the shipping and wares in his time of all the nations almost in Christendome, and such a subtile discovery of outlandish merchants fraud, and of the sophistication of their wares; that needes you must acknowledge, that more matter and substance could in no wise be comprised in so little a roome. And notwithstanding (as I said) his stile be vnpolished, and his phrases somewhat out of vse; yet, so neere as the written copies would giue me leaue, I haue most religiously without alteration obserued the same: thinking it farre more conuenient that himselfe should speake, then that I should bee his spokesman; and that the Readers should enioy his true verses, then mine or any other mans fained prose.

Next after the conclusion of the last mentioned discourse, the Reader may in some sort take a view of our state of merchandise vnder K. Edward the fourth, as likewise of the establishing of an English company in the Netherlands, and of all the discreet prouisoies, iust ordinations, & gracious priuileges contained in the large Charter which was granted for the same purpose.

Now besides our voyages and trades of late yeeres to the North and Northeast regions of the world, and our ancient traffique also to those parts; I haue not bene vnmindefull (so farre as the historic of England and of other Countreys would giue me direction) to place in the fore-front of this booke those forren conquests, exploits, and trauels of our English nation, which haue bene atchieued of old. Where in the first place (as I am credibly informed out of Galfridus Monumetensis, and out of M. Lambert his Apocrypha) I haue published vnto the world the noble actes of Arthur and Malgo two British Kings. Then followeth in the Saxons time K. Edwin his conquest of Man and Anglesey, and the expedition of Bertus into Ireland. Next succeedeth Othier making relation of his doings, and describing the North Countreys, vnto his soueraigne Lord K. Ecfred. After whom Wolstans Nauigation within the Sound of Denmark is mentioned, the voyage of the yong Princes Edmund and Edward into Sweden and Hungarie is recorded, as likewise the mariage of Harald his daughter vnto the Russian duke Ierullaus. Neither is that Englishman forgotten, who was forced to traueile with the cruel Tartars into their Countrey, and from thence to beare them company into Hungary and Poland. And because those Northeasterne Regions beyond Volga, by reason of the huge deserts, the colde climate, and the barbarous inciuilitie of the people there inhabiting, were neuer yet thoroughly traueiled by any of our Nation, nor sufficiently knowne vnto vs; I haue here annexed vnto the said Englishmans traueile, the rare & memorable iourmals of 2. Friers, who were some of the first Christians that traueiled farthest that way, and brought home most particular intelligence & knowledge of all things which they had seene. These Friers were sent as Ambassadors vnto the sauage Tartars (who had as then wasted and ouerrunne a great part of Asia and had pierced farre into Europe with fire and sword) to mitigate their fury, and to offer the glad tidings of the Gospel vnto them. The former, namely Iohannes de Plano Carpini (whose iourney, because he roade sixe moneths poste directly beyond Boristhenes, did, I thinke, both for length and difficultie farre surpass that of Alexander the great, vnto the riuer of Indus) was in the yeere 1246. sent with the authoritie and commission of a Legate from Pope Innocentius the fourth: who passed through more garisons of the Tartars, and wandered ouer more wast, barren, and cold deserts, then (I suppose) an army of an hundred thousand good souldiers could haue done. The other, to wit, William de Rubricis, was 1253. by the way of Constantinople, of the Euxin sea, and of Taurica Chersonesus employed in an ambassage from Lewis the French King (waging warre as then against the Saracens in the Holy land) vnto one Sartach a great duke of the Tartars, which Sartach sent him forth with vnto his father Baatu, and from Baatu he was conducted ouer many large territories vnto the Court of Mangu-Can their Emperour. Both of them haue so well played their parts, in declaring what befell them before they came at the Tartars, what a terrible and vnmanerly welcoming they had at their first arriual, what cold intertainment they felt in traueiling towards the great Can, and what slender cheere they found at his Court; that they seeme no lesse worthy of praise then of pitie. But in describing of the Tartars Countrey, and of the Regions adiacent, in setting downe the base and sillie beginnings of that huge and ouerspreading Empire, in registring their manifolde warres and bloody conquests, in making relation of their hords and mooueable Townes, as likewise of their food, apparell and armour, and in setting downe their vnmercifull lawes, their fond superstitions, their bestiall liues, their vicious maners, their slavish subiection to their owne superiours, and their disdainfull and brutish inhumanitie vnto strangers, they deserue most exceeding and high commendation. Howbeit if any man shall obiekt that they haue certaine incredible relations: I answere, first, that many true things may to the ignorant seeme incredible. But suppose there be some particulars which hardly will be credited; yet thus much I will boldly say for the Friers, that those particulars are but few, and that they doe not auouch them vnder their owne names, but from the report of others. Yet farther imagine that they did auouch them, were they not to be pardoned as well as Herodotus, Strabo, Plutarch, Plinie, Solinus, yea & a great many of our new principall writers, whose names you may see about the end of this Preface; euery one of which hath reported more strange things then the Friers between the both? Nay, there is not any history in the world (the most Holy writ excepted) whereof we are precisely bound to beleue ech word and syllable. Moreouer sithens these two iourmals are so rare, that Mercator and Ortelius (as their letters vnto me do testifie) were many yeeres very inquisitive, and could not for all that attaine vnto them; and sithens they haue bene of so great accompt with those two famous Cosmographers, that according to some fragments of them they haue described in their Mappes a great part of those Northeasterne Regions; sith also that these two relations containe in some respect more exact history of those vnknewen parts, then all the ancient and newe writers that euer I could set mine eyes on: I thought it good, if the translation should chance to swerue in ought from the originals (both for the preservation of the originals themselues,

To the Reader.

themselves, and the satisfying of the Reader) to put them downe word for word in that homely stile wherein they were first penned. And for these two rare iewels, as likewise for many other extraordinary courtesies, I must here acknowledge my selfe most deeply bounden vnto the right reuerend, graue, and learned Prelate, my very good lord the Bishop of Chichester, and L. high Almner vnto her Maiestie; by whose friendship and meanes I had free accessse vnto the right honor. my L. Lumley his stately library, and was permitted to copy out of ancient manuscripts, these two iournals and some others also.

After these Friers (though not in the next place) foloweth a testimonie of Gerardus Mercator, and another of M. Dee, concerning one Nicholas de Linna an English Franciscan Frier.

Then succedeth the long iourney of Henry Earle of Derby, and afterward king of England into Prussia & Lithuania, with a brieve remembrance of his valiant exploits against the Infidels there; as namely, that with the help of certaine his Associates, he vanquished the king of Letto his armie, put the sayd king to flight, tooke and slew diuers of his captains, aduanced his English colourrs vpon the wall of Vilna, & made the citie it selfe to yeeld. Then mention is made also of Tho. of Woodstock his trauel into Pruis, and of his returne home. And lastly, our old English father Ennius, I meane, the learned, wittie, and profound Geoffrey Chaucer, vnder the person of his knight, doeth full iudicially and like a cunning Cosmographer, make report of the long voiages and woorthy exploits of our English Nobles, Knights, & Gentlemen, to the Northren, and to other partes of the world in his dayes.

Neither haue we comprehended in this Volume, onely our Trades and Voiages both new and old; but also haue scattered here and there (as the circumstance of times would giue vs leaue) certaine fragments concerning the beginnings, antiquities, and growth of the classical and warrelike shipping of this Island: as namely, first of the great nauie of that victorious Saxon prince king Edgar, mentioned by Florentius Wigorniensis, Roger Houeden, Rainulph of Chester, Matthew of Westminster, Flores historiarum, & in the libel of English policie, pag. 202. and 203. of this present volume. Of which Authors some affirme the sayd Fleet to haue consisted of 4800. others of 4000. some others of 3600. ships: howbeit (if I may presume to gloze vpon the text) I verily thinke that they were not comparable, either for burthen, strength, building, or nimble stirrage vnto the ships of later times, and specially of this age. But howsoeuer it be, they all agree in this, that by meanes of the sayd huge Fleet he was a most puissant prince; yea, and some of them affirme together with William of Malmesbury, that he was not onely soueraigne lord of all the British seas, and of the whole Isle of Britaine it selfe, but also that he brought vnder his yoke of subiection, most of the Isles and some of the maine lands adiacent. And for that most of our Nauigators at this time bee (for want of trade and practise that way) either utterly ignorant, or but meanely skilfull, in the true state of the Seas, Shoulds, and Islands, lying between the North part of Ireland and of Scotland; I haue for their better encouragement (if any weightie action shall hereafter chance to drawe them into those quarters) translated into English a brieue treatise called, A Chronicle of the Kings of Man. Wherein they may behold as well the tragical and dolefull historie of those parts, for the space almost of 300. yeeres, as also the most ordinarie and accustomed nauigations, through those very seas, and amidst those Northwesterne Isles called the Hebrides, so many hundred yeeres agoe. For they shall there read, that euen then (when men were but rude in sea-causes in regard of the great knowledge which we now haue) first Godredus Crovan with a whole Fleet of ships, thoroughly haunted some places in that sea: secondly, that one Ingemundus setting saile out of Norway, arriued vpon the Isle of Lewis: then, that Magnus the king of Norway came into the same seas with 160. sailes, and hauing subdued the Orkney Isles in his way, passed on in like conquering maner, directing his course (as it should seeme) euen through the very midst, and on all sides of the Hebrides, who who sailing thence to Man, conquered it also, proceeding afterward as farre as Anglesey; and lastly crosing ouer from the Isle of Man to the East part of Ireland. Yea, there they shall read of Godredus the sonne of Olauus his voiage to the king of Norway, of his expedition with 80. ships against Sumerledus, of Sumerled his expedition with 53. ships against him; of Godred his flight and second iourney into Norway; of Sumerled his second arriuall with 160. shippes at Rhinfrin vpon the coast of Man, and of many other such combates, assaults, & voyages which were performed onely vpon these seas & Islands. And for the bringing of this woorthy monument to light, we doe owe great thanks vnto the iudiciall and famous Antiquarie M. Camden. But sithens we are entred into a discourse of the ancient warrelike shipping of this land, the Reader shall giue me leane to borrow one principall note out of this litle historie, before I quite take my leane thereof: and that is in few words, that K. Iohn passed into Ireland with a Fleet of 500. sailes; so great were our sea-forces euen in his time. Neither did our shipping for the warres first begin to flourish with king Iohn, but long before his dayes in the reign of K. Edward the Confessor, of William the Conqueror, of William Rufus and the rest, there were diuers men of warre which did valiant seruice at sea, and for their paines were royally rewarded. All this and more then this you may see recorded, pag. 17. out of the learned Gentleman M. Lambert his Perambulation of Kent; namely, the antiquitie of the Kentish Cinque ports, which of the sea-townes they were, how they were infranchised, what gracious priuileges and high prerogatiues were by diuers kings vouchsafed vpon them, and what seruices they were tied vnto in regard thereof; to wit, how many ships, how many souldiers, mariners, Garfons, and for how many dayes each of them, and all of them were to furnish for the kings vse; and lastly, what great exploits they performed vnder the conduct of Hubert of Burrough, as likewise against the Welshmen, vpon 200. French ships, and vnder the commaund of capitaine Henry Pay. Then haue you, pag. 117. the franke and bountifull Charter granted by king Edward the first, vpon the foresayd Cinque portes: & next thereunto a Roll of the mightie fleet of seuen hundred ships which K. Edward the third had with him vnto the siege of Caleis: out of which Roll (before I proceed any further) let me giue you a double obseruation. First, that these ships, according to the number of the mariners which were in all 14151. persons, seeme to haue bene of great burthen; and secondly, that Yarmouth an hauen towne in Northfolke (which I much wonder at) set forth almost twise as many ships and mariners, as either the king did at his owne costs and charges, or as any one citie or towne in England besides. Howbeit Tho. Walsingham maketh plaine and euident mention of a farre greater Fleet of the same king; namely, of 1100. shippes lying before Sandwich, being all of them sufficiently well furnished. Moreover, the Reader may behold, pag. 186. a notable testimonie of the mightie ships of that valiant prince king Henry the 5. who (when after his great victory at Agincourt the Frenchmen to recouer Harflew had hired certaine Spanisli and Italian ships and forces, & had vnitd their owne strength vnto them) sent his brother Iohn duke of Bedford to encounter them, who bidding them battell, got the victory, taking some of their ships, and sinking others, and putting the residue to dishonorable flight. Likewise comming the next yeere with stronger powers, and being then also overcome, they were glad to conclude a perpetuall league with K. Henry; & propter eorum naues (saith mine Author) that is, for the resistance of their ships, the sayd king caused such huge ships to be built, quales non erant in mundo, as the like were not to be found in the whole world besides.

But to leane our ancient shipping, and descend vnto later times; I thinke that neuer was any nation blessed of I E H O V A H, with a more glorious and wonderfull victory vpon the Seas, then our vanquishing of the dreadfull Spanisli Armada, 1588. But why should I presume to call it our vanquishing; when as the greatest part of them escaped vs, and were onely by Gods out-stretched arme overwhelmed in the Seas, dashed in pieces against the Rockes, and made fearefull spectacles and examples of his iudgements vnto all

To the Reader.

Christendome. An excellent discourse whereof, as likewise of the honourable expedition under two of the most noble and valiant peeres of this Realme, I meane, the renowned Erle of Essex, and the right honorable the lord Charles Howard, lord high Admirall of England, made 1596. vnto the strong citie of Cadiz, I haue set downe as a double epiphonema to conclude this my first volume withall. Both of which, albeit they ought of right to haue bene placed among the Southerne voyages of our nation: yet partly to satisfie the importunitie of some of my special friends, and partly, not longer to deprive the diligent Reader of two such woorthy and long-expecte'd discourses; I haue made bold to straine a little curtesie with that methode which I first propounded vnto my selfe.

And here had I almost forgotten to put the Reader in mind of that learned and Philosophical treatise of the true state of Ireland, and so consequently of the Northren Seas & regions lying that way: wherein a great number of none of the meane'st Historiographers and Cosmographers of later times, as namely, Munster, Gemma Frisius, Zieglerus, Krantzius, Saxo Grammaticus, Olaus Magnus, Peucerus and others, are by euident arguments conuinc'd of manifold errors: that is to say, as touching the true situation and Northerly latitude of that Island, and of the distance thereof from other places; touching the length of dayes in Sommer and of nights in Winter, of the temperature of the land and sea, of the time and maner of the congealing, continuance, and thawing of the Ice in those Seas, of the first Discoverie and inhabiting of that Island, of the first planting of Christianitie there, as likewise of the continuall flaming of mountains, strange qualities of fountains, of hel-mouth, and of purgatorie which those authors haue fondly written and imagined to be there. All which treatise ought to bee the more acceptable; first in that it hath brought sound truth with it; and secondly, in that it commeth from that farre Northren climate which most men would suppose could not afford any one so learned a Patrone for it selfe.

And thus (friendly Reader) thou seest the brieft summe and scope of all my labours for the common-wealths sake, and thy sake, bestowed vpon this first Volume: which if thou shalt as thankfully accept, as I haue willingly and freely imparted with thee, I shall bee the better encouraged speedily to acquaint thee with those rare, delighfull and profitable histories, which I purpose (God willing) to publish concerning the Southerne and Westerne partes of the World.

Not knowing any other place so conuenient, I am here to aduertise the friendly Reader of certaine faulces escaped in the printing of this booke, and to request him that in the Page 54. and in the last line saue two, hee would in stead of Kine, read Swine, and he shall thereby auoid a great contradiction: likewise pag. 187. that hee would vnto the ende of the second verse of the Prologue to the English Policy, make supply of the word Rest, which is there wanting: also pag. 221. lin. 29. for woorthinesse read woorthies, &c. Other faults (if there bee any) are (I doubt not) easily corrigible.

principall Naugations, Voyages, Traffiques, and Discoueries of the English nation, made to the North and Northeast quarters of the World, with the directions, letters, priuiledges, discomfies, and obseruations incident to the same.

Certeine testimonies concerning K. Arthur and his conquests of the North regions, taken out of the historie of the Kings of Britaine, written by Galfridus Monumetensis, and newly printed at Heidelberge, Anno 1587.

Lib. 9. cap. 10.

Anno Christi, 517. Arthurus, secundo regni sui anno, subiugatis totius Hybernix partibus, classem suam direxit in Islandiam, eamque debellato populo subiugauit. Exin diuulgato per ceteras insulas rumore, quod ei nulla Prouincia resistere poterat, Doldauus rex Gotlandix, & Gunfacius rex Orcadum ultro venerunt, promissioque vestigali subiectionem fecerunt. Emensa deinde hyeme, reuerius est in Britanniam, statumque regni in firmam pacem renouans, moram duodecim annis ibidem fecit.

The same in English.

In the yere of Christ, 517. king Arthur in the second yere of his reigne, hauing subdued all parts of Ireland, sailed with his fleet into Island, and broughe it and the people thereof vnder his subiection. The rumour afterwards being spread thorowout all the other Islands, that no countrey was able to withstand him, Doldauus the king of Gotland, and Gunfacius the king of Orkney, came voluntarily vnto him, and yekled him their obedience, promising to pay him tribute. The Winter being spent, he returned into Britaine, and establishing his kingdome in perfect peace, he continued there for the space of twelue yeres.

Lib. 9 cap. 12.

Missis deinde in diuersa regna Legatis, inuitantur tam ex Gallijs, quam ex collateralibus Insulis Oceani, qui ad curiam venire deberent, &c. Et paulo post: Ex collateralibus autem Insulis, Guillaumurius rex Hybernix, Maluasius rex Islandix, Doldauus rex Gotlandix, Gunnasius rex Orchadum, Lot rex Noruegiæ, Aschilius rex Danorum.

The same in English.

After that king Arthur sending his messengers into diuers kingdomes, he summoned such as were to come to his Court, as well out of France, as out of the adiacent Islands of the sea, &c. and a little after: From those adiacent Islands came Guillaumurius king of Ireland, Maluasius king of Island, Doldauus king of Gotland, Gunnasius king of Orkney, Lot the king of Norway, and Aschilius the king of Denmarke.

Lib. 9 cap. 19.

At reges cæterarum Insularum, quoniam non duxerant in morem equites habere, pedites quot quisque debebat, promittunt, ita vt ex sex Insulis, videlicet, Hybernix, Islandix, Gotlandix, Orcadum, Noruegiæ, atque Daciæ, sexies viginti millia essent annumerata.

The same in English.

But the kings of the other Islands, because it was not their custome to beed by horses, promised the king as many footmen, as euery man was bound to send: so that out of the six Islands, namely, of Ireland, Island, Gotland, Orkney, Norway, and Denmarke, the king had six score thousand souldiers sent him.

A testimonie of the right and appendances of the crowne of the kingdome of Britaine, taken out of M. Lambard

his Aρχαιολογία, fol. 137. pag. 2.

Archurus qui fuit quondam inclytissimus Rex Britonum, vir magnus fuit & animosus, & miles illustis. Parum fuit ei regnum istud, non fuit animus eius contentus regno Britannia. Subiugauit igitur sibi strenue Scantiam totam, quæ modo Norweia vocatur, & omnes insulas ultra Scantiam, scz, Islandiam, & Grenlandiam, quæ sunt de appendicijs Norweia, & Suechordam, & Hyberniam, & Gutlandiam, & Daciam, Semelandiam, Winlandiam, Curlandiam, Roe, Femelandiam, Wirelandiam, Flandriam, Cherelam, Lappam, & omnes alias terras & insulas Orientalis Occani vsque Russiam (in Lappa scilicet posuit Orientalem metam regni Britannia) & multas insulas ultra Scantiam, vsque dum sub Septentrione, quæ sunt de appendicibus Scantia, quæ modo Norweia vocatur. Fuerunt autem ibi Christiani occulte. Archurus autem Christianus optimus fuit, & fecit eos baptizari. & vnum Deum per totam Norweiam venerari, & vnam fidem Christi semper inuiolatam custodire, & suscipere. Ceperunt vniuersi proceres Norweia vxores suas de nobili gente Britonum tempore illo, vnde Norwegienfes dicunt se exisse de gente & sanguine regni huius. Impetrauit enim temporibus illis Archurus rex à domino Papa, & à Curia Romana, quod confirmata sit Norweia, in perpetuum coronæ Britannia in augmentum regni huius, vocauitque illam dictus Archurus Cameram Britannia. Hac verò de causa dicunt Norwegienfes, se debere in regno isto cohabitare & dicunt se esse de corpore regni huius, scilicet de corona Britannia. Maluerunt enim manere in regno isto, quam in terra eorum propria. Terra enim eorum arida est, & montuosa, & sterilis, & non sunt ibi segetes nisi per loca. Ista verò opulenta est, & fertilis, & cresunt hic segetes, & cætera vniuersa. Qua ex causa sæpius per vices gesta sunt bella atrocissima inter Anglos & Norwegienfes, & interfecti sunt innumerabiles. Occupauerunt verò Norwegienfes terras multas & insulas regni huius, quas adhuc detinent occupatas, nec potuerunt vnquam postea penitus euelli. Tandem modò confederati sunt nobis fide, & sacramento, & per vxores suas, quas postea ceperunt de sanguine nostro, & per affinitates, & coniugia. Ita demum constituit, & eis concessit bonus rex Edouardus propinquus noster (qui fuit optimus filius pacis) per commune consilium totius regni. Qua de causa possent, & debent prædicti de cætero nobiscum cohabitare, & remanere in regno, sicut coniurati fratres nostri.

Archur which was sometimes the most renowned king of the Britains, was a mightie, and valiant man, and a famous warriour. This kingdome was too little for him, & his minde was not contented with it. He therfore valiantly subdued all Scantia, which is now called Norway, and all the Islands beyond Norway, to wit, Island and Greenland, which are appertaining unto Norway, Sweeland, Ireland, Gotland, Denmarke, Semeland, Windland, Curland, Roe, Femeland, Wireland, Flanders, Cherilland, Lapland, and all the other lands & Islands of the East sea, euen vnto Russia (in which Lapland he placed the Easterly bounds of his Brittish Empire) and many other Islands beyond Norway, euen vnder the North pole, which are appendances of Scantia, now called Norway. These people were wild and sauage, and had not in them the loue of God nor of their neighbors, because all euill commeth from the North, yet there were among them certaine Christians liuing in secret. But king Arthur was an exceeding good Christian, and caused them to be baptized, and throughtout all Norway to worship one God, and to receiue and keepe inuiolably for euer, faith in Christ onely. At that time all the noble men of Norway tooke wiues of the noble nation of the Britaines, whereupon the Norfes say, that they are descended of the race and blood of this kingdome. The aforesayd king Arthur obtained also in those dayes of the Pope & court of Rome, that Norway should be for euer annexed to the crowne of Britaine for the enlargement of this kingdome, and he called it the chamber of Britaine. For this cause the Norfes say, that they ought to dwell with vs in this kingdome, to wit, that they belong to the crowne of Britaine: for they had rather dwell here then in their owne native countrey, which is drie and full of mountaines, mountaines, and barren, and no graine growing there, but in certeine places. But this countrey of Britaine is fruitefull, wherein cozne and all other good things do grow and increase: for which cause many cruell battels haue bene oftentimes fought betwixt the Englishmen and the people of Norway, and infinite numbers of people haue bene slaine, & the Norfes haue possessed many lands and Ilands of this Empire, which vnto this day they doe possesse, neither could they euer afterwards be fully expelled. But now at length they are incorpored with vs by the receiuing of our religion and sacraments, and by taking wiues of our nation, and by affinitie, and marriages. For so the good king Edward (who was a notable maintainer of peace) ordeined and granted vnto them by the generall consent of the whole kingdome, so that the people may, and ought from henceforth dwell and remaine in this kingdome with vs as our louing twoyne brethren.

Vortiporio successit Malgo, omnium ferè Britannia pulcherrimus, multorum tyrannorum depulsor, robustus armis, largior cæteris, & ultra modum probitate præclarus. Hic etiam totam Insulam obtinuit, & sex conprovinciales Oceani Insulas: Hyberniam videlicet, atque Islandiam, Gotlandiam, Orcades, Noruegiam, Daciam, adiecit dirissimis præliis potestati suæ.

Malgo succeeded Vortiporius which was the goodliest man in person of all Britaine, a prince that expelled many tyrants. He was strong and valiant in warre, taller then most men that then liued, and exceeding famous for his vertues. This king also obtained the government of the whole Island of Britaine, and by most sharpe battailes he recovered to his Empire the sixe Ilands of the Decan sea, which before had bene made tributaries by king Arthur, namely Ireland, Island, Gotland, Orkney, Norway, and Denmarke.

The conquest of the Isles of Anglesey and Man by Edwin the :
Saxon king of Northumberland written in the second Booke and fift Chapter of Beda his Ecclesiasticall historie of the English nation.

Edvinus Nordanhumbroꝝ gentis, id est, eius quæ ad borealem Humbri fluminis plagam inhabitat, maiore potentia cunctis qui Britanniam incolunt, Anglorum pariter & Britonum populis præfuit, præter Cantuarios tantum, necnon & Menauias Britonum insulas, quæ inter Hiberniam & Britanniam sitæ sunt, Anglorum subiecit potestati.

Edwin king of the people of Northumberland, that is to say, of them which inhabit to the North of the riuer Humber, being of greater authoritie then any other potentate in the whole Isle of Britaine, bare rule as well ouer the English as the British nation, except onely the people of Kent: who also brought in subiection vnder the English, the Isles of Man and Anglesey, and the other Northwesterne Isles of the Britons, which are situate betweene Britaine and Ireland.

Another testimonie alledged by Beda to the same purpose. Lib. 2. cap. 9.

Anno ab incarnatione Domini sexcentesimo vicesimo quarto, gens Nordanhumbroꝝ, hoc est, ea natio Anglorum quæ ad aquilonarem Humbri fluminis plagam habitat, cum rege suo Eduino, verbum fidei (prædicante Paulino, cuius supra meminimus) suscepit: cui videlicet regi in auspiciu suscipiendæ fidei, & regni cœlestis potestas, & terreni creuerat imperij: ita vt (quod nemo Anglorum ante eum fecit) omnes Britannia fines, qua vel ipsorum vel Britonum Prouincia habitabantur, sub ditione acceperit. Quin & Menauias insulas (sicut & supra docuimus) imperio subiugauit Anglorum, Quarum prior quæ ad austrum est, & situ amplior, & frugum prouentu atque vberitate fœlicior, nongentarum sexaginta familiarum mensuram, iuxta æstimationem Anglorum, secunda trecentarum & ultra spatium tenet.

In the yeeere from the incarnation of our Lord, five hundredth twentie and foure, the people of Northumberland, to wit, those English people which inhabit on the North side of the river of Humber, together with their king Edwin, at the Christian preaching and perswasion of Paulinus aboue mentioned, embraced the Gospel. Under which king, after he had once accepted of the Christian faith, the power both of the heauctny & of his earthly kingdome was enlarged; in somuch, that he (which no English king had done before him) brought vnder his subiection all the prouinces of Britaine, which were inhabited either by the English men themselves, or by the Britons. Moreover, he subdued vnto the crowne of England (as we haue aboue signified) the Hebrides, commonly called the Westerne Islands. The principall wherof being more commodiously and pleasantly seated towards the South, and more abounding with corne then the rest, containeth according to the estimation of the English, roome enough for 960. families, and the second for 300. and aboue.

The voyage of Bertus, generall of an armie sent into Ireland by

Ecfridus king of Northumberland, in the yere of our Lord 684, out of the 4. Booke and 26. Chapter of Bedas his Ecclesiasticall Historie.

Anno Dominicæ incarnationis sexcentesimo octogesimo quarto, Ecfridus rex Nordanhumbroꝝ, misso Hiberniam cum exercitu duce Berto, vastauit miserè gentem innoxiam, & nationi Anglorum semper amicissimam, ita vt nec ecclesijs quidem aut monasterijs manus parceret hostilis. At insulani & quantum valere armis arma repellebant, & inuocantes diuinæ auxilium pietatis cœlitus se vindicari continuis diu imprecationibus postulabant. Et quamuis maledici regnum Dei possidere non possint, creditum tamen est, quod hi qui merito impietatis suæ maledicbantur, oculis Domino vindice, pœnas sui reatus luerent.

The same in English.

In the yeeere of our Lord 684, Ecfrid the king of Northumberland sent captaine Bert into Ireland with an armie, which Bert miserably wasted that innocent nation being alwayes most friendly vnto the people of England, in somuch that the fury of the enemy spared neither churches nor monasteries. Howbeit the Islanders to their power repelled armes with armes, and craving Gods aid from heauen with continuall imprecations and curses, they pleaded for reuenge. And albeit cursed speakers can by no means inherit the kingdome of God, it was thought notwithstanding, that they which were accursed for their impiety did not long escape the vengeance of God imminent for their offences.

The voyage of Oether made to the Northeast parts beyond

Norway, reported by himselte vnto Alfred the famous king of England, about the yere 890.

Other said, that the countrey wherein he dwelt was called Helgoland. Other tolde his lord king Alfred that he dwelt furthest North of any other Norman. He sayd that he dwelt towards the North part of the land toward the West coast: and affirmed that the land, notwithstanding it stretcheth marueilous farre towards the North, yet it is all desert and not inhabited, vntlesse it be very few places, here and there, where certeine Finnes dwell vpon the coast, who liue by hunting all the Winter, and by fishing in Summer. He said that vpon a certeine time he fell into a fantasie and desire to proue and know how farre that land stretched Northward, and whether there were any habitation of men North beyond the desert. Whereupon he tooke his voyage directly North along the coast, hauing vpon his steereboord alwayes the desert land, and vpon the leereboord the maine Ocean: and continued his course for the space of 3. dayes. In which space he was come as far towards the North, as commonly the whale hunters vse to trauell. Whence he proceeded in his course still towards the North so farre as he was able to saile in other 3. dayes. At the end wherof he perceiued that the coast turned towards the East, or els the sea opened with a maine gulf into the land, he knew not how farre. Well he wist and remembered, that he was faine to stay till he had a Westerne winde, and somewhat Northerly: and thence he sailed plaine East along the coast still so far as he was able in the space of 4. dayes. At the end of which time he was was compelled againe to way till he had a full northerly winde, forsomuch as the coast bowed thence directly towards the South, or at least wise the sea opened into the land he could not tell how farre: so that he sailed thence along the coast continually till South, so farre as he could crauaile in 5. dayes; and at the fifth dayes end he discovered a mightie river which opened very farre into the land. At the entrie of which river he stayed his course, and in conclusion turned backe againe, for he durst not enter therein for feare of the inhabitants of the land: perceiving that on the other side of the river the countrey was chozowly inhabited: which was the first peopled land that he had found since his departure from his owne dwelling: whereas continually throughout all his voyage, he had evermore on his leereboord, a wilderness and desert countrey, except that in some places, he saw a few fishers, fowlers, and hunters, which were all Fynnnes: and all the way vpon his leereboord was the maine ocean. The Viarmes had inhabited and tilled their countrey indifferent well, notwithstanding he was astrayed to go vpon shore. But the countrey of the Terrynnes lay all waste, and not inhabited, except it were, as we haue said, whereas dwelled certaine hunters, fowlers, and fishers. The Viarmes tolde him a number of stories both of their owne countrey, and of the countreys adioyning. Howbeit, he knew not, nor could affirme any thing for certaine truth: forsomuch as he was not vpon land, nor saw any himselfe. This onely he iudged, that the Fynnnes and Viarmes speake but one language. The principall purpose of his traueile this way, was to encrease the knowledge and discoverie of these coasts and countreys, for the more commoditie of fishing of h boxewhales, which haue in their teeth bones of great price and excellencie: whereof he brought some at his returne vnto the king. Their skinnies are also very good to make cables for shippes, and vsed. This kinde of whale is much lesse in quantitie then other kindes, hauing not in length above seuen elles. And as for the common kind of whales, the place of most and best hunting of them is in his owne countrey: whereof some be 48. elles of length, and some 50. of which sort he affirmed that he himselfe was one of the five, which in the space of 3. dayes killed threescore. He was a man of exceeding wealth in such riches, wherein the wealth of that countrey doth consist. At the same time that he came to the king, he had of his owne breed 600. tame Deere, of that kinde which they call Rane Deere: of the which number 6. were stall Rane Deere, a beast of great value, and maruailously esteemed among the Fynnnes, for that with them they catch the wilde Rane Deere. He was among the chiefe men of his countrey one: and yet he had but 20. kine, and 20. swine, and that little which he tilled, he tilled it all with horses. Their principall wealth consisteth in the tribute which the Fynnnes pay them, which is all in skinnies of wilde beasts, feathers of birds, whale bones, and cables, and tacklings for shippes made of h whales or Seales skinnies. Every man payeth according to his abilitie. The richest pay ordinarily 15. cases of Parcerens, 5. Rane Deere skinnies, and one Beare, ten bushels of feathers, a coat of a Beares skinnie, two cables threescore elles long a peece, the one made of h whales skin, the other of Seales.

A description of Norway.

The breadth of the mountaines of Norway.

Swethland. Queeneland.

Boats carried on mens backs.

He sayd, that the countrey of Norway was very long and small. So much of it as either beareth any good pasture, or may be tilled, lieth vpon the Sea coast, which notwithstanding in some places is very rockie and stonie: and all Eastward, all along against the inhabited land, lie wilde and huge hilles and mountaines, which are in some places inhabited by the Fynnnes. The inhabited land is broadest toward the South, & the further it stretcheth towards the North, it groweth evermore smaller and smaller. Towards the South it is peraduenture threescore miles in breadth or broader in some places: about the middlest, 30. miles or about, and towards the North where it is smallest, he affirmeth that it proueth not three miles from the Sea to the mountaines. The mountaines be in breadth of such quantitie, as a man is able to traueile ouer in a fortnight, and in some places no more then may be traueiled in five dayes. Right ouer against this land, in the other side of the mountaines, somewhat towards the South, lieth Swethland, and against the same towards the North, lieth Queeneland. The Ducenes sometimes passing the mountaines, invade and spoile the Normans: and on the contrary part, the Normans likewise sometimes spoile their countrey. Among the mountaines be many and great lakes in sundry places of fresh water, into the which the Ducenes use to carie their boats vpon their backs ouer land, and thereby invade and spoile the countrey of the Normans. These boats of theirs be very little and very light.

South, there is a certaine || port called Scirings hall, whither, he sayth, that a man was not able to saile in a moneths space, if he lay still by night, although he had euery day a full wind. And he shall saile all the way along the coast, hauing on his steereboord, first Iuland and the Islands which lie betwixt this countrey & Iuland, till along the coast of this countrey, till he come to Scirings hall, hauing it on his larboord. At Scirings hall there entrench into the land a maine gulfe of the Sea, which is so broad, that a man cannot see ouer it: and on the other side against the same, is Gotland, and then Silland. This sea stretcheth many hundred miles by into the land. From Scirings hall he sayd that he sailed in 5. dayes to the port which is called Hetha, which lieth betwixt the countreies of || Wendels, Saxons, and Angles, whereunto it is subiect. And as he sailed thitherward from Scirings hall, he had vpon his steereboord Denmarke, and on his leereboord the maine sea, for the space of 3. dayes: and 2. dayes before, he arrived in Hetha, he had Gotland on leereboord, and Silland, with diuers other Islands. In that countrey dwelt English men, before they came into this land. And these 2. dayes he had vpon his leereboord the Islands that are subiect to Denmarke.

Wolstan sayd, that he departed from Hetha, and arrived at Trusco, in the space of 7. dayes, and 7. nights: during which time, his shippe kept her course continually vnder saile. All this voyage Wenedland was still vpon his steereboord, and on his leereboord was Langland, Layland, Falster, and Sconie: all which countreies are subiect to Denmarke. Vpon his leereboord also, was Bargenland, which hath a priuate king, vnto whom it is subiect. Parting left Bargenland, he passed by Blekingie, Meere, Eland and Gotland, hauing them on his leereboord: all which countreies are subiect to Sweden: and Wenedland was all the way vpon his steereboord, vntil he came to Wixel mouth. Wixel is a very great riuer which runneth along betwixt Wicland and Wenedland. Wicland is appertaining to the Easterlings: and the riuer of Wixel runneth out of || Wenedland into Eastmeere, which Eastmeere is at the least 15. miles in breadth. The nauigation of King Edgar, taken out of Florentius

the British Monarchie, pag. 54, 55, &c.

I haue often times (sayd he) and many wayes looked into the state of earthly kingdomes, generally the whole world ouer (as farre as it may be yet knowne to Chistian men commonly) being a studie of no great difficultie, but rather a purpose somewhat answerable to a perfect Cosmographer, to finde himselfe Cosmopolites, a citizen and member of the whole and onely one mysticall citie vniuersall, and so consequently to meditate of the Cosmopoliticall gouernment thereof, vnder the King almighty, passing on very swiftly toward the most dreadfull and most comfortable terme prescribed.

And I finde (sayd he) that if this Briticsh Monarchie would heretofore haue followed the advantages which they haue had onward, they might very well, yet this, haue surpassed by iustice, and goodly sort, any particular Monarchie els, that euer was on earth since mans creation: and that to all such purposes as to God are most acceptable, and to all perfect common wealths, most honorable, profitable, and comfortable.

But yet (sayd he) there is a little Locke of Lady Occasion flickering in the aire, by our hands to catch hold on, whereby we may yet once moze (before all be utterly past, and for euer) discreetly and valiantly recouer and enioy, if not all our ancient & due appurtenances to this Imperiall Briticsh monarchie, yet at the least some such notable portion thereof, as (al circumstances duely and iustly appertaining appertaining to peace & amitie with tozrein princes being offered & used) this may become the most peaceable, most rich, most puissant, & most flourishing monarchie of all els (this day) in chyzendome, peaceable, I say, euen with the most part of the selfe same respects that good king Edgar had (being but a Saxon) and by sundry such means, as he chiefly in this Empire did put in pzoofe and by triumphantly, whereupon his surname was Pacificus, most apely and iustly. This peaceable king Edgar had in his minde about six hundred yeeres past, the representation of a great part of the selfe same Idæa, which from aboue onely, & by no mans deuise hath streamed downe into my imaginati-on, being as it becommeth a subject carefull for the godly prosperitie of this Britissh Empire vnder our most peaceable Queene Elizabeth.

 genas sibi robustas cōgregauit naues ē quibus mille ducentas, in plaga Angliæ Orientali, mille ducentas in Occidentali, mille ducentas in Australi, mille ducentas in Septentrionali pelago cōstituit, vt ad defensionem regni sui, contra exteras nationes, bellorū discrimina sustinerent.

Wise dome imperiall, most diligently to be imitated, videlicet, prospicere, to foresee. A charitable kingly parent, that was touched with ardent zeale, for pzocuring the publike pzoofite of his kingdome, yea and also the peaceable enioying thereof. O, of an incredible masse of treasure, a kingly pzoition, yet, in his coffers remayning: if then he had, (or late before) any warres, seeing no notable rare, or contribution publike is historically mentioned to haue bene for the charges leuied: if in peace he himselve flourished so wealthily: O marvellous politicall, & princely pzudencie, in time of peace to foresee, and pzecuent, (and that most puissantly, and inuincibly) all possible malice, fraude, force, and mischief foraine. O most discrete liberalitie to such excellent vles, pzoxyng our his treasure so abundantly. O faithfull English people (then,) and worthy subiects, of such an Imperiall and godly Gouernour. O your true, and willing hearts, and blessed ready hands (then,) so to impart such abundance of victuals for those huge Nauies maintenance: so (I say) as neither dearth of famine, seemed (fondly) to be feared of you, for any intolerable want likely to ensue thereby, nor prices of victuals complained of to be vnzonable enhauned by you, finding for their great sales so good, and rare oppoztunitie.

This peaceable king Edgar, was one of the perfect Imperiall Monarches of this Britissh Empire, and therefore thus his fame remaineth (for euer) recorded.

Anglici orbis Basileus, flos, & Decus Edgarus, non minus memorabilis Anglis, quàm Cyrus Persis, Romulus Romanis, Alexander Macedonibus, Arsaces Parthis, Carolus Francis, Anno vitæ 37. Regni sui cum fratre, & post 21. Idibus Iulij obiit, & apud Glascon sepelitur.

Charta Regis,
Henrici secund.

O Glastonbury, Glastonbury, the treasure of the carcases of so famous, and so many persons (Quæ olim mater sanctorum dicta es, & ab alijs, tumulus sanctorum, quam ab ipsis discipulis Domini, ædificatam fuisse venerabilis habet Antiquorum autoritas) how lamentable is thy case now: howe hath hypocrisie and pride wrought thy desolation: though I omit here the names of very many other, both excellent holy men, and mighty princes, whose carcases are committed to thy custody, yet that Apostolike Ioseph, that triumphant Britissh Arthur, and nowe this peaceable and pzouident Saxon king Edgar, doe force me with a certaine sorrowful reuerence, here to celebrate thy memorie.

This peaceable king Edgar (as by ancient Records may appeare) his Sommer pzogresses, and perely chiefe pastimes were, the sailing round about this whole Isle of Albion, garded with his grand nauie of 4000. saile at the least, parted into 4. equall parts of petie Nauies, eche one being of 1000. ships, for so it is anciently recorded.

Idem quoque Edgarus, 4000. naues congregauit, ex quibus omni anno, post festum Paschale, 1000. naues ad quamlibet Angliæ partem statuit, sic, ætate Insulam circumnauigauit: hyeme verò, iudicia in Prouincia exercuit: & hæc omnia ad sui exercitium, & ad hostium fecit terrorem.

Could, and would that peaceable & wise king Edgar, before need, as being in peace and quiet with all nations about him, and notwithstanding mistrusting his possible enemies, make his pastimes so rotally, politicall, and triumphantly, with so many thousand ships, and at the least with ten times so many men as ships, and that perely: and shall we bring not assured of such neighbors friendship, as may become to vs as cruel and tyzannicall enemies as neuer king Edgar needed to dread the like, and they as many and mighty princes, as neuer king Edgar coped with the like, shall we (said he) not iudge it some part of wisdom, to imitate carefully in some litle pzoportion (though not with so many thousands) the prosperous pastimes of peaceable king Edgar, that Saxonickall Alexander? yea, prosperous pastimes these may bee iustly counted, by which he also made euident to the whole world, that as he wisely knew the ancient bounds and limites of this Britissh Empire,

so that he could and would royally, iustly, and triumphantly enjoy the same, spite of the devil, and manure the force of any foereine potentate. And at that, so highly and faithfully to the glory of God finally intended and brought to passe, as the wisest and godliest Prelates and counsellors of those dayes (so counted of and recorded) could best advise and direct him, or perchance, but sincerely commend and duectfully incourage him in, he being of himselfe so bent, as purposing first invincibly to fortifie the chiefe and uttermost walles of his Islandish Monarchie, against all foereine encounterance possible. And in that fortification furthering and assuring to trust best his owne oversight and iudgement, in peereely viewing the same in euery quarter thereof, and that as it were for his pastime Imperiall, also in Sommer time, to the ende that after ward in all securitie, hee might in Winter time (vacare) be at convenient leisure on land, chiefly to see forth Gods true honour, and secondly to vnderstand, and diligently to listen to the causes and complaints of his commons. For as Mattheus Westmonasterienfis of him to his Imperiall commendation hath left vs a remembrance, Habebat autem præterea consuetudinem, per omnes Regni prouincias transire, vt intelligeret quomodo legum iura, & suorum statuta decretorum, à principibus obseruarentur, & ne pauperes à potentibus præiudicium passi, opprimerentur, diligenter inuestigare solebat: in vno fortitudini, in altero Iustitiæ studens, & Reipub. regnæque vtilitati consulens in vtroque. Hinc hostibus circumquaque timor, & amor omnium erga eum excreuerat subditorum.

Thus we see how in opportunitie, this peaceable Edgar procured to this Empire such prosperous securitie, that his true and faithful subiects, all manner of wayes (that is at home and also at sea, both our ward and inward) might peaceably, safely and securely employ their wits and trauels for the maruillous enriching of this kingdome, and pleasing very many other, carrying forth the naturall commodities of this land, abouting here about our necessary vses (and due those reserved) and likewise againe furnishing the same with all necessary and not superfluous foereine commodities, set from farre or foerein countreys. This was in deed (as before is recorded) a kingly prouidence, Reipub. Regniq; vtilitati consulens, &c. besides with great vtilitie and profite publique foerseeke, and by his meanes enioyed, he himselfe vsed most gladly the aduantage of that securitie, in ministering of iustice, or causing the same to be executed all his kingdome over, not squemishly, frowningly or skoznesidly humning the ragged and tattered sleeue of any suppliant, holding by to him a simple soiled bill of complaint or petition, and that homely contriued, or as they say, and timeously hasting from the sickly pale face or feeble limmed suiter, extremely constrained so to speake for himselfe, nor partially smothering his owne conscience, to fauour or mainteine the foule fault and trespass vnlawfull of any his subiects, how mightie or necessary soeuer, they (els) were, but diligently made search, least Pauperes à potentibus præiudicium passi, opprimerentur.

Thus did publique securitie frō foerein foe abroad, and true loue of his owne subiects, garding him at home, and the heavenly spirit directing all his good purposes, cause iustice and equitie in all quarters of this Albion to flourish. For which his peaceable and prosperous benefits at the eternal king his hand obtained, hee became not insolent or declined to tyrannicall regiment (as some princes in other countreys haue made their lues Comico tragicall) but with all his foerlaide inuincible Seaforce, abouting wealth, triumphant peace, with securitie and Justice euer all his Monarchie preuailing, his heart was continually, and most zealously bent to set forth the glory, laude and honour of the Almighty Creator, the heavenly and euerlasting king, by such principall and princely meanes, as (then) were deemed to God most acceptable, as many monuments yet to our dayes remaining, do of him vndoubtedly testifie: As this, for one.

Alitonañtis Dei largisua clementia, qui est rex Regum, Ego Edgarus Anglorum Basileus omniumq; Regum, Insularum, Oceaniq; Britanniam circumiacentis, cunctarumq; nationum, quæ infra eam includuntur, Imperator, & Dominus, gratias ago ipsi Deo omnipotenti, Regi meo, qui meum Imperium sic ampliauit, & exaltauit super regnum patrū meorum: quilibet Monarchiam totius Angliæ adepti sunt à tempore Athelstani (qui primus regnum Anglorum, & omnes Nationes, quæ Britanniam incolunt, sibi Annis subegit) nullus tamen eorū vltra eius fines imperium suum dilatare aggressus est. Mihi autem concessit propicia Diuinitas, cum Anglorum Imperio, omnia regna Insularum Oceani, cum suis ferocissimis Regibus, vq; Noruegiam, maximamq; partem Hyberniam, cum sua nobilissima Ciuitate Dublinia, Anglorum regno subiugare: Quos etiam omnes, me s Imperij colla subdere (Dei fauente gratia) coegi. And againe this in another Monument.

OMnipotentis Dei, &c. Ipsius nutu & gratia suffultus, Ego Ædgarus Basileus dilectæ Insulæ Albionis, subditis nobis sceptris Scotorum, Cumbrotum, ac Brytonum, & omnium circumcirca Regionum, quæta pace perfruens, studiosus sollicitudine laudibus creatoris omnium occupor addendis: Ne nunc inertia, nostrisq; diebus (plus equo) seruitus eius reperiatur, &c. 18. mei terreni Imperij anno, &c. Anno Incarnationis Dominicæ, 973.

Fundatio Ecclesiæ Cathedralis Eliensis.

Ego Ædgarus totius Albionis Basileus hoc priuilegium (tanta roboratum autoritate) crucis Ihammate confirmaui.

So that by all these rehearsed Records, it is most euident that the peaceable king Edgar, was one of those Monarchs, in whose handes (if life had sufficed) the incredible value and priuiledge granted by God and nature vnto this British monarchie, might haue bene peaceably purchased in such sort, as the very blessing and fauour of the diuine Trinitie hath laid meanes for our industrie to attaine to, and enioye the same by.

And though sundry other valiant princes and kings of this land I could recite, which in times past haue either by intent gone about, or by wise and valiant exploit, haue meetely well prospered towards this Islandish appropriate supremacie attaining, yet neuer any other reasonable meanes was vsed, or by humane wit, or industrie can be contriued, to al purposes sufficient, but only by our sea forces preuailing, and so by our inuincible enioying al within the sea limites of our British royaltie contained.

To which incredible political mysterie attaining, no easier, readier, or perfecter plat and introduction, is (as yet) come to my imagination, then is the present and continuall seruice of thesecoze good and tall warlike ships, with twentie smaller barks, and those 80. ships (great and smal) with 6660. apt men furnished, and all singularly well appointed for seruice both on sea and land, faithfully and diligently to be done in such circumspect and discreet order, as partly I haue in other places declared, and further (vpon good occasion offered) may declare.

This grand nauie of peaceable king Edgar, of so many thousand ships, and they furnished with an hundred thousand men at the least, with all the finall intents of those sea forces, so inuincible, continually mainteined, the order of the execution of their seruice, the goodly and Imperial successe thereof, are in a maner kingly lessons and propheticall incouragements to vs left, euen now to bee as proudent for publique securitie as he was, to be as skillful of our sea right and royal limits, and wisely to finde our selues as able to recouer and enioy the same as he was, who could not chuse, but with the passing and verely saying about this British Albion, with all the lesser Isles next adiacent round about it, he could not chuse I say, but by such full and peaceable possession, find himselfe (according to right, and his hearts desire) the true and soueraigne Monarch of all the British Ocean, enuironing any way his empire of Albion and Ireland, with the lesser Islands next adiacent: with memorial whercof, as with one very precious iewel Imperial, he adorned the title and crowne of his regalitie, as with the testimonie annexed of the states and nobles of his Empire, to commit to perpetuall memorie, the stile of his chiefe worthily dignitie, in this very tenor of words befoze also remembred.

The same in English.

Edric counsell'd king Kanutus to murther the pong princes Edward and Edmund the sonnes of King Edmund. But because it seem'd a thing very dishonourable vnto him to haue them put to death in England, hee sent them, after a shoyt space, vnto the king of Sweden to be slaine. Who, albeitt there was a league betweene them, would in no case condescend vnto Canutus his bloody request, but sent them vnto Salomon the king of Hungarie to be nourished and preferd aliue. The one whereof namely Edmund in proceffe of time there deceased. But Edward receiued to wife Agatha daughter vnto the Germane Emperour Henry, of whom he begot Margaret the Quene of the Scots, and Christina a Nunne, and Clito Edgar.

A Chronicle of the Kings of Man, taken out of
M. Camdens Chorographie.

In the yeere of our Lord 1066, Edward King of England, of famous memory deceased, whom Harald sonne of Godwin succeeded in his kingdome; against which Harald the king of Norwaie called Harald Harfager fought a battell at Stainford bydge, where the English wining the fildie put all the Norwegians to flight: out of which flight one Godredus surnamed Crouan (the sonne of Harald the blarke, who had befoze time fled out of Island) repaired vnto Godred sonne of Syrric, who then reigned in Man, and was right friendly and honourably entertained by him.

In the very same yeere William the Conquerour subdued England, and Godred the sonne of Syrric, king of Man, deceased, after whom succeeded his sonne Fingal.

Fingal.

In the yeere 1066, Godredus Crouan gathered a flecte of ships, and sail'd vnto Man, and giuing battell vnto the people of the countrey, was vanquished and put to flight. The second time also hauing gathered his armie and ships together, hee came vnto Man, fought with the inhabitants, lost the victorie, and was chased away. Yea, the third time hee assembled a great multitude, and comming by night vnto the port which is called Ramsa, hid 300. of his men in a wood standing vpon the side of the hill called Scacafel. The Summe was no sooner vp, but the Mannians arranged themselves and with great furie set vpon Godred. And in the midst of the skirmish, the foresaid 300. men rising out of their ambush, and comming vpon the backs of the Mannians, molested them so sore, that they were enforced to flie. But when they sawe they were overcome and had no place of refuge to retire vnto (for the tide of the sea had filled the chanel of the river of Ramsa) and seeing the enemy so fiercely pursuing them on the other side, they which remained, with lamentable outcries beseeched Godred to spare their liues. Then hee being moued with compassion, and pitying their extreme calamitie, because hee had bene of late sustained and nourished among them, sounded a retreat and forbad his souldiers to make any longer pursuit. The day following Godred put his souldiers to their choice, whether they would diuide Man among themselves and inhabite it, or whether they would take the wealth of the countrey, and so returne vnto their owne home. Howbeit, it pleased them better to waste the whole Island and to enrich themselves with the commodities thereof, and so to returne from whence they came. Nowe Godred himselfe with a fewe Islanders which had remained with him, tooke possession of the South part of the Island, and vnto the remnant of the Mannians he granted the North part thereof, vpon condition, that none of them should at any time afterwarde dare once to challenge any parcell of the said ground by title of inheritance. Whereupon it cometh to passe, that vnto this day the whole Island is the kings owne Fee-simple, and that all the reuenues thereof pertaine vnto him. Also Godredus subdued Dublin vnto himselfe & a great part of Laineishe. And he so tamed the Scots, that none of them durst build a ship or a boate, with aboue thre yron nailes in it. Hee reigned 16. yeeres and died in the Island called Yle. He left behinde him thre sonnes, Lagman, Harald, and Olauus, Lagman being the eldest challenged the kingdome and reigned seuen yeeres. Howbeit Harald his brother rebelled against him a long time, but being at length taken by Lagman, hee was gret and had his eyes put out. Afterward Lagman repenting him that he had put out the eyes of his brother, did of his owne accord relinquish his kingdome, and taking vpon him the badge of the crosse, he went on pilgrimage to Ierusalem, in which iourney also he died.

In the yeere 1075, all the principall men of the Islands hauing intelligence of the death of Lagman, sent messengers vnto Murecardus O'Brien King of Ireland, requesting him that hee would send some well-disposed person of his owne kindred and blood royall, vntill Olauus sonne of Godred

Boats hauing not past thre yron nailes in them.

Godred were come to full age. The king most willingly condescended vnto their request, and sent vnto them one Dopnald the sonne of Tade, charging and commaunding him that with all meekenesse and modestie, hee should gouerne that kingdome, which of right belonged not vnto him. Howbeit he, after he had once attained vnto the kingdome, neglecting the commaundement of his lord, vsurped the gouernment with great tyrannie, committing many heinous crimes, and so he reigned very disorderly for the space of three yeeres. When all the princes of the Islands making a generall conspiracie, banded themselves against him, and expelled him out of their dominions. And he flying into Irland returned no more vnto them.

In the yeere 1077. one Ingemundus was sent from the king of Norway, to take possession of the kingdome of the Islands. And being come vnto the Island of Leodus, hee sent messengers vnto all the princes of the Islands to come vnto him, commaunding them to assemble themselves, and to appoint him to be their King. In the meane season he and his companions spent their time in robbing and rioting, rauished women and virgines, and addicted themselves to filthy pleasures and to the lusses of the flesh. And when these things were reported vnto the princes of the Islands, who had assembled themselves to chuse him king, being mightely incensed thereat, they made haste towards him, and coming vpon him in the night, they burnt the house wherein hee was, and slue both him and the rest of his company, partly with sword, and partly with fire.

In the yeere 1098. the abbey of S. Maries at Cistercium was founded. In the same yeere also Anriochia was taken by the Christians, and a Comet appeared.

Howeouer, the same yeere there was a battell fought betweene the inhabitants of Man, at Sant-wat, and they of the North obtained the victorie. In which battell were slaine Earle Ochor and Mac-Maras, chieftaines of both parts.

The same yeere Magnus king of Norway, sonne of Olauus, sonne of Harald Harfagre, being desirous to vew the coys of S. Olauus king and Martyr, gaue commaundment that his monument should be opened. But the Bishop and the Clergie withstanding this his attempt, the king went very boldly and by his kingly authoritie, caused the cophin to be opened. And when hee had seene with his eyes, and handled with his hands the incorrupt body of the foresaid King and Martyr, a sudden feare came vpon him, and he departed with great haste. The night following Olauus king and Martyr appeared vnto him in a vision, saying: Chuse (I say) vnto your selfe one of these two, either within 30. dayes to lose your life with your kingdome, or else to depart from Norway and neuer to see it againe. The King so soone as he was awaked out of sleepe, called his Princes and Senatours, and expounded the foresaide vision vnto them. And they also being astonished therat gaue him this counsell, that with all speed he should depart out of Norway. Then he without any further delay caused a flauie of 160. ships to be prouided, and so sailed vnto the Islands of Orkney, which hee presently subdued, and passing along through all the Islands and conquering them, at length he came vnto the Isle of Man, where he was no sooner arrived, but hee went vnto the Isle of S. Patric to see the place of battell, where the inhabitants of Man had of late fought, because many of the dead bodies were as yet vnburi'd. And seeing that it was a most beautifull Island, it pleased him exceeding well, and therefore hee made choice to inhabite therein his owne selfe, and built fortres there which are at this day called by his owne name. He had the people of Galway in such awe, that he constrained them to cut downe their owne timber, and to bring it vnto his shore for the building of his fortres. Hee sailed on further vnto the Isle of Anglesey neere vnto Wales, and finding two Earles therein (either of them being called by the name of Hugo) he slue the one, and the other hee put to flight, and so subdued the Island. But the Welshmen presented many gifts vnto him, and so bidding them farewell he returned vnto Man. Vnto Murecard king of Irland he sent his shooes, commaunding him that he should carpe them on his shoulders, vpon the birth-day of our Lord through the midst of his Palace, in the sight of his Embassadors, that thereby it might appeare vnto them, that he was subiect vnto king Magnus. Which when the Irishmen heard, they tooke it grieuously and disbeined much thereat. But the King being better aduised, I had rather (said he) not only beare his shooes, but eate his shooes, then that king Magnus should destroy any one prouince in Irland. Wherefore he fulfilled his commaundement, and honourably enterceined his Embassadors. Many gifts also he sent vnto king Magnus by them, and concluded a league. But the messengers returning vnto their lord, tolde him of the situation of Irland, of the beautie thereof, of the fruitfulnessse of the soyle, and of the holisomnesse of the aire. Magnus hearing these things was fully resolved to conquer all Irland vnto himselfe. And for the same purpose he commaunded that a flect should be made ready. But he taking his boyage with fireene ships, & being desirous to vew the land, when he had vndiscreetly departed from his flauie, he was suddenly inuironed by the Irish, and was himselfe slaine, together with all that were with him almost. Hee was interred neere vnto the Church of S. Patric in Armagh. Hee reigned fire five peeres. After his death the Princes of the Ilands sent for Olauus the sonne of Godredus Crouan, who liued in the Court of Henry King of England son vnto William the Conquerour.

|| Argile.

In the yeere 1102. Olauus sonne of Godredus Crouan beganne his reigne and reigned fourtie peeres: he was a peaceable man being in league with all the Kings of Scotland and Irland in his time. He tooke to wife Affrica the daughter of Fergusus of Galway, of whom he begat Godredus. Of his concubines he begat Regnaldus, Lagmannus, and Haraldus, and many daughters, whereof one married vnto Sumerledus king of || Herergaidel; which after ward occasioned the ouerthrow of the whole kingdome of the Ilands. He begat foure sonnes by her, namely Dulgallus, Raignaldus, Engus, and Olauus.

In the yeere 1134. Olauus gaue vnto Yuo the Abbat of Furnes a portion of his owne ground in Man to build an Abbey in the place which is called Ruffin. Also hee enriched with reuenues and indued with priuiledges al places of religion within his Ilands.

In the yeere 1142. Godredus y son of Olauus sailed vnto the K. of Norway called Hinge, and doing his homage vnto him he remained with him, & was by him honorably entertained. The same yeere the 3. sonnes of Harald brother vnto Olauus, who were brought vp at the citie of Dublin, gathering together a great multitude of people, and all the fugitiues and vagabonds of the kingdome resorted vnto Man, and demaunded of the said king the one halfe of al the kingdome of the Ilands. Which thing when the king heard, being desirous to pacifie them, he answered that he would consult about that matter. And a day and place being appointed, where the consultation should be kept, in the meane time those miscreants conspired together, about the murdering of the King. And when the day appointed was come, both companies assembled themselves vnto the hauen towne called Ramfa, and they sate in order, the king with his nobilitie on the one side, and they with their confederates on the other side. Howbeit Regnaldus who had an intention to slay the king, stood a-side in the midst of the hoste talking with one of the Princes of the lande. And being called to come vnto the king he turned himselfe about as if hee would haue saluted him, and lifting by his glittering are, he chopt the kings head quite off at a blow. Nowe hauing committed this outrageous villanie, within a short space they diuided the Iland betweene themselves, and gathering an armie together sailed vnto Galway, intending to subdue that also; howbeit the people of Galway assembled themselves, and with great furie encountered with them. Then they immediately turning their backs with great confusion fled vnto Man. And as touching all the Galwedians which inhabited in the said Iland, some of them they slue, and the residue they banished.

In the yeere 1143. Godredus sonne of Olauus returning out of Norway was created king of Man; who in reuenge of his fathers death, put out the eyes of two of Haralds sonnes and slue the thirde.

In the yeere 1144. Godredus began his reigne, and hee reigned thirtie peeres. In the thirde yeere of his reigne the citizens of Dublin sent for him and created him king of Dublin, against whom Murcardus king of Irland made warre, and encamping himselfe at the citie called Coridelis, he sent his brother Osibel with 3000. horsemen vnto Dublin, who was slaine by Godred and the Dubliners, the rest of his company being put to flight. These things being thus finished, Godredus returned vnto Man, and began to exercise tyrannie, disinheriting certaine of his nobles, of whom one called Thorfinus the sonne of Oier, being mightier then the rest, went vnto Sumerledus, and named Dubgal the sonne of Sumerledus, king of the Ilands, and subdued many of the said Ilands on his behalfe. Whereof when Godred had intelligence by one Paulus, prouiding a Naue, hee went to meete Sumerledus comming against him with 80. ships: and in the yeere 1156. vpon the night of the feast of Epiphanie, there was a Sea-battle fought, and many being slaine on both parts, the day following they were pacified, and diuided the kingdome of the Ilands among themselves, and it continued two kingdomes from that day vnto this present time. And this was the cause of the ruine of the monarchie of the Ilands, from which time the sonnes of Sumerled inioyed the one halfe thereof.

In the yeere 1158. Sumerled came vnto Man with 53. ships, putting Godred to flight and wasting the Iland: and Godred sailed vnto Norway to seeke for aide against Sumerled. In the yeere 1164. Sumerled gathered a flecte of 160. ships together; and arrived at Rhinfrin, intending to subdue all Scotland vnto himselfe: howbeit, by Gods iust iudgement being overcome by a few, together with his sonne, and an innumerable multitude of people, he was slaine. The very same yeere there was a battel fought at Ramfa, betweene Reginald the brother of Godred, and the inhabitants of Man, but by the stratagemme of a certaine Earle the Mannians were put to flight. Then began Reginald to vsurpe the kingly authoritie. Howbeit his brother Godred within foure dayes after, comming out of Norway with a great power of armed men, apprehended his brother Reginald, gelt him, and put out his eyes. The same yeere deceased Malcolme the king of Scots, and his his brother William succeeded in the kingdom.

In the yere 1166. two Comets appeared in the moneth of August, before the rising of the Sunne, one to the South and another to the North.

In the yere 1171. Richard earle of Penbrok. sailed into Irland, and subdued Dublin with a great part of Irland.

In the yere 1176. John Curcy conquered Vlster vnto himselfe. And at the same time also Viuanus legate frō the sea of Rome came into Man, & caused king Godred to bee lawfully wedded vnto his wife Phingola, daughter of Maclorlen son of Murkartac king of Irlād, mother of Olauus, who was then 3. yeres old. Siluanus the abbat married them, vnto whom the very same day, king Godred gaue a portion of ground in Mirescoge, where he built a Monastery: howbeit, in p̄cesie of time, the said land with the monkes, was granted vnto the abbey of Russin.

In the yere 1172. Reginaldus the son of Eacmarcat (a man descended of the blood royal) coming into Man with a great multitude of people, in the absence of the king, at the first conflict hee put to flight certaine watchmen which kept the shoare, & slue about 30. persons. Whereupon the very same day the Mannians arranging themselves put him, & almost all his folowers to the sword.

In the yere 1185. the Sunne was eclipsed vpon the feast of S. Philip and Iacob.

In the yere 1187. deceased Godred king of the Ilands, vpo the 4. of the Ides of November, and the next summer his body was translated vnto the island of Hy. He lefe 3. sonnes behinde him, Reginaldus, Olauus, and Yuarus. In his life time he ordeined his sonne Olauus to be his heire apparent, because he onely was borne legitimate. But the Mannians, when Olauus was scarce ten yeres olde, sent vnto the Ilands for Reginald and created him king.

In the yere 1187. began Reginald the sonne of Godred to reigne ouer the Ilands: and Murcharthus a man of great power throughout all the kingdom of the Ilands was put to death.

In the yere 1192. there was a battell fought betwene Reginald and Engus the two sonnes of Sumrled: but Engus obtained the victory. The same yere was the abbey of Russin remooued vnto Dufglas, howbeit within foure yeres after the monkes returned vnto Russin.

In the yere 1203. Michael bishop of the Ilands deceased at Fontanas, and Nicholas succeeded in his roome.

In the yere 1204. Hugo de Lacy inuaded Vlster with an armie and encountered with John de Curcy, tooke him prisoner & subdued Vlster vnto himselfe. Afterward he permitted the said John to goe at libertie, who coming vnto king Reginald was honourably entertained by him, because he was his sonne in lawe, for John de Curcy had taken to wife Affrica the daughter of Godredus, which founded the abbey of S. Mary de iugo domini, and was there buried.

In the yere 1205. John de Curcy & Reginald king of the Ilands inuading Vlster with a hundred ships at the port which is called Stranfeord did negligently besiege the castle of Rath: but Walter de Lacy coming vpo them with his armie, put them to flight, & from that time Curcy neuer recovered his land. In the yere 1210. Engus the son of Sumrled & his 3. sonnes were slaine.

At the same time John king of England conducted a fleet of 500. ships into Irland, and subdued it vnto himselfe: and sending a certaine earle named Fulco, vnto the isle of Man, his souldiers almost utterly wasted it in the space of 15. dayes, and hauing taken pledges they returned home into their owne country. King Reginald and his nobles were at this time absent from Man.

In the yere 1217. deceased Nicolas bishop of the Ilands, and was buried in Vlster, in the house of Benchor, whom Reginald succeeded.

King John passed into Ir-land with 500.
sailes.

I thinke it not amisse to report somewhat more concerning the two foresaid brethren Reginaldus and Olauus.

Reginald gaue vnto his brother Olauus, the island called Lodhus or Lewes, which is saide to be larger then the rest of the Ilands, but almost destitute of inhabitants, because it is so full of mountaines & quarreis, being almost no where fit for tillage. Howbeit the inhabitants thereof do liue for the most part vpon hunting and fishing. Olauus therefore went to take possession of this Iland, and dwelt therein leading a poore life: and when he saw that it would by no meanes suffice for the sustentation of himselfe & his folowers, hee went boldly vnto his brother Reginald, who as then remaining in the Ilands, & spake on this wise vnto him. My brother (said he) and my lord and king, you know that the kingdom of the Ilands pertained vnto me by right of inheritance, howbeit because the Lord had chosen you to beare the scepter, I doe not enue that honour vnto you, neither doeth it any whit grieue mee that you are created vnto this royall dignitie. Nowe therefore I beseech you to p̄uide mee some portion of land in the Ilands, whereby I may honestly liue.

For the Illand of Lewis which you gaue me is not sufficient for my maintenance. Which his brother Reginald hearing said that he would consult about the premises. And on the morow, when Olaus was sent for to parle, Reginald commanded him to be attached, and to be caried vnto William king of Scotland, and with him to remaine prisoner: and Olaus remained in prison almost for the space of 7. yeres. But at the 7. yeres end William king of Scots deceased, and Alexander his sonne reigned in his stead. The foresaid William, before his death, commanded that all prisoners should be set at libertie. Olaus therefore being at libertie came vnto Man, and immediately with a great company of nobles tooke his iourney vnto S. James: and his brother Reginald caused the said Olaus to take vnto wife, the daughter of a certaine noble man of Kentyre, couline german vnto his owne wife, & by name being called Lauon, and he granted vnto him the possession of Lewis. After a few dayes Reginald the bishop of the Islands hauing gathered a Synod, separated Olaus and Godred his sonne, and Lauon his wife, namely because ther was coulin german vnto his former wife. After ward Olaus married Scristina daughter vnto Ferkarus earle of Rosse.

Hereupon the wife of Reginald Queene of the Islands being incensed, sent letters vnto the Island of Sky in K. Reginald his name to her sonne Godred willing him to take Olaus. Which commandment Godred putting in practise, & entring the isle of Lewis for y^e same purpose, Olaus fled in a litle skiffe vnto his father in law the earle of Rosse, & in the meane tyme Godred wasted the isle of Lewis. At the very same time Pol the son of Boke vicount of Sky, being a man of power in al the Islands, because he would not consent vnto Godred, fled, & dwelt together with Olaus in the dominions of the earle of Rosse, & making a league with Olaus, they went both in a ship vnto Sky. To be short, sending certaine spies, they were informed that Godred remained secure with a smal company in a certaine isle called y^e isle of S. Columba. And uniting vnto themselves their friends and acquaintance, & others that would goe voluntarily with them, in the dead of the night, hauing lanchted 5. ships from the next sea-shore, which was distant about the space of 2. furlongs from the foresaid Island, they enuironed the said Island on all sides. Now Godred and his company rising early in the morning, and seeing themselves beset with their enemies on all sides, they were utterly astonied. Howbeit arming themselves they began stoutly to make resistance, but altogether in vaine. For about 9. of the clocke in the morning, Olaus and the foresaid vicount Pol, with al their souldiers, entered the Island, and hauing slaine all whom they found without the precincts of the Church, they apprehended Godred, gelding him, and putting out his eyes. Vnto which action Olaus gaue not his consent, neither could he withstand it, by reason of the forenamed vicount the son of Boke. This was done in the yere of Christ 1223. The next sommer folowing Olaus hauing receiued pledges from all the chiefe men of the Islands, with a fleet of 32. ships sailed vnto Man, and arrived at Rognolswaht. At the same time Reginald and Olaus diuided the kingdome of the Islands betweene themselves, Man being granted vnto Reginald, & besides his portion the name of a king also. Olaus hauing receiued certaine victuals of the people of Man, returned, together with his company, vnto his owne portion of Islands. The yere folowing Reginald taking vnto him Alanus lord of Galway, together with his subiects of Man, sailed vnto the Islands, that hee might take away that portion of ground from his brother Olaus, which he had granted vnto him, and subdue it vnto himselfe. Howbeit, by reason that the people of Man had no list to fight against Olaus or the Islanders, because they bare good will towards them, Reginald and Alanus lord of Galway being defeated of their purpose, returned home vnto their owne. Within a short space after Reginald, vnder pretense of going vnto the Court of his lord the king of England, receiued an 100. markes of the people of Man, and tooke his iourney vnto Alanus lord of Galway. Which the people of Man hearing tooke great indignation thereat, insomuch that they sent for Olaus, and appointed him to be their king.

In the yere 1226, Olaus recovered his inheritance, that is to say the kingdome of Man and of the Islands, which Reginald his brother had gouerned for the space of 38. yeres, and he reigned two yeres in safetie.

In the yere 1228, Olaus with all his nobles of Man, and the stronger part of his people, sailed vnto the Islands. A short space after Alanus lord of Galway, Thomas earle of Achol, & king Reginald came vnto Man with a mightie army, and wasted all the South part of Man, spoiled the Churches, and slue all the men whom they coulde take, insomuch, that the South part of the saide Island was brought almost into desolation. And then Alanus returned with his army into his owne land, leauing behind him bailiffes and substitutes in Man, which should gather vp and render vnto him the tribute of the countrey. Howbeit king Olaus came suddenly vpon them, chased them away and recovered his kingdome. And the Mannians which of late were disperfed and scattered abroad, began to vntie themselves, and to inhabite without feare. The same yere, in the time of Winter, vpon the sudden, and in the very dead of the night came king Reginald out of Galway with with five ships, and burnt all the ships of his brother Olauus, and of the nobles of Man, at the Ile of S. Patric, & concluding a peace with his brother, remained at the port of Ragnelwath 40. dayes: in the meane while hee allured vnto himselfe all the Islanders vpon the South part of Man, who swore, that they would aduenture their liues, vntill hee had gotten the one halfe of his kingdome: contrariwise Olauus ioyned vnto himselfe them of the North part, & vpon the 14. of February in the place called Tingualia, a field was fought betwene the two brothers, wherein Olauus got the victory, and Reginald the king was by certaine souldiers slaine without the knowledge of his brother. Also certaine pirates comming to the south part of Man, wasted & spoiled it. The monkes of Ruffin conueyed the body of K. Reginald, vnto the abbey of S. Mary of Fournes, & there he was interred in the place, which his owne selfe had chosen for the purpose. After these things Olauus traueiled vnto the king of Norway, but before he was arriued there, Haco king of Norway appointed a certaine noble man named Husbac the son of Owmund, to be king of the Islands of the Hebrides & called his name Haco. Then came the said Haco with Olauus & Godred Don the son of Reginald, and a multitude of Noruegians, vnto the islands: and while they were giuing an assault vnto a castle in the island of Both, Haco being hit with a stone died, and was buried in Iona.

In the yere 1230. came Olauus, with Godredus Don, & certeine Noruegians vnto Man, and they parted the kingdome among themselves, Olauus stil retaining Man. Godred as he was going vnto the islands, was slaine in the isle of Lewis, & Olauus enioyed the kingdome of the islands also.

In the yere 1237. vpon the 12. of the Kalends of June, Olauus sonne of Godred king of Man deceased in the isle of S. Patric, and was interred in the abbey of Ruffin. He reigned 11. yeres, two while his brother was aliue, and nine after his death.

Haraldus his sonne being of the age of 14. yeres, succeeded, and he reigned 12. yeres. The first yere of his reigne taking his iourney vnto the islands, he appointed one Loglen his kinsman to be his deputy in Man. The Autumne folowing Haraldus sent the thre sonnes of Nel, namely Dufgaldus, Torquellus, & Molmore, and his friend Ioseph vnto Man, that they might enter into consultation together. Wherefore the 25. day they assembled themselves at Tingualia: and malice growing betwene the sonnes of Nel, and Loglen, they fel to blowes and skirmished sore on both partes, Molmore, Dufgald, and the foresaid Ioseph being all slaine in the fray. The Spring folowing, king Harald came into the isle of Man, and Loglen fleeing into Wales, was himselfe, together with Godred the sonne of Olauus his pupil, and 40. others, drowned by shipwracke.

In the yere 1238. Gospatricius and Gillescrist sonne of Mac-Kerthac came from the king of Norway vnto Man, expelling Harald out of the said island, and taking tribute on the behalfe of the Noruegian king, because the said Harald refused to come vnto his Court.

In the yere 1240. Gospatricius deceased and was buried in the abbey of Ruffin.

In the yere 1239. Haraldus went vnto the king of Norway, who within two yeres confirmed vnto him, his heires and successors, vnder seale, all the islands which his predecessors enioyed.

In the yere 1242. Haraldus returned out of Norway vnto Man, and being honourably received by the inhabitants, he liued in peace with the kings of England and Scotland.

In the yere 1247. Haraldus (like as his father also before him) was knighted by the king of England, and so being rewarded with many gifts, he returned home. The same yere he was sent for by the king of Norway, and he married his daughter. And in the yere 1249. as he was returning home with his wife, with Laurence the elect of Man, and with many other nobles, neere vnto the confines of Radland, he was drowned in a tempest.

In the yere 1249. Reginald the sonne of Olauus, and brother vnto Harald began to reigne the day next before the Ides of May: and vpon the 30. day of the same moneth he was slaine by Yuarus a souldier, and other of his complices, in the South part of a certaine meadow, neere vnto the Church of the holy Trinitie, and he was buried at the Church of S. Marie at Ruffin.

The same yere Alexander king of Scots prouided a great nauie of ships, that he might conquer the islands vnto himselfe: howbeit falling into an ague at the isle of Kerway, he deceased.

Then Haraldus the sonne of Godred Don vsurped the name of a king ouer the islands, hee banished also all the princes of Harald the sonne of Olauus, and ordeined his fugitiues to bee princes and nobles in their stead.

In the yere 1250. Haraldus the son of Godred Don being summoned by letters went vnto the king of Norway, who detained him in prison because he had vniustly possessed the kingdome. The same yere Magnus the sonne of Olauus, and Iohn the sonne of Dugalt arriued at Roghalwath, which Iohn named himselfe king; but the Mannians taking it grieuouly, that Magnus was not nominated, drave them from their shoare, and many of the company perished by shipwracke.

In the yere 1252. came Magnus the sonne of Olauus vnto Man, and was ordeined king. The yere folowing he tooke his iourney vnto the king of Norway, & there he remained one whole yere.

In the yeere 1254. Haco king of Norway opened Magnus the sonne of Olauus king of the Islands, confirming them to him and to his heires, and by name vnto Harald his brother.

In the yere 1256, Magnus tooke his iourney into England, and was by the king of England created knight.

In y pere 1257. the Church of S. Maries of Russin was dedicated by Richard bishop of Soder.

In the yeere 1260, Haco king of Norway came into the partes of Scotland; and without achieving ought, turning his course towards the Orcades he there deceased at Kirwas, and was buried at Bergen.

In the yeere 1265, Magnus the sonne of Olauus king of Man and of the Islands died at the castle of Russin, and was buried at the Church of S. Mary at Russin.

In the yere 1266. the kingdome of the Islands was translated vnto Alexander king of Scots.

That which followeth was written in a new character or letter, and of a diuers kinde from the former.

In the yeere 1270, vpon the seuenth day of October the flecte of Alexander king of Scots arrived at Roghalth, and the next day before the Sunne rising there was a battell fought betwene the Mannians and the Scots, in the which conflict there were slaine 535. Mannians: whereupon a certaine versifier writeth to this effect:

Five hundred fourtie men are slaine;

against ill haps,

Yee Mannians arme your selues, for feare of afterclaps.

In the yeere 1313, Robert king of Scots besieged the castle of Russin, which Dingaway Dowd held against him, howbeit at the last the king tooke the castle.

In the yeere 1316, vpon the feast of Ascension, Richard le Mandeuille and his brethren, with diuers great personages of Irland arrived at Ramaldwath, demanding to haue victuals and money ministred vnto them, because they had bene spoiled by their enemies, which made continuall warre vpon them. But when the whole company of the Mannians answered that they would giue nothing, they proceeded against them in warlike maner with two bands, till they were come vnder the side of the hill called Warthfel, in the fildes where Iohn Mandeuille remained, and there hauing fought a battell, the Irish ouercame the people of Man, and spoiled the Island and the Abbey of Russin also: and when they had reueled a whole moneth in the Island, lading their ships they returned home.

Harald being slaine his two sonnes with their sister sped themselves immediatly into Denmarke. Whom Sweno forgetting their fathers deserts receiued in most kinde and friendly maner, and bestowed the yong damosell in marriage vpon Waldemarus king of Russia who was also called by his subjects Iarislauus. Afterward the said Waldemarus had by his daughter a nephew being duke at this present, who succeeded his predecessour both in lineal descent and in name also. Wherefore the English blood on the one side and the Russian on the other side concurring to the topfull birth of our prince, caused that mutual kintred to be an ornament vnto both nations.

The state of the shipping of the Cinque ports from Edward the Confessour and William the Conquerour, and so downe to Edward the first, faithfully gathered by the learned Gentleman M. William Lambert in his Perambulation of Kent, out of the most ancient Records of England,

Ninde in the booke of the generall suruay of the Realme, which William the Conquerour caused to bee made in the fourth yeere of his reigne, and to be called Domesday, because (as Matthew Paris saith) it spared no man but iudged all men indifferently, as the Lord in that great day wil do, that Douer, Sandwich, and Rumney, were in the time of K. Edward the Confessour, discharged almost of all maner of impositions and burdens (which other townes did beare) in consideration of such seruice to bee done by them vpon the Sea, as in their special titles shall hereafter appeare.

Whereupon, although I might ground reasonable coniecture, that the immunitie of the haueu Townes (which we now call by a certaine number, the Cinque Ports) might take their beginning from the same Edward: yet for as much as I read in the Charte of K. Edward the first after the conquest (which is reported in our booke of Entries) A recitall of the graunts of sundry kings to the Five Ports, the same reaching no higher then to William the Conquerour, I will leaue my coniecture, and leane to his Charte: contenting my selfe to peeble to the Conquerour, the thanks of other mens benefites, seeing those which were benefited, were wisely contented (as the case then stood) to like better of his confirmation (or second gift) then of K. Edwards first graunt, and endowment.

And to the ende that I may proceed in some maner of array, I will first shew, which Townes were at the beginning taken for the Five Ports, and what others be now reputed in the same number: secondly, what seruice they ought, and did in times passed: and lastly, what priuiledges they haue therefore, and by what persons they haue bene governed.

If I should iudge by the common, and rude verse,

Which be the Five Ports.

Douer, Sandwicus, Ry, Rum, Frigmar ventis,

I must say, that Douer, Sandwich, Ric, Rumney, and Winchelsey, (for that is, Frigmare ventus) be the Five Ports: Again, if I should be ruled by the Rolle which reciteth the Ports that send Barons to the Parliament, I must then adde to these, Hastings and Hyde, for they also haue their Barons as well as the other: and so should I not onely, nor shew which were the first Five, but also (by addition of two others) increase both the number, and doubtfullnesse. Leauing the verse therefore, for ignorance of the authour and suspicion of his authoritie, and forsaking the Rolle (as not assured of the antiquitie) I will flee to Henry Bracton, a man both ancient, learned, and credible, which liued vnder K. Henry the thirde, and wrote (aboue three hundred yeeres since) learnedly of the lawes of this Realme.

He (I say) in the third booke of his worke, and treatise of the Crowne, taking in hand to shew the articles inquirable before the Iustice in Eire, (or Itinerant, as we called them, because they vled to ride from place to place throughout the Realme, for administration of iustice) setteth forth a special fourme of writs, to be directed severally to the Bailifes of Hastings, Hithe, Rumney, Douer, and Sandwich, commanding them, that they should cause twentie & foure of their Barons (for so their Burgeses, or townesmen, and the citizens of London likewise, were wont to be termed) to appeare before the Kings Iustices at Shipwey in Kent (as they accustomed to do) there to enquire of such points, as should be giuen in charge. Which done, hee addeth moreouer, that forsomuch as there was oftentimes cōtention betwene them of the Five Ports, & the inhabitants of Yarmouth in Norfolke, and Donwich in Suffolke, there should be severall writs directed to them also, returnable before the same Iustices at the same day and place, reciting, that where the King had by his former writs sommoned the Pleas of the Five Ports to bee holden at Shipwey, if any of the same townes had cause to complaine of any (being within the liberties of the said Ports) he should be at Shipwey to propound against him, and there to receive according to law and Justice.

Citizens were called Barons in old time.

Contention betwene Yarmouth, and the Five Ports.

Antiquitie of Yarmouth shewing.

Thus much I recite out of Bracton, partly to shew that Shipwey was before K. Edward the first time, the place of assembly for the Pleas of the Five Ports: partly to notifie the difference, and controuerisie that long time since was betwene these Ports, and those other townes: But purposely, and chiefly, to proue, that Hastings, and Hithe, Douer, Rumney, and Sandwich, were in Bractons time accounted the Five principall hauens or Ports, which were endowed with priuiledge, and had the same ratified by the great Charte of England.

Neither yet will I deny, but that soone after, Winchelsey and Ric might be added to the number. If 02 I find in an old recorde, that king Henry the third tooke into his owne hands (for the better defence of the Realme) the towncs of Winchelsey, and Rie, which belonged before to the Monasterie of Fescampe in Normandie, and gaue therfore in exchange, the Manor of Chiltham in Gloucestershire, & diuers other lands in Lincolneshire. This he did, partly to conceale from the Priors Aliens the intelligence of the secret affaires of his Realme, and partly because of a great disobedience & exccesse, that was committed by the inhabitants of Winchelsey, against Prince Edward his eldest sonne. And therfore, although I can easily be led to thinke, that he submitted them for their correction to the order, and gouernance of the Five ports, yet I stand doubtfull whether hee made them partuers of their priuiledges, or no, for that had bene a preferment, and no punishment vnto them: but I suspect rather, that his sonne king Edward the first, (by whose encouragement and aide, olde Winchelsey was afterward abandoned, and the newe towne builded) was the first that apparelled them with that preeminence.

Winchelsey
first builded.

By this therfore let it appeare, that Hastings, Dover, Hirthe, Rumney, and Sandwich, were the first Ports of priuiledge: which (because they were 5, in number) both at the first gaue, and yet continue, to all the residue, the name of Cinque Ports, although not onely Winchelsey and Rie, be (since that time) incorpored with them as principals, but diuers other places also (for the ease of their charge) be crept in, as partes, limbs, and members of the same.

Now therfore, somewhat shalbe said, as touching the seruices that these Ports of duetie owe, and in deed haue done, to the Princes: whereof the one (I meane with what number of vessels, in what maner of furniture, and for how long season, they ought to wait on the king or the Sea, vpon their owne charges) shall partly appeare by that which we shall presently say, and partly by that which shall followe in Sandwich, and Rumney: The other shall bee made manifest by examples, drawne out of good histories: and they both shall be testified by the words of king Edward the first in his owne Chartre.

The booke of Domesday before remembred, chargeth Dover with twentie vessels at the sea, whereof eche to be furnished with one and twentie men for fifteene dayes together: and saith further, that Rumney and Sandwich answered the like seruice. But now whether this (like) ought to be vnderstoode of the like altogether, both in respect of the number and seruice, or of the (like) in respect of seruice, according to the proportion of their abilitie onely, I may not hereby take vpon me to determine. For on the one side, if Rumney, Sandwich, and the residue, should likewise finde twentie vessels a piece, then (as you shall anone see) the five Ports were subiect to a greater charge at that time, then King Edward the first layd vpon them: And on the other side, if they were onely chargeable after their proportion, then know I not how farre to burthen them, seeing the Record of Domesday it selfe, bindeth them to no certaintie. And therfore leauing this as I find it, I must elsewhere make inquisition for more lightsome prooffe. And first I will haue recourse to king Edward the first his Chartre in which I read, that At ech time that the King passeth ouer the sea, the Ports ought to rigge vp fiftie and seuen ships, (whereof euery one to haue twentie armed souldiers) and to mainteine them at their owne costes, by the space of fifteene dayes together.

And thus it stode with the Ports for their generall charge, in the sixt yeere of his reigne, for then was this Chartre sealed. But as touching the particular burthen of ech one, I haue seene two diuers testimonies, of which the first is a note in French (bearing the countenance of a Record) and is intituled, to haue bene renewed in the two and twentie yeere of the Reigne of the same king, by Stephan Pencheester, then Constable of Dover Castle, in which the particular charge is set downe in this maner.

The Port of Hastings ought to finde three ships.

The towne of Peuensey, one

Buluerhiche and Petit Iahn, one,

Bekesborne in Kent, seuen.

Grenche at Gillingham in Kent, two men and armour, with the ships of Hastings.

The towne of Rie, foure.

To it was Tenterdene annexed, in the time of King Henrie the sixt.

The towne of Winchelsey, tenne.

The Port of Rumney, foure.

Lydde, seuen.

The Port of Hythe, foure.

The Port of Dover, nineteene.

The towne of Folkestone, seuen.

The towne of Feuersham, seuen.

The Port of Sandwich, with Stonor, Fordwich, Dale, &c. foure.

These

These ships they ought to finde upon fortie dayes summons, armed and arraped at their owne charge, and in ech of them twentie men, besides the Maister of the Hariners : all which they shall likewise mainteine five dayes together at their owne costs, giuing to the Maister sixe pence by the day, to the Constable sixe pence, and to ech other Hariner thre pence. And after those five dayes ended, the King shall defray the charges.

The other is a Latine Customall of the towne of Hyde, the which although it pretend not so great antiquity as the first, yet seemeth it to me to importe as much or moze likelihood and credit : It standeth thus.

These be the Five Ports of our soueraigne Lord the King hauing liberties, which other Portshane not : Hastings, Romenal, Herth, Douer, Sandwich, the chiefe Townes.

The seruices due by the same.

Hastings shall finde 21. ships, in euery ship 21. men, and a Garcion, or Boy, which is called a Gromer. To it pertaine (as the members of one towne) the Seathoze in Seford, Peuenshey, Hodeney, Winchelley, Rie, Ihame, Bekesbourne, Grence, Northie, Bulwerhech.

Romenal 5. ships, in euery ship 21. men, and a Garcion : To it pertaine, as members thereof, Promhell, Lede, Eastwestone, Dengemareys, olde Rumney.

Herthe 5. ships, as Romenal before. To it pertaineth the Westherthe.

Douer 21. ships, as Hastings before. To it pertaine, Folkstane, Feuershams, and S. Margarets, not concerning the land, but for the goods and cattels.

Sandwich 5. ships, as Romenal, and Herthe. To it pertaine Fordwich, Reculuer, Serre, and Dele, not for the soile, but for the goods.

Summe of ships 57.

Summe of the men 1187. and 57. Garcions.

This seruice, the Barons of the Five Ports doe acknowledge to owe to the King, vpon summons yerely (if it happen) by the space of 15. dayes together, at their owne costs and charges, accounting that for the first day of the 15. in which they shall spread their sailes to goe towards those parts that the King intendeth : and to serue so long after 15. dayes, as the King will, at his owne pay and wages.

Thus much out of these ancient notes, whereby your selfe may easily discern the difference : but whether the one or the other, or (by reason of some latter dispensacion) neither of these, haue place at this day, I must referre it to them that be priue, and of counsell with the Ports : and so leaving this also vnderdecided, holde on the way, wherein I am entred.

This duetie of attendance therefore (being deuised for the honourable transportation, and safe conduct of the Kings owne person or his armie ouer the narrow Seas) the Ports haue not onely most diligently euer since that time performed, but furthermoze also valiantly behaued themselves against the enemye from time to time, in sundrie exploits by water, as occasion hath bene profered, or the necessitie of the Realme required.

And amongst other feats not vnwoorthy perpetuall remembrance, after such time as Lewes (the eldest sonne of the French King) had entred the Realme to aide Stephan Langton the Archbishop, and the Nobilitie, in the life of King Iohn, and had sent into France for new supply of soldiers after his death, Hubert of Borough (then capitaine of Douer) following the opinion of Themistocles in the exposition of the oracle of the wooden walles, by the aide of the Port townes, armed fortie tall ships, and meeting with eightie saile of French men vpon the high seas, gaue them a most couragious encounter, in which he tooke some, sunke others, and discomfited the rest.

King Henri the third also, after that he came to riper age, had great benefit by the seruice of the Cinque Ports : And king Edward the first in his Chartre, maketh their continuall faithfull seruice (and especially their good endeavour, then lately shewed against the Welshmen) the principall cause, and motiue of that his liberall grant.

Furthermoze, about the midd of the reigne of the same king, an hundred sail of the Maie of the Ports fought at the Sea with a fleet of 200. French men, all which (notwithstanding the great oddes of the number) they tooke, and slew, and sunke so many of the Hariners, that France was thereby (for a long season after) in maner destitute, both of Seamen, and Shipping.

Finally, and to conclude this part, in the dayes of king Henrie the fourth, the Maie of the Five Ports, vnder the conduct of one Henrie Paye, surprised one hundred and twentie French ships, all laden with Salt, Iron, Dile, and no moole merchandize.

The priuiledges of these Ports, being first granted by Edward the Confessour, and William the Conquerour, and then confirmed and increased by William Rufus, Henrie the second, Richard the Part of an Epistle written by one Yuo of Narbona vnto the Archbishop of Burdeaux, conteining the confession of an Englishman as touching the barbarous demeanour of the Tartars, which had liued long among them, and was drawn along perforce with them in their expedition against Hungarie: Recorded by Mathew Paris in the yere of our Lord 1243.

The Lord therefore being prouoked to indignation, by reason of this and other sinnes committed among vs Christians, is become, as it were, a destroying enemy, and a deadly anenger. This I may iustly affirme to be true, because an huge nation, and a barbarous and inhumane people, whose law is lawlesse, whose wrath is furious, even the rod of Gods anger, ouerturneth, and utterly wasteth infinite countreies, cruelly abolishing all things where they come, with fire and sword. And this present Summer, the foresayd nation, being called Tartars, departing out of Hungarie, which they had surprised by treason, layd siege vnto the very same towne, wherein I my selfe abode, with many thousands of souldiers: neither were there in the sayd towne on our part about 50. men of warre, wpon, together with 20. crossbowes, the capitaine had left in garrison. All these, out of certeine high places, beholding the enemies vaste armie, and abhorring the beastly crueltie of Antichrist his complices, signified footythwith vnto their gouernour, the hideous lamentations of his Chistian subiects, who suddenly being surprised in all the prouince adioyning, without any difference of respect of condition, fortune, sexe, or age, were by manifolde cruelties, all of them destroyed: with whose carkeises, the Tartarian chieftains, and their brutish and sauage followers, glutting themselves, as with delicious eates, left nothing for vultures but the bare bones. And a stranger thing it is to consider, that the greedie and rauenous vultures disdeined to prape vpon any of the reliques, which remained. Dide, and deformed women they gaue, as it were, for dayly sustenance, vnto their Canibals: the beautifull deuoured they not, but smothered them lamenting and scratching, with forced and vnnaturall ransishments. Like barbarous miscreants, they quelled virgins vnto death, and cutting off their tender paps to present for deinties vnto their magistrates, they engorged themselves with their bodies.

Howbeit, their spials in the meane time discryping from the top of an high mountaine the Duke of Austria, the King of Bohemia, the Patriarch of Aquileia, the Duke of Carinthia, and (as some report) the Earle of Baden, with a mightie power, and in battell aray, approaching towards them, that accursed crew immediatly vanished, and all those Tartarian vagabonds retired themselves into the distressed and vanquished land of Hungarie; who as they came suddenly, so they departed also on the sudden: which their celeritie caused all men to stand in horrour and astonishment of them. But of the sayd fugitives, the prince of Dalmatia tooke eight: one of which number the Duke of Austria knew to be an English man, who was perpetually banished out of the Realme of England, in regard of certaine notorious crimes by him committed. This fellow, on the behalfe of the most tyranicall king of the Tartars, had bene twice, as a messenger and interpreter, with the king of Hungarie, menacing and plainly foreshewing those mischiefs which afterward happened, vnlesse he would submit himselfe and his kingdome vnto the Tartars yoke. Well, being allured by our Princes to confesse the truth, he made such oathes and protestations, as (I thinke) the deuill himselfe would haue bene trusted for. First therefore he reported of himselfe, that presently after the time of his banishment, namely about the 30. yere of his age, hauing lost all that he had in the citie of Acon at dice, even in the midst of Winter, being compelled by ignominious hunger, wearing nothing about him but a shirt of sacke, a paire of shooes, and a haire cappe onely, being shauen like a foole, and vttering an vncooth noife as if he had bene dumbe, he tooke his journey, and so traueiling many countreies, and finding in diuers places friendly enterreinment, he prolonged his life in this manner for a season, albeit euery day by rashnesse of speech, and inconstancie of heart, he endangered himselfe to the deuill. At length, by reason of extreame trauaile, and continuall change of aire and of meats in Caldea, he fell into a grieuous sicknesse, insomuch that he was wearie of his life. Not being able therefore to go forward or backward, and staying there a while to refresh himselfe, he began (being somewhat learned) to commend to writing those wordes which hee heard spoken, and within a short space, so aptly to pronounce, and to vter them himselfe, that he was reputed for a native member of that countrey: and by the same dexteritie he attained to manie languages. This man the Tartars hauing intelligence of by their spies, drew him perforce into their societie: and being admonished by an oracle or vision, to challenge dominion ouer

the whole earth, they allured him by many rewards to their faithfull seruice, by reason that they wanted Interpreters. But concerning their maners and superstitions, of the disposition and stature of their bodies, of their countrey and maner of fighting &c, he protested the particulars following to be true: namely, that they were aboue all men, couetous, hasty, deceitfull, and mercilesse: notwithstanding, by reason of the rigour and extremitie of punishments to be inflicted vpon them by their superiours, they are restrained from brawlings, and from mutuall strife and contention. The ancient founders and fathers of their tribes, they call by the name of gods, and at certaine set times they doe celebrate solemne feasts vnto them, many of them being particular, & but foure onely generall. They thinke that all things are created for themselves alone. They esteeme it none offence to exercise cruelty against rebels. They be hardie and strong in the breast, leane and pale-faced, rough and husk-shouldred, hauing flatte and short noses, long and sharpe chinnies, their vpper iawes are low and declining, their teeth long and thinne, their eye-browes extending from their fore-heads downe to their noses, their eies inconstant and blacke, their countenances writhen and terrible, their extreame ioynts strong with bones and sinewes, hauing thicke and great thighes, and short legs, and yet being equall vnto vs in stature: for that length which is wanting in their legs, is supplied in the vpper parts of their bodies. Their countrey in olde time was a land vtterly desert and waste, situated far beyond Chaldea, from whence they haue expelled Lions, Beares, & such like vntamed beasts, with their bowes, and other engines. Of the hides of beasts being tanned, they vse to shape for themselves light, but yet impenetrable armour. They ride fast bound vnto their horses, which are not very great in stature, but exceedingly strong, and mainteined with little prouender. They vse to fight constantly and valiantly with iauelins, maces, battle-axes, and swords. But specially they are excellent archers, and cunning warrriers with their bowes. Their backs are slightly armed, that they may not flee. They withdraw not themselves from the combate, till they see the chiefe Standard of their Generall giue backe. Vanquished, they aske no fauour, and vanquishing, they shew no compassion. They all persist in their purpose of subduing the whole world vnder their owne subiection, as if they were but one man, and yet they are moe then millions in number. They haue 60000. Courriers, who being sent before vpon light horses to prepare a place for the armie to incampe in, will in the space of one night gallop three dayes journey. And suddenly diffusing themselves ouer an whole prouince, and surprising all the people thereof vnarmed, vnprouided, disperfed, they make such horrible slaughters, that the king or prince of the land inuaded, cannot finde people sufficient to wage battell against them, and to withstand them. They delude all people and princes of regions in time of peace, pretending that for a cause, which indeed is no cause. Sometimes they say, that they will make a voyage to Colen, to fetch home the three wise kings into their owne countrey; sometimes to punish the auarice and pride of the Romans, who oppressed them in times past; sometimes to conquire barbarous and Northren nations; sometimes to moderate the furie of the Germans with their owne meekemildnesse; somerimes to learne warlike feats and stratagems of the French; sometimes for the finding out of fertile ground to suffice their huge multitudes; sometimes againe in derision they say, that they intend to goe on pilgrimage to S. Iames of Galicia. In regard of which sleights and collusions certaine vndiscreet gouernors concluding a league with them, haue granted them free passage thorow their territories, which leagues notwithstanding being violated, were an occasion of ruine and destruction vnto the foresayd gouernours &c.

Libellus historicus Ioannis de Plano Carpini, qui missus est

Legatus ad Tartaros anno Domini 1246. ab Innocentio quarto Pontifice maximo.

Incipit Prologus in librum Tartarorum.

Mnibus Christi fidelibus ad quos præfens scriptum peruenit, frater Ioannes de Plano Carpini ordinis fratrum minorum, Apostolicæ sedis Legatus, nuncius ad Tartaros & nationes alias Orientis, Dei gratiam in præfenti, & gloriam in futuro, & de inimicis suis gloriam triumphalem. Cum ex mandato sedis Apostolicæ iremus ad Tartaros & nationes alias Orientis, & sciremus Domini Papæ & venerabilium Cardinalium voluntatem, elegimus prius ad Tartaros proficisci. Timebamus enim ne per eos in proximo ecclesiæ Dei periculum immineret. Et quamuis a Tartaris & alijs nationibus timeremus occidi, vel perpetuo captiuari, vel fame, siti, algore, algore, æstu, contumelia, & laboribus nimis, & quasi ultra vires affligi, (quæ omnia multo pluiquam prius credidimus, excepta morte vel captiuitate perpetua nobis multipliciter euenerunt) non tamen pepercimus nobis ipsis, vt voluntatem Dei secundum Domini papæ mandatum adimplere possemus, & vt proficeremus in aliquo Christianis, vt saltem scita veraciter voluntate & intentione ipsorum, possemus illam patefacere Christianis, ne forte subito inuentes inuenirent eos imparatos, sicut peccatis hominum exigentibus alia vice contigit: & fecerunt magnam stragem in populo Christiano. Vnde quæcunque pro vestra vtilitate vobis scribimus ad cautelam, tanto securius credere debetis, quanto nos cuncta vel ipsi vidimus oculis nostris, qui per annum & quatuor menses & amplius ambulauimus per ipsos & cum ipsis, ac fuimus inter eos, vel audiuiamus a Christianis qui sunt inter eos captiui, & vt credimus fide dignis. Mandatum etiam a supremo pontifice habebamus, vt cuncta perscrutarcmur & videremus omnia diligenter. Quod tam nos quam frater Benedictus eiusdem ordinis qui nostræ tribulationis fuit socius & interpres fecimus studiose.

Annus & 4. menses & amplius.

De terra Tartarorum, situ, qualitate & dispositione aeris in eadem. Cap. 1.

Volentes igitur facta scribere Tartarorum, vt lectores facilius valeant inuenire, hoc modo per capitula describemus. Primo quidem dicemus de terra. Secundo de hominibus. Tercio de situ. Quarto de moribus. Quinto de ipsorum imperio. Sexto de bellis. Septimo de terris quas eorum dominio subiugauerunt. Octauo quomodo Bello occurratur eisdem. De terra possumus hoc modo tractare. In principio quidem dicemus de situ ipsius: secundo de qualitate: tertio de dispositione aeris in eadem. Terra vero prædicta est in ea posita parte Orientis in qua oriens sicut credimus coniungitur Aquiloni. Ab Oriente autem est terra posita Kyraiorum & etiam Solangorū: a meridie sunt terræ Saracenorum: inter Occidentem & Meridicm Huyrorum. Ab Occidente prouincia Naymanorum; ab Aquilone mari oceano circundatur. Hæc vero in parte aliqua est nimium montuosa, & in aliqua est campestris, sed fere tota admixta glarea, raro argillosa plurimum est arenosa. In aliqua parte terræ sunt aliquæ modicæ syluæ: alia vero est sine lignis omnino. Cibaria autem sua decoquunt & sedent tam imperator quam principes & alij ad ignem factum de bouum stercorebus & equorum. Terra autem prædicta non est in parte centesima fructuosa: nec etiam potest fructum portare nisi aquis fluuiialibus irrigetur. Sed aqua & riui ibidem sunt pauci: flumina vero rarissima vnde ibidem villæ sunt paucæ; nec aliquæ ciuitates excepta vna, quæ esse dicitur satis bona; nos autem non vidimus illam, sed fuimus prope ad dimidium diem, cum apud Syram ordam essemus, quæ curia est maior imperatoris eorum. Et licet aliàs infructuosa sit, quantum non multum, tamen competenter est alendis pecoribus apta. Aer in ipsa est mirabiliter inordinatus. In media etiam estate quando in alijs partibus solet calor maximus abundare; ibi sunt tonitrua magna & fulgura, ex quibus homines quam plurimi occiduntur. Cadunt etiam ibi eodem tempore maximæ niues. Ibi sunt etiam frigidissimorum ventorum tam maximæ tempestates, quod cum labore vix possunt homines aliquando equitare. Vnde cum essemus apud ordam (sic enim stationes imperatoris apud eos & principum appellantur) iacebamus in terra præ magnitudine venti prostrati, & propter pulueris multitudinem videre minime poteramus. In ea etiam in hyeme nusquam pluit, sed in estate: & tam modicum, quod vix potest aliquando puluerem & radices graminum madidare. Grando etiam ibi sæpe maxima cadit. Vnde eo tempore quando fuit electus, & in sede regni poni debuit imperator, nobis in curia existentibus, tanta cecidit grando, quod ex subita resolutione, sicut plenius intelleximus, plusquam centum & quadraginta homines in eadem curia fuerunt submersi. Res autem & habitacula plura deducta fuerunt. Ibi est etiam in estate subito magnus calor, & repente maximum frigus. In hyemem vero in aliqua parte cadunt maximæ niues, in alia autem paruæ. Et vt breuiter de terra concludam, magna est, sed aliter, sicut vidimus oculis nostris, (quia per ipsam circueundam quinque mensibus & dimidium ambulauimus) multo vilior est, quam dicere valeamus.

De formis Tartarorum, de coniugio, vestibus

Dico de terra, de hominibus est dicendum. Primo quidem formas describemus personarum. Secundo de ipsorum coniugio supponemus. Tercio de vestibus. Quarto de habitaculis. Quinto de rebus eorum. Forma personarum ab hominibus alijs est remota. Inter oculos los enim & genas plusquam alij homines sunt lati. Genæ etiam satis prominent a maxillis. Graciles sunt generaliter in cingulo exceptis quibusdam paucis. Pene omnes sunt mediocris staturæ. Barba fere omnibus minime crescit. Aliqui tamen in inferiori labio & in barba modicos habent crines, quos minime tondent. Super verticem capitis in modum clericorum habent coronas, & ab aure una vsque ad aliam, ad latitudinem trium digitorum similiter omnes radunt. Quæ rasuræ coronæ prædictæ iunguntur. Super frontem etiam ad latitudinem duorum digitorum similiter omnes radunt. Illos autem capillos qui sunt inter coronam & prætaxatam rasuram crescere vsque ad supercilia sinunt. Et ex vtraque parte frontis toudendo plusquam in medio crines faciunt longos: reliquos vero crines permittunt crescere vt mulieres. De quibus faciunt duas cordas, & ligant vnamquamque post aurem. Pedes etiam modicos habent. Vxo- res vero habet vnusquisque quot potest tenere. Aliquis centum, aliquis quinquaginta, aliquis decem, aliquis plures vel pauciores: & omnibus parentibus generaliter iunguntur, excepta matre, filia, vel sorore ex eadem matre, sororibus etiam ex patre: tamen & vxores patris post mortem ducere possunt. Vxorem etiam fratris alter frater iunior post mortem vel alius de parentela iunior ducere teneretur. Reliquas mulieres omnes sine vlla differentia ducunt in vxores, & emunt eas valde pretiosè a parentibus suis. Post mortem maritorum de facili ad secunda coniugia non migrant, nisi quis velit suam nouercam ducere in vxorem. Vestes autem Vestes. tam virorum quàm mulierum sunt vno modo formatæ. Pallijs, cappis vel capputijs vel pelli- bus non vtuntur. Tunicas vero portant de Bukeramo, purpura, vel Baldaquino in hunc modum formatas. A supremo vsque deorsum sunt scissæ, quia ante pectus duplicantur. A latere vero sinistro una, & in dextris tribus ligaturis necluntur, & in latere & in sinistro vsque ad brachiale sunt scissæ. Pellicia cuiuscunque sunt generis in eundem modum formantur: superius tamen pellicium exterius habet pilum, sed a posterioribus est apertum. Habet autem caudulam vnam vsque ad genua retro. Mulieres vero quæ sunt maritatæ habent tunicam valde amplam & vsque ad terram ante scissam. Super caput vero habent vnum quid rotundum de viminibus vel de cortice factum, quod in longum protenditur ad vnam vnam, & in summitate desinit in quadrum: & ab imo vsque ad summum in amplitudine semper crescit, & in summitate habet virgulam vnam longam & gracilem de auro vel de argento seu de ligno, vel etiam pennam: & est assutum super vnum pileolum, quod protenditur vsque ad humeros. Instrumentum prædictum est rectum de buccarano, siue purpura vel baldaquino: sine quo instrumento coram hominibus nunquam vadunt, & per hoc ab alijs mulieribus cognoscuntur. Virgines autem & iuuenes mulieres cum magna difficultate a viris suis possunt discerni: quum per omnia vestiuntur ut viri. Pileola habent alia quàm aliarum nationes, quorum formam intelligibiliter describere non valemus. Stationes rotundas habent in modum tentorij præparatas, de virgis & baculis subtiliter factas. Supra vero in medio rotundam habent fenestrâ vnde lumen ingreditur, & vt possit fumus exire: quia semper in medio ignem faciunt. Parietes autem & tecta filtro sunt cooperta. Ostia etiam de filtro sunt facta. Quædam stationes sunt magnæ, quædam parvæ, secundum dignitatem & hominum paruitatem. Quædam soluuntur subito & reparantur, & super fomarios deferuntur. Quædam dissolui non possunt, sed in curribus deferuntur. Minoribus autem in curru ad deferendum vnus bos; maioribus tres vel quatuor, vel etiam plures, vel quod est magis, sufficiens ad portandum. Quocunque vadunt siue ad bellum, siue aliàs, semper illas deferunt secum. In animalibus sunt diuites valde: in camelis, bobus, ouibus, capris, & equis. Iumentorum tantam habent multitudinem, quantam non credimus habere totum mundum. Porcos & alias bestias minime habent.

DICTO de hominibus, dicendum est de ritu: de quo tractabimus in hunc modum. Primo de cultu: secundo de hijs quæ credunt esse peccata: tertio de diuinationibus, & purgationibus peccatorum: quarto de ritu funeris. Vnum Deum credunt, quem credunt esse factorem omnium visibilium & inuisibilium. Et credunt eum tam bonorum in hoc mundo quàm pœnarum esse factorem: non tamen orationibus vel laudibus, aut ritu aliquo ipsum colunt. Nihilominus habent idola quædam de filtro ad imaginem hominis facta; & illa ponunt ex vtraque parte ostij stationis, & subter illa ponunt quiddam de filtro in modum vberis factum, & illa credunt esse pecorum custodes, & eis beneficium lactis & pullorum præstare. Alia vero faciunt de pannis sericis, & illa multum honorant. Quidam ponunt illa in pulchro curru tecto ante ostium stationis: & quicumque aliquid de illo curru furatur, sine vlla miseratione occiditur.

Duces,

Duces, milenarij, & centenarij vnum semper habeant in medio stationis. Prædictis idolis offerunt primum lac omnis pecoris & iumentis. Et cum primo comedere & bibere incipiunt, primo offerunt eis de cibarijs & potu. Et cum bestiam aliquam occidunt, offerunt cor: Isolo quod est in curru in aliquo cypho, & dimittunt vsque mane, & tunc auferunt de præsentia eius, & decoquunt & manducant. Primo etiam imperatori faciunt idolum, quod ponunt in curru, ante quam stationem honorifice, sicut vidimus ante ordam imperatoris istius, offerunt munera multa. Equos etiam offerunt ei, quos nullus audet ascendere vsque ad mortem. Alia etiam animalia eidem offerunt. Quæ vero occidunt ad manducandum, nullum os ex eis confringunt, sed igni comburunt. Et etiam ad meridiem tanquam Deo inclinant, & inclinare faciunt alios nobiles, qui se reddunt eisdem. Vnde nuper contigit quod Michael, qui fuit vnus de magnis ducibus Russiæ, cum iussisset ad se reddendum Bati, fecerunt eum prius inter duos ignes transire: Post hoc dixerunt, quod ad meridiem Cyngis can inclinarer. Qui respondit, quod Bati & feruis suis inclinarer libenter, sed imagini hominis mortui non inclinarer, quia non licet hoc facere Christianis. Et cum sæpe diceretur, quod inclinarer, & noller, mandauit ei prædictus per filium Ieroslai, quod occideretur si non inclinarer. Qui respondit, quod potius vellet mori, quam hoc faceret, quia non liceret. At ille satellitem vnum misit, qui tam diu contra eum in ventre calce percussit, quousque deficeret. Tunc quidam de suis militibus qui astabat confortans eum dixit: Esto robustus quia hæc pœna non diu tibi durabit, & statim sequeretur gaudium sempiternum: post hoc fuit caput eius cultello præcisum. Militi vero prædicto fuit caput etiam cultello amputatum. Solem igitur lumina & ignem venerantur & adorant, & aquam & terram, eis ciborum & potus primitias offerentes, & mane potissime antequam comedant & bibant: quia de cultu Dei nullam legem obseruant. Neminem cogunt suam fidem vel legem negare. Accidit tamen dum adhuc nuper essemus in terra quod Andreas dux de ¶ Saruogle quæ est in Russiâ fuit apud Bati accusatus, quod educeret equos Tartarorum de terra & venderet alijs, & cum tamen non esset probatum fuit occisus: quod audiens iunior frater eius, venit cum vxore occisi ad ducem prædictum Bati, volens supplicare, ne terra tolleretur eisdem. Qui dixit par esse, quod vxorem fratris carnalis prædicti duceret in vxorẽ: & mulieri præcepit ducere illum in virum secundum consuetudinem Tartarorum. Qui respondit, quod prius vellet occidi, quam faceret contra legem. At ille nihilominus tradidit eam illi, quamuis renuerat quantum posset: & duxerunt ambo in lecto, & posuerunt puerum super illam plorantem & clamantem, & cogerunt eos commisceri coactione non conditionali, sed absoluta. Quamuis de iustitia faciendâ, vel peccato cauendo nullam habeant legem, nihilominus tamen habent aliquas traditiones, quas dicunt esse peccata: quas confinxerunt ipsi & patres eorum. Vnum est, cultellum figere in igne, vel etiam quocunque modo tangere cum cultello: vel cum cultello extrahere carnes de caldario: iuxta ignem etiam incidere cum securi. Credunt etiam quod sic auferri caput debeat igni. Item appodiare se ad flagellum, cum quo percutitur equus: Ipsi enim calcaribus non vtuntur. Item tangere flagellis sagittas. Item iuuenes aues occidere, vel accipere: cum freno equum percutere. Item oscum offe alio frangere. Item lac vel aliquem potum vel cibum super terram effundere. In statione mingere, sed si voluntarie facit occiditur: si autem aliter, oportet quod pecunia solvatur incantatori, qui purificet eos: faciat etiam stationem & ea quæ in ipsa sunt inter duos ignes transire. Sed antequam sic purificetur nullus audet intrare vel aliquid de ipsa portare. Item si alicui morsus imponitur, & deglutire non potest, & de ore suo eijcit eum, fit foramen sub statione, & extrahunt per illud foramen, & sine vlla misericordia occiditur. Item si aliquis calcat limen stationis alicuius ducis interficitur eodem modo. Et multa habent similia, de quibus longum est narrare. Sed homines occidere, aliorum terras inuadere, res aliorum accipere, quocunque iniusto modo fornicari, alijs hominibus iniuriari, facere contra Dei prohibitiones & Dei præcepta, nullum est peccatum apud eos. De vita æterna & damnatione perpetua, nihil sciunt. Credunt tamen quod post mortem in alio seculo viuant, greges multiplicent, comedant, bibant, & alia faciant, quæ in hoc seculo a viuentibus hominibus fiunt. Diuinationibus, augurijs, aruspicijs, veneficijs, incantationibus multum intendunt. Et cum a dæmonibus ipsis responderetur, credunt quod Deus ipsis loquatur, quem Deum vocant Itoga: sed Comani Cham, id est, imperatorem ipsum appellant, quem mirabiliter timent & reuerentur: ac oblationes offerunt multas, & primitias tibi & potus. Secundum autem responsa ipsius faciunt vniuersa. In principio etiam lunationis vel plenilunio incipiunt, quicquid noui agere volunt. Vnde illam magnum imperatorem appellant, eique genua flectunt & deprecantur. Solem dicunt esse matrem lunæ, eo quod lumen a sole recipiat. Et vt breuiter dicam per ignem credunt omnia purificari. Vnde cum nuncij veniunt ad eos, vel principes, vel qualescunque personæ, oportet ipsos & munera quæ portant per duos ignes transire, vt purificentur. Item si cadit ignis de cælo super pecora, vel super homines, quod ibidem sæpe contingit, siue aliquid talium euenit eis, per quod immundos seu infortunatos se reputant, oportet similiter per incantatores mundari. Et quasi omnem spei suam in talibus posuerunt. Quando aliquis eorum infirmatur, ponitur in statione eius una hasta, & contra illam filtrum circumuoluitur nigrum: & ex tunc nullus audet alienus postes stationum intrare. Et quando incipit agonizare, omnes recedunt ab eo; quoniam nullus de ijs qui morti eius assistunt, potest ordam alicuius ducis vel imperatoris vsq; ad nouam lunationem intrare. Cum autem mortuus est, si est de maioribus, sepelitur occulte in campo ubi placuerit: sepeliunt autem cum statione sedendo in medio eius, & ponunt mensam ante eum, & aluicum carnis plenum, & cyphum lactis iumentini: Sepelitur autem cum eo vnum iumentum cum pullo, & equus cum freno & sella: & alium equum comedunt & stramine corium implent, & super duo vel quatuor ligna altius ponunt, vt habeat in alio mundo stationem ubi moretur, & iumentum de quo lac habeat, & possit sibi equos multiplicare, & equos etiam in quibus valeat equitare, Aurum & argentum sepeliunt eodem modo cum ipso. Currus in quo ducitur frangitur, & statio sua destruitur, nec nomen proprium eius vsque ad tertiam generationem audet aliquis nominare. Alius etiam est modus sepeliendi quosdam maiores. Vaditur in campo occulte, & ibi gramina remouent cum radicibus, & faciunt foueam magnam, & in latere illius foueæ faciunt vnâ sub terra, & illum seruum quem habet dilectum ponunt sub eo, qui iacet tam diu sub eo donec incipit agonizare, deinde extrahunt eum vt valeat respirare, & sic faciunt ter. Et si euadet, postea est liber, & facit quicquid ei placuerit, & est magnus in statione, ac inter parentes illius. Mortuum autem ponunt in foueam, quæ est in latere facta cum his quæ superius dicta sunt. Deinde replent foueam quæ est ante foueam suam, & desuper gramina ponunt, vt fuerant prius, ad hoc, ne locus vltcrius valeat inueniri. Alia faciunt vt dictum est, in terra eorum sunt cœmeteria duo. Vnum in quo sepeliuntur imperatores, duces & nobiles omnes: & vbicunque moriuntur, si congruè fieri potest, illuc deferuntur. Sepeliuntur autem cum eis aurum & argentum multum. Aliud est in quo sepeliuntur illi qui in Hungaria interfecti fuerunt: multi enim ibidem occisi fuerunt. Ad illa cœmeteria nullus audet accedere præter custodes, qui ad custodiendum positi sunt ibidem. Et si aliquis accesserit, capitur, spoliatur & verberatur, & valde malè tractatur. Vnde nos ipsi nescientes intrauimus terminos cœmeterij eorum qui in Hungaria occisi fuerunt, & venerunt super nos sagittæ volantes: sed quia eramus nunciij consuetudinem terræ nescientes, nos liberos dimiserunt abire. Parentes autem & omnes alij qui morantur in stationibus suis oportet purificari per ignem: quæ purificatio fit hoc modo. Faciunt duos ignes, & duas hastas ponunt iuxta ignes, & vnâ cordam in summitate hastarum: & ligant super cordam illam quasdam scissuras de buccaramo: sub qua corda & ligaturis inter illos duos ignes transeunt homines, bestię & stationes: Et sunt duæ mulieres, vna hinc, & alia inde aquam proijcientes, & quedam carmina recitantes. Et si aliqui currus ibi franguntur, vel etiam res ibi cadunt aliquæ, incantatores accipiunt. Et si aliquis occiditur à tonitruo, omnes illos homines qui morantur in stationibus illis, oportet prædicto modo ignes transire. Statio, lectus, filtra, currus, vestes, & quicquid talium habuerint, a nullo tanguntur, sed tanquam immunda ab omnibus respiciuntur.

De consuetudinibus bonis & malis & cibis

eorum. Cap. 4.

DICTO de ritu, dicendum est de moribus: de quibus tractabimus hoc modo. Primo dicemus de bonis, secundo de malis: tertio de consuetudinibus: quarto de cibis. Prædicti homines, scilicet Tartari sunt magis obedientes Dominis suis, quàm aliqui homines in hoc mundo, siue religiosi, siue seculares: & magis reuerentur eosdem: neq; de facili mentiuntur eis. Verbis ad inuicem rarò aut nunquam contendunt, factis verò nunquam. Bella, rixæ, vulnera, homicidia inter eos non contingunt. Prædones & fures magnarum rerum non inueniuntur inter eos. Vnde stationes & currus eorum, ubi habent thesaurum suum seris aut vectibus non firmanur. Si aliquæ bestię perduntur, quicumque inuenerit eas vel dimittit sic esse, vel ducit eas ad homines illos, qui positi sunt ad hoc. Homines autem quorum sunt bestię apud eosdem illas requirunt, & absque vlla difficultate recipiunt illas. Vnus alium satis honorat: & ad inuicem sunt satis familiares: Et cibaria quamuis inter illos sint pauca, tamen inter se satis competenter communicant illa; & satis sunt sufferentes. Vnde quum ieiunant vno die vel duobus diebus nihil comedentes omninò de facili non videntur impatientes, sed cantant & ludunt quasi comederunt bene. In equitando multum sustinent frigus, & calorem nimium patiuntur. Non sunt homines delicati. Inuidi ad inuicem non videntur. Inter eos quasi nulla placita sunt: nullus alium spernit, sed iuuat & promouet quantum congruè potest. Mulieres eorum sunt castæ: nec de im-puccitia earum inter eas aliquid auditur. Verba tamen quædam ex eis in ioco satis habent turpia & impudica. Seditioes verò inter eas raro vel nunquam audiuntur. Et quamuis multum inebriantur, in ebrietate sua tamen verbis vel facto nunquam contendunt. Nunc de malis moribus eorum est supponendum, Superbissimi alijs hominibus sunt, & despiciunt omnes: idè quæ si pro nihilo reputant, siue nobiles sint, siue ignobiles. Vidimus enim in curia Imperatoris nobilem virum Ierosolam, magnum Ducem Russiæ, filium etiam Regis & Reginæ Georgiæ, & Soldanos multos, duces etiam Soldanorum nullum honorem debitum recipere inter eos, Sed Tartari qui erant eis assignati, quantumcunq; erant viles, antecesserunt eos, & semper primum locum & summum tenebant: immò sæpè oportebat eos post eorum posteriora sedere. Iracundi multum & indignantis naturæ sunt: & etiam alijs hominibus plus sunt mendaces, & ferè nulla veritas inuenitur in eis. In principio quidem sunt blandi, sed in fine pungunt vt scorpio. Subdoli sunt & fraudulentis, & si possunt astutia circumueniunt omnes. Homines sunt inmundi, sumendo cibum & potum, & alijs factis suis. Qui cum volunt aliquid mali facere alijs hominibus, miro modo occultant, vt præuidere non possint, vel contra eorum astutias remedium inuenire. Ebrietas honorabilis est apud eos: & quum multum quis bibat, ibidem reijcit, nec propter hoc dimittit quin iterum bibat. Valdè sunt cupidi & auari, exactores maximi ad petendum: tenacissimi retentores, & parcissimi donatores. Aliorum hominum occisio pro nihilo est apud illos. Et, vt breuiter dicam, omnes mali mores eorum propter prolixitatem in scripto redigi non possunt. Cibi eorum sunt omnia quæ mandipossunt. Comedunt canes, lupos, vulpes, & equos; & in necessitate carnes humanas. Vnde quando pugnaverunt contra quandam ciuitatem Kytaorum, vbi morabatur imperator ipsorum; eam obsederunt tam diu, quod defecerunt ipsi Tartari omnino expensæ. Et quia non habebant quod manducarent omnino, tunc accipiebantur de decem hominibus vnus ad manducandum. Abluiones etiam quæ egrediuntur de iumentis cum pullis manducant. Imò vidimus etiam eos pediculos manducare: vidimus etiam eos comedere mures. Menfalibus & manutergijs non vtuntur: panem non habent, nec olera, nec legumina, nec aliquid aliud nisi carnes: & tam paucas habent, quòd aliæ nationes vix inde viuere possent. Cum pinguedine carnum multum polliunt manus: quando verò comederunt, tunc manus ad ocreas suas, vel ad gramina, vel ad aliquid talium tergunt. Solent etià honestiores habere aliquos panniculos paruos, cum quibus vlumo tergunt manus, quando carnes manducant. Cibus vnus eorum incidit, & alius accipit cum puncto cultelli morsellos, & vnicuiq; præbet, quibusdā plus, quibusdā minus, secundum quod plus vel minus volunt eos honorare. Scutellas non lauant, & si aliquando cum brodio lauant carnum, iterum cum carnibus in olla reponunt. Ollas etià vel caldaria, vel alia vasa ad hoc deputata si abluunt, simili modo lauant. Apud eos est magnum peccatum, si de cibo vel potu perire permittatur aliquid. Vnde ossa, nisi prius extrahatur medulla, dari canibus non permittunt. Vestes etiam non lauant, nec lauari permittunt, & maxime quo rotintra ab illa hora incipiunt donec desinant. Lac iumentinum bibunt in maxima quantitate si habent: bibunt etiam ouinum, caprinum, vaccinum, & camelorum. Vinum, ceruisiam, & medonem non habent, nisi ab alijs nationibus mittatur, vel donetur eisdem. In hyeme, nisi diuites sint, lac iumentinum non habent. Milliū cum aqua decoquunt, quod rā tenue faciunt, quòd non comedere sed bibere possunt. Et vnusquisq; ex eis bibit cyphum vnum vel duos in mane, & nil plus in die māducant. In sero vnicuiq; parum de carnibus datur, & brodium de carnibus bibunt. In æstate autem, quia tunc habent satis de lacte iumentino carnes raro māducant, nisi fortè donentur eis, aut venatione aliquam bestiam ceperint, siue auem. Legem etiam siue consuetudinē habent occidendi virum & mulierem quos in adulterio inuenerint manifestè. Similiter & virginem si fornicata fuerit, mulierē occidunt & virum. Si aliquis inuenitur in præda vel in furto manifeste in terra potestatis eorū sine vlla miseratione occiditur. Item si aliquis eorum deundat consilium, maxime quando volunt ire ad bellum, centū plagæ dantur super posteriora, quanto maiores dare cum baculo magno vnus rusticus potest. Item quando aliqui de minoribus offendunt in aliquo à suis maioribus non paritur eis, sed verberibus grauiter affliguntur. Item inter filium concubinæ & vxoris nulla est differentia, sed dat pater vnicuiq; eorum quod vult, ei si est de genere ducum, ita est dux filius concubinæ, sicut filius legitimus. Et cum vnus Tartarus habet multas vxores, vnaquæq; per se suam stationem, & familiam habet: & cum vna comedit, & bibit, & dormit vna die, & altera die cum alia. Vna tamen ex ipsis maior est inter alias, & frequentius cum illa quam cum alijs commoratur. Et cum tam multæ sint inter se tamen de facili non contendunt. Viri nihil operantur omnino exceptis sagittis: & etiam de gregibus aliquantulum habent curam, sed venantur, & exercent se ad sagittandum: Omnes enim à paruo vsque ad magnum sagittarij sunt & boni. Et statim pueri eorum, cum sunt duorum annorum vel trium, incipiunt equitare. Equos eorum regunt & currunt in eis: & dantur eis arcus secundum suam ætatem, & instruunt ad sagittandum. Agiles enim sunt & audaces valdè. Virgines gines & mulieres equitant, & agiler in equis currunt vt viri. Vidimus enim eas arcus & pharetras portare, Et tam viri quàm mulieres diu in equitando possunt durare. Breuissimas habent strepas: equos valde custodiunt: imo rerum omnium sunt magni conseruatorores. Mulieres eorum omnia operantur. Pellicia, vestes, calceos, ocreas, & omnia opera quæ de corio fiunt, Currus etiam ducunt & reparant, camelos onerant, & velocissimæ sunt & strenuæ in omnibus operibus suis: scemoralibus omnes vtuntur: aliqua, sicut viri, sagittant.

DICTO de eorum consuetudinibus, dicendum est de eorum imperio. Et primò de ipsius principio. Secundò de principibus eius. Tercio de dominio Imperatoris & principum. Terra quædam est in partibus Orientis, de qua dictum est supra, quæ Mongol nominatur. Hæc terra quondam quatuor populos habuit. Et vnus Yeka-Mongol, id est, magni Mongali vocabatur. Secundus Sumongol, id est Aquatici Mongali. Ipsi autem se ipsos Tartaros appellabant, à quodam fluuiò, qui currit per terram eorum, qui Tartar nominatur. Alius appellatur Merkat, quartus Metrit. Hij populi omnes vnā formā personarum, & vnā linguam habebant: quamuis inter se per principes & prouincias essent diuisi. In terra Yeka-Mongol fuit qui vocabatur Cyngis. Iste incepit esse robustus venator coram Domino. Didicit enim homines furari, rapere, prædari. Ibat autem ad alias terras, & quoscunque potuit capere, & sibi associare non demittebat: homines verò suæ gentis ad se inclinabat, qui tanquam ducem ipsum sequebantur ad omnia malefacta. Hic autem incepit pugnare cum Sumongal, siue Tartaris, postquam homines aggregauerat sibi, & interfecit ducem eorum, & multo bello omnes Tartaros sibi subiugauit & in suam seruitutem redegit. Post hæc cum omnibus his pugnavit, cum Merkat, qui erant positi iuxta terram Tartarorum, quos etiam bello sibi subiecit: Inde procedens pugnavit contra Metritas, & etiam illos deuicit. Audientes itaque Naymani, quod Cyngis erat taliter eleuatus, indignati fuerunt. Ipsi enim habuerunt Imperatorem, qui fuerat strenuus valde, cui dabant tributum omnes nationes prædictæ. Qui debitum vniuersæ carnis exsoluens, filij eius successerunt loco eius: sed iuuenes erant & stulti, & populum nesciebant tenere: sed inuicem diuisi erant & scissi: vnde medio tempore Cyngis erat taliter exaltatus, nihilominus insultum faciebant in terras superiores annotatas, viros & mulieres, & pueros occidebant, & capiebant prædam eorum. Cyngis hoc audiens, omnes sibi subiectos homines aggregauit, Naymani & Kara Kitai, id est, nigri Kitai, ex aduerso in quandam vallem strictam inter montes duos, per quam nos euntes ad imperatorem eorum transiuimus, similiter conueniunt: & commissum est prælium, in quo Naymani & Kara Kitai a Mongallis sunt deuicti, & maior pars eorum occisa: & alij qui euadere non potuerunt in seruitutem redacti sunt. In terra autem prædictorum Kara Kytaorum Occaday can filius Cyngis can, postquam positus fuit imperator, quandam ciuitatem ædificauit, quam Omyl appellauit. Propè quam ad meridiem est quoddam desertum magnum, in quo syluestres homines pro certo habitare dicuntur, qui nullo modo loquuntur, nec in cruribus habent iuncturas: & si quando cadunt, per se surgere sine adiutorio aliorum minimè possunt, aliquantam tamen habent discretionem. Mongali autem in terram eorum reuertentes se contra Kytaos in prælium præparauerunt, qui castra mouentes terram eorum intrauerunt. Imperator autem Kytaorum hoc audiens venit contra eos cum exercitu suo; & commissum est prælium durum, in quo prælio Mongali fuerunt deuicti: & omnes nobiles Mongallorum qui erant in prædicto exercitu fuerunt occisi vsque ad septem. Cyngis verò & alij qui remanserunt in terram suam fugerunt. Et quum aliquantulum quieuisset Cyngis, præparauit se rursus ad prælium & contra terram Huytorum processit ad bellum. Isti homines Christiani de secta Nestorianorum erant, quos etiam bello deuicit, & eorum literas acceperunt. Nam prius scripturam aliquam non habebant. Nunc autem eandem literam Mongallorum appellant. Inde processit contra terram Saruiutorum, & contra terram Karauitarum, & contra terram Voyrat, & contra terram Comana, quas terras omnes deuicit. Inde est in terram suam reuersus. Et cum aliquantulum quieuisset, conuocatis omnibus gentibus supradictis, contra Kytaos ad bellum processit, & cum diu contra eos pugnasset magnam partem terræ Kytaorum vicerunt: Imperatorem autem eorum concluderunt in sua ciuitate maiori: quam cum tam diu obsiderunt, quod exercitui defecerunt expensæ, & cum non haberent quod manducarent, præcepit illis Cyngis can, quod de decem hominibus vnū darent ad manducandum. Illi autem de ciuitate pugnabant viriliter contra illos sagittis & machinis: Et cum deficerent lapides, pro lapidibus proiecerunt argentum, & maxime liquefactum. Ciuitas enim hæc multis diuinijs erat plena. Et cum diu pugnassent, & eam bello vincere minimè possent, fecerunt vnā magnam viam sub terra ab exercitu vsque ad mediā ciuitatem, & aperientes subito terram, eis neſcientibus proſtruerunt in medio ciuitatis, & pugnabant cum hominibus ciuitatis, & illi qui erant extra ſimilimodo pugnabant, & concidentes portas intrauerunt ciuitatem: & occidentes Imperatorem & homines plures, ciuitatem poſſidebant: & aurum & argentum, & omnes diuitias abſtulerunt. Et cum terræ prædictæ Kytaorum ſuos homines præfeſſent, in terram propriam ſunt reuerſi. Et tunc Imperatore Kytaorum deuictio factus eſt Imperator. Quandam autem partem terræ Kytaorum, quæ poſita eſt in mari, vſque in hodiernum diem nullatenus deuicerunt. Kytaï autem, de quibus ſuperius diximus, homines ſunt Pagani, qui habent literam ſpecialem: & habent nouum & vetus Teſtamentum; & habent vitas patrum, & Eremitas & domos quaſi Eccleſias factas, in quibus orant temporibus ſuis: Et dicunt ſe quosdam ſanctos habere. Vnum Deum colunt: Dominum noſtrum Ieſum Chriſtum honorant, & credunt vitam æternam, ſed minime baptizantur. Scripturam noſtram honorant & reuerentur: Chriſtianos diligunt, & Eccleſias faciunt plures. Homines benigni & humani ſatis videntur: barbam non habent, & in diſpoſitione faciei ſatis concordant cum Mongaliſ, non tamen ſunt in facie ita lati. Linguam propriam habent: meliores artifices non inueniuntur in toto mundo in omnibus operibus, in quibus ſolent homines exercitari. Terra eorum eſt opulenta valde in frumento, vino, auro, argento, & ſerico, & omnibus rebus in quibus ſolet ſuſtentari humana natura. Et cum aliquantulum quieuiſſent, ſuos exercitus diuiſerunt. Vnum de filiis Toſſuch nomine, quem etiam Can appellabant, id eſt Imperatorem, miſit cum exercitu contra Comanos, quos multo bello deuicit: & poſtquam vicerat eos in terram ſuam reuertebatur. Alium etiam filium miſit cum exercitu contra Indos; qui minorem Indiam deuicerunt. Hiſi autem nigri ſunt Saraceni, qui Æthiopes nuncupantur. Hic autem exercitus contra Chriſtianos, qui ſunt in India maiori in pugnam proceſſit. Quod audiens rex terræ illius, qui vulgò Præſbyter Iohannes appellatur, venit contra eos exercitu congregato. Et faciens imagines cupreas hominum in ſella poſuit ſuper equos, ponens ignem interius, & poſuit hominem cum ſolle poſt imaginem cupream ſuper equum: & cum multis imaginibus, & equis taliter præparatis venerunt contra prædictos ad pugnandum. Et cum ad locum prælii perueniſſent, iſtos equos vnum iuxta vnum præmiſerunt. Viri autem, qui erant retro, poſuerunt neſcio quid ſuper ignem qui erat in prædicta imagine, & cum ſollibus fortiter ſufflauerunt. Vnde factum eſt, quod de fumo illo aer eſt denigratus. Et tunc ſuper Tartaros ceciderunt ſagittas, ex quibus multi interfecti & vulnerati fuerunt. Et ſic cum confuſione eos de ſinibus ſuis eiecerunt: Et nunquam audiuiſus, quod ultra ad eos redierint. Cum autem per deſerta redirent, in quandam terram venerunt in qua quedam monſtra fœmineas imagines habentia reperiuntur. Et cum interrogaviſſent eas per multos interpretes ubi eſſent viri terræ illius, reſponderunt quod in illa terra quęcunque fœminæ naſcebantur, habebant formam humanam: Maſculi verò formam caninam. Et dum moram protraherent in terra prædicta, Canes in alia parte conuenerunt in vnum: Et dum eſſet hyems aſperima, ſe omnes proiecerunt in aquam: & poſt hæc incontinenti in puluerem mouebantur, & ita pulvis admixtus aquæ ſuper eos congelauit: & dum ſæpè hoc feciſſent, glacies denſa facta eſt ſuper eos: Vnde cum magno impetu cum Tartariſ conuenerunt ad pugnam. At illi qui ſagittas ſuper eos iactabant, ac ſi ſuper lapides ſagittaſſent, retro ſagittæ redibant: Alia etiam arma eorum in nullo eos lædere potuerunt. Canes verò inſulſum facientes in eos morſibus vulnerauerunt, multos etiam occiderunt, & ita eiecerunt eos de ſinibus ſuis. Et dum reuertetetur exercitus ille, venit ad terram Burutabeth, quos bello vicerunt: qui ſunt Pagani. Qui conſuetudinem mirabilem imo potius miſerabilem habent. Quia cum aliquis patrum ſuorum humanæ naturæ debitum exſoluit, omnem congregant parentelam, & comedunt eum. Iſti pilos in barba non habent: immo quoddam ferrum in manibus portant, cum quo barbam ſemper depilant, ſi forſè aliquis crinis creſcit in ipſa: & multum etiam deſormes ſunt. Inde exercitus ille reuertebatur in terram ſuam, Cyngis can etiam eo tempore quo diuiſit exercitus illos, miſit in expeditione contra Orientem per terram Kergis, quos bello non vicit: & vſque ad Caſpios montes peruenit, montes autem illi ſunt de lapide adamantino. Vnde eorum ſagittas & arma ferrea ad ſe traxerunt. Homines inter Caſpios montes concludos viderunt, qui iam montem fregerunt: ſed nubes quædam erat poſita ante ipſos, ad quam accedere non poterant vſlo modo, quia ſtatim moriebantur, cum perueniebant ad illam. Sed antequam peruenirent ad prædictum montem pluſquam per menſem vaſtam ſolitudinem tranſierunt. Inde procedentes adhuc contra Orientem pluſquam per menſem per magnam deſertum iuerunt. Et perueniunt ad quandam terram, ubi viderunt vias tritas, ſed nullum hominem poterant inuenire. Sed tantum quaſiuerunt per terram, quod inuenerunt hominem cum vxore ſua; quos ante Cyngis can adduxerunt. Et cum interrogaviſſet, ubi eſſent homines terræ illius, reſponderunt quod in terra ſub montibus habitarent. At Cyngis can retenta vxore miſit virum illum.

illum cum nuncijs suis mandans hominibus illis vt venirent ad mandatum ipsius. Illi verò euntes ad eos, narrauerunt omnia quæ Cyngis can mandauerat. Qui respondeiunt quod tali die venirent ad mandatum suum faciendum. Medio vero tempore congregauerunt se per vias occultas sub terra, & venerunt contra istos ad pugnandum: & irruentes subito super eos plurimos occiderunt. At illi, Cyngis can videlicet & sui fugam ineuntes, terram exierunt prædictam, Illos tamen homines, virum scilicet & mulierem secum duxerunt, qui vsque ad mortem in terra Tartarorum fuerunt. Interrogati verò quare sub terra habitarent, dixerunt quod vno tempore anni quum sol oritur, tantus sonitus est, quod homines nulla ratione possunt sustinere. Immo etiam tunc percutiebant in organis & tympanis, & alijs instrumentis, vt illum sonitum non audirent. Et dum Cyngis de terra illa reuerteretur, defecerunt ei victualia, & habebant maximam famem. Et tunc recentia interiora vnius bestię eos contigit inuenire: quæ accipientes, depositis tamen stercoribus decoxerunt; & coram Cyngis can portantibus cum suis illa comedit. Et ex hoc statutum fuit ab eo, vt nec sanguis, nec interiora, nec aliquid de bestia quod manducari potest; exceptis stercoribus, projiciatur. Et deinde in terram propriam est reuersus: & ibidem leges & statuta multiplicia fecit, quæ Tartari non violabiliter obseruant. Ex quibus tantum duo dicemus. Vnum est, quod quicumque in superbia erectus, propria autoritate sine electione principum esse voluerit imperator, sine vlla miseratione debet occidi. Vnde ante electionem ipsius Cuyne propter hoc vnus de principibus, nepos ipsius Cyngis can fuit occisus. Volebat enim sine electione regnare. Aliud statutum est, quod sibi debent subiugare omnem terram: nec cum aliqua gente debent pacem habere, nisi prius eis subdatur, quo vsque veniat tempus occisionis eorum. Debent enim occidi, vt prophetatum est eis: Et illi qui euadere poterunt, vt dicunt, debent illam legem tenere quam tenent alij, qui eos bello deuincunt. Statuit etiam quod per millenarios, & centenarios & Decanos debeat eorum exercitus ordinari. Post hoc ab ictu tonitru i est occisus, peractis suis ordinationibus & statutis. Hic autem habuit quatuor filios: Vnus vocabatur Occoday, secundus Tossuch can, tertius Thaa-day: & nomen quarti ignoramus. Isti quatuor filij cum alijs maioribus qui tunc erant, primum filium videlicet Occoday elegerunt imperatorem, filij autem istius Occoday Cuyne, qui nunc est imperator, Cocthen & Cyrenen. Et si plures habuerit filios ignoramus. Filij autem Tossuch can Bati: iste est ditior & potentior post imperatorem: Ordu, iste est tenior omnium ducum: Syban, Bora, Bercuthan: aliorum filiorum Tossuch can nomina ignoramus. Filij Thaa-day sunt Burin & Chadan, nomina aliorum filiorum nescimus. Alterius autem filij Cyngis can, cuius nomen nescimus, filiorum nomina sunt hæc. Vnus vocatur Mengu, cuius mater est Serocstan, Ista domina inter omnes Tartaros, excepta matre imperatoris, est magis nominata: & potentior est omnibus excepto Bati. Alius vocatur Becas. Alios filios habuit plures, sed eorum nomina ignoramus. Hæc sunt ducum nomina, Ordu: iste fuit in Polonia & in Hungaria: Bati, Cathan, Syban, Bureth. Omnes isti fuerunt in Hungaria, Cyropdan, iste est adhuc vltra mare contra Soldanum Damasci. Isti remanserunt in terra: Mangu, Cuthen, Syrennen, Hybilay, Seremum, Synocur, Thuatamur, Cyragay, Sybedey, senex quidam miles inter eos, Bora, Berca, Mauci, Choranca: sed iste inter alios est minimus. Alij verò duces sunt plures, sed eorum nomina ignoramus.

Imperator autē Tartarorum habet mirabile dominium super omnes. Nullus audeat in aliqua parte morari, nisi ipse assignet ei. Ipse autem assignat vbi maneant duces: millenarij centenarij, Centenarij decanis. Insuper quicquid præcipitur in quocunq; tempore, quocunq; loco, siue ad bellum, siue ad mortem, siue ad vitam, sine vlla contradictione obediunt. Etiam si perit filiam virginem vel fororem, sine contradictione dant ei. Aut singulis annis, aut intermissis aliquibus annis virgines colligit ex omnibus finibus Tartarorum. Si ipse vult sibi retinere aliquas retinet: alias dat suis hominibus, sicut videtur ei expedire. Nuncios quoscunq; quocunq; & vbicunq; transmittit, oportet quod dent ei sine mora equos subditios & expensas. Vnde cunq; venerint ei tributa vel nuncij, oportet quod equi, currus, & expensę similiter dentur eis. Nuncij qui veniunt aliunde in magna miseria sunt in victu pariter & vestitu: quia expensę viles sunt & pauca: & maximè cum veniunt ad principes, & ibi debent morā contrahere. Tuncia parum datur decem hominibus, quod inde vix possint viuere duo. Nec etiam in curijs principum, nec in via datur eis comedere, nisi semel in die, & satis parum. Insuper si aliquæ iniuriæ sibi fiunt, conqueri de facili minimè possunt. Vnde eos oportet illa patienter portare. Insuper multa tā à principibus, quam ab alijs nationibus & minoribus ab eis exiguntur: & si non daretur, vili pendunt eos, immò quasi pro nihilo habent eos. Et si à magnis viris mittuntur, nolunt ab eis modicum munus habere: sed dicunt: A magno homine venistis, & cur modicum datis? & accipere dedignantur. Et si nuncij benè volunt facere facta sua, oportet eos dare maiora. Idcirco magnam partem rerum, quæ nobis à fidelibus erant datæ, oportuit nos de necessitate muneribus dare. Et sciendum, quod ita omnia sunt in manu Imperatoris prædicti, quod nemo audeat dicere, hoc est meum vel illius; sed omnia sunt Imperatoris, res, iumenta, & homines. Et super hoc etiam nuper emanauit Imperatoris statutum. Idem dominium per omnia habent duces super homines suos. Diuisi enim sunt homines Tartari, videlicet etiam alij inter duces. Nuncij etiam ducum, quocunque eos transmittunt, & homines tam Imperatoris quam alij omnes equos subdititios & expensas, & qui equos custodiant, & etiam nuncijs seruiant sine contradictione dare tenentur. Imperatori autem iumenta ut habeat ex eis lac ad annum vel ad duos, vel ad tres, sicut placuerit ei, tam duces quam alij pro redditu dare tenentur. Et homines dum eum idem facere tenentur dominis suis, Inter eos enim nullus est liber. Et ut breuiter dicam, Quicquid Imperator & Duces volunt, & quantum volunt de rebus suis accipiunt. De personis etiam eorum disponunt per omnia, sicut volunt. Mortuo Imperatore, sicut superius dictum est, conuenerunt Duces & elegerunt Occoday filium Cyngis can prædicti Imperatorem. Qui habito consilio principum diuisit exercitus. Bati, qui in secundo gradu attinebat ei, misit contra Altisoldanum, & contra terram Bisermanorum. Hij erant Saraceni, & Comanicum loquebantur. Et cum intrasset terram illorum pugnavit contra eos, & bello eos sibi subiecit. Quædam autem ciuitas quæ Barthra dicitur, diu restitit ei, fecerant enim foueas multas in circuitu ciuitatis & operuerant illas; & quando illi veniebant cædebant in foueas. Vnde non potuerunt capere ciuitatem, donec illas foueas replessent. Homines autem de quadam ciuitate quæ vocatur Iakint hæc audientes exierunt obuiam eis, se sponte in manus eorum tradentes: vnde ciuitas eorum non erat destructa, sed plures eorum occiderunt, & alios transfulerunt. Et accepto spolio ciuitatis, ipsam alijs hominibus repleuerunt. Et venerunt contra ciuitatem quæ vocatur Orna. Illa ciuitas erat nimium populosa: Christiani ibi erant plures; Gazari videlicet, Rutheni, & Alani, & alij: nec non & Saraceni. Saracenorum enim erat dominium ciuitatis. Hæc autem ciuitas erat diuitijs multum plena. Est enim posita super fluuium qui vocatur Don, qui intrat in mare. Vnde est quasi portus: & forum maximum habebat de illa ciuitate alij Saraceni. Et cum non possent aliter deuincere, præciderunt fluuium, qui currebat per ciuitatem, & illam cum rebus omnibus submerserunt. Quo facto: postea intrauerunt terram Tortorum, qui similes sunt Pagani: quam deuincientes, iuerunt contra Russiam, & fecerunt magnam stragem in terra Russiæ, ciuitates & castra destruxerunt, & homines occiderunt: etiam Kiouiam quæ erat Metropolis Russiæ obsederunt: & cum diu obsedissent, illam ceperunt, & occiderunt homines ciuitatis. Inde procedentes pugnando destruxerunt totam Russiam. De Russiâ autem & Comania processerunt duces prædicti, & pugnaverunt contra Hungaros & Polonos. Ex quibus Tartaris in Polonia & in Hungaria plures interfecti fuerunt. Et si non fugissent, sed viriliter restitissent Hungari exiissent Tartari de finibus suis: quia tunc habuerunt timorem, quod omnes fugere attentabant. Sed Bati vaginato gladio in faciem eis restitit, dicens: Nolite fugere: quia si fugitis nullus euadet: Et si debemus mori, moriamur omnes: quia futurum est, ut Cyngis can prædixit, quod interfici debeamus: Et si nunc est tempus, sustineamus. Et sic animati sunt & remanserunt, & Hungariam destruxerunt. Inde reuertentes iuerunt in terram Morduanorum, qui sunt Pagani, & bello deuicerunt. Inde procedentes contra Bileros, id est, Bulgariam magnam, & ipsam destruxerunt omnino. Inde procedentes ad Aquilonem adhuc contra Bascart, id est, Hungariam magnam, & eos etiam deuicerunt. Inde egredientes iuerunt ad Aquilonem, & venerunt ad Parossitas qui habent paruos stomachos & os paruulum, nec manducant, sed decoquunt carnes: quibus decoctis ponunt se inter fumum & ollam, & recipiunt fumum, & de hoc solo reficiuntur: Sed etiam si aliquid manducant, hoc valde modicum est. Inde procedentes venerunt ad Samogedos. Hij autem homines tantum de venationibus viuunt: tabernacula & vestes habent tantummodo de bestiarum pellibus. Inde ultra procedentes venerunt ad quandam terram super Oceanum, vbi inuenerunt quædam monstra quæ per omnia formam humanam habebant, sed pedes desinebant in pedes bouinos, & faciem per omnia habebant ut canis: duo verba loquebantur more humano & tertio latrabant ut canis: & sic per interualla temporum latratum interponebant: tum ad naturam suam redibant: & sic intelligi poterat quod dicebant: Inde redierunt in Comaniam, & usque nunc quidam ex eis morantur ibidem. Cyrtodan vero eodem tempore misit Occoday can cum exercitu ad meridiem contra Kergis, quos etiam bello deuicit. Hij autem homines sunt pagani, qui pilos in barba non habent. Quorum consuetudo est talis. Cum pater moritur alicui, præ dolore quasi vnam corrigiam in signum lamenti ab aure usque ad aurem de facie sua leuant. Quibus deuictis, ad meridiem iuit contra Armenos. Sed cum per deserta transiret, etiam quædam monstra effigiem humanam habentia inuenerunt: sed non nisi vnum brachium cum manu in medio pectoris, & vnum pedem habebant: & duo sagittarunt Currebant enim saltando super illum vnum pedem, & cum essent fessi taliter cundo, ibant super manum & pedem, remouendo se quasi rota; & sic cum essent fessiterum currebant secundum modum priorem: aliquos tamen occidebant ex eis. Qualiter Tartari se habent in preljijs. Cap. 6.

Disto de imperio, dicendum est hoc modo de bello. Primo de ordinatione acierum. Secundo de armis. Tertio de astutijs in congressione, quarto de crudelitate quam faciunt in captiuos. Quinto de oppugnatione castrorum & ciuitatum. Sexto de perfidia quam exercent cum hijs qui se reddunt eisdem. De ordinatione acierum dicemus hoc modo. Cyngis can ordinauit, vt decem hominibus præponeretur vnus: & ille secundum nos appellatur Decanus. Decem autem Decanis præponeretur vnus, qui centenarius nuncupatur: Decem vero Centenarijs præponeretur vnus qui millenarius nuncupatur: decem millenarijs præponeretur vnus, & ille numerus vocatur tenebre apud eos. Cuncto vero exercitui præponuntur duo duces vel tres, ita tamen quod habeant respectum ad vnum. Cum autem omnes sunt in bello si de decem hominibus fugit vnus vel duo, vel tres, vel etiam plures, omnes occiduntur. Et vt breuiter dicam, nisi communiter cedant, omnes qui fugiunt occiduntur. Item si vnus vel duo aut plures audacter ad pugnam accedunt, & decem alij non sequuntur, etiam occiduntur. Item si vnus de decem vel plures capiuntur, & alij focij sui non liberant eos, etiam occiduntur. Duo arcus vel tres, vel vnum bonum ad minus, & tres pharetras magnas plenas de sagittis & vnam securim, & funes ad machinas trahendas habere debet vnusquisque. Diuites autem habent gladios acutos in fine, ex vna tantum parte incidentes, & aliquantulum curuos: & habent equum armatum, crura etiam tecta. Galeas & loricas quidam habent de corio in hunc modum formatas. Habent quasdam corrigias de boue ad latitudinem vnus manus, & bituminant tres vel quatuor simul, & ligant illas corrigiolis vel cordis. In corrigia superiori ponunt cordulas in fine; in inferiori ponunt in medio, & sic faciunt vsque ad finem. Vnde quum se inclinant in inferiores, corrigiæ superiores ascendunt & sic duplicantur super corpus, vel triplicantur. De coopertura equi faciunt quinque partes: ex vna parte faciunt vnam, ex alia parte faciunt aliam, quam partem ducunt a cauda vsq; ad caput: quæ ligantur ad sellam, & post sellam in dorso & etiam in collo, super renes etiam partem aliam ponunt, vbi duæ partium ligaturæ iunguntur: in qua pecia faciunt vnum foramen, per quod caudas exponunt: & ante pectus ponunt etiam vnam: quæ omnes protenduntur vsque ad crurium iuncturas. Et ante frontem laminam ferream ponunt, quæ ex vtraque parte colli partibus prædictis ligatur. Lorica vero etiam quatuor partes habet, vna pars protenditur a scemore vsque ad collum; sed est facta secundum dispositionem humani corporis: quia ante pectus est stricta: in rotundum obuoluitur circa corpus à brachijs inferius: Super humeros autem retro ad renes habent aliam peciam, quæ protenditur a collo vsque ad aliam peciam, quæ reuoluitur circa corpus: Super humeros autem istæ duæ peciæ anterior videlicet & posterior, ad duas laminas ferreas quæ sunt in vtroque humero fibulis connectuntur. Et in vtroque brachio vnam habent peciam, quæ ab humero protenduntur vsque ad manus, quæ etiam inferius sunt aptæ. Et in vtroque crure vnam habent peciam: quæ peciæ omnes fibulis coniunguntur. Galea autem superius est ferrea. Sed illud quod protegit in circuitu collum & gulam de corio fit. Et omnes istæ peciæ de corio sunt formatæ secundum modum superius annotatum. Quidam autem omnia quæ superius diximus habent de ferro in hunc modum formata. Vnam laminam tenuem ad latitudinem vnus digiti faciunt, & ad longitudinem palmæ vnus. Et in hunc modum faciunt laminas multas: & in vnaquaque lamina octo foramina paruula faciunt, & interius tres corrigias strictas & fortes ponunt, & laminas vnani super aliam ponunt, quasi ascendendo per gradus: & ligant laminas prædictas ad corrigias tenuibus corrigiolis, quas mit-

tunt per foramina superius annotata: Et in superiori parte consueunt corrigiolam vnam, vt laminæ prædictæ bene & firmiter cohæreant sibi. Et faciunt ex laminis quati corrigiam vnam, & postea ligant per pecias per omnia, sicut superius dictum est. Et ista faciunt tam ad equorum quam ad hominum armaturas. Et faciunt illa ita lucere, quod potest homo in eis faciem suam videre. Aliqui eorū lanceas habent: & in fine ferri lanceæ vnum habent vncū, cum quo trahunt hominem de sella si possunt. Longitudo sagittarum est duorum pedum & vnus palmæ, & duorum digitorum. Et quia diuersi sunt pedes, mensurā pedum geometricā ponimus. Duodecem grana hordei pollicis transuersio est. Sexdecem pollices transuersi faciunt vnum geometricum pedem. Ferramenta sagittarum sunt acutissima, & ex vtraque parte incidentia quasi gladius biceps, & semper portant limas iuxta pharetram ad acuendum sagittas, Ferramenta prædicta caudam habent acutam ad longirudinem vnus digiti, quam imponunt in lignum. Scutum habent de viminibus vel de virgulis factum. Sagittas habent alias ad sagittandum aues bestias & homines inermes ad trium digitorum latitudinem. Sagittas alias habent diuersimodas ad aues & bestias sagittandas. Quum ad bellum procedere volunt præcursores præmittunt, qui nihil secum portant præter filica sua, equos & arma. Isti nihil rapiunt, domos non comburunt, bestias non occidunt: Sed tamen homines vulnerant & mortificant, & si non possunt aliud, mitunt in fugam; multo libentius tamen occidunt, quam fugant, post istos sequitur exercitus, qui cuncta quæ inuenit accipit, & homines etiam, si inueniri possunt, accipiunt & occidunt. Quum autem ad flumina perueniunt, hoc modo transeunt illa etiam si sunt magna. Maiores vnum rotundum & leue corium habent, in quo in summitate per circuitum crebras faciunt ansas, in quibus funem imponunt, & stringunt ita quod in circuitu faciunt quendam ventrem, quem replent vestibus, & alijs rebus, & fortissime comprimunt ad inuicem: post hoc in medio ponunt sellas & alias res duriores: homines autem in medio sedent: & ligant ad caudam equi nauem hanc taliter præparatam, & vnum hominum qui equum regat faciunt pariter cum equo ante natæ: vel habent aliquando duos remos, & cum illis remigant vltra aquam, & sic transeunt fluuium, Equos veropellunt in aqua, & vnus homo iuxta vnum equum, quæ regit, natat: & alij equi illum sequuntur. Et sic transeunt aquas & flumina magna. Alij vero pauperiores vnam bursam de corio bene confutam vnusquisque tenetur habere: in qua bursa vel in quo sacco vestes & omnes res suas imponunt; & in summitate sacculi fortissime ligant, & suspendunt ad caudam equi, & transeunt, vt supradictum est. Sciendum est, quod cum vident hostes tunc vadunt ad eos, & vnusquisque iacit tres sagittas vel quatuor contra aduersarios: Et si vident quod eos superare non possunt, retro gradiuntur ad suos: Et hoc faciunt in fraudem, vt aduersarij eos sequantur ad loca vbi insidias parauerunt: Et si inimici eorum sequuntur ad prædictas insidias, circundant eos & sic vulnerant & occidunt. Item si vident quod magnus exercitus est contra eos, aliquando diuertunt ab eo per vnam dietam vel duas, & alia partem terræ inuadunt & spoliant: & interficiunt homines, & terrā destruant & deuastant. Et si vident quod hoc etiā facere non possunt, cedunt retro ad decem vel duodecim dietas: aliquando etiā morantur in loco tuto, quousque aduersariorū exercitus separetur, & tunc furtim veniunt, & depopulantur totā terram. In bellis etiam astutissimi sunt: quia iam per quadraginta annos & amplius cum alijs gentibus dimicarunt. Cum autem volunt ad pugnam accedere, omnes acies ordinant sicut deberet pugnare. Duces siue principes exercitus bellū non intrant, sed stant à lōge cōtra inimicorū exercitum, & iuxta se habent pueros in equis & mulieres & equos. Et faciunt aliquando imagines hominum, & ponunt super equos. Hoc ideo faciunt, vt multitudo magna bellantium esse credantur. Contra faciem equorum vnam aciem captiuorum & aliarum gentium quæ sunt inter eos transmittunt: & forsitan aliqui Tartari vadunt cum eis. Alias acies fortiorum hominum longe mittunt à dextris & à sinistris, vt non videantur ab aduersarij suis: & sic circundant aduersarios & colligunt in medium, & pugnare incipiunt ex omni parte. Et cum sunt aliquando pauci, putantur ab aduersarijs qui circundati sunt, esse multi. Et maxime cum videant illos, qui sunt cum duce vel principe exercitus pueros & mulieres & equos, & homines fictos, vt dictum est supra: quos credunt esse pugnatōres: & per hoc terrentur & confunduntur. Et si forte aduersarij bene pugnant, faciunt eis viam vt fugiant: & statim cum fugere incipiunt, ab inuicem separati insequuntur eos, & plures tunc occidunt fuga, quam mortificare possent in bello, Sciendum tamen est, quod si aliud possunt, non libet cōgrediuntur, sed homines & equos sagittis vulnerant & occidunt. Munitiones in hunc modum expugnant. Si est talis munitio ipsam circundant, immo aliquando ita sepiunt, vt nullus ingredi vel exire possit. Expugnant fortissime machinis & sagittis: & nec die nec nocte cessant a prælio, vt illi qui sunt in munitioibus non quiescant. Ipsi Tartari quiescunt: quia acies diuidunt & vna succedit alteri in pugna vt non nimium fatigentur. Et si eam taliter habere non possunt græcū projiciunt ignem. Imo solent aliquando accipere aruinā hominum quos occidunt, & liquefactum projiciunt super domos: Et vbicunque venit ignis super pinguedinem illam, quali inextinguibiliter ardet. Et si ira non prævalent, & si ciuitas illa vel castrum habeat flumen, obstruunt illud, vel faciunt alium alucum & submergunt illam munitionem si possunt. Si autem non possunt suffodiunt illam, & sub terra armati in ipsam ingrediuntur. Et cum iam intrauerunt, vna pars ignem imponit vt comburatur: & alia pars cum illius munitionis hominibus pugnat. Si autem nec sic illam vincere possunt, castrum vel munitionem suam faciunt contra illam, vt ab inimicorum iaculis non grauentur, & contra illam multo tempore iacent: nisi forte exte- rius adiutorium exercitus qui pugnat cum eis adhibeat, & vi remoueant ipsos. Sed cum iacent ante munitionem blandè eis loquuntur, & multa promittunt, ad hoc vt se in eorum manus tradant: Et si illi se eis tradiderint, dicunt: Exite, vt secundum morem nostrum vos muneremus. Et cum illi ad eos exeunt, quærent qui sunt artifices inter eos, & illos referuant: alios autem, exceptis illis quos volunt habere pro seruis cum securi occidunt. Et si aliquibus alijs parcunt, vt dictum est, nobilibus & honestis nunquam parcunt. Et si fortè aliquo casu contingente referuant aliquos nobiles; nec prece nec precio vltra de captiuitate possunt exire. In bellis autem quoscumque capiunt occidunt, nisi forte velint aliquos referuare vt habeant eos pro seruis. Occidendos autem diuidunt per centenarios, vt cum bipenni interficiantur ab eis. Ipsi vero post hoc diuidunt captiuos, & vnicuique seruo ad interficiendum dant decem aut plures vel pauciores, secundum quod maioribus placet.

De terris quas eorum dominio subiugarunt. Cap. 7.

Scripto quomodo pugnant, dicendum est de terris, quas eorum dominio subiugarunt. De quo isto modo scribemus. Primo dicemus quomodo faciunt cum hominibus pacem. Secundo de terrarum nominibus quas sibi subdiderunt. Tertio de tyrannide quam exercent in eis. Quarto de terris quæ viriliter resisterunt. Sciendum est quod cum nullis hominibus faciunt pacem, nisi subdentur eis: quia, vt dictum est supra, Cyngis can habent mandatum, vt cunctas si possunt sibi subijciant nationes. Et hæc sunt illa quæ petunt ab eis, vt vadant cum eis in exercitu contra omnem hominem quando placet, & vt dent decimam de omnibus tam de hominibus, quam de rebus. Computant enim decem, & vnum accipiunt. De puellis faciunt illud idem, quos in terram eorum deducunt & tenent eos pro seruis: reliquos numerant & ordinant secundum morem. Sed quando plene habent dominium super eos, si aliquid promiserunt eis nihil obseruant: sed quascunque possunt congrue occasiones inueniunt contra eos. Nam cum essemus in Russia, missus fuit Saracenorum ex parte Cuynthean vt dicebatur & Bari: & præfectus ille a quolibet homine qui habebat tres pueros vnum accipiebat: & quicumque viri non habebant vxores, illos deducebant, & faciebant de mulieribus etiam illud idem quæ viros legitimos non habebant. Pauperes etiam qui mendicando sunt victum quærebant similiter deportabant. Reliquos autem secundum eorum consuetudinem numerant, præcipiens vt vnusquisque tam paruus quam magnus, & infans vnus diei, siue pauper siue diues esset, tale tributum præberet: vt scilicet daret vnâ pellem albi vrsi, & vnum nigrum castorei, & vnum Zabulum, & vnâ nigram pellem cuiusdam animalis quod in terra latibulum habet, cuius nomen nescio in latinum transferre, sed Tentonice dicitur. Ilir: Poloni autem & Rutheni appellant illam Dochon: & vnâ nigram pellem vulpinam. Et quicumque ista non dat, inter Tartaros debet duci, & in eorum redigi seruitutem. Mitunt etiam pro principibus terrarum, vt ad eos veniant sine mora: & cum venerint, debitum honorem nullum recipiunt, sed habentur vt aliæ viles personæ: & oportet vt eis munera magna præsentent, tam ducibus quam vxoribus eorum, & officialibus, millenarijs & centenarijs. Imo omnes generaliter, & ipsi etiam serui ab eis cum magna importunitate munera quærent: Et non solum ab ipsis, sed etiam à nuncijs eorum cum mittuntur. Aliquibus etiam inueniunt occasiones vt eos occidant. Sicut de Michaelè & alijs actum est. Aliquos vero alliciunt, quos permittunt redire. Aliquos etiam potionibus perimunt vel veneno. Eorum enim intentio est, vt ipsi soli dominentur in terra. Idcirco quærent occasiones contra nobiles, vt eos occidant. Ab illis vero quos redire permittunt petunt eorum filios aut fratres, quos vltius nunquam dimittunt. Sicut factum est de filio Ierosai, & de quodam duce Alanorum, & alijs plurimis. Et si moritur pater vel frater siue hæres, filium vel fratrem nunquam dimittunt: immo illius principatum totaliter accipiunt sibi. Sicut de quodam Solangorum vidimus esse factum. Baschathos suos ponunt in terris eorum quos redire permittunt, quibus oportet vt ad nutum tam duces quam alij debeant obedire. Et si homines alicuius ciuitatis vel terræ non faciunt quod volunt, isti Baschathi imponunt eis, quod sunt Tartaris infideles: & sic ciuitatem illam vel terram destruant, & homines qui sunt in ea occidunt, per manum validam Tartarorum, qui ex mandato principis illius cui obedi terra illa veniunt eis nescientibus, & subito irruunt super eos: sicut nuper contigit cum in terra Tartarorum esse de quadam ciuitate. Quod ipsummet de Ruthenis fecerunt in terra Comanorum. Et non solum princeps Tartarorum qui terram vsurpauit, sed præfectus ipsius, & quicunque Tartarus per ciuitatem illam siue terram transit quasi dominatur eidem, & maxime qui maior est apud eos. Insuper aurum & argenti, & alia quæ volunt & quando libet ad imperatorem vadant Tartaros ad placitandum. Sicut nuper contigit de duobus filiis regis Georgiæ. Vnus enim erat legitimus, & alter de adulterio natus, qui vocabatur Dauid: legitimus autem Melic vocabatur. Filio adulteræ terræ partem relinquebat pater. Alius vero, qui iunior erat, veniebat cum matre ad Tartarorum imperatorem, pro eo quod Dauid prædictus ad ipsum iter arripuerat veniendi. Mater alterius scilicet Melic regina Georgiæ, per quam maritus tenebat regnum, quia per fœminas illud regnum tenebatur, mortua fuit in via. Illi autem cum venerunt dederunt maxima munera: & maxime legitimus filius, qui repetebat terram quam reliquerat pater filio suo Dauid, cum non deberet habere, quia adulteræ filius erat. Ille vero respondit: Licet sum filius concubinæ, peto tamen vt fiat mihi iustitia secundum legem Tartarorum, qui nullam differentiam faciunt inter filios legitimæ & ancillæ: vnde fuit data sententia contra filium legitimum, vt ille Dauidi qui maior erat subesset, & terram haberet quiete & pacifice, quam dederat ei pater: & sic donaria quæ dederat, & causam quam contra fratrem suum Dauid habuerat, amisit. Ab illis etiam nationibus quæ longe sunt ab eis, & coniunctæ sunt alijs nationibus quas aliquo modo timent, quæ non sunt eis subiectæ, tributum accipiunt & quasi misericorditer agunt cum eis, vt non adducant exercitum super eos, vel etiam vt alij non terrentur, se tradere eis. Sicut factum est de Obefis siue Georgianis, a quibus quinquaginta vel quadraginta millia, vt dictum est, yperperorum siue Byfantiorum accipiunt pro tributo: alijs ad hoc in pace esse permittunt. Tamen, secundum quod intelleximus ab eis, rebellare proponunt.

Terrarum nomina quas vicerunt sunt hæc. Kytai, Naymani, Solangi, Kara Kytai, siue nigri Kytai, Comana, Tumat, Voyrat, Caramiti, Huyur, Sobool, Merkiti, Meniti, Baryhyur, Gosmit, Saraceni, Bisermini, Turcomani, Byleri, magna Bulgaria, Baschare, magna Hanguaria, Kergis, Colona, Thorati, Buritabeth, Parossiti, Sassi, Iacobiti, Alani, siue Affi, Obefi siue Georgiani, Nestoriani, Armeni, Cangiti, Comani Brutachi, qui sunt Iudæi, Mordui, Torci, Gazari, Samogedi, Perses, Thoas, India minor siue Æthiopia, Ychafi, Rucheni, Baldach, Sarthi: Aliæ terræ sunt plures, sed earum nomina ignoramus. Vidimus etiam viros & mulieres fere de omnibus terris supra nominatis. Hæc autem sunt nomina Terrarum quæ eis viriliter resisterunt, nec sunt adhuc subditæ eis, India magna, Mangia; Quædam pars Alanorum: Quædam pars Kytaorum, Sayi. Quædam enim ciuitatem Sayorum prædictorum obsederunt & debellare tentauerunt. At ipsi fecerunt machinas contra machinas eorum, & Tartarorum machinas omnes fregerunt, nec ciuitati appropinquare poterant ad pugnam contra machinas & balistas. Tandem vnâ viam sub terra fecerunt, & prosiluerunt in ciuitatē, & alij tentabant incendere ciuitatē, alij pugnabant. Homines autem ciuitatis vnâ partem populi ad extinguendū ignem posuerunt, & alia pars fortiter pugnabat cum hijs qui intrauerunt ciuitatem, & multos occiderunt ex eis, & alios vulnerauerunt, cōpellenes eos ad suos redire. At ipsi videntes quod nihil possent facere, & multi homines morentur, recesserunt ab eis. In terra Saracenorum & aliorum vbi sunt quasi inter eos domini, accipiunt omnes artifices meliores, & in omnibus operibus suis ponunt. Alij autē artifices dant eis de opere suo tributum. Segetes omnes conduunt in horreis dominorum: & vnicuique vnum pondus satis modicum dant in die: nihil aliud nisi ter in septimana modicum quid de carnibus eis prebent. Et illi hoc tantum artificibus faciunt qui in ciuitatibus commorantur. Item quando dominis placet iuuenes omnes accipiunt, & post se cum omnibus famulis suis ire cogunt: qui de cætero certo sunt numero Tartarorum; immo potius de numero captiuorum: quia etiam inter ipsos sunt numerati, non tamen habentur in reuerentia sicut Tartari; sed habentur pro seruis, & ad omnia pericula vt alij capriui mittuntur. Ipsi enim in bello sunt primi: Etiam si debet palus vel aqua periculosa transiri, eos oportet primo vadum tentare. Ipsos est etiam necesse operari omnia quæ sunt facienda. Ipsi etiam si in aliquo offendunt, vel si non obediunt ad nutum, vt asini verberantur. Et vt breuius dicam, modicum quid manducant, & etiam modicum bibunt, & pessime induuntur; nisi forte aliquid possunt lucrari, nisi sunt aurifabri & alij artifices boni. Sed aliqui tam malos dominos habent, quod nihil eis dimittunt, nec habent tempus præ multitudine operum dominorum, vt sibi aliquid operentur, nisi furentur sibi tempus, quando forsitan debent quiete vel dormire. Et hoc si uxores vel propriam stationem permittuntur habere. Alij autem qui tenentur in domo pro seruis omni miseria sunt repleti. Vidi enim eos ire in bracis sæpissime, & toto corpore nudos in maximo solis ardore. Et in hyeme patiuntur maximum frigus. Vidimus etiam aliquos pedicas & digitos manuum de magno frigore perdidisse. Audiuius etiam alios esse mortuos, vel etiam de magno algore quasi in omnibus membris inutiles esse factos.

Disto de terris, quæ obediunt eis, supponendum est quomodo bello occurratur eisdem. Quod videtur nobis hoc modo dicendum. Primo scribendum est quid intendunt. Secundo de armis & ordinatione acierum. Tertio quomodo occurratur astutijs eorum in congressione. Quarto de munitione castrorum & ciuitatum. Quinto quid faciendum sit de captiuis eorum. Inuentio Tartarorum est subijcere sibi totum mundum si possunt. Et de hoc Cyngischan habent mandatum, sicut superius dictum est. Idcirco eorum imperator sic in literis suis scribit. Dei fortitudo, Omnium Imperator. Et in superscriptione sigilli sui hoc habet.

Dominus in cælo, & Cuynch Chan super terram. Dei fortitudo, omnium hominum imperatoris sigillum. Et ideo cum nullis hominibus faciunt pacem, ut dictum est, nisi forte se in eorum manibus tradunt. Et quia excepta Christianitate nulla est terra in orbe quam timent, idcirco se ad pugnam præpararunt contra nos. Vnde nouerint vniuersi quod nobis existentibus in terra eorum in solenni curia, quæ iam ex pluribus annis indicta erat, fuimus, ubi elegerunt Cuynch imperatorem in præsentia nostra, qui in lingua eorum dicitur Chan. Qui Cuynch Chan prædictus erexit cum omnibus principibus vexillum contra ecclesiam dei & Romanum imperium, & contra omnia regna Christianorum & populos occidentis, nisi forsitan facerent ea, quæ mandat Domino Papæ, & potentibus ac omnibus Christianorum populis Occidentis: quod nulla ratione faciendum est: tum propter nimiam seruitutem & intolerabilem, quæ est hæcenus inaudita, quam vidimus oculis nostris, in quam redigunt omnes gentes sibi subiectas: tum propterea quod nulla in eis est fides: nec potest aliqua gens confidere in verbis eorum: quia quicquid promittunt non obseruant, quando vident sibi tempora fauere: & subdoli sunt in omnibus tactis & promissis eorum. Intendunt etiam delere omnes principes, omnes nobiles, omnes milites de terra, ut superius dictum est: sed hoc faciunt subdole & artificiose in subditos suos: Tum etiam quia indignum est quod Christiani subdantur eisdem, propter abominaciones eorum, & quia in nihilum redigitur cultus dei, & animæ pereunt, & corpora vltra quàm credi possit multitudine affliguntur. In primo quidem sunt blandi, sed postea ut scorio cruciant & affligunt. Tum quia pauciores sunt numero, & corpore debiliores quàm populi Christiani. In prædicta autem curia sunt bellatores & principes & exercitus assignati. De decem hominibus mittuntur tres cum familijs eorum, de omni terra potestatis eorum. Vnus exercitus debet intrare per Hungariam: secundus per Poloniam. Veniunt autem pugnaturi continue octodecem annis. Tèpus est etiam eis assignatum, In Martio An. Dom. 1247, si de terra sua mouebunt. Venient autem in tribus vel in quatuor annis vsq; ad Comaniã. De Comania autem insultum facient in terras superius annotatas. Hæc omnia firma sunt & vera, nisi Dominus aliquod impedimentum pro sua gratia faciat eis, Sicut fecit quando venerunt in Hungariã & Poloniã, Debebant enim procedere tunc pro certo triginta annis. Sed interfectus fuit tunc imperator eorum veneno: & propter hoc quieuerunt à prelijs vsq; nunc. Sed modo, quia positus est imperator de nouo, iterum se de nouo ad pugnam incipiunt præparare. Ad hoc sciendum est, quod imperator dixit ore suo, quod vellet mittere exercitum in Liunioniam & Prussiam. Et quoniam omnem terram volunt delere vel in seruitutem redigere, quæ seruitus est intolerabilis nostræ genti, ut superius dictum est: Occurrendum est igitur eis in bello. Sed si vna prouincia non vult alteri opem ferre, terra illa delebitur contra quam pugnant, & cum illis hominibus quos capiunt pugnabunt contra aliam terram: & in acie erunt primi. Si male pugnant occidentur ab eis: Si autem bene, ipsos cum promissis adulationibus tenent: & etiam ut ab ipsis non fugiant promittunt eis quod facient eos dominos magnos: & post hoc quando securi esse possunt de ipsis, ut non redeant, faciunt eos infelicitissimos seruos. Ac de mulieribus quas volunt in concubinas tenere proseruijs faciunt illud idem. Et ita cum hominibus deuictæ prouinciæ destruunt aliam terram. Nec est aliqua prouincia quæ per se possit resistere eis: quia de omni terra potestatis eorum, ut dictum est, homines congregant ad bellum. Vnde si Christiani se ipsos & suã terram, & Christianitatem volunt seruare, oportet quod in vnum conueniant reges, principes & barones, & terrarum rectores, & mittant de cõmuni consilio homines contra eos ad pugnam, antequam ipsi incipiant in terras diffundi. Quoniam postquam incipiunt spargi per terras, vndiq; homines quæruunt, & nullus congrue auxilium alteri potest præbere: quoniam ipsi cateruatim vndiq; quæruunt homines & occidunt. Quicumq; autem volunt pugnare cum eis, hæc arma debent habere. Temperamentum ferri,

vt Tartari, quando sunt calida, temperari in aqua cum sale mixta, vt tortia sint ad penetrandum arma eorum. Gladios & etiam lanceas cum vnco, qui valeant ad trahendum eos de sellis: quia de eis facillime cadunt: ac cultellos ac loricas duplicatas; quia illos eorum sagittæ non penetrant: & galeã & arma alia ad protegendum corpus & equum ab armis & sagittis eorum. Et si aliqui non sunt ita bene armati, vt dixi; debent ire post alios vt faciunt Tartari: & trahere contra eos de armis & sagittis. Nec debent parcere pecuniæ, quoniam comparent arma, vt possint animas & corpora, libertatem & res alias conseruare. Acies debent ordinari, vt ipsi, per millenarios, centenarios, & decanos & duces exercitus: qui duces nequaquam debent prælium intrare, sicut nec duces eorum, sed debent exercitus videre & ordinare: legem quæ debent ponere vt simul incendant ad bellum, siue aliàs, sicut sunt ordinati. Et quicumque reliquit alium siue ad bellum procedentem, siue pugnantem, vel quicumque fugerit, nisi omnes cõmuniter cedant, grauissime puniatur: quia tunc pars bellantium sequitur fugientes, & sagittis eorum occidunt, & pars cum hijs qui remanent pugnant, & sic confunduntur & occiduntur remanentes & fugientes. Similiter quicumque conuersus fuerit ad prædam tollendam, antequam omnino sit exercitus contrariorum deuictus, maxima pœna mulctetur. Talis enim apud Tartaros sine ulla miseratione occiditur. Locus ad præliandum est eligendus, si fieri potest vt campus sit planus, & possint vndique videre: & si possunt habeant sylvam magnam a tergo vel a latere. ita tamen quod non possunt intrare inter ipsos & sylvam: nec debent simul omnes conuenire in vnum, sed facere acies multas, & diuersas ab inuicem, nec tamen multum distantes. Et contra illos qui post veniunt debent vnã aciem mittere qui eis occurrat. Et si Tartari simulant fugam, non multum vadant post eos, nisi forte quantum possunt videre, ne forte ipsos ad paratas insidias trahant, sicut facere solent: Et alia sit parata ad inuandum aciem illam, si fuerit opportunum. Insuper habeant speculatores ex omni parte, vt videant quando veniant aliarum acies Tartarorum retro, à dextris & à sinistris: & semper debent mittere aciem contra aciem quæ eis occurrat. Ipsi enim semper nituntur concludere aduersarios eorum in medio, vnde magnam cautelã debent habere ne hoc facere possint, quia sic exercitus facillime debellatur. Omnes acies hoc debent cauere, ne diu currant post eos, propter insidias quas solent præparare: plus enim fraudulentia quàm fortitudine pugnant. Duces exercitus semper debent esse parati ad mittendum adiutorium, si necesse est, illis qui sunt in pugna, & propter hoc etiam debent vitare nimium cursum post eos: ne forte fatigentur equi eorum; quoniam nostri multitudinem equorum non habent. Sed Tartari illum quem equitant vna die, illum non ascendunt in tribus vel in quatuor diebus post hoc. Vnde non curant si fatigentur equi eorum propter multitudinem quam habent. Et si Tartari cedunt, non tamen nostri debent recedere, vel ab inuicem separari: quia simulando hoc faciunt, vt exercitus diuidatur, & post hoc terram libere ingrediuntur, & eam destruunt. Debent etiam cauere vt non faciant nimias expensas, vt solent; ne propter penuriam redire compellantur, & dent Tartaris viam, vt ipsos & alios occidant, & destruunt omnem terram; & propter eorum superfluitatem nomen Domini blasphemetur. Et hoc debent facere diligenter: vt si contingat aliquos pugnatores recedere, quod alij loco eorum succedant. Duces etiam nostri debent die nocteque facere exercitum custodiri, ne repente & subito irruant super ipsos: quia Tartari vt dæmones, multas excogitant iniquitates & artes nocendi: Immo tam de die quam de nocte semper debent esse parati: sed nec spoliati debent iacere nec deliciose ad mensam sedere, ne imparati inueniantur, quia Tartari semper vigilant, vt possint nocere. Homines vero terræ qui Tartaros expectant, vel super se timent venire, occultas foueas debent habere, in quibus sagittas, & alia debent reponere, propter duo: vt videlicet Tartari non possint ea habere; & si propitius fuerit eis Deus, valeant ea postea inuenire; Eis fugientibus de terra, debent scenum & stramina comburere, vt equi Tartarorum ad comedendum minus inueniant. Ciuitates autem & castra si volunt munire, videant prius qualia sint in situ. Situs enim talis debet esse in castris, quod machinis & sagittis expugnari nõ possit; & aquã habeant sufficientem & lignũ, & si fieri potest, quod introitus & exitus eis tolli non possit: & quod habeant homines sufficientes qui possint vicissim pugnare. Et debent vigilare diligenter ne aliqua astutia possint castrum furari. Expensas ad multos annos debent habere sufficientes: custodiant tamen diligenter illas, & in mensura manducent, quia nesciunt quanto tempore eos in castris oportet esse inclusos. Quum enim incipiunt, tunc multis annis obsident vnum castrum. Sic fit hodierna die in terra Alanorum de quodam monte, quem, vt credo, iam obsederunt per duodecem annos; qui viriliter restiterunt, & multos Tartaros & nobiles occiderunt. Alia autem castra & ciuitates, quæ talem situm non habent debent fortiter vallari foueis profundis munitis, & muris bene præparatis; & arcus & sagittas sufficientes: & lapides ac fundas debent habere. Et debent diligenter cauere, quod non permittant Tartaros ponere machinas suas; & suis machinis debent eos repellere. Et si forte aliquo ingenio vel arte erigunt

Obsidio 12. annorum,

Tartari machinas suas, debent eas destruere machinis suis si possunt. Balistis etiam, fundis & machinis debent resistere ne ciuitati appropinquent. Alias etiam debent esse parati, vt superius dictum est. De castris & ciuitatibus, quæ sunt in fluminibus positæ, diligenter debent videre ne possint submergi. Sed ad hoc sciendū est, quod Tartari plus diligunt, quod homines claudant se in ciuitatibus, quàm quod pugnent cū eis in campo. Dicunt enim eos esse suos porcellos in hara conclusos. Vnde possunt eis custodes, vt supradictū est. Si autē aliqui Tartari de equis suis in bello proijciuntur, statim sunt capiendi: quia cum sunt in terra fortiter sagittant, & equos & homines vulnerant & occidunt. Et si seruantur tales, potest esse, quod habeatur pro eis pax perpetua, aut pecunia magna redimantur: quoniā se adinuicem satis diligunt. Sed quomodo Tartari cognoscantur, superius dictum est vbi forma eorum fuit expressa. Tamen quando capiuntur, si debent seruari, ne fugiant diligens est custodia adhibenda. Sunt etiā alie multe gentes cū eis, quæ per formā superius annotatā possunt ab ipsis cognosci. Est etiam hoc sciendum, quod multi in exercitu eorum sunt, qui si viderent tempus, & haberēt fiduciam, quod nostri non occiderent eos, ex omni parte exercitus, sicut ipsi met nobis dixerunt, pugnarent cū eis, & plura mala facerent ipsis, quàm alij, qui sunt eorum aduersarij manifesti.

Mocet etiam tēpore misit Innocentius IIII. Papa Fr. Ascelinū de ordine Prædicatorū cū tribus alijs Fratribus, auctoritate, qua fungebantur, de diuersis ordinis sui conuentibus sibi associatis, cum literis Apostolicis ad exercitū Tartarorū, in quibus hortabatur eos, vt ab hominū strage desisterent, & fidei veritatē reciperent. Et ego quidē ab vno Fratrum Prædicatorū, videlicet a Fr. Simone de S. Quintino, iam ab illo itinere regresso, gesta Tartarorū accepi, illa duntaxat, quæ superius per diuersa loca iuxta congruentiā temporū huic operi inferui. Siquidē & eo tempore quidā Frater ordinis Minorū, videlicet Fr. Iohannes de Plano carpini, cum quibusdam alijs missus fuit ad Tartaros, qui etiam, vt ipse testatur, per annum & quatuor menses & amplius cum eis mansit, & inter eos ambulauit. A summo namq; Pontifice mandatū, vt omnia, quæ apud eos erant, diligenter scrutaretur, acceperat, tam ipse, quàm Fr. Benedictus Polonus eiusdem ordinis, qui suæ tribulationis particeps & socius erat. Et hic ergo Fr. Iohannes de his, quæ apud Tartaros vel oculis proprijs vidit, vel à Christianis fide dignis, qui inter illos captiui erant, audiuit, libellum historicalem conscripsit, qui & ipse ad manus nostras peruenit. De quo etiam hic quasi per epilogum inferere libet aliqua, videlicet ad supplementum eorum, quæ desunt in prædicta Fr. Simonis historia.

Iohannes de Plano Carpini.

Est in partibus Orientis terra, quæ Mongal siue Tartaria dicitur, in ea scilicet parte sita, in qua Oriens Aquiloni coniungi creditur. Ab Oriente quidem habet terram Kythaorum & eriam Solangorum, à meridie verò terrā Sarracenorum. Inter Orientē & meridiem terram Huiy-norum, & ab Occidente prouinciā Naymanorum, ab Aquilone verò circumdatur Oceano. In parte aliqua nimium est montuosa, & in aliqua campestris, sed tora ferē admixta glarea plurimum arenosa, nec est in centesima parte fructuosa. Nec enim potest fructum portare, nisi aquis fluuiialibus irrigetur, quæ ibi sunt rarissime. Vnde nec villæ nec aliquæ ciuitates ibidē reperiuntur, excepta vna, quæ Cracurum appellatur, & satis bona esse dicitur. Nos quidem illam non vidimus, sed ad dimidiam dietam prope fuimus, cum apud Syram ordam, quæ curia maior Imperatoris eorum est, essemus. Licet autem aliàs instructifera sit illa terra, tamen alendis pecoribus est apta. In aliqua eius parte sunt aliquæ sylvæ modicæ, alia verò sine lignis est omnino. Itaque tam Imperator quàm Principes, & omnes alij sedent, & cibaria sua decoquunt ad focum, de bouum & equorum stercorebus factum. Ipse quoq; æt inordinatus est ibidem mirabiliter. In media siquidem ætate ibi tonitrua magna & fulgura fiunt, ex quibus plurimi occiduntur homines, & eodem quoq; tempore cadunt ibidem maxime niues. Sunt & ibi ventorum fugidissimorum tam maxime tempestates, quòd aliquando vix possunt equitare homines. Vnde cum ante ordam essemus (sic enim apud eos stationes Imperatoris & Principum appellantur) præ ventimagnitudine in terra prostrati iacebamus, & videre propter pulueris magnitudinē minime poteramus. Nunquam ibi pluit in hyeme, sed frequenter in ætate, & tam modicum, ut vix posset aliquando puluerem & radicem graninum madefacere. Ibi quoq; maxima grando cadit sæpè. Vnde cum Imperator electus in sede regni debuit poni, nobis in curia tunc existentibus, tanta cecidit grando, quod ex subita resolutione plusquam CLX. homines in eadem curia fuerunt submersi. Res etiam & habitacula plura fuerunt deducta. Ibi etiam est in ætate subito calor magnus, & repente maximum frigus.

Mongalorum autem siue Tartarorum forma ab omnibus alijs hominibus est remota. Inter oculos enim, & inter genas, lati sunt plus cæteris, genæ quoq; satis prominent à maxillis. Nasum habent planum & modicum, oculos etiam paruos, & palpebras vsq; ad supercilia eleuatas, ac super verticem in modum Clericorum coronas. Ex vtraq; parte frontis rondendo, plusquam in medio crines longos faciunt, reliquos autem sicut mulieres crescere permittunt. De quibus duas cordas faciunt, & vnāquamq; post aurem ligant. Pedes quoq; modicos habent. Vestes tam virorum quàm mulierum vno modo formatæ sunt. Pallijs vel cappis vel capitijs non vtuntur. Tunicas verò miro modo formatas portant de buccarino, vel purpurato, vel baldaquino. Pellicium habet pilos exterius, sed apertum est à posterioribus. Habet tamen caudalam vnā vsq; ad genua retrò. Vestes suas non lauant, nec lauare permittunt, & maxime à tempore, quo tonitrua incipiunt, vsquequo desinat illud tempus. Stationes habent rotundas in modum tentorij de virgulis & baculis subtilibus præparatas. Supra verò in medio rotundant habent fenestram, vnde ingreditur lumen, & sumus exire possit: quia semper in medio faciunt ignem: parietes autem & tecta filtro sunt operta. Ostia quoq; de filtro sunt facta. Harum quædam subito solvuntur, & reparantur, & super summarios deferuntur: quædam verò dissolui non possunt sed in curribus portantur. Et quocumq; siue ad bellum siue aliàs vadunt, semper illas secum deferunt. In animalibus valde diuites sunt, ut in Camelis & bobus, capris & ouibus. Iumenta & equos habent in tanta multitudine, quantam non credimus totum mundi residuum habere. Porcos autē & alias bestias non habent. Imperator ac Duces atq; alij magnates in auro & argento ac serico & gemmis abundant. Cibi eorū sunt omnia, quæ mandari possunt. Vidimus eos etiā manducare pediculos. Lac bibūt animalium, & in maxima quantitate, si habent, iumentinum. Porrò in hyeme, quia nisi diuites sint, lac iumentinum non habent, millium cum aqua decoquunt, quod tam tenue faciunt, ut illud bibere valeant. Vnde quilibet eorū scyphum bibit vnū vel duos in mane, & quandoq; nihil amplius manducant in die. In sero autem vniciq; datur de carnibus modicū, & bibunt ex eis brodium. Porrò in ætate quando satis habent de lacte iumentino, carnes comedunt rarò, nisi fortè donetur eis idē, aut venatione bestia aliquam ceperint vel auem.

Habent autem mores quosdam quidem commendabiles, & quosdam detestabiles. Magis quippe sunt obedientes Dominis suis, quàm aliqui qui in mundo sint homines, siue religiosi siue seculares. Nam eos maxime reuerentur, nec illis de facili mentiuntur verbis factisue: rarò vel nunquam ad inuicem contendunt, bellāq; vel rixā, vulnera vel homicidia nunquam inter eos contingunt. Prædones etiam ac fures rerum magnarū ibi nequaquā inueniuntur, ideoq; stationes & curus eorū, vbi thesauros habent, seris aut vectibus non firmanur. Si aliqua bestia perdita fuerit, quicunq; inuenit eam vel dimittit, vel ad illos, quid hoc positi sunt, eam ducit. Apud quos ille, cuius est bestia, illam requirit, & absq; vlla difficultate recipit. Vnus alium satis honorat, & familiaritatē ac cibaria, quamuis apud eos sint pauca, liberaliter satis communicat. Satis etiā sunt sufferentes, nec cum ieiunauerint vno die, vel duobus, omnino sine cibo, videntur impa.

impatientes, sed cantant & ludunt, ac si bene comedissent. In equitando multum sustinent trigus, calorem quoq; nimium patiuntur. Intere eos quasi nulla placita sunt, & quamuis multum inebriantur, tamen in ebrietate sua nunquam contendunt. Nullus alium spernit, sed iuuat & promouet, quantum congruè potest. Castæ sunt eorum mulieres, nec aliquid inter eos auditur de ipsarum impudicitia. Quædam tamen ex ijs verba turpia satis habent & impudica. Porro erga cæteros homines iidem Tartari superbissimi sunt; omnesq; nobiles & ignobiles quasi pro nihilo reputantes despiciunt. Vnde vidimus in curia Imperatoris magnum Russiæ ducem, & filium regis Georgianorum, ac Soldanos multos & magnos nullum honorem debitum recipere apud eos. Quinetiam Tartari eisdem assignati, quantumcunq; viles essent illos antecedeabant, semperq; primum locum & summum tenebant, imò etiam sæpè oportebat illos post eorū posteriora sedere. Præterea iracundi sunt, & indignantis naturæ multum erga cæteros homines, & vltra modum erga eosdem mendaces. In principio quidē blandi sunt, sed postmodum vt Scorpiones pungunt. Subdoli enim & fraudulenti sunt, & omnes homines si possunt astutia circumueniunt. Quicquid mali volunt eis facere, miro modo occultant, vt sibi non possint providere, vel contra eorum astutias remedium inuenire. Immundi quoq; sunt in cibo & potu sumendis, & in cæteris factis suis. Ebrietas apud illos est honorabilis: cumq; multum aliquis biberit, ibidemq; reijcit, non ideo cessat, quin iterum bibat. Ad petendum maximi sunt exactores, tenacissimi retentores, parcissimi donatores. Aliorum hominum occisio apud illos est pro nihilo.

De legibus & consuetudinibus eorum. Cap. 6.

HOc autem habent in lege siue consuetudine, vt occidant viros & mulieres, si quando inueniantur in adulterio manifestè. Similiter etiam virginem, si fornicata fuerit cum aliquo, occidunt eam cum eo. Præterea si aliquis in præda vel furto manifesto inuenitur, sine vlla miseratione occiditur. Item si quis denudauit consilia, maxime quando volunt ad bellum procedere, dantur ei super posteriora centum plagæ, quanto maiores viuis rusticus cum magno baculo potest dare. Similiter cum aliqui de minoribus offendunt in aliquo, non eis à maioribus suis parcutur, sed verberibus grauius affliguntur. Matrimonio autem generaliter coniunguntur omnibus, etiam propinquis carne, excepta matre & filia & sorore ex eadem matre. Nam fororem tantum ex patre, & vxorem quoq; patris, post eius mortem solent ducere. Vxorē etiam fratris alius frater iunior, post eius mortem, vel alius de parentela, tenetur ducere. Vnde dum adhuc essemus in terra, Dux quidam Russiæ, Andreas nomine, apud Bary, quod equos Tartarorum de terra educeret, & alijs venderet, accusatus est: quod licet non esset probatum, occisus est. Hoc audiens iunior frater, & vxor occisi, pariter venerunt ad præfatum Ducem, supplicare volentes, ne terra auferretur eisdem. At ille paruo præcepit, vt fratris defuncti duceret vxorem, mulieri quoq; vt illum in virum duceret, secundum Tartarorum consuetudinē. Quæ respondit, se potius occidi velle, quàm sic contra legem facere. At ille nihilominus eam illi tradidit quamuis ambo renuerent, quantum possent. Itaq; ducentes eos in lectum, clamantem puerum & plorantē super illam posuerunt, ipsosq; commiseri pariter coegerunt. Deniq; post mortem maritorum, vxores Tartarorum non de facili solent ad secunda coniugia transire, nisi fortē quis velit sororiam aut nouercam suam ducere. Nulla verò differentia est apud eos inter filiū vxoris & concubinæ, sed dat pater quod vult vniciq;. Itaq; si sunt etiam ex Ducum genere, ita fit Dux filius concubinæ, sicut filius vxoris legitimæ. Vnde cum rex Georgiæ duos filios nuper, vnum scilicet nomine Melich legitimum, alterum verò Dauid ex adulterio natum haberet, moriensq; terræ partem adulteræ filio reliquisset, Melich, cui etiam ex parte matris regnum obuenerat, quia per foeminas tenebatur, perrexit ad Imperatorem Tartarorum, eo quod & Dauid iter arripuerat ad illum. Ambobus igitur ad curiam venientibus, datiq; maximis muneribus, petebat adulteræ filius, vt fieret ei iustitia secundum morem Tartarorum. Dataq; est sententia contra Melich, vt Dauid, qui maior erat natu, subesset, ac terrā a patre sibi concessam quietē ac pacificē possideret. Cumq; Tartarorum vnus habet vxorum multitudinem, vnaqueq; per se suam habet familiam & stationem. Et vna die Tartatus comedit & bibit & dormit cum vna, altera die cum alia. Vna tamen inter cæteras maior habetur, cum qua frequentius quā cum alijs commoratur. Et licet, vt dictum est, sint multæ, nunquam tamen de facili contendunt inter se.

Quibusdam verò traditionibus indifferentia quedā esse peccata dicunt, quas vel ipsi vel antecessores eorum confinxerunt. Vnum est, culcellum in ignem figere, vel quocunq; modo ignem cultello tangere, vel etiam de caldaria cum cultello carnes extrahere, vel cum securi iuxta ignem incidere. Credunt enim, quòd sic auterri debeat caput igni. Aliud est appodiare se ad flagellum, quo percutitur equus: ipsi enim non vtuntur calcariis. Item flagello sagittas tangere, iuvenes aues capere vel occidere, cum signo equum percutere, os cum osse alio frangere. Itemq; lac, vel aliquem potum aut cibum super terram effundere, in statione mingere. Quod si voluntariè facit, occiditur, si autem aliter, oportet quòd pecuniam multà incantatori soluat, à quo purificetur. Qui etiam faciat, vt statio cum omnibus, quæ in ipsa sunt, inter duos ignes transeat. Antequam sic purificetur, nullus audet intrare, nec aliquid de illa exportare. Præterea si alicui mortellus imponitur, quem deglutire non possit & illum de ore suo eiecit, foramen sub statione fit, per quod extrahitur, ac sine vlla miseratione occiditur. Iterum si quis calcat super limen stationis Ducis alicuius, interficitur. Multa etiam habent his similia, quæ reputant peccata. At homines occidere, aliorum terras inuadere, ac res illorum diripere, & contra Dei præcepta vel prohibitiones facere, nullum apud eos est peccatum. De vita æterna & damnatione perpetua nihil sciunt. Credunt tamen, quòd post mortem in alio seculo viuant, gregesque multiplicent, comedant & bibant, & cætera faciant, quæ hic à viuentibus fiunt. In principio lunationis vel in plenilunio incipiunt, quicquid noui agere volunt, ipsamq; Lunam Imperatorem magnum appellat, eamq; deprecantes genua flectunt. Omnes, qui morantur in stationibus suis, oportet per ignem purificari. Quæ scilicet purificatio fit hoc modo. Duos quidem ignes faciunt, & duas hastas iuxta eos, vnamq; cordam in summitate harum ponunt. Liganq; super cordam illam quasdam de Bucaramo scissionses, sub qua scilicet corda & ligaturis inter illos ignes transcunt homines, ac bestiarum ac stationes. Sunt etiam duæ mulieres, vna hinc, & alia inde aquam projicientes, ac quædam carmina recitantes. Cæterum si aliquis à fulgure occiditur, oportet prædicto modo per ignes transire omnes illos, qui in illis stationibus morantur. Sratio siquidem ac lectus & currus, filtra & vestes, & quicquid salium habent, à nullo tanguntur, sed ab hominibus tanquam immunda respuuntur. Et vt breuiter dicam, omnia purificari credunt per ignem. Vnde quando veniunt ad eos nuncij, vel Principes, aut qualescunq; personæ, oportet ipsos & munera sua per duos ignes, vt purificentur, transire, ne fortè veneficia fecerint, aut venenum seu aliquid mali attulerint.

De initio imperij siue Principatus eorum. Cap. 8.

Tartaria populi.

Terra quidem illa Orientalis, de qua dictum est suprà, quæ Mongal nominatur, quatuor quondam habuisse populos memoratur. Vnus eorum Yeka Mongal, id est, magni Mongali vocabantur. Secundus Sumongal, id est, aquatici Mongali, qui seipso appellabant Tartaros, à quodam fluuio per eorum terram currente, qui Tartar nominatur. Tertius appellabatur Merkar. Quartus verò Metrit. Omnes vnam personarum formam & vnam linguam habebant hi populi, quamuis inter se per Principes ac prouincias essent diuisi. In terra Yeka Mongal quidam fuit, qui vocabatur Chingis. Iste cœpit robustus venator esse: didicit enim homines furari, & prædam capere. Ad alias terras ibat, & quoscunque poterat, captiuabat, sibiq; associabat. Homines quoque suæ gentis inclinauit ad se, qui tanquam Ducem sequebantur ipsum ad malè agendum. Cœpit autem pugnare cum Sumongal, siue cum Tartaris, & Ducem eorum interfecit, multoq; bello sibi Tartaros omnes subiecit, & in seruitutem redegit. Post hæc cum istis omnibus contra Merkaras, iuxta terram positos Tartarorum pugnavit, quos etiam bello sibi subiecit. Inde procedens contra Metritas pugnam exercuit, & illos etiam obtinuit. Audientes Naymani, quòd Chingis taliter eleuatus esset, indignati sunt. Ipsi enim habuerant Imperatorem strenuum valde, cui dabant tributum cunctæ nationes prædictæ. Qui cum esset mortuus, filij eius successerunt loco ipsius. Sed quia iuvenes ac stulti erant, populum tenere nesciebant, sed ad inuicem diuisi ac scissierant. Vnde Chingi prædicto modo iam exaltato, nihilominus in terras prædictas faciebant insultum, & habitatores occidebant, ac diripiebant prædam eorum. Quod audiens Chingis, omnes sibi subiectos congregauit Naymani & Karakytay ex aduerso similiter in quandam vallem strictam conuenerunt, & commissum est prælium, in quo Naymani & Karakytay à Mongalis deuicti sunt. Qui etiam pro maiori parte occisi fuerunt, & alij, qui euadere non potuerunt, in seruitutem redacti sunt. In terra prædictorū Karakytayorum Occoday Cham, filius Chingischam, postquàm imperator fuit positus, quandam ciuitatem ædificauit, quàm Chanyl appellauit. Prope quam ad Meridiem est quoddam desertum magnū, in quo pro certo syluestres homines habitare dicuntur, qui nullatenus loquuntur, nec iuncturas in cruribus habent, & si quando cadunt, per se surgere non valent. Sed tamen discretionem tantam habent, quòd filira de lana Camelorum, quibus vestiuntur, faciunt & contra ventum ponunt. Et si quando Tartari pergentes ad eos vulnerant eos sagittis, gramina in vultibus ponunt, & fortiter ante ipsos fugiunt.

De mutua victoria ipsorum & Kythaorum. Cap. 9.

Mongali autem in terram suam reuertentes, se contra * Kythaos ad prælium parauerunt, & castra moerentes, eorum terram intrauerunt. Quod audiens eorum Imperator, venit cum exercitu suo contra illos, & commissum est prælium durū, in quo Mongali sunt deuicti, omnesq; nobiles eorum, qui erant in exercitu, præter septem occisi sunt. Vnde cum illis volentibus aliquam impugnare regionē, minatur aliquis stragem, adhuc respondent: Olim etiam occisi non nisi septem remansimus, & tamen modò creuimus in multitudinem magnam, ideoq; non terremur de talibus. Chingis autem & alij, qui remanserunt, in terram suam fugerunt. Cumq; quieuiſſet aliquantulum, præparauit se rursus ad prælium, & processit contra terram Huyroium. Iſi sunt homines Christiani de secta Nestorianorum, Et hos etiam Mongali deuicerunt, eorumq; literam acceperunt; prius enim scripturam non habebant, nunc autem eandem Mongalorum literam appellant. Inde contra terram Saruyur, & contra terram Katanitarum, & contra terram Huditar processit, quos omnes bello deuicit. Inde in terram suam redijt, & aliquantulum quieuit. Deinde conuocatis omnibus hominibus suis, contra Kythaos pariter processerunt, diuq; contra illos pugnantes, magnam partem terræ illorum vicerunt, eorumq; Imperatorem in ciuitatem suam maiorem concluderunt. Quam & tam longo tempore obfederunt, quod exercitus expensæ omnino defecerunt. Cumq; iam quod manducarent, penitus non haberent, præcipit Chingischam suis, vt de decē hominibus vnū ad manducandum darent. Illi verò de ciuitate machinis & sagittis viriliter contra illos pugnabāt, & cum deficerent lapides, argentū & maxime liquefactum proieciabant. Ciuitas siquidē illa multis erat diuitijs plena. Cumq; diu Mongali pugnassent, & eam bello vincere non possent, vnam magnā sub terra viam ab exercitu vsq; ad mediū ciuitatis fecerunt, & proficilientes in mediū eius, contra ciues pugnauerunt. Illi quoque, qui extra remanserant, eodem modo contra illos pugnabant. Deniq; concidentēs portas ciuitatis intrauerunt, & imperatorem cum pluribus occidentes urbem possederunt, aurumq; & argentum, & omnes eius diuitias abstulerunt. Et cum illi terræ suos homines præfēcissent, in terrā propriam reuersi sunt, Tunc primū Imperator Kythaorum deuictus, factus est Chingischam imperator. Quandam tamen partē illius terræ, quia posita erat in mari, nullatenus deuicerunt vsq; hodie. Sunt autem Kytai homines pagani, habentes literam specialem, & etiam, vt dicitur, veteris & noui Testamenti scripturam. Habent etiam vitas patrū & eremitas & domos, in quibus orant temporibus suis, ad modum Ecclesiarum factas. Quosdam etiam sanctos habere se dicunt, & vnum Deum colunt. Christum Iesum Dominum venerantur, & credunt vitā æternam, sed non baptizantur. Scripturam nostram honorant ac reuerentur. Christianos diligunt, & elemosynas plures faciunt, homines benigni satis & humani videntur. Barbam non habent, & in dispositione faciei cum Mongalis in parte concordant. Meliores artifices in mundo non inueniuntur in omnibus operibus, in quibus homines exercentur. Terra eorum est opulenta nimis in frumento & vino, auro & serico ac rebus cæteris.

Cum autem Mongali cum Imperatore suo Chingischam post præfatam victoriā aliquantulum quieuiſſent, exercitus suos diuſerunt, Imperator siquidem vnum de filiis suis nomine Thoſut, quem etiam Can, id est, Imperatorē appellabant, cum exercitu contra Comanos miſit, quos ille multo bello deuicit, & postmodum in terram suam redijt. Alium verò filiū cum exercitu contra Indos miſit, qui & minorem Indiam subiccit. Hi sunt nigri Sarraceni, qui Æthiopes sunt vocati. Hic autem exercitus ad pugnam contra Christianos, qui sunt in India maiori, processit. Quod audiens Rex illius terræ, qui vulgò * Presbyter Iohannes appellatur, contra illos venit exercitu congregato. Et faciens imagines cupreas hominum, vnamquāq; posuit in sella super equum. Posuit & interius ignem, & hominem cum folle super equum post imaginem. Itaq; cum multis equis & imaginibus, taliter præparatis, ad pugnam contra Mongalos seu Tartaros processerunt. Et cum ad locum prælij peruenissent, equos istos vnum iuxta alium præmiserunt. Viri autem, qui erant retrò, nescio quid super ignem, qui erat intra imagines, posuerunt, & cum follibus fortiter sufflauerunt. Vnde factum est, vt ex Græco igne homines & equi comburerentur, & etiam aer ex fumo denigraretur. Tūque super Tartaros sagittas eiecerunt Indi, ex quibus multi vulnerati fuerunt & interfecti. Sicq; eiecerunt illos cum magnā confusione de suis finibus, nec vnquam, quod ad ipsos ultra redierint audiuius.

Cum autem per deferta redirent, in quandam terram venerunt, in qua, ſicut nobis apud Imperatoris curiam per clericos Ruthenos, & alios, qui diu fuerant inter ipſos, firmiter aſſerendo reſerebatur, monſtra quædam, imaginem ſœmineam habentia, reperiunt. Quas cum per multos interpretes interrogaffent, ubi viri terræ illius eſſent, reſponderunt, quod in illa terra quæcunq; ſœmine naſcebatur, habebant forinā humanam, maſculi vero ſpeciē caninam. Dumq; moram in terra illa protraherent, Canes in alia fluuij parte conuenerunt. Et cum eſſet hyems aſperrima omnes ſe in aquam proiecerunt. Poſt hæc incontinenti ſponte in puluere voluebantur, ſicq; puluis admixtus aque ſuper eos congelabatur, & vt ita pluries fecerunt, glacie ſuper eos depreſſata, cum impetu magno contra Tartaros ad pugnam conuenerunt. At verò cum illi ſagittas ſuper eos iaciebant, ac ſi ſuper lapides ſagittaſſent, retrò ſagittæ redibant. Alia quoq; arma eorū in nullo eos lædere poterant. Ipſi verò Canes inſultum in Tartaros facientes, morſibus vulnerauerunt multos, & occiderunt, ſicq; illos de ſuis ſimib; eiecerunt. Vnde adhuc inter illos eſt prouerbiū de hoc factō, quod dicunt ad inuicem ridendo: Pater meus vel frater meus à Canibus fuit occiſus. Mulieres autem illorū, quas ceperant, ad terrā ſuā duxerunt, & uſq; ad diē mortis eorū ibidē fuerunt. Cum autē exercitus ille Mongalorum rediret, venit ad terram Burithabeth, cuius habitatores pagani ſunt, & hos Tartari bello vicerunt. Hi conſuetudinem habent mirabilem, imò potius miſerabilem. Cum enim alicuius pater humanæ naturæ ſoluit debitum, congregant omnē parentelam, & comedunt eum. Hi pilos in barba non habent, imò ferrum quoddam in manibus, ſicut vidimus, portant, cum quo ſemper barbam, ſi forte crinis aliquis in ea creſcit, depilant. Multum etiam deformes ſunt. Inde verò ille Tartarorum exercitus in terram ſuam eſt reuerſus.

Chingiſcham etiā illo tēpore, quo dimiſit alios exercitus contra Orientē, per terram Kergis cum expeditione perrexit, quos tamen tunc bello non vicit, & vt nobis dicebatur, ibidē uſq; ad montes Caſpios peruenit. At illi montes in ea parte, ad quam applicauerunt, de lapide Adamantino ſunt: ideoq; ſagittas & arma ferrea illorū ad ſe trāxerunt. Homines autē inter Caſpios montes concluſi clamorem exercitus, vt creditur, audientes, monſtem frangere cœperunt, & cum alio tempore poſt decem annos redirent Tartari, monſtem conſractum inuenerunt. Cumq; ad illos accedere attentaffent, minimè potuerunt: quia nubes quædam erat poſita ante ipſos, ultra quam ire nullatenus poterant. Omnino quippe viſum amittebant, ſtatim vt ad illam perueniebant. Illi autem ex aduerſo credentes, quod Tartari ad illos accedere formidarent, inſultum contra eos fecerunt, ſed ſtatim vt perueniunt ad nubem propter cauſam prædictam, procedere non potuerunt. Ac verò antequam ad montes prædictos peruenirent Tartari, pluſquam per menſem per vaſtam ſolitudinē tranſierunt, & inde procedentes adhuc contra Orientem, pluſquam per menſem per magnum deſertum perrexerunt. Itaq; perueniunt ad quandam terram, in qua vias quidē titas videbant, ſed neminem inuenire poterant. Tandem querentes, vnū hominem cum vxore ſua reperiunt, quos in præſentiam Chingiſcham adduxerunt. Qui cum interrogaffet illos, ubi homines illius terræ eſſent, reſponderunt, quod in terra ſub montibus habitarent. Tunc Chingiſcham retenta vxore, miſit ad eos virum illum, mandans illis, vt venirent ad ipſius mandatum. Qui pergens ad illos, omnia narrauit, quæ Chingiſcham eis mandauit. Illi verò reſpondentes dixerunt, quod die tali venirent ad ipſum, vt facerent eius mandatum. Ac ipſi medio tempore per vias occultas ſub terra ſe congregantes, ad pugnam contra illos venerunt, & ſubito ſuper eos irruentes, plurimos occiderunt. Solis quoque ſonitus in ortu ſuo ſuſtinere non poterant, imò tempore, quo oriebatur, oportebat eos vnā aurem ad terram ponere, & ſuperiorem fortiter obſcurare, ne ſonum illum terribilem audirent. Nec ſic tamen cauere poterant, quin hac de cauſa pluriſimi ex eis interirent. Videns ergo Chingiſcham & ſui, quod nihil proficerent, ſed potius homines ſuos perderent, ſugerunt, ac terra illa exierunt. Illum tamen virum cum vxore ſua ſecum deduxerunt, qui etiam uſque ad mortem in terra eorum fuerunt. Interrogati verò, cur in regione ſua ſub terra ſoleant habitare, dixerunt, quod ibi quodam tempore anni, cum oritur Sol, tantus fit ſonitus, vt homines nulla ratione valeant ſuſtinere. Quin etiam tunc in organis & tympanis cæteriſque muſicis inſtrumentis percutere ſolent, vt ſonitum illum non audiant.

De statutis Chingischam, et morte ipsius, et filijs
ac Ducibus. Cap. 13.

Cum autem de terra illa reuenteretur Chingischam, defecerunt eis victualia, famemq; patiebantur maximam. Tunc interiora vnius bestiae recentia casu inuenerunt: quae accipientes, depositis tantum stercoribus, decoxerunt, & coram Chingischam deporrata pariter comederunt. Ideoq; statuit Chingischam, vt nec sanguis, nec interiora, nec aliquid de bestia, quae manducari potest, projiciatur, exceptis stercoribus. Inde ergo in terram propriam reuersus est, ibiq; leges & statuta edidit, quae Tartari inuolabiliter obseruant, de quibus scilicet iam aliàs superius dictum est. Post hoc ab ictu tonitruu occisus est. Habuit autem quatuor filios: Occoday vocabatur primus, Thosut Can secundus, Thiaday tertius, quarti nomen ignoramus. Ab his iij, descenderunt omnes Duces Mongalorum. Primus filiorum Occoday est Cuyne, qui nunc est Imperator. Huius fratres Cocten & Chyrenen. Ex filijs autem Thosut Can sunt Bathy, Ordu, Siba, Bora. Bathy post Imperatorem omnibus dirior est ac potentior, Ordu verò omnium Ducum senior. Filij Thiaday, sunt Hutin & Cadan. Filij autem alterius filij Chingischam, cuius ignoramus nomen, sunt, Mengu & Bithat & alij plures. Huius Mengu mater Seroctan est, Domina magna inter Tartaros, excepta Imperatoris matre plus nominata, omnibusq; potentior, excepto Bathy. Hæc autem sunt nomina Ducum: Ordu, qui fuit in Polonia, & Hungaria, Bathy quoq; & Huryn & Cadan & Syban & Ouygat, qui omnes fuerunt in Hungaria. Sed & Cypedan, qui adhuc est vltra mare contra quosdam Soldanos Sarracenorum, & alios habitatores terræ transmarinæ. Alij verò remanserunt in terra, scilicet Mengu, Chyrenen, Hubilai, Sinocur, Cara, Gay, Sybedey, Bora, Berca, Corrensa. Alij quoq; Duces eorum plures sunt, quorum nomina nobis ignota sunt.

De potestate Imperatoris & Ducum eius. Cap. 14.

Porro Imperator eorum, scilicet Tartarorum, super omnes habet mirabile dominium. Nullus enim audet in aliqua morari parte, nisi vbi assignauerit ipse. Et ipse quidem assignat Ducibus vbi maneant. Duces autem loca Millenarijs assignant, Millenarij verò Centenarijs, & Centenarij Decanis. Quicquid autem eis præcipitur, quocunq; tempore, quocunq; loco, siue ad bellum, siue ad mortem, vel vbi cunq; sine vlla obediunt contradictione. Nam etsi petat alicuius filiam virginem, vel sororem, mox ei sine contradictione exponunt eam, imò frequenter colligit virgines ex omnibus Tartarorum finibus, & si vult aliquas retinere, sibi retinet, alias verò dat suis hominibus. Nuncios etiam quoscunq; & vbi cunq; transmittat, oportet quod dent ei sine mora equos & expensas. Similiter vnde cunq; veniant ei tributa vel nuncij, oportet equos & curtus & expensas tribui. Ac verò nuncij, qui aliunde veniunt, in magna miseria, & victus & vestitus penuria sunt. Maximeq; quando veniunt ad Principes, & ibi debent moram contrahere. Tunc adeo parum darur decem hominibus, quod vix inde possent duo viuere. Insuper & si aliqui illis iniuriæ fiunt, minimè conqueri facile possunt. Multa quoque munera tam à principibus quàm à cæteris ab illis petuntur: quæ si non dederint, vilipenduntur, & quasi pro nihilo reputantur. Hinc & nos magnam partem rerum, quæ nobis pro expensis à fidelibus erant datæ, de necessitate oportuit in muneribus dare. Denique sic omnia sunt in manu Imperatoris, quod nemo audet dicere, Hoc meum est vel illius, sed omnia, scilicet res & iumenta ac homines, sunt ipsius. Super hoc etiam nuper emanauit statutum eiusdem. Idem quoq; per omnia dominium habent Duces super sibi subditos homines.

Ducis Bathy. Cap. 15.

Mortuo, vt supra dictum est, Cyngischam, conuenerunt Duces, & elegerunt Occoday, filium eius Imperatorem, Qui habito consilio Principum, diuisit exercitus. Misitq; Bathy, qui in secundo gradu attingebat eum, contra terram Altissodan & contra terram Bisminorum, qui Sarraceni erant, sed loquebantur Comanicum, Qui terram illorum ingressus, cum eis pugnavit, eosq; sibi bello subiecit. Quædam autem ciuitas, nomine Barchin, diu resistit eis. Ciues enim in circuitu ciuitatis foueas multas fecerant, propter quas non poterant à Tartaris capi, donec illas repleuissent. Ciues autem vrbs Sarguit hoc audientes, exierunt obuiam eis, spontè in manus eorum se tradentes. Vnde ciuitas eorum destructa non fuit, sed plures eorum occiderunt, & alios transfulerunt, acceptisq; spolijs, vrbem alijs hominibus repleuerunt, & contra ciuitatem Ornaperrexerunt. Hæc erat nimium populosa & diuitijs copiosa. Erant enim ibi plures plures Chritiani, videlicet Gafari & Rutheni, & Alani, & alij nec non & Sarraceni. Eratq; Sarracenorum ciuitatis dominium. Est etiam posita super quendam magnum fluuium, & est quasi portus, habens forum maximum. Cumq; Tartari non possent eos aliter vincere, fluuium, qui per urbem currebat, præciderunt, & illam cum rebus & hominibus submerferunt. Quo facto, contra Russiam perrexerunt, & magnam stragem in ea fecerunt, ciuitates & castra destruxerunt, & homines occiderunt. Kiouiam, Russiæ metropolin, diu obsederunt, & tandem ceperunt, ac ciues interfecerunt. Vnde quando per illam terram ibamus, innumerabilia capita & ossa hominum mortuorum, iacentia super campum, inueniebamus. Fuerat enim vrbs valde magna & populosa, nunc quasi ad nihilum est redacta: vix enim domus ibi remanserunt ducente, quarum etiam habitatores tenentur in maxima seruitute. Porro de Russia & de Comania artari contra Hungaros & Polonos processerunt, ibiq; plures ex ipsis interfecti fuerunt, & vt iam superius dictum est, si Hungari viriliter restitissent, Tartari ab eis confusi recessissent. Inde reuertentes in terram Morduanorum, qui sunt Pagani, venerunt, eosq; bello vicerunt. Inde contra Byleros, id est, contra Bulgariam magnam profecti sunt, & ipsam omnino destruxerunt. Hinc ad Aquilonem adhuc contra Bastarcos, id est Hungariam magnam processerunt, & illos etiam deuicerunt. Hinc amplius ad Aquilonem pergentes, ad Parossitas venerunt, qui paruos habentes stomachos & os paruum, non manducant, sed carnes decoquunt, quibus decoctis, se super ollam ponunt, & fumum recipiunt, & de hoc solo reficiuntur, vel si aliquid manducant, hoc valde modicum est. Hinc & ad Samogetas venerunt, qui tantum de venationibus viuunt, & tabernacula vestesq; tantum habent de pellibus bestiarum. Inde ad quandam terram super Oceanum peruenerunt, vbi monstra quædam inuenerunt, quæ per omnia formam humanam habebant, sed pedes bouinos, & caput quidem humanum, sed faciem vt canis. Duo verba loquebantur vt homines, tertio latrabant vt canes. Hinc redierunt in Comaniam, & vsq; nunc ibi morantur ex eis quidam.

De legatione Cyropdan Ducis. Cap. 16.

Expediit Cyropdanis.

EO tempore misit Occoday Can Cyropdan Ducem cum exercitu ad meridiem contra Kergis, qui & illos bello superauit. Hi homines sunt Pagani, qui pilos in barba non habent. Quorum consuetudo talis est, vt cum alicuius pater moritur, præ dolore quasi vnam corrigiam in signum lamenti ab aure vsq; aurem de facie sua lenet. His autem deuictis, Dux Cyropdan contra Armenios iuit ad meridiem cum suis. Qui cum transirent per desertam quædam, monstra inuenerunt, effigiem humanam habentia, quæ non nisi vnum brachium cum manu in medio pectoris, & vnum pedem habebant, & duo cum vno arcu sagittabant, adeoq; fortiter currebant, quod equi eos inuestigare non poterant. Currebant autem super vnum pedem illam saltando, & cum essent fatigati, taliter eundo ibant super manum & pedem, se tanquam in circulo reuoluendo. Cumq; sic etiam fessi essent, iterum secundum priorem modum currebant, Hos Isidorus Cyclopedes appellat. Et ex eis Tartari nonnullos occiderunt. Et sicut nobis à Ruthenis Clericis in curia dicebatur, qui morantur cum Imperatore prædicto, plures ex eis nuncij venerunt in legatione ad curiam Imperatoris, superius annotati, vt possent habere pacem cum illo. Inde procedentes venerunt in Armeniam, quam bello deuicerunt, & etiam Georgiæ partem. Alia verò pars venit ad mandatum eorum, & singulis annis dederunt, & adhuc dant ei pro tributo xx. millia Yperperatum. Hinc ad terram Soldani Deurum, potentis & magni, processerunt, cum quo etiam pugnantes, ipsum deuicerunt. Denique processerunt ulterius debellando ac vincendo vsque ad terram Soldani Halapiæ, & nunc etiam terram obtinent, alias quoque terras ultra illas proponentes impugnare: nec postea reuersi sunt in terram suam vsq; hodie. Idemq; exercitus contra terram Caliphi Baldach perrexerit, quam etiam sibi subdidit, & vt CCCC. Byzantios, exceptis Baldekinis cæterisq; muneribus, ei quotidie pro tributo daret, obtinuit. Sed & quolibet anno mittunt nuncios ad Caliphum, vt ad eos veniat. Qui cum tributo munera magna transmittens, vt eum supponent, rogat, Ipse autem Imperator Tartarorum munera quidem accipit, & nihilominus vt veniat, pro eo mittit.

Tartarorum militaris disciplina.

ORdinauit Chingischam Tartaros per Decanos & centenarios & millenarios. Decem quoque millenarij præponunt vnum, cunctosq; nihilominus exercitui duos aut tres Duces, ita tamen vt ad vnum habeant respectum. Cumq; in bello contra aliquos congregiuntur, nisi communicommuniter cedant, omnes qui fugiunt, occiduntur. Et si vnus aut duo, vel plures ex decem audacter accedunt ad pugnam, alij verò ex illo Denario non sequuntur, similiter occiduntur. Sed etiam si vnus ex decem vel plures capiuntur, tocij eorum si non eos liberant, ipsi etiam occiduntur. Porro arma debent habere talia, Duos arcus vel vnum bonum ad minus. Tresq; pharetras sagittis plenas, & vnam securim & funes ad machinas trahendas. Diuites autem habent gladios in fine acutos, ex vna parte tantum incidentes, & aliquantulum curuos. Habent & equos armatos, crura etiam tecta, galeas & loricas. Verum loricas & equorum cooperturas quidam habent de corio, super corpus artificiose duplicato vel etiam triplicato. Galea verò superior est de chalybe, vel de ferro: sed illud, quod in circuitu protegit collum & gulam, est de corio. Quidam autem de ferro habent omnia supradicta, in hunc modum formata. Laminas multas tenues ad vnus digiti latitudinem & palmarum longitudinem faciunt, & in qualibet octo foramina paruula facientes, interius tres corrigias strictas & fortes ponunt. Sicq; laminas, vnam alij quasi per gradus ascendendo, supponunt. Itaq; laminas ad corrigias, tenuibus corrigiolis per foramina prædicta immixtis, ligant, & in superiori parte corrigiolam vnam ex viraque parte duplicatam cum alia corrigiola confluunt, vt laminæ simul benè firmiterq; cohæreant. Hæc faciunt tam ad cooperturas equorum, quam ad armaturas hominum. Adeoq; faciunt illa lucere, quod in eis potest homo faciem suam videre. Aliqui verò in collo ferri lanceæ vncum habent, cum quo de sella, si possunt, hominem detrahant. Sagittarum eorum ferramenta sunt acutissima, ex vtraque parte quasi gladius biceps incidentia, semperq; iuxta pharetram portant limas ad acuendum sagittas. Habent verò scuta de viminibus, aut de virgulis facta. Sed non credimus, quòd ea soleant portare, nisi ad castra & ad custodiam Imperatoris ac principum, & hoc tantum de nocte. In bellis astutissimi sunt: quia per annos xlii. cum cæteris gentibus dimicauerunt. Cum autem ad flumina perueniunt, maiores habent rotundum ac leue corium, in cuius summitate per circuitum ansas crebras facientes, funem imponunt ac stringunt, ita quod in circuitu quasi ventrem efficiunt, quem vestibus ac rebus cæteris replent, fortissimèq; ad inuicem comprimunt. In medio autem ponunt sellas & alias res duriores: ibi quoque sedent homines. Huiusmodi nauim ad equi caudam ligant, & hominem, qui equum regat, pariter nare faciunt, vel habent aliquando duos remos, cum quibus remigant. Equo igitur in aquam impulsio, omnes alij equi sequuntur illum, & sic transeunt fluuium. Pauperior autem quilibet vnam bursam vel saccum de corio benè confutum habet, in quo res suas omnes imponit, & in summitate fortiter ligatum, ad equi caudam suspendit, sicq; modo prædicto transit.

Qualiter resistendum sit eis. Cap. 18.

Nvllam æstimo provinciam esse, quæ per se possit eis resistere: quia de omni terra potestatis suæ solent homines ad bellum congregare. Et siquidem vicina provincia non vult eis opem ferre, quam impugnant, delentes illam, cum hominibus, quos ex illa capiunt, contra aliam pugnant. Et illos quidem in acie primos ponunt, & si male pugnant, ipsos occidunt. Itaq; si Christiani eis resistere volunt, oportet quòd Principes ac rectores terrarum in vnum conueniant, ac de communi consilio eis resistant. Habeantq; pugnatrices arcus fortes & balistas, quas multum timent, sagittasq; sufficientes, dolabrum quoq; de bono ferro, vel securim cum manubrio longo. Ferramenta verò sagittarum more Tartarorum, quando sunt calida, temperare debent in aqua, cum sale mixta, vt fortia sint ad penetrandum illorum arma. Gladios etiam & lanceas cum vncis habeant, qui volunt, ad detrahendū illos de sella, de qua facillimè cadunt. Habeant & galeas & arma cætera, ad protegendum corpus & equum ab armis & sagittis eorum, & si qui non ita sunt armati, debent more illorum post alios ire, & contra ipsos arcibus vel balistis trahere. Et sicut dictum est suprà de Tartaris, debent acies suas ordinare, ac legem pugnantibus imponere. Quicumq; conuersus fuerit ad prædam ante victoriam, maximam debet poenam subire: talis enim apud illos occiditur absq; miseratione. Locus ad prælium, si fieri potest, eligendus est planus, vt vndiq; possint videre, nec omnes debent in vnum conuenire, sed acies multas & diuisas, ne tamen nimis distantes ab inuicem, facere. Contra illos, qui primo veniunt, debent vnam aciem mittere, & alia parata sit ad iuuandum illam opportuno tempore. Habeant & speculatores ex omni parte, qui videant, quando veniunt acies ceteræ. Nam idèd semper debent aciem contra aciem, vt ei occurrant, mittere, quoniam illi semper nituntur aduersarios in medio concludere. Hoc autem acies caueant, ne si etiam illi fugere videantur, diu post illos currant, ne fortè, sicut facere solent, ipsos ad paratas insidias trahant: quia plus fraudulentia quam fortitudine pugnant. Et iterum ne fatigantur equi eorum: quia nostri multitudinem non habent equorum. Tartari verò quos equitant die vna, non ascendunt tribus diebus, vel quatuor postea. Præterea si cedunt Tartari, non idèd debent nostri recedere, vel ab inconsuluit, vt per Poloniam & Russiam iter ageremus. Habebar enim consanguineos in Polonia, quorum auxilio Russiam intrare possemus. Datisq; literis & bono conductu, fecit & expensas nobis dari per curias & ciuitates eius, quo vsque ad Ducem Slesia Bolezlaum, nepotem eius, veniremus, qui etiam erat nobis familiaris & notus. Hinc & ipse nobis similiter fecit, donec veniremus ad Conradum, Ducem * Lautiscia, ad quem tunc, Dei gratia nobis fauente, venerat Dominus Wasilico, Dux Russia, à quo etiam plenius de facto audiuius Tartarorum: quia nuncios illuc miserat, qui iam redierant ad ipsum. Audito autem, quod oporteret nos illis munera dare, quasdam pelles castorum & aliorum animalium fecimus emi, de hoc, quod datum nobis fuerat in eleemosynam ad subsidium viæ. Quod agnoscentes Dux Conradus & * Dux Cracouia, & Episcopus & quidam milites, plures etiam nobis dederunt huiusmodi pelles. Denique Dux Wasilico à Duce Cracouia, & Episcopo atque Baronibus pro nobis attentè rogatus, secum nos in terram suam duxit, & vt aliquantulum quiesceremus, aliquot die-bus nos in expensis suis detinuit. Et cum rogatus à nobis, fecisset Episcopos suos venire, legimus eis literas Domini Papæ, monentis eos, ad sanctæ matris Ecclesiæ vnitatem redire. Ad idem quoque nos ipsi monuimus eos, & induximus, quantum potuimus, tam Ducem quam Episcopos & alios. Sed quia Dux Daniel, frater Wasiliconis prædicti, prætens non erat, quoniam ad Baty profectus erat, non potuerunt eo tempore finaliter respondere. Post hæc Dux Wasilico transmisit nos vsque in Kiouiam metropolin Russia, cum seruiente vno. Ibanus tamen in periculo capitis semper propter Lituanos, qui sæpè faciebant insultum super terram Russia, & in illis maximè locis, per quos debebamus transire. At per prædictum seruientem eramus securi à Ruthenis, quorum etiam maxima pars occisa vel captiuata erat à Tartaris. Porro in Danilone vsque ad mortem tunc infirmati fuimus. Nihilominus tamen in vehiculo per niuem & frigus magnum trahi nos fecimus. Cum ergo Kiouiam peruenimus, habuimus de via nostra consili-um cum millenario ac cæteris ibidem nobilibus, Qui responderunt nobis, quod si duceremus equos illos, quos tunc habebamus, ad Tartaros, cum essent magnæ niues, morerentur omnes:

quia nescirent herbam fodere sub niue, sicut equi faciunt Tartarorum, nec inueniri posset aliquod pro eis ad manducandum, cum Tartari nec stramina nec scenum habeant, nec pabulum.
Itaque decreuimus eos illic dimittere cum duobus pueris, deputatis eorum custodiæ. Ideoq; nos oportuit millenario dare munera, vt ipsum haberemus propitium, ad dandum nobis equos subductitios & conductum. Secundo igitur die post festum Purificationis cepto itinere, veni-mus ad villam Canouæ, quæ sub Tartaris erat immediatè. Cuius præfectus nobis dedit equos & conductum vsque ad aliam, in qua reperimus præfectum Micheam, omni malicia plenum, Qui tamen acceptis à nobis muneribus secundum velle suum, duxit nos vsq; ad primam custo-

cum ipsis, Desiderat in super, ut apud Deum in celo sint magni, & idcirco monet eos tam per nos quam per literas suas, ut efficiantur Christiani, fidemque recipiant Domini nostri Iesu Christi, quia non possunt aliter saluari. Mandat præterea, quod miratur de tanta occisione hominum, & maxime Christianorum, ac potissime Hungarorum, Montanorum, & Polonorum, qui sunt ei subiecti, facta per Tartaros, cum in nullo lesissent, aut lædere attentassent eos. Et quia Dominus Deus grauius est super hoc offensus, monet eos, ut à talibus de cætero caneant, & de communis penitentiam agant. Super his etiam rogat, ut ei rescribant, quid facere velint de cætero, & quæ sit eorum intentio, Quibus auditis, & intellectis, dixerunt Tartari, se velle equos nobis subdicitos usque ad Corrensam & ducatum præbere. Statimque munera petierunt, & à nobis acceperunt. Equis igitur acceptis, de quibus descenderant ipsi, cum eorum ducatu ad Corrensam arripuimus iter eundi. Ipsi tamen velociter equitantes, nuncium vnum præmiserunt ad præfatum Ducem cum his verbis, quæ dixeramus eisdem. Cum ergo peruenissemus ad eius curiam, fecit nobis longè à se poni stationem, & misit ad nos procuratores suos, ut quærerent à nobis, cum quo ei vellemus inclinare, id est, quæ ei munera inclinando vellemus offerre. Quibus respondimus, quod Dominus Papa non mittebat aliqua munera; quia non erat certus, quod ad illos peruenire possemus, & insuper veneramus per loca valde periculosa. Veruntamen in quantum de his, quæ habebamus ex gratia Dei & Domini Papæ ad victum nostrum, sicut poterimus, honorabimus ipsi. Acceptisque muneribus duxerunt nos ad ordam siue tentorium ipsius, & instructi fuimus, ut ante ostium stationis ter cum sinistro genu inclinaremus, & caueremus attentè, ne pedem super limem ostij poneremus. Et postquam intrauimus, oportuit nos coram Duce omnibusque maioribus, qui ad hoc erant vocati, dicere flexis genibus ea, quæ dixeramus superius. Literas etiam Domini Papæ obrulimus: sed interpretes, quem de Kyouia, dato pretio, duxeramus, non erat sufficiens ad interpretandū, nec aliquis alius habebatur idoneus. Hinc equi nobis dati sunt, & tres Tartari, qui nos ducerent festinanter ad ducem Bathy. Ipse est apud eos potentior excepto Imperatore, cui tenentur præcunctis principibus obedire. Itaque iter arripuimus secunda feria post primam dominicam || xl. & equitando, quantum equi trocare poterant, quoniam habebamus equos recentes ferè ter aut quater omni die, properabamus de mane usque ad noctem, imò etiam de nocte sæpissimè, nec tamen ante quartam feriam maioris hebdomadæ potuimus ad ipsum peruenire. Ibamus autem per terram Comanorum, quæ tota est plana, & flumina quatuor habet magna. Primum appellatur * Neper, iuxta quod ex parte Russiæ ambulabat Correnza & Montij, qui maior est illo ex altera parte per campestria. Secundum appellatur * Don, super quod ambulat quidam Princeps, habens in coniugio sororem Baty, qui vocatur Tiibon. Tertium dicitur * Volga, quod est magnum valde, super quod incedit Bathy. Quartum nominatur * Iac, super quod duo millenarij vadunt, vnus ex parte fluminis vni, & alter ex altera. Hi omnes in hyeme ad mare descendunt, & in æstate super ripam eorundem fluminum ad montes ascendunt. Hoc est mare magnum, de quo brachium sancti Georgij exit, quod in Constantinopolin vadit. Hæc autem flumina sunt piscibus valde plena, maxime Volga, intrantque mare Græciæ, quod dicitur Magnum mare. Super Nepre autem multis diebus iuimus per glaciem. Super littora quoque maris Græciæ satis periculose per glaciem iuimus in pluribus locis multis diebus. Congelantur enim circa littora vnde ad tres leucas inferius. Prius autem quam ad Bathy perueniremus, duo ex nostris Tartaris præcesserunt, ad indicandum ei omnia verba, quæ apud Corrensam dixeramus.

Cumque duci debuimus ad curiam ipsius, dictum fuit nobis, quod inter duos ignes transire deberemus. Nos autem hoc nulla ratione facere volebamus. At illi dixerunt nobis: Ite securè, quia pro nulla causa volumus hoc facere, nisi tantum, ut si vos aliquid malum cogitatis Domino nostro, vel portatis venenum, ignis auferat omne malum. Quibus respondimus: quod propter hoc, ne de tali re suspectos redderemus nos, transiremus. acceptis, auditis etiam itineris caulis, introduxerunt nos in stationem Principis, prius facta inclinatione, & audita de limine non calcando, sicut prius, admonitione. Ingressi autem flexis genibus, verba nostra proposuimus, deinde literas obtulimus, & ut nobis darentur interpretes ad transferendum eas, rogauimus. Qui etiam in die Parasceue dati fuerunt nobis, & eas in litera Ruthenica, Sarracénica & in Tartarica diligenter cum ipsis transulimus. Hæc interpretatio Bathy præsentata fuit: quam & legit, & attentè notauit. Tandem ad nostram stationem rediisti fuimus, sed nulla cibaria nobis dederunt, nisi semel aliquantulum millij in vna scutella, scilicet in prima nocte quando venimus. Ille Bathy magnificè se gerit, habens ostiarios & omnes officiales ad modum Imperatoris, & sedet in eminenti loco velut in throno cum vna de vxoribus suis. Alij verò tam fratres sui & filij, quam alij maiores inferius sedent in medio super bancum, & homines cæteri post eos in terra deortum, sed viri à dextris, & sceminæ à sinistris. Tentoria quoque de panno lineo habet pulchra & magna satis, quæ fuerunt Hungariæ regis. Nec aliquis ad eius tentorium audet accedere præter familiam, nisi vocatus, quantumcunque sit potens & magnus, nisi fortè sciatur, quòd sit voluntas ipsius. Nos etiam dicta causâ sedimus à sinistris: Sic etenim & omnes nuncij faciunt in cundo: sed in redeundo ab Imperatore, semper ponebamur à dextris. In medio ponitur mensa eius prope ostium stationis, super quam apponitur potus in aureis & argenteis vasis. Nec vnquam bibit Bathy, vel aliquis Tartarorum Princeps, maximè quando in publico sunt, nisi canretur ei vel cytharizetur. Et cum equitat, semper portat solium, vel tentorium super caput eius in hasta. Sicq; faciunt cuncti maiores Principes Tartarorum, & etiam vxores eorum. Idem verò Bathy satis est hominibus suis benignus, valdè tamen ab eis timetur, & in pugna est crudelissimus, sagax est multum & astutissimus in bello: quia iam pugnavit tempore longo.

IN die por:ò Sabbathi sancti ad stationem fuimus vocati, & exiit ad nos procurator Bathy prædictus, dicens ex parte ipsius, quòd ad Imperatorem Cuyne in terram ipsorum iremus, retentis quibusdam ex nostris sub hac specie, quòd vellent eos remittere ad Dominum Papam, quibus & literas dedimus de omnibus factis nostris, quas deferrent eidem. Sed cum redissent vsq; ad Montij Ducem supradictum, ibi retenti fuerunt vsque ad reditum nostrum. Nos autem in die Pasche officio dicto, & facta comestione qualicunq; cum duobus Tartaris, qui nobis apud Corrensam fuerant assignati, cum multis lacrymis recessimus, nescientes vtrum ad mortem vel vitam pergeremus. Eramus tamen ita infirmi corpore, quòd vix poteramus equitare. In tota siquidem illa quadragesima fuerat cibus noster millium cum aqua & sale tantum, & in alijs similiter diebus ieiuniorum. Nec habebamus aliquid ad bibendum præter niuem in caldario liquefactam. Ibamus autem per Comaniam equitando fortissimè, quoniam habebamus equos recentes quinquies aut pluries in die, nisi quando per deserta ibamus, & tunc equos meliores atque fortiores, qui possent continuum sustinere laborem, accipiebamus. Et hoc ab ineunte quadragesima vsque ad octo dies post Pascha. Hæc terra Comania ab Aquilone immediatè post Russiam habet Morduynos, Byleros, id est, magnam Bulgariam, Bastarcos, id est, magnam Hungariam, post Bastarcos, Parositas & Samogetas. Post Samogetas, illos, qui dicuntur habere faciem caninam in Oceani littoribus desertis, A meridie habet Alanos, Circassos, Gazaros, Græciam & Constantinopolin, ac terram Iberorum, Cathos, Brutachios, qui dicuntur esse Iudæi, caput radentes per totum, terram quoq; Cithorum atque Georgianorum & Armeniorum & Turcorum, Ab occidente autem Hungariam habet atque Russiam. Et est Comania terra maxima & longa. Cuius populos, scilicet Comanos, Tartari occiderunt, quidam tamen à facie eorum fugerunt, & quidam in eorum seruitutem redacti sunt. Plurimi autem ex eis, qui fugerunt, ad ipsos redierunt. Post hæc intrauimus terram Kangittarum, quæ magnam habet in plurimis locis penuriam aquarum, in qua etiam homines pauci morantur propter aquæ defectum. Vnde homines Ieroslai, Ducis Russiæ, cum ad ipsum in terram Tartarorum perrexerunt, plures eorum in illo deserto præ sitimortui sunt. In hac etiam terra & in Comania multa inuenimus capita & ossa moriuorum hominum, super terram iacentia tanquam sterquilinum. Per hanc itaq; terram iuimus ab octo diebus post Pascha ferè vsque ad Ascensionem Dominicam. Huiusq; habitatores Pagani erant, & tam ipsi quam Comani non laborabant, sed tantum de animalibus vivebant, nec domos ædificabant, sed in tabernaculis habitabant. Istos etiam Tartari deleuerunt, & habitabant in terris eorum, illiq; qui remanserunt, redacti sunt in seruitutem ipsorum.

PORRò de terra Kangittarum intrauimus terram Biserminorum, qui loquuntur lingua Comanica, sed legem tenent Sarracenorum. In hac etiam terra inuenimus vrbes innumeras cum castris dirutas, villasq; multas desertas, Huius Dominus dicebatur Altrifoldanus, qui cum tota sua progenie à Tartaris est destructus, Habet autem hæc terra montes maximos. Et à meridie quidem habet Hierusalem & Baldach, totamq; Sarracenorum terram, Atque in finibus illis propinquis morantur duo fratres carnales, Tartarorum Duces, scilicet Burin & Cadan, filij Thiaday, qui fuit filius Chingischam. Ab Aquilone verò terram habet nigrorum Kythaorum & Oceanum. In illa verò moratur Syban, frater Bathy. Per hanc iuimus à festo Ascensionis dominicæ ferè vsque ad viij. dies ante festum sancti Iohan. Baptistæ. Deinde ingressi sumus terram nigrorum Kythaorum, in qua Imperator ædificauit domum, vbi etiam vocati fuimus ad bibendum. Et ille, qui erat ibidem ex parte imperatoris, fecit maiores ciuitatis, & etiam duos filios eius, plaudere coram nobis. Hinc exeuntes, quoddam mare paruum inuenimus, in cuius littore quidam existit mons paruus, In quo scilicet monte quoddam foramen esse dicunt, vnde in hyeme tam inaximè tempestates ventorum exeunt, quòd homines inde vix & cum magno periculo transire possunt. In æstate verò semper quidem ibi ventorum sonitus auditur, sed de foramine tenuiter egreditur. Per huius maris littora plurimis diebus perreximus, quod quidem licet non multum sit magnum, plures insulas habet, & illud in sinistris dimissimus. In terra verò illa habitat Ordu, quem omnium Ducum Tartarorum antiquiorem diximus, & est orda, siue curia patris ipsius, quam inhabitat, & regis vna de vxoribus eius. Consuetudo enim est apud Tartaros, quòd principum & maiorum curiæ non delentur, sed semper ordinantur aliquæ mulieres, quæ illas regant, eisq; donariorum partes, sicut Dominis earum dari solebant, dantur. Sic tandem ad primam Imperatoris curiam venimus, in qua erat vna de vxoribus ipsius.

AT verò quia nondum Imperatorem videramus, noluerunt vocare nos, nec intromittere ad Ordem ipsius, sed nobis in tentorio nostro secundum morem Tartarorum valde benè seruire fecerunt, & vt quiesceremus, nos ibidem per vnam diem tenuerunt. Inde procedentes in vigilia sanctorum Petri & Pauli, terram Naymanorum intrauimus, qui sunt Pagani. In ipsa verò die Apostolorum ibidem cecidit magna nix, & habuimus magnum frigus. Hæc quidem terra monuosa & frigida est supra modum, ibiq; de planicie reperitur modicum. Itæ quoque duæ nationes prædictæ non laborabant, sed sicut & Tartari in tentorijs habitabant, quas & ipsi deleuerant. per hanc etiam multis diebus perreximus. Deinde terram Mongalorum intrauimus, quos Tartaros appellamus, Per has itaque terras, vt credimus, tribus septimanis equitando fortiter iuimus, & in die Beatæ Mariæ Magdalene ad Cuyne Imperatorem electum perueniimus. Ideò autem per omnem viam istam valde festinauimus, quia præceptum erat Tartaris nostris, vt citò nos deducerent ad curiam solennem, iam ex annis pluribus indictam, propter ipsius Imperatoris electionem. Idcirco de mane surgentes, ibamus vsque ad noctem sine comestione, & sæpius tam tardè veniebamur, quòd non comedebamus in sero, sed quod manducare debebamus in vespere, dabatur nobis in mane. Mutatisq; frequentius equis, nullatenus parcebatur eis, sed equitabamus velociter ac sine intermissione, quantum poterant equi trotare.

CUm autem perueniimus ad Cuyne, fecit nobis dari tentorium & expensas, quales Tartari dare solent, nobis tamen melius quàm alijs nuncijs faciebant. Ad ipsum autem vocari non fuimus, eo quòd nondum electus erat, nec adhuc de imperio se intromittebat. Interpretatio tamen literarum Domini Papæ, ac verba etiam à nobis dicta, à prædicto Baty erant ei mandata. Cum ergo stetissemus ibi per quinque vel sex dies, ad matrem suam nos transmisit, vbi adunabatur curia solennis. Et cum venissemus illuc, tam extensum erat tentorium magnum, de alba purpura præparatum, eratq; tam grande nostro iudicio, quòd plusquam duo millia hominum poterant esse sub illo, Et in circuitu factum erat ligneum tabularum varijs imaginibus depictum, Illuc ergo perreximus cum Tartaris, nobis ad custodiam assignatis, ibiq; conuenerant

Comitia. omnes duces, & vniūquīq; cum hominibus suis equitabat in circuitu per planiciem & colles. In prima die vestiti sunt omnes purpuris albis, in secunda verò rubeis. Et tunc venit Cuyne ad tentorium illud. Porro tertia die fuerunt omnes in blauis purpuris, & quarta in optimis Baldakinis. In illo autem tabulato iuxta tentorium erant duæ maiores portæ, per quarum vnā solus Imperator debebat intrare, & ad illam nulla erat custodia, quamuis esset aperta, quia per illam nullus audebat ingredi vel exire: per aliam omnes, qui admittebantur, intrabant, & ad illam custodes cum gladijs & arcubus & sagittis erant. Itaq; si quis tentorio propinquabat ultra terminos, qui positi erant, si capiebatur, verberabatur, si fugiebat, sagitta siue ferro sagittabatur. Multiq; ibi erant, qui in frænis, pectoralibus, sellis & huiusmodi iudicio nostro, auri circiter viginti marcas habebant. Sic Duces infra tentorium colloquebantur, & de Imperatoris electione tractabant, vt à nobis creditur. Alius autem vniuersus populus longè extra tabulatum collocabatur, & ita ferè vsque ad meridiem morabantur. Tunc incipiebant lac iumentinum bibere, & vsque ad vespertas tantum bibebant, quod erat visu mirabile. Nos autem vocauerunt interius, & dederunt nobis cereuisiam: quia iumentinū lac non bibebamus. Et hoc quidem nobis pro magno fecerunt honore: sed tamen nos compellebant ad bibendum, quod nullatenus poteramus propter consuetudinem sustinere. Vnde ostendimus eis, hoc esse nobis graue, ideoq; nos celsauerunt compellere. Foris autem erat Dux Ieroslaus de Susdal Russiæ, pluresq; Duces Kythaprum & Solangorum. Duo quoq; filij regis Georgiæ, nuncius etiam Caliphi de Baldach, qui erat Soldanus, & plus quam decem alij Soldani Saracenorum, vt credimus. Et sicut nobis à procuratoribus dicebatur, erant ibi nunciorum plus quàm quatuor millia, inter illos, qui tributa portabant, & illos, qui deferebant munera, & Soldanos ac Duces alios, qui ad tradendum seipsos veniebant, & illos, pro quibus ipsi miserant, illosq; , qui terrarum præfecti erant. Hi omnes simul extra tabulatum ponebantur, eisq; simul bibere præbebatur. Nobis autem & Duci Ierozlao ferè semper ab eis dabatur superior locus, quando cum eis eramus exterius.

ET quidem, si benè meminimus, ibidem per septimanas circiter quatuor fuimus. Creditumq; quòd ibi fuit electio celebrata, non tamen ibidem fuit publicata. Propter hoc autem id maxime credebatur, quia semper, quando Cuyne tentorio exhiberetur, eidem cantabatur, & cum virgis speciosis, in summitate lanam coccineam habentibus, inclinabatur, quod alteri Ducum nulli fiebat, quousq; exterius morabatur. Hęc autem statio siue Curia nominatur ab eis Syza orda. Hinc exeuntes, vniūmīter omnes equitauimus per tres aut quatuor leucas ad alium locum, vbi erat in quadā pulchra planicie riuum inter montes aliud tentorium, quod apud ipsos appellatur Orda aurea, præparatū. Ibi enim Cuyne debebat poni in sede in die Assumptionis Domine nostræ. Sed propter grandinem nimiam, quæ tunc, vt supra dictum est, cecidit, res dilata fuit. Eratq; tentorium in columnis positum, quæ laminis aureis erant tectæ, & clauis aureis cum alijs lignis fixæ. Porro de Baldakino erat tectum superius, sed alij erant panni exterius. Fuimus autem ibi vsq; ad festum Beati Bartholomæi, in quo maxima multitudo conuenit, & contra meridiem versis vultibus stetit. Et quidam ad iactum lapidis longè à cæteris erant, semperq; orationes faciendo, ac genua flectendo, contra meridiem longius, & longius procedebant. Nos autem vtrum incantationes facerent, aut genua Deo vel alteri flecterent, nescientes, nolebamus facere genu flexiones. Cumq; diu ita fessissent, ad tentorium reuersi sunt, & Cuyne in sede imperiali posuerunt, Ducesq; coram eo genua flexerunt. Hic autem Imperator quando sublimatus est in regnum, videbatur esse circiter xl. vel xlv. annorum. Mediocris erat staturæ, prudens valde, nimis astutus multumq; seriosus, & grauis in moribus. Nec vnquam videbat eum homo de facili ridere, vel aliquam leuitatem facere, sicut dicebant Christiani, qui cum ipso morabantur continuè. Dicebant etiam nobis asserendo firmiter Christiani, qui erant de familia eius, quòd deberet fieri Christianus. Cuius signum erat, quod ipse Clericos Christianos tenebat, & expensas eis dabat. Habebat etiam semper capellam Christianorum ante maius tentorium suum, vbi cantant Clerici publicè & apertè, ac pulsant ad horas, vt ceteri Christiani secundum mores Græcorum, quantacumq; sit ibi multitudo Tartarorum, vel etiam aliorum hominum. Hoc tamen non faciunt alij Duces ipsorum. Est autem mos Imperatoris ipsius, vt nunquam ore proprio loquatur cum extraneo, quan-

tuncunq; magnus sit, sed audit & responder per interpositam personam, & quodcunq; negotium proponunt, vel Imperatoris responsum audiunt illi, qui sub eo sunt, quantumcunq; sint magni, flexis genibus vsq; ad finem verborum persistunt. Nec alicui de consuetudine super aliquo negotio loqui licitum est, postquam ab Imperatore definitum est. Habet autem Imperator prædictus procuratorem & protonotarios, atq; scriptores, omnesq; officiales in negotijs tam publicis quam priuatis, exceptis Aduocatis. Nam sine litium vel iudiciorum strepitu secundum arbitrium Imperatoris omnia fiunt. Alij quoque Principes Tartarorum de his, quæ ad illos pertinent, idem faciunt. Hoc autem nouerint vniuersi, quia nobis tunc existentibus in solenni curia, iam ex pluribus annis indicta, idem Cuyne Imperator, de nouo electus, cum omnibus suis Principibus erexit vexillum contra Ecclesiam Dei, ac Romanum Imperium, & contra omnia regna Christianorum & populos Occidentis, nisi fortasse, quod absit, facerent ea, quæ mandabat Domino Papæ, atque potentibus, & omnibus Christianorum populis, videlicet vt ipsi subdantur eis. Nam excepta Christianitate, nulla est terra in orbe, quam timeant, & ideo contra nos ad pugnam se præparant. Huius siquidem Imperatoris pater, scilicet Oc-coday, necatus fuerat veneno, & ob hoc à bellis quieuerant tempore pauco. Intentio autem eorum, vt dictum est supra, est, sibi totum subijcere mundum, sicut à Chingischam habent mandatum. Vnde & ipse Imperator in literis suis ita scribit: Dei fortitudo, omnium hominum Imperator. In superscriptione quoque sigilli eius est hoc: Deus in cælo, & Cuyne Cham super terram, Dei fortitudo: omnium hominum Imperatoris sigillum.

De admissione Fratrum & nunciorum ad Imperatorem. Cap. 29.

IN loco illo, vbi positus est Imperator in throno, vocati fuimus coram ipso. Cumq; Chingay protonotarius eius nomina nostra scripsisset, illorūq; à quibus missi eramus, & Ducis Solangorum & aliorum, clamauit alta voce, recitans illa coram Imperatore ac Ducum vniuersitate, Quo facto, flexit vnusquisq; nostrum quater genu sinistrum, & monuerunt, ne tangere-mus limen deorsum. Cumq; pro cultellis nos diligentissime scrutati fuissent, & nullatenus inuenissent, intrauimus ostium ab Orientali parte: quia nullus ab Occidente, nisi solus imperator, audet intrare. Similiter & Dux ab illa parte ingreditur solus, si est tentorium eius, Minores autem non multum curant de talibus. Tunc ergo primum in eius præsentia suam intrauimus stationem, videlicet postquam factus est Imperator ibidem, Omnes quoque nuncij tunc ab eo recepti sunt, sed paucissimi tentorium eius intrauerunt. Ibi verò tanta donaria ab ipsis nuncijs fuerunt ei præsentata, quod quasi videbantur infinita, videlicet in samitis ac purpureis & baldakinis ac cingulis sericis cum auro præparatis, pellibus etiam nobilibus, ceterisq; muneribus, Quoddam etiam Solinum, siue tentoriolum, quod super caput Imperatoris portatur, fuit eidem præsentatum, quod totum erat cum gemmis præparatum. Quidam verò præfectus vnus provincie adduxit ei Camelos multos cum Baldakinis reectos. Similiter sellæ postæ cum instrumentis quibusdam erant, in quibus homines intemius sedere valebant. Equos etiam multos & mulos adducebant eidem phaleratos & armatos, quosdam quidem de corio, & quosdam de ferro. Nos etiam requisiti fuimus, an ei munera dare vellemus: sed iam facultas non erat, quoniam omnia ferè nostra consumpseramus. Ibidem longè à stationibus super montem erant positi curtus plusquam quingenti, qui omnes auro & argento ac sericis vestibus erant pleni. Cunctiq; inter imperatorem & Duces diuisi fuerunt, singuliq; Duces inter homines suos partes suas, vt eis placuit, diuiserunt.

IN de recedentes, venimus ad alium locum, vbi tentorium mirabile, totum de purpura rufa, quod Kitay dederant, erat positum. Illic interius introducti fuimus, & semper cum intrabamus nobis dabatur ad bibendum cereuisia vel vinum, & etiam carnes coctæ, si volebamus, ad edendum. Eratque solatiolum vnum, de tabulis altè præparatum, vbi thronus Imperatoris erat positus, ex ebore mirabiliter sculptus, in quo etiam erat aurum, & lapides preciosi, si benè meminimus, & illuc ascende-batur per gradus. vero erant positi in circuitu sedis, ubi dominæ sedebant à parte sinistra in scammis, à dextris autem nemo sedebat superius, sed Duces sedebant in Bancis inferius, & hoc in medio. Alij verò sedebant post eos, & quolibet die veniebat dominarum maxima multitudo. Ista verò tria tentoria, de quibus suprà diximus, erant valdè magna, aliq; habebant vxores eius de filro albo satis magna & pulchra. Ibidem Imperator diuisus est à matre sua, quæ iuit in vnam terræ partem, & Imperator in aliam ad iudicia facienda. Capta siquidem erat amica Imperatoris istius, quæ veneno interfecerat patrem eius, eo tempore, quo exercitus eorum in Hungaria fuit. Propter quod etiam exercitus eorum, qui erat in partibus illis, recessit, De qua cum alijs pluribus factum fuit iudicium, & occisi fuerunt. Eodem tempore mortuus fuit Ieroslaus, Dux magnus Soldal, quæ est quædam Russiæ pars. Vocatus enim ad matrem Imperatoris quasi pro honore, vt manducaret ac biberet de manu ipsius, in continenti ad hospitium est reuersus, infirmatusq; mortuus est post septem dies; totumque corpus eius miro modo glaucum effectum est, dicebaturq; ab omnibus, quod ibidem, vt terram eius liberè ac plenariè possiderent, fuisset impotionatus.

DEniq; Tartari nostri nos ad Imperatorem duxerunt: qui cum audisset per illos, nos ad eum venisse, iussit nos ad matrem redire. Volebat enim secundo die, sicut superius dictum est, contra totam Occidentis terram vexillum erigere, quod nos volebat ignorare. Itaque reuersi stetimus paucis diebus, & iterum ad ipsum reuersi fuimus. Cum quo benè per mensem fuimus in tanta fame ac siti, quòd vix viuere poteramus. Nam expensæ, quæ nobis pro diebus quatuor dabantur, vix vni sufficiebant, Nec inuenire poteramus aliquid ad emendum, quia forum erat nimis remotum. Sed Dominus nobis quendam Ruthenum, nomine Cosmam, aurifabrum præparauit, qui satis dilectus Imperatori, nos in aliquo sustentauit, Et hic nobis ostendit thronum Imperatoris, quem ipse fecerat, antequam poneretur in sede, & sigillum eiusdem, quod etiam fabricauerat ipse. Post hoc Imperator pro nobis misit, nobisq; per Chingay protonotarium suum dici fecit, vt verba nostra & negotia scriberemus, eiq; porrigeremus, Quod & fecimus. Post plures dies nos iterum vocari fecit, & vtrum essent apud Dominum Papam, qui Ruthenorum vel Sarracenorum, aut etiam Tartarorum litteram intelligerent, interrogauit. Cui respondimus, quòd nullam istarum litterarum habebamus. Sarraceni tamen erant in terra, sed remoti erant à Domino Papa. Diximus tamen, quia nobis expedire videbatur, quòd in Tartarico scriberent, & nobis interpretarentur, nos autem in littera nostra diligenter scriberemus, & tam litteram quàm interpretationem ad Dominum Papam deferremus. Tunc à nobis recesserunt, & ad Imperatorem iuerunt. Porro à die Beati Martini fuimus vocari, Tunc Kadaç, totius imperij procurator, & Chingay & Bala, pluresq; scriptores ad nos venerunt, nobisq; litteram de verbo ad verbum interpretati fuerunt. Et cum in Latina littera scripsissemus, faciebant sibi per singulas orationes interpretari, volentes scire, si nos in aliquo verbo erraremus. Cum igitur ambæ literæ fuissent scriptæ, fecerunt nos semel ac secundo legere, ne forte minus aliquid haberemus. Dixerunt enim nobis, videte, quòd omnia benè intelligatis, quia non expediret, quòd non omnia benè intelligeretis. Litteras etiam in Sarracenicis scripserunt, vt aliquis in partibus nostris inueniri posset, qui eas, si opus esset, legeret.

Qualiter licentiati fuerunt. Cap. 32.

VT autem nobis Tartari nostri dixerunt, proposuit Imperator nuncios suos nobiscum mittere. Volebat tamen, vt credimus, quod nos id ab eo peteremus. Sed cum vnus de Tartaris nostris, qui senior erat, nos ad hoc petendum hortaretur, nobis quidem, vt venirent, nequam bonum videbatur. Ideoq; respondimus ei, quòd non erat nostrum petere, sed si sponte ipse Imperator mitteret eos, libenter eos securè conducereimus, Domino adiuuante. Nobis autem ob plures causas vt venirent, non videbatur expedire. Prima quidem fuit, quia timuimus, ne visis dissentionibus aut guerris, quæ fiunt inter nos, magis animarentur ad ventendum contra nos. Secunda fuit, timebamus eos exploratores terræ fieri. Tertia verò, quia timebamus eos interfici. Gentes enim nostræ arrogantes sunt & superbæ. Vnde quando seruientes, qui stant nobiscum, ex rogatu Cardinalis, legati scilicet Alemannij, in habitu Tartarico ibant ad ipsum, in via ferè lapidati sunt à Teutonicis, & coacti sunt deponere habitum illum. Consuetudo autem est Tartarorum, vt cum illis, qui nuncios eorum occiderint, nunquam faciant pacem; nisi sumant de ipsis vltionem. Quarta etiã causa fuit, quia timebamus ne nobis auferrentur vi.

Quinta

Quinta verò causa erat, quia de aduentu eorum nulla foret utilitas, cum nullum haberent aliud mandatum vel potestatem, nisi quod literas Imperatoris ad Dominum Papam & ad Principes deferrent, quas videlicet literas ipsi nos habebamus, & malum ex eorum aduentu posse contingere credebamus. Itaq; tertia die post hoc, scilicet in festo beati Briceij nobis dederunt licentiam & literam, Imperatoris sigillo munitam, mittentes nos ad ipsius Imperatoris matrem, quæ unicuiq; nostrum dedit pelliceum vnum de pellibus vulpinis, quod habebat pilos de foris, & purpuram vnā. De quibus Tartari nostri furati sunt ex vnaqua; vnum passum. De illa quoq; quæ dabatur seruienti, meliorem medietatem sunt furati, Quod nos quidem non ignorauimus, sed inde verba mouere nolimus.

TVnc iter ad reuertendum atripuimus, ac per totam hyemem venimus, iacentes in desertis sæpius in niue, nisi quantum poteramus nobis cum pede locum facere. Ibi quippe non erant arbores, sed planus campus. Et sæpe manē nos inueniebamus totos niue, quam ventus pellebat, coopertos. Sic venientes vsq; ad Ascensionem Domini peruenimus ad Bathy. A quo cum inquireremus, quid responderet Domino Papæ, dixit se nolle aliud, nisi quod Imperator diligenter scipsicerat, demandare. Datūq; nobis de conductu literis, ab eo recessimus, & sabba- tho infra octauas Pentecostes vsq; ad Montij peruenimus, vbi erant socij nostri, ac seruientes, qui fuerant retenti, quos ad nos fecimus reduci. Hinc vsq; Corrensam peruenimus, cui iterum à nobis donaria petenti non dedimus, quia non habebamus. Deditq; nobis duos Comanos, qui erant ex Tartarorum plebe, vsque ad Kiouiam Russiæ. Tartarus tamen noster non dimisit nos, donec exiremus vltimam Tartarorum custodiam. Isti verò alij, qui nobis à Corrensa dati sunt, in sex diebus ab vltima custodia vsq; ad Kiouiam nos duxerunt. Venimus autem illuc ante festum Beati Iohannis Baptistæ xv. diebus. Porro Kiouientes aduentum nostrum percipientes, occurrerunt nobis omnes lætauer. Congratulabantur enim nobis, tanquam à morte suscitatis. Sic fecerunt nobis per totam Russiam, Poloniam & Bohemiam, Daniel & Wasilico frater eius festum nobis magnum fecerunt, & nos contra voluntatem nostram bene per octo dies tenuerunt. Medioq; tempore inter se & cum Episcopis, cæterisq; probis viris, super his, quæ locuti fueramus eisdem, in processu nostro ad Tartaros consilium habentes, responderunt nobis communiter, dicentes: quod Dominum Papam habere vellent in specialem Dominum, & in patrem, sanctam quoq; Romanam Ecclesiam in dominam & magistrā, confirmantes etiam omnia, quæ prius de hac materia per Abbatem suum transmiserant. Et super hoc etiam nobiscum ad Dominum Papam nuncios suos & literas transmiserunt.

the Northeast parts of the world, in the yeere of our Lord, 1246.*

*Of the first sending of certaine Friers Predicants and Minorites vnto the Tartars, taken out of the 32. Booke of Vincentius Beluacensis

ABout this time also, Pope Innocentius the fourth sent ffrrier Ascelline being one of the order of the Prædicants, together with three other ffrriers (of the same authoritie whereunto they were called) consojted with him out of diuers Couens of their order, with letters Apostolicall vnto the Tartars campe: wherein hee exhorted them to giue ouer their bloudie slaughter of mankind; and to receiue the Christian faith. And I, in verie deede, receiued the relations concerning the deedes of the Tartars onelic, (which, according to the congruence of times, I haue aboue inserted into this my woork) from a ffrrier Minorite, called Simon de Sanct. Quintin, who lately returned from the same voyage. And at that verie time also, there was a certaine other ffrrier Minorite, namely ffrrier Iohn de Plano Carpini, sent with certaine associates vnto the Tartars, who likewise (as himselfe witnesseth) aboue and conuersed with them a yeere and three moneths at the least. For both he & one ffrrier Benedicta Polonian bring of the same order, and a partaker of all his miserie and tribulation, receiued straighe commaundement from the Pope, that both of them shoulde diligently searche out all things that concerned the state of the Tartars. And therefore this ffrrier Iohn hath writen a litle Historie (which is come to our hands) of such things, as with his owne eyes hee sawe among among the Tartars, of which he heard from diuers Christians worthy of credit, remaining there in captiuitie. Out of which historie I thought good by way of conclusion, to insert somewhat for the supply of those things which are wanting in the said Frier Simon.

Of the situation and qualitie of the Tartars land, By Iohannes de Plano Carpini. Chap. 3.

A description of Tartaria.

The North
Ocean.

Syra Orda.

The intempe-rature of the aire.

What Orda sig-nifieth.

There is towards the East a land which is called Mongal or Tartaria, lying in that part of the world which is thought to be most North Easterly. On the East part it hath the countrey of Kyrhay and of the people called Solangi: on the South part the countrey of the Saracens: on the South east the land of the Huini: and on the West the prouince of Naimani: but on the North side it is intrenched with the Ocean Sea. In some part thereof it is full of mountaines, and in other places plaine and smooth ground, but euerie where sandie and barren, neither is the hundredth part thereof fruitefull. For it cannot beare fruite vnlesse it be moistened with riuer waters, which bee verie rare in that countrey. Wherevpon they haue neither villages, nor cities among them, except one which is called Cracurim, and is said to be a proper towne. We our selues sawe not this towne, but were almost within halfe a dayes iourney thereof, when we remained at Syra Orda, which is the great court of their Emperour. And albeit the foresaid lande is otherwise vnfruitefull, yet is it very commodious for the byinging by of cattell. In certaine places thereof are some small stoe of trees growing, but otherwise it is altogether destitute of woods. Therefore the Emperour, and his noble men and all other warme themselves, and dresse their meate with fires made of the boung of open, and hoxles. The ayre also in that countrey is verie intemperate. For in the midst of Sommer there be great thunders and lighenings, by the which many men are slaine, and at the same time there falleth great abundance of snowe. There bee also such mightie tempestes of colde winde, that sometimes men are not able to sitte on horsebacke. Wherevpon, being neere vnto the Orda (for by this name they call the habitations of their Emperours and noble men) in regarde of the great winde we were constrained to lye crouching on the earth, and could not see by reason of the dust. There is neuer any raine in Winter, but onely in Sommer, albeit in so little quantitie, that sometimes it scarcely sufficeth to alay the dust, or to moisten the rootes of the grasse. There is often times great stoe of haile also. Inso much that when the Emperour elect was to be placed in his Imperiall thron (my selfe being then present) there fell such abundance of haile, that, vpon the sudden melting thereof, more then 160. persons were drowned in the same place: there were manie tentes and other thinges also caried away. Likewise, in the Sommer season there is on the sudden extream heate, and suddenly againe intollerable colde.

Of their forme, habite, and maner of liuing. Chap. 4.

The shape of the Tartars.

Their habite.

Like vnto
Froishers men.

Their tabernacles.

Their cattell.

Their victuals.

The Mongals or Tartars, in outward shape, are vnlike to all other people. For they are broader betwene the eyes, and the ballies of their cheekes, then men of other nations bee. They haue flat and small noses, litle eyes, and eye liddes standing straight vpright, they are thanner on the crownes like priests. They weare their haire somewhat longer about their eares, then vpon their foreheads: but behinde they let it growe long like womans haire, whereof they braise two lockes binding eche of them behinde either eare. They haue short feet also. The garments, as well of their men, as of their women are all of one fashion. They vse neither cloakes, hattes, nor cappes. But they weare Jarkets framed after a strange manner, of buckram, skarlet, or Baldakines. Their Honbes or gownes are happie on the outside, and open behinde, with taitles hanging downe to their hammes. They vse not to washe their garments, neither will in any wise suffer them to bee washed, especially in the time of thunder. Their habitations bee rounde and cunningly made with wickers and stauies in manner of a tent. But in the midst of the toppes thereof, they haue a window open to conuey the light in and the smoake out. For their fire is alwayes in the midst. Their walles bee couered with felt. Their dooyes are made of felte also. Some of these Tabernacles may quickly be taken asunder, and set together againe, and are caried vpon beastes backs. Other some cannot be taken in sunder; but are stowed vpon carts. And whithersoener they goe, be it either to warre, or to any other place, they transport their tabernacles with them. They are very rich in cattell, as in camels, oren, sheep, and goats. And I thinke they haue more hoxles and mares then all the world besides. But they haue no kine or other beastes. Their Emperours, Dukes, & other of their nobles doe abound with silk, gold, silver, and precious stones. Their victuals are all things that may be eaten: for we saw some of them eat lice.

They drinke milke in great quantitie, but especially mares milke, if they haue it: They seeth Mill also in water, making it so thinne, that they may drinke thereof. Euery one of them drinks off a cup full or two in a morning, and sometime they eate nought else all the day long. But in the euening each man hath a little flesh giuen him to eate, and they drinke the broath thereof. Howbeit in summer time, when they haue mares milke enough, they seldeome eate flesh, vnles perhaps it be giuen them, or they take some beast or bird in hunting.

Of their manners both good and bad. Chap. 5.

Their manners are partly praise-worthie, and partly detestable: For they are more obedient vnto their lordes and masters, then any other either clergie or laie-people in the whole world. For they doe highly reuerence them, and will beeuie them, neither in wordes nor deedes. They seldeome or neuer fall out among themselves, and, as for fightings or bawlings, wounds or manslaughteres, they neuer happen among them. There are neither theues nor robbers of great riches to be found, and therefore the tabernacles and cartes of them that haue any treasures are not strengthened with lockes or barres. If any beast goe astray, the finder thereof either lets it goe, or driueth it to them that are put in office for the same purpose, at whose handes the owner of the said beast demaundeth it, and without any difficultie receiue it againe. One of them honourerth another exceedingly, and bestoweth banquetes very familiarly and liberally, notwithstanding that good victuals are daintie and scarce among them. They are also very hardie, and when they haue fasted a day or two without any maner of sustenance, they sing and are merrie as if they had eaten their bellies full. In riding, they endure much cold and extreme heat. There be, in a maner, no contentions among them, and although they vse commonly to be drunken, yet doe they not quarrell in their drunkennes. Noe one of them despiseth another but helpeth and furthereth him, as much as conveniently he can. Their women are chaste, neither is there so much as a word uttered concerning their dishonestie. Some of them will notwithstanding speake filthy and immodest wordes. But towards other people, the said Tartars be most insolent, and they scoyne and set nought by all other noble and ignoble persons whatsoeuer. For we saw in the Emperours court the great duke of Russia, the kings Sonne of Georgia, and many great Soldanes receiuing no due honour and estimation among them. So that euen the very Tartars assigned to giue attendance vnto them, were they neuer so base, would alwaies goe before them, and take the vpper hand of them, yea, and sometimes would constrain them to sit behinde their backs. Howsoeuer they are angrie and of a disdainfull nature vnto other people, and beyond all measure deceitfull, and treacherous towards them. They speake fayre in the beginning, but in conclusion, they sting like scorpions. For craftie they are, and full of falshood, circumuenticing all men whom they are able, by their sleights. Whatsoeuer mischief they intend to practise against a man, they keepe it wonderfully secret, so that he may by no meanes prouide for himselfe, nor find a remedie against their conspiracies. They are vmanerly also and vncleanly in taking their meat and their drinke, and in other actions. Drunkennes is honourable among them, and when any of them hath taken more drinke then his stomacke can well beare, hee casteth it vp and faller to drinke againe. They are most intollerable exacters, most covetous possessours, and most nigardly giuers. The slaughter of other people is accompted a matter of nothing with them.

Their abstinence.

Their courtesie.

Their chastity.

Their insolencie against strangers.

Of their lawes and customes. Chap. 6.

Moreouer, they haue this law or custome, that whatsoeuer man or woman be manifestly taken in adulterie, they are punished with death. A virgine like wise that hath committed fornication, they slay together with her mare. Whosoever be taken in robbrie or theft, is put to death without all pittie. Also, if any man disclose their secrets, especially in time of warre, he receiue an hundred blowes on the backe with a bastinado, layd on by a tall fellow. In like sort when any inferiours offend in ought, they finde no fauour at their superiours handes, but are punished with grieuous stripes. They are toynd in matrimony to all in generall, yea, euen to their neare kinsfolkes except their mother, daughter and sister by the mothers side. For they vse to marrie their sister by the fathers side onely, and also the wife of their father after his decease. The yonger brother also, or some other of his kindred, is bound to marry the wife of his elder brother deceased. For, at the time of our aboad in the countrey, a certaine duke of Russia named Andreas, was accused before duke Bary for conueying the Tartars horses out of the land, and for selling them to others: and although it could not be proued, yet was he put to death. His yonger brother and the wife of the party deceased hearing this, came & made their supplication vnto the forenamed duke, that that the dukedome of Russia might not be taken from them. But he commanded the youth to marrie his deceased brothers wife, and the woman also to take him vnto her husband, according to the custome of the Tartars. She answered, that she had rather die, then so hapnously transgresse the law. Wherein, hee deliuered her vnto him, although they both refused as much as they could. Wherefore carrying them to bed, they constrained the youth, lamenting and weeping, to lie downe and commit incest with his brothers wife. To be shor't, after the death of their husbands, the Tartars wiues be very seldome to marrie the second time, vntil'se perhaps some man takes his brothers wife or his stepmother in marriage. They make no difference betweene the sonne of their wife and of their concubine, but the father giues what he pleaseth vnto each one: For of late the king of Georgia hauing two sonnes, one lawfully begotten called Melich; but the other David, bozne in adulterie, at his death left part of his lande vnto his base sonne. Whereupon Melich (vnto whome the kingdome fell by right of his mother, because it was gouerned before time by women) went vnto the Emperour of the Tartars, David also hauing taken his iourney vnto him. Nowe both of them comming to the court and proffering large giftes, the sonne of the harlot made suite, that he might haue iustice, according to the custome of the Tartars. Well, sentence passed against Melich, that David being his elder brother, should haue superiouritie ouer him, and should quietly and peaceably possesse the portion of land granted vnto him by his father. Whensoever a Tartar hath many wiues, each one of them hath her family and dwelling place by her selfe. And sometime the Tartar eateth, drinketh and lieth with one, and sometime with another. One is accompted chiefe among the rest, with whom hee is oftener conuersant, then with the other. And notwithstanding (as is hath bin said) they are many, yet do they seldome fall out among themselves.

Ridiculous traditions.

But by reason of certain traditions, which either they or their predecessors haue deuised, they account some things indifferent to be faults. One is to thrust a knife into the fire, or any way to touch the fire with a knife, or with their knife to take flesh out of the cauldron, or to heve with an hatchet neare vnto the fire. For they think by that means to take away the head or force from the fire. Another is to leane vpon the whip, where with they beate their horses: for they ride not with spurs. Also, to touch arrowes with a whip, to take or kill yong birds, to strike an horse with y^e raine of their hidle, and to breake one bone against another. Also, to powze out milke, meate, or any kinde of drinke vpon the ground, or to make water within their tabernacle: which whosoever doth willingly, he is slaine, but other wise he must pay a great summe of money to the inchanter to be purified. Who likewise must cause the tabernacle with all things therein, to passe betweene two fires. Before it be on this wise purified, no man dare once enter into it, nor conueigh any thing therout. Besides, if any man hath a moyzell giuen him, which he is not able to swallow, and for that cause casteth it out of his mouth, there is an hole made vnder his tabernacle, by which hee is drawn forth and slaine without all compassion. Likewise, whosoever treads vpon the threshold of any of their dukes tabernacles, he is put to death. Many other things there be, like vnto these, which they take for heinous offences. But to slay men, to invade the dominions of other people, and to rife their goods, to transgresse the commaundements and prohibitions of God, are with them no offences at all. They know nothing concerning eternall life, and euerlasting damnation, and yet they thinke, that after death they shall liue in another world, that they shall multiply their cattell, that they shall eat and drinke and doe other things which liuing men perfoyme here vpon earth. At a new moone, or a full moone, they begin all enterprises that they take in hand, and they call the moone the Great Emperour, and worship it vpon their knees. All men that abide in their tabernacles must be purified with fire: Which purification is on this wise, They kindle two fires, and plecth two flauelines into the ground neere vnto the said fires, binding a corde to the tops of the flauelines. And about the corde they tye certaine tagges of buckram, vnder which corde, and betweene which fires, men, beastes, and tabernacles do passe. There stand two women also, one on the right side, and another on the left casting water, and repeating certaine charmes. If any man be slaine by lightning, all that dwell in the same tabernacle with him must passe by fire in maner aforesaid. For their tabernacles, beds, and cartes, their feltes and garments, and whatsoeuer such things they haue, are touched by no man, yea, and are abandoned by all men as things vncleane. And to bee shor't, they thinke that all things are to be purged by fire. Therefore, when any ambassadours, princes, or other personages whosoever come vnto them, they and their giftes must passe betweene two fires to be purified, lest peraduenture they haue practised some witchcraft, or haue brought some popson or other mischief with them.

Of the beginning of their empire or government. Chap. 7.

THe East countrey, whereof wee haue entreated, which is called Mongal, is reported to haue had of olde time foure sortes of people. One of their companions was called Yeka Mongal, that is the great Mongals. The second company was called Sumongal, that is, the Water-Mongals, who called themselves Tartars of a certaine riuer running through their countrey named Tartar. The third was called Merkat, and the fourth Metrit. All these people had one and the same person, attire of body and language, albeit they were diuided by princes and prouinces. In the prouince of Yeka Mongal, there was a certaine man called Chingis. This man became a mighty hunter. For he learned to steale men, & to take them for a pray. He ranged into other countries taking as many captiues as he could, and ioining them vnto himselfe. Also hee allured the men of his owne countrey vnto him, who followed him as their captaine and ringleader to doe mischief. Then began he to make warre vpon the Sumongals or Tartars, and slewe their captaine, and after many conflicts, suboued them vnto himselfe, and brought them all into bondage. Afterward he vsed their helpe to fight against the Merkars, dwelling by the Tartars, whom also hee vanquished in battell. Proceeding from thence, he fought against the Metrites, and conquered them also. The Naimani hearing that Chingis was thus exalted, greatly disdeined thereat. For they had a mighty & puissant Emperour, vnto whom all the foresaid nations payed tribute. Whose sonnes, when he was dead, succeeded him in his Empire. Howbeit, being young and foolish, they knew not howe to gouerne the people, but were diuided, and fell at variance among themselves. Now Chingis being exalted, as is aforesaid, they neuerthelesse inuaded the forenamed countries, put the inhabitants to the sword, and carried away their goods for a pray. Which Chingis hauing intelligence of, gathered all his subiects together. The Naimani also, and the people called Karakitay assembled and banded themselves at a certaine straight valley, where, after a battell foughten they were vanquished by the Mongals. And being thus vanquished, they were, the greater part of them, slaine; and others, which could not escape, were carried into captiuitie. In the land of the foresaid Karakitayans, Occoday Cham, the sonne of Chingis Cham, after he was created Emperour, built a certaine citie, which he called Chanyl. Neare vnto which citie, on the South side, there is an huge desert, wherein wilde men are certainly reported to inhabite, which cannot speake at all, and are destitute of ioynts in their legges, so that if they fall, they cannot rise alone by themselves. Howbeit, they are of discretion to make feltes of Camels haire, wherewith they clothe themselves, and which they holde against the winde. And if at any time, the Tartars pursuing them, chance to wound them with their arrowes, they put herbes into their wounds, and flye strongly before them.

Of the mutuall victories betweene them, and the people of Kythay. Chap. 9.

At the Mongals returning home into their owne countrey, prepared themselves to battell against the * Kythayans: Which their Emperour hearing, set forward against them with his armie, and they fought a cruell battell, wherein the Mongals were overcome, and all their nobles in the armie, except seuen, were slaine. And for this cause, when they, purposing to inuade anie region, are threatned by the inhabitants thereof to be slaine, they doe, to this day, answer: in old time also our whole number besides being slaine, we remayned but seuen of vs aliuie, and yet notwithstanding we are now growen vnto a great multitude, thinke not therefore to daunt vs with such brags. But Chingis and the residue that remained aliuie, fled home into their countrey: And hauing breathed him a litle, he prepared himselfe to warre, and went forth against the people called Huyri: These men were Christians of the sect of Nestorius. And these also the Mongals overcame, and receiued letters of learning from them: for before that time they had not the arte of writing, and nowe they call it the hand or letters of the Mongals. Immediately after, he marched against the countrey of Saruyur, and of the Karanites, and against the land of Hudirat; all which he vanquished. Then returned he home into his owne countrey, and breathed himselfe. Afterward, assembling his warlike troupes, they marched with one accord against the Kythayans, and waging warre with them a long time, they conquered a great part of their land, and shut vp their Emperour into his greatest citie: which citie they had so long time besieged, that they began to want necessary prouision for their armie. And when they had no victuals to feede vpon, Chingis Cham commaunded his souldiers, that they should eate every tenth man of the companie.

But they of the cite fought manfully against them, with engines, darters, and arrowes, and when stones wanted they threw silver, and especially melted silver: for the same cite abounded with great riches. Also, when the Mongals had fought a long time and could not prevaile by warre, they made a great trench underneath the ground from the armie unto the middelt of the cite, and there issuing forth they fought against the citizens, and the remnant also without the walles fought in like manner. At last, breaking open the gates of the cite, they entered, and putting the Emperour, with many other to the sword, they tooke possession thereof and conueighed away the golde, silver, and all the riches therein. And hauing appointed certaine deputies ouer the countrey, they returned home into their owne lande. This is the first time, when the Emperour of the Kythayans being vanquished, Chingis Cham obtayned the Empire. But some parte of the countrey, because it lyeth within the sea, they could by no meanes conuere unto this day. The men of Kytay are Pagans, hauing a speciall kinde of writing by themselves, and (as it is reported) the Scriptures of the olde and newe Testament. They haue also receiued in hystories the liues of their forefathers: and they haue Eremites, and certaine houses made after the manner of our Churches, which in those dayes they greatly respected vnto. They say that they haue diuers Saints also, and they worship one God. They adore and reuerence CHRIST IESVS our Lord, and beleeue the article of eternall life, but are not baptized. They doe also honourably esteeme and reuerence our Scriptures. They loue Christians, and bestowe much almes, and are a very courteous and gentle people. They haue no beardes, and they agree partly with the Mongals in the disposition of their countenance. In all occupations which men practise, there are not better artificers in the whole worlde. Their countrey is exceeding rich, in corne, wine, golde, silke, and other commodities.

The stratagem of the king of India.

And when the Mongals with their emperour Chingis Cham had a while rested themselves after the foresayd victorie, they diuided their armies. For the Emperour sent one of his sonnes named Tosut (whom also they called Can, that is to say, Emperour) with an armie against the people of Comania, whom he vanquished with much warre, and afterwards returned into his owne country. But he sent his other sonne with an armie against the Indians, who also subdued India minor. These Indians are the blacke Saracens, which are also called Ethiopians. But here the armie marched forward to fight against Christians dwelling in India maior. Which the King of that countrey hearing (who is commonly called Presbiter Iohn) gathered his souldiers together, and came forth against them. And making mens images of copper, he set each of them vpon a saddle on horsebacke, and put fire within them, and placed a man with a paire of bellows on the horse backe behinde euery image. And so with many horses and images in such sorte furnished, they marched on to fight against the Mongals or Tartars. And coming neare vnto the place of the battell, they first of all sent those horses in order one after another. But the men that sat behind laide I wrote not what vpon the fire within the images, and blew strongly with their bellows. Whereupon it came to passe, that the men and the horses were burnt with wilde fire, and the ayre was darkened with smoake. Then the Indians cast darters vpon the Tartars, of whom many were wounded and slain. And so they expelled them out of their dominions with great confusion, neither did we heare, that euer they returned thither againe.

But returning through the deserts, they came into a certaine countrey, wherein (as it was reported vnto vs in the Emperours court, by certaine clergie men of Russia, and others, who were long time among them, and that by strong and steadfast affirmation) they found certaine monsters resembling women: who being asked by many interpreters, where the men of that land were, they answered, that whatsoeuer women were borne there, were indued with the shape of mankind, but the males were like vnto dogges. And delaying the time, in that countrey they met with the said dogges on the other side of the riuer. And in the midst of sharpe winter, they cast themselves into the water: Afterward they wallowed in the dust vpon the maine land, and so the dust being mingled with water, was frozen to their backs, and hauing often times so done, the ice being strongly frozen vpon them, with great fury they came to fight against the Tartars. And when the Tartars threw their darters, or shot their arrowes among them, they rebounded backe againe, as if they had lighted vpon stones. And the rest of their weapons coulde by no meanes hurt them. Howbeit, the Dogges made an assault vpon the Tartars, and wounding some of them with their teeth, and slaying others, at length they dzaue them out of their countreies. And thereupon they haue a Proverbe of the same matter, as yet rise among them, which they speake in telling softe one to another; My father or my brother was slaine of Dogges. The women which they tooke, they brought into their owne countrey, who remayned there till their dying day. And in trauciling homewardes, the sayd armie of the Mongals came vnto the lande of Burihabeth (the inhabitants whereof are Pagans) and conquered the people in battell. These people haue a strange or rather a miserable kinde of custome. For when anie mans father deceaseth, he assemblith all his kindred, and they eate him. These men haue no beards at all, for we saw them carie a certaine iron instrument in their hands, wherewith, if any haire growe vpon their chinne, they presently plucke them out. They are also very deformed. From thence the Tartars armie returned to their owne home.

How they had the repulse at the Caspian mountaynes, and were driuen backe by men dwelling in caues, Chap. 12.

Moreouer Chingis Cham, at the same time when he sent other armie against the East, hee himselfe marched with a power into the lande of Kergis, which notwithstanding, he conquered not in that expedition, and as it was reported vnto vs, he went on forward euen to the Caspian mountaines. But the mountaines on that part where they encamped themselves, were of adamant, and therefore they drew vnto them their arrowes, and weapons of iron. And certaine men contained within those Caspian mountaynes, hearing, as it was thought, the noyse of the armie, made a breach through, so that when the Tartars returned vnto the same place tenne yeeres after, they found the mountaine broken. And attempting to goe vnto them, they could not: for there stood a cloud before them, beyond which they were not able to passe, being deppriued of their sight so soone as they approached thereunto. But they on the contrary side thinking that the Tartars durst not come nigh them, gaue the assault, & when they came at the cloud, they could not proceed for the cause aforesaid. Also the Tartars, before they came vnto the said mountaines, passed for the space of a moneth and more, through a vast wilderness, & departing thence towards the East, they were aboue a moneth trauciling through another huge desert. At length, they came vnto a land wherein they saw beaten waies, but could not find any people. Howbeit, at the last, diligently seeking, they found a man & his wife, whom they presented before Chingis Cham: and demanding of them where the people of that countrey were, they answered, that the people inhabited vnder the ground in mountains. Then Chingis Cham keeping still the woman, sent her husband vnto the, giuing the charge to come at his command. And going vnto them, he declared all things that Chingis Cham had commanded them. But they answered, that they would vpon such a day visite him, to satisfie his desire. And in the meane season, by blinde & hidden passages vnder the earth, assembling themselves, they came against the Tartars in warlike manner, and suddenly issuing forth, they slew a great number of them. This people were not able to endure the terrible noyse, which in that place the Sunne made at his vpising: for at the time of the Sunne rising, they were enforced to lay one eare vpon the ground, and to stoppe the other close, least they should heare that dreadfull sound. Neither could they so escape, for by this meanes many of them were destroyed. Chingis Cham therefore and his company, seeing that they prevailed not, but continually lost some of their number, fled and departed out of that land. But the man and his wife aforesaid they caried along with them, who all their life time continued in the Tartars countrey. Being demanded why the men of this countrey doe inhabit vnder the ground, they sayd, that at a certeine time of the yeare, when the sunne riseth, there is such an huge noyse, that the people cannot endure it. Moreouer, they use to play vpon cymbals, drums, and other muscicall instruments, to the ende they may not heare that sounde.

But as Chingis Cham returned out of that countrey, his people wanted victuals, & suffered extreme famine. Then by chance they found fresh intrails of a beast: which they tooke, & casting away the dung therof, caused it to be sodden, brought it before Chingis Cham, & did eat therof. Wherefoze he returned thence into his owne land, and there he ordayned lawes and statutes, which the Tartars doe most strictly and inuolably obserue, of the which we haue befoze spoken. He was afterward slaine by a thunderclap. He had foure sonnes: the first was called Occoday, the second Thossur Can, the thirde Thiaday: the name of the fourth is vnknownen. From these foure descended all the dukes of the Mongals. The first sonne of Occoday is Cuync, who is now Emperour: his bzothers be Cocten and Chyrinen. The sonnes of Thossur Can are Bathy, Ordu, Siba, and Bora. Bathy, next vnto the Emperour, is richer and mightier then all the rest. But Ordu is the seignior of all the dukes. The sonnes of Thiaday be Hurin and Cadan. The sonnes of Chingis Cham his other sonne, whose name is vnknownen, are Mengu, Bithar, and certaine others. The mother of Mengu was named Seroctan, and of all others most honoured among the Tartars, except the Emperours mother, and mightier then any subiect except Bathy. These be the names of the dukes: Ordu, who was in Poland and in Hungarie: Bathy also & Hurin & Cadan, and Siban, and Ouygar, all which were in Hungarie. In like maner Cyropdan, who is as yet beyond the sea, making war against certaine Soldans of the Saracens, and other inhabitants of farre countries. Others remained in the land, as namely Mengu, Chyrinen, Hubilai, Sinocur, Cara, Gay, Sybedey, Bora, Berca, Corrensa. There be many other of their dukes, whose names are vnknownen vnto vs.

Moreouer, the Emperour of the Tartars hath a wonderfull dominion ouer all his subiects. For no man dare abide in any place, vnles he hath assigned him to be there. Also he himselfe appointeth to his dukes where they should inhabit. Likewise the dukes assigne places vnto euery Militarie, or conductor of a thousand souldiers, the Militanes vnto each captaine of an 100. the captaines vnto euery corporall of ten. Whatsoeuer is giuen them in charge, whensoever, or wheresoever, be it to fight or to lose their liues, or howsoever it be, they obey without any gainsaying. For if he demandeth any mans daughter, or sister being a virgine, they presently deliuer her vnto him without all contradiction: yea, often times he makes a collection of virgines throughout all the Tartars dominions, and those whom he meanes to keepe, he retaineth vnto himselfe, others he bestoweth vpon his men. Also, whatsoeuer messenger he sendeth, or whithersoever, his subiects must without delay finde them horses and other necessities. In like sort, from what countrey soeuer tribute papers, or ambassadours come vnto him, they must haue horses, carriages, and expences allowed them. Notwithstanding ambassadours comming from other places do suffer great misery, and are in much wante both of victuals, and of apparel: especially when they come to any of the dukes, and there they are constrained to make some lingering abode. Then ten men are allowed so little sustenance, that scarcely two could liue thereof. Likewise, if any iniuries be offered them, they cannot without danger make complaint. Many gifts also are demanded of them, both by dukes and others, which if they doe not bestow, they are basely esteemed, and set at nought. And hereupon, wee were of necessity enforced to bestowe in giftes a great part of those things which were giuen vs by well disposed people, to defray our charges. To be short, all things are so in the power and possession of the Emperour, that no man dare say, This is mine, or, this is my neighbours; but all, both goods, cattell and men are his owne. Concerning this matter also he published a statute of late. The very same authority and iurisdiction, doe the dukes in like sort exercise vpon their subiects.

Barchin.

After the death of Chingis Cham aforesaid, the dukes assembled themselves and chose Occoday his sonne to be their Emperour. And he, entering into consultation with his nobles, diuided his armies, and sent duke Bathy his nephew against the countrie of Alcisoldan, and against the people called Bisermini, who were Saracens, but spake the language of Comania. The Tartars inuading their countrey, fought with them and subdued them in battell. But a certeine citie called Barchin resisted them a long time. For the citizens had cast by many ditches and trenches about their citie, in regard whereof the Tartars could not take it, till they had filled the said ditches. But the citizens of Sarguit hearing this, came forth to meete them, peeling themselves vnto them of their owne accord. Whereupon their citie was not destroyed, but they slue manie of them and others they carried away captiue, and taking spoiles, they filled the the citie with other inhabitants, and so marched forth against the citie of Orna. This towne was very populous and exceeding rich. For there were many Christians therein, as namely Casarians, Russians, and Alanians, with others, and Saracens also. The government of the citie was in the Saracens hande. It standeth upon a mighty river, and is a kinde of poore towne, having a great marie exercised therein. And when the Tartars could not otherwise overcome it, they turned the said river, running through the citie, out of his channell, and so drowned the citie with the inhabitants and their goods. Which being done, they set forward against Russia, and made foule hauocke there, destroying cities and castles and murdering the people. They layd siege a long while unto Kiow the chiefe citie of Russia, and at length they tooke it and slue the citizens. Whereupon, traueilling through that countrey, wee found an innumerable multitude of dead mens skulles and bones lying upon the earth. For it was a very large and a populous citie, but it is now in a maner brought to nothing: for there doe scarce remaine 200. houses, the inhabitants whereof are kept in extreame bondage. Howsoever, out of Russia and Comania, they proceeded forward against the Hungarians, and the Polonians, and there manie of them were slaine, as is aforesaid: and had the Hungarians manfully withstood them, the Tartars had bene confounded and dyinen backe. Returning from thence, they invaded the countrey of the Mordvans being pagans, and conquered them in battell. Then they marched against the people called Byleri, or Bulgaria magna, & utterly wasted the countrey. From hence they proceeded towards the North against the people called Baltarci or Hungaria magna, and conquered them also. And so going on further North, they came unto the Parossix, who having little stomachs and small mouthes, eat not any thing at all, but seething flesh they stand or sitte over the pottle, and receiving the steame or smoke thereof, are therewith onely nourished, and if they eat any thing it is very little. From hence they came to the Samogets, who live onely upon hunting, and vse to dwell in tabernacles onely, and to weare garments made of beastes skinnes. From thence they proceeded unto a countrey lying upon the Ocean sea, where they found certaine monsters, who in all things resembled the shape of men, saving that their feete were like the feete of an ore, and they had in deede mens heads but dogges faces. They spake, as it were, two words like men, but at the third they barked like dogges. From hence they retired into Comania, and there some of them remaine unto this day.

Of the expedition of duke Cyrpodan. Chap. 16.

At the same time Occoday Can sent duke Cyrpodan with an armie against Kergis, who also subdued them in battell. These men are Pagans, having no beardes at all. They have a custome when any of their fathers die, for griefe and in token of lamentation to drawe as it were, a leather thong overthwart their faces, from one eare to the other. This nation being conquered, duke Cyrpodan marched with his forces Southward against the Armenians. And traueilling through certain desert places, they found monsters in the shape of men, which had each of them but one arme & one hand growing out of the midst of their breast, and but one foote. Two of them vied to shoore in one bowe, and they ran so swiftly, that horses could not overtake them. They ran also upon that one foote by hopping and leaping, and being weary of such walking, they went upon their hand and their foote, turning themselves round, as it were in a circle. And being wearie of so doing, they ran againe according to their wonted manner. Isidore calleth them Cyclopedes. And as it was told us in court, by the clergie men of Russia, who remaine with the foresayd Emperour, many ambassadours were sent from them unto the Emperours court, to obtaine peace. From thence they proceeded forth into Armenia, which they conquered in battell, and part also of Georgia. And the other part is under their iurisdiction, paying as yet euery yeare unto them for tribute, 20000. pieces of coyne called Yperpera. From thence they marched into the dominions of the puissant and mighty Soldan called Deurum, whom also they vanquished in fight. And to be short, they went on farther sacking and conquering, even unto the Soldan of Aleppo his dominions, and now they haue subdued that land also, determining to invade other countries beyond it: neither returned they afterward into their owne land unto this day. Likewise the same armie marched forward against the Caliph of Baldach his countrey, which they subdued also, & exacted at his handes the daylie tribute of 400. Byzantines, besides Baldakines and other gifts. Also euery yeare they send messengers unto the Caliph mouing him to come unto them. Who sending back great gifts together with his tribute beseecheth the to be fauourable unto him. CHingis Cham diuided his Tartars by capitaines of ten, capitaines of an 100. and capitaines of a 1000. And ouer ten Millenaries of capitaines of a 1000, he placed, as it were, one Colonel, and yet notwithstanding ouer one whole armie he authozised two or three dukes, but yet so that all should haue especiall regard vnto one of the said dukes. And when they ioine battel against any other nation, vnles they do all with one consent giue backe, enery man that flies is put to death. And if one or two, or moze of ten proceed manfully to the battel, but the residue of those ten draw backe & follow not the company, they are in like maner slaine. Also, if one among ten or moze bee taken, their fellowes, if they rescue the not, are punished with death. Whoeuer they are enioined to haue these weapons following. Two long bowes or one good one at the least, three quiners full of arrows, & one are, and ropes to draw engines withal. But the richer sort haue single edged swords, with sharpe pointes, and somewhat crooked. They haue also armed hozes with their shoulbers and breasts defenced, they haue helmets and brigandines. Some of them haue iacks, and caparisons for their hozes made of leather artificially doubled or trebled vpon their bodies. The vpper part of their helmet is of iron or Steele, but that part which compasseth about the necke and the throte is of leather. Howbeit some of them haue all their foresaide furniture of iron framed in maner following. They beate out many thinne plates a finger broad, and a handfull long, and making in enery one of them eight litle holes, they put therunto three strong and streight leather thongs. So they ioine the plates one to another, as it were, ascending by degrees. Then they tie the plates vnto the said thongs, with other small and slender thongs, drawn through the holes aforesayd, and in the vpper part, on each side therof, they fasten one small doubled chong vnto another, that the plates may firmly be knit together. These they make, as well for their hozes caparisons, as for the armour of their men: And they skowze them so bright that a man may behold his face in them. Some of them vpon the necke of their launce haue an hooke, wherewithall they attempt to pull men out of their saddles. The heads of their arrowes are exceedingly sharpe cutting both wayes like a two edged sworde, and they alwaies carie a file in their quiners to whet their arrowheads. They haue targets made of wickers, or of small rodods. Howbeit they doe not (as we suppose) accustom to carrie them, but onely about the tents, or in the Emperours or dukes guardes, & that only in the night season. They are most politique in warres, hauing bene exercised therein with other nations for the space of these 42. yeres. When they come at any riuer, the chiefe men of the company haue a round and light piece of leather, about the borders wherof making many loopes, they put a rope into them to drawe it together like a purse, and so bring it into the round forme of a ball, which leather they fill with their garments and other necessaries, trussing it by most strongly. But vpon the midst of the vpper parte thereof, they lay their saddles and other hard things, there also doe the men themselves sit. This their boate they tye vnto an hourse caple, causing a man to swimme before, & to guide ouer the hourse, or sometime they haue two oares to row themselves ouer. The first hourse therfore being dizen into the water, all the other hozes of the company followe him, and so they passe through the riuer. But the poozer sort of common souldiers haue euery man his leather bag or sackell well sown together, wherin he packs vp all his trinkets, and strongly trussing it vp hangs it at his hozes caple, and so passeth ouer, in maner aforesaid.

Tartars.

A notable temper of iron or Steel.

IDeeme not any one kingdome or prouince able to resist them: because they vse to take vp souldiers out of euery countrey of their dominions. And if so be the neighbour prouince which they inuade, wil not aide them, utterly wasting it, with the inhabitants therof, whom they take from thence with them, they proceed on to fight against another countrey. And placing their captiues in the forefront of the battell, if they fight not courageously, they put them to the sworde. Wherefore, if Christians would withstande them, it is expedient, that the prouinces and gouernours of countreies should agree in one, and so by common counsell, should giue them resistance. Their souldiers also must be furnished with strong hand-bowes & crof-bowes, which they greatly dread, & with sufficient arrowes, with maces also of good iron, or an are with a long handle or staffe. When they make their arrow heads, they must (according to the Tartars custome) dip the red-hot into water mingled with salte, that they may be strong to pierce the enemies armour. They that wil may haue swords also & lances with hooks at the ends, to pull the from their saddles, out of which they are easily remoued. They must haue helmets likewise & other armour to defend themselves & their hozes from the Tartars weapons & arrowes, & they that are vnarmed, must (according to the Tartars custome) march march behinde their fellowes, and discharge at the enemy with long bowes and crof-bowes. And (as it is aboue said of the Tartars) they must orderly dispose their bandes and troupes, and ordeine lawes for their souldiers. Whosoever runneth to the pray or spoyle, before the victorie be atchieued, must vndergoe a most seuerer punishment. For such a fellow is put to death among the Tartars without all pitie or mercie. The place of battell must be chosen, if it be possible, in a plaine fielde, where they may see round about, neither must all be in one company, but in manie and seuerall bandes, not very farre distant one from another. They which giue the first encounter must sende one hand before, and must haue another in a readynesse to relieue and second the former in time conuenient. They must haue spies also on euery side to giue them notice when the rest of the enemies bandes approach. For therefore ought they alwayes to send forth hand against hand & troupe against troupe, because the Tartar euery practiseth to gette his enemy in the midst and so to enuiron him. Let our bands take this caueat also, if the enemy retire, not to make any long pursuit after him, lest peraduenture (according to his custome) he might draw them into some secret ambush: for the Tartar fights moze by policie then by maine force. And againe, lest our hoxles bee tired: for we are not so well storied with hoxles as they. Those hoxles which the Tartars vse one day, they ride not vpon three or foure dayes after. Moreouer, if the Tartars draw homeward, our men must not therefore depart and casleir their bandes, or separate themselves asunder: because they doe this vpon policie, namely to haue our armie diuided, that they may moze securely invade and waste the countrey. And in very deepe, our capitaines ought both day and night to keepe their armie in a readines: and not to lie out of their armour, but at all assaies, to bee prouided for battell. For the Tartars like diuels are alwaies watching and deuising howe to practise mischief. Furthermoze, if in battell any of the Tartars be cast off their hoxle backes, they must presently bee layd holde on and taken, for being on foote they shoote strongly, wounding and killing both hoxles and men.

WE therefore by the commaundement of the sea apostolique setting forth towards the nations of the East, chose first to trauele vnto the Tartars, because we feared that there might be great danger imminent vpon the Church of God next vnto them, by their inuasions. Proceeding on therefore, we came to the King of Bohemia, who being of our familiar acquaintance, aduised vs to take our iourney through Polonia and Russia, for we had kinfolkes in Polonia, by whose assistance, we might enter into Russia. Having giuen vs his letters, he caused our charges also to be defrayed, in all his chiefe houses and cities, till we came vnto his nephew Boleslaus duke of Slesia, who also was familiar and well knowen vnto vs. The like fauour he shewed vs also, till wee came vnto Conradus duke of * Lantiscia, vnto whome then (by Gods especiall fauour towards vs) lord Wasilico duke of Russia was come, from whose mouth we heard moze at large concerning the deedes of the Tartars: for he had sent ambassadours thither, who were returned backe vnto him. Wherefore, it being giuen vs to vnderstand, that we must bestow giftes vpon them, we caused certaine skinned beuers and other beastes to be bought with part of that money, which was giuen vpon almes to succour vs by the way. Which thing duke Conradus and the * dukes of Cracow, and a bishop, and certaine souldiers being aduertised of, gaue vs likewise moze of the same skins. And to be shor, duke Wasilico being earnestly requested by the duke of Cracow, and by the bishop and barons, on our behalfe, conducted vs with him, vnto his owne land, and there for certaine daies, entertained vs at his owne charges, to the ende that we might refresh our selues a while. And when, being requested by vs, he had caused his bishops to resort vnto him, we reade before them the Popes letters, admonishing them to returne vnto the vnitie of the Church. To the same purpose also, we our selues admonished them, and to our abilitie, induced as well the duke as the bishops and others therunto. Howbeit because duke Daniel the brother of Wasilico asforesaid (having as then taken his iourney vnto Bary) was absent, they could not at that time, make a small answer. After these things duke Wasilico sent vs forward with one of his seruants as farre as Kiow the chiefe citie of Russia. Howbeit we went alwayes in danger of our liues by reason of the Lituanians, who did often inuade y^e borders of Russia, euen in those verie places by which we were to passe. But in regard of the foresayd seruant, wee were out of the Russians danger, the greatest part of whome were either slaine, or caried into captiuitie by the Tartars. Moreouer, at Danilon wee were feeble euen vnto the death. (Notwithstanding wee caused our selues to be carried in a waggon through the snowe and extreme colde) And being come vnto Kiow, wee consulted with the Pillenary, & other noble men there concerning our iourney. They told vs, that if wee carried those horses, which wee then had, vnto the Tartars, great store of snowe lying vpon the ground, they would all dye: be cause they knew not howe to digge vp the grasse vnder the snow, as the Tartarian horses doe, neither could there bee ought found for them to eat, the Tartars hauing neither hay nor strawe, nor any other fodder. We determined therefore to leaue them behind at Kiow with two seruants appointed to keepe them. And wee were constrained to bestow giftes vpon the Pillenary, that we might obtaine his fauour to allowe vs posse horses and a guide. Therefore beginning our iourney the second daye after the feast of the Purification, wee arriued at the towne of Canow, which was immediatly vnder the dominion of the Tartars. The gouernour whereof allowed vs horses and a guide vnto another towne, wherein wee found one Michasas to be gouernour, a man full of all malice and despiight. Who notwithstanding, hauing receiued giftes at our handes, according to his maner conducted vs to the first garde of the Tartars.

How he and his company were at the first receiued of the Tartars. Chap. 20.

Wherefore, the first saturday next after Ashwednesday, hauing about the Sunnes going downe, taken vp our place of rest, the armed Tartars came rushing vpon vs in vnciuil and horrible manner, being very inquisitive of vs what maner of persons, or of what condition we were: & when we had answered them that we were the Popes Legates, receiuing some victuals at our handes, they immediatly departed. Whereouer in the morning rising and proceeding on our iourney, the chiefe of them which were in the guard met with vs, demanding why, or for what intent and purpose we came thither: and what busines we had with them: Vnto whom we answered, We are the legates of our lord the Pope, who is the father & lord of the Christians. He hath sent vs as well vnto your Emperour, as to your princes, and aliother Tartars for this purpose, because it is his pleasure, that all Christians should be in league with the Tartars, and should haue peace with them. It is his desire also that they should become great or in fauour with God in heauen, therefore he admonisheth them alwel by vs, as by his own letters, to become Christians, and to embrace the faith of our Lord Iesu Christ, because they could not otherwile be saved. Whereouer, he giues the to vnderstand, that he much marueileth at their monstrous slaughters & massacres of mankind, & especially of Christians, but most of al of Hungariás, Mountaineirs, & Polonians, being at his subiects, hauing not iniured them in ought, nor attempted to doe them iniurie. And because the Lord God is grievously offended thereat, he aduiseeth them from henceforth to beware of such dealing, & to repent them of that which they had done. We requesteth also, that they would write an answer vnto him, what they purpose to doe hereafter, and what their intencion is. All which things being heard and vnderstood, the Tartars sayd that they would appoint vs posse horses and a guide vnto Corrensa. And immediatly demanding giftes at our handes, they obtained them. Then receiuing the same horses, from which they dismounted, together with a guide wee tooke our iourney vnto Corrensa. But they riding a swift pace, sent a messenger before vnto the sayd duke Corrensa, to signifie the message, which we had deliuered vnto them. This duke is gouernour of all them, which lie in guard against the nations of the West, least some enemy might on the sudden and at vnawares breake in vpon them. And hee is said to haue 60000. men vnder him.

BEing come thercof vnto his court, hee caused our tent to bee placed farre from him, and sent his agents to demand of vs with what we would incline vnto him, that is to say, what giftes we would offer, in doing our obeisance vnto him. Vnto whome wee answered, that our lord the Pope had not sent any giftes at all, because he was not certaine that wee should euer bee able to come at them: for we passed through most dangerous places. Notwithstanding, to our abilitie, we will honour him with some part of those things, which haue bene, by the goodnes of God, & the fauour of the Pope, bestowed vpon vs for our sustenance. Hauing receiued our giftes, they conducted vs vnto the Orda or tent of the duke, & we were instructed to bow thysle with our left knee before the doore of the tence, and in any case to beware, lest wee set our foote vpon the threshold of the sayd doore. And that after we were entred, wee should rehearse before the duke and all his nobles, the same wordes, which wee had before sayde, kneeling vpon our knees. Then presented wee the letters of our lord the Pope: but our interpreter whome we had hired and brought with vs from Kiow was not sufficiently able to interpret them, neither was there any other esteemed to bee meete for the same purpose. Here certaine posse horses and thre Tartars were appoynted for

vs to conduct vs from hence with al speed vnto duke Bathy. This Bathy is the mightiest prince among them except the Emperour, & they are bound to obey him before all other princes. We began our iourney towards his court the first tuesday in Lent, and riding as fast as our hoxles could trot (for we had fresh hoxles almost thise of foure times a day) we posted from morning till night, yea very often in the night season also, and yet could we not come at him before Maundie thursday. All this iourney we went through the land of Comania, which is al plaine ground, and hath foure mighty riuers running through it: The first is called † Neper, on the side whereof towards Russia, duke Corrensa & Montij marched by and downe, which Montij on the other side vpon the plaines is greater then he. The second is called † Don, vpon the banke whereof marcheth a certain prince hauing in marriage the sister of Bary, his name is Tirbon. The third is called † Volga, which is an exceeding great riuier, vpon the bankes whereof duke Bathy marcheth. The fourth is called † Iac, vpon which two Millenaries doe march, on each side of the riuier one. All these, in the winter time, descend down to the sea, & in summer ascend backe by the bankes of the said riuers by to the mountains. The sea last named is the Great sea, out of which the arme of S. George proceedeth, which runneth by Constantinople. These riuers do abound with plenty of fishes, but especially Volga, & they eronerate theselues into the Grecian sea, which is called Mare maior. Quer Neper we went many daies vpon the ice. Along the shore also of the Grecian sea we went very dangerously vpon the ice in sundry places, & that for many daies together. For about the shore the waters are frozen thre leagues into the sea. But before we came vnto Bathy, two of our Tartars rode afoze, to giue him intelligence of all the sayings which we had uttered in the presence of Corrensa.

How we were receiued at the court of the great prince Bathy. Chap. 22.

Moreouer, when we came vnto Bathy in the land of Comania, we were seated a good league distant from his tabernacles. And when we should be conducted vnto his court, it was tolde vs that we must passe between two fires. But we would by no means be inducd therewith. Polvbeit, they said vnto vs: you may passe though without al danger: for we would haue you to doe it for none other cause, but only that if you intend any mischief against our lord, or bying any popson with you, fire may take away all euill. Vnto whom we answered, that to the end we might clear ourselues from all suspicion of any such matter, we were contented to passe through. When therefore we were come vnto the Orda, being demanded by his agent Eldegay with what present or gift we would do our obeisance: Wee gaue the same answer which we did at the court of Corrensa. The gifes being giuen and receiued, the causes of our iourney also being heard, they brought vs into the tabernacle of the prince, first bowing our selues at the doore, & being admonished, as before, not to tread vpon the threshold. And being entred, we spake vnto him kneeling vpon our knees, & deliuered him our letters, and requested him to haue interpreters to translate them. Who accordingly on good friday were sent vnto vs, and we together with them, diligently translated our sayd letters into the Russian, Tartarian, and Saracen languages. This interpretation was presented vnto Bathy, which he read, & attentively noted. At length wee were conducted home againe vnto our owne lodging, howbeit no victuals were giuen vnto vs, except it were once a little Miller in adich, the first night of our comming. This Bathy caries himselfe very stately & magnificently, hauing popsters and all officers after the maner of the Emperour, and sittes in a lofty seate of thorne together with one of his wiues. The rest, namely, as well his brethren and sonnes, as other great personages sit vnderneath him in the midst vpon a bench, and others sit downe vpon the ground, behinde him, but the men on the right hand and the women on the left. He hath very faire and large tentes of linnen cloth also, which were once the kings of Hungaria. Neither dare any man come into his tent (besides them of his owne family) vnles he be called, be he neuer so mighty and great, except perhaps it be knownen that it is his pleasure. Wee also, for the same cause, late on the left hand; for so doe all ambassadozs in going: but in returning from the Emperour, we were alwaies placed on the right hand. In the midst stands his table, neare vnto the doore of the tent, vpon the which there is drinke filled in golden and silver vessels. Neither doth Bathy at any time drinke, nor any other of the Tartarian princes, especially being in a publique place, but they haue singing and minstrellie before them. And alwaies, when hee rides, there is a canopie or small tent caried ouer his head vpon the point of a ianeline. And so doe all the great princes of the Tartars, & their wiues also. The sayd Bathy is courteous enough vnto his owne men, and yet is hee had in great awe by them: he is most cruel in fight: he is exceedingly prudent and politique in warre, because he hath now continued a long time in martiall affaires.

Moreouer, vpon Easter euen we were called vnto the tent, and there came forth to meete vs the foresaid agent of Bathy, saying on his masters behalfe, that we should go into their land, vnto the Emperour Cuyn, deteining certaine of our company with this pteience, that they would send them backe vnto the Pope, to whom we gaue letters of al our affaires to deliuer vnto him. But being come as farre as duke Montij aforesaid, there they were kept vntill our returne. Vpon Easter day, hauing said our praier, and taken a slender breakfast, in the company of two Tartars, which were assigned vnto vs by Corensa we departed with many teares, not knowing whether we went to death or to life. And we were so feeble in bodie, that we were scarce able to ride. For all that Lent through, our meat was Millet onely with a little water and salte. And so likewise vpon other fasting daies. Neither had we ought to drinke, but snowe melted in a skillet. And passing through Comania we rode most earnestly, hauing change of horses five times or oftener in a day, except when we went through deserts, for then we were allowed better and stronger horses, which could vndergoe the whole labour. And thus farre had we traualled from the beginning of Lent vntill eight daies after Easter. The land of Comania on the North side immediately after Russia, hath the people called Mordiyne Byleri, that is, Bulgaria magna, the Bastarci, that is, Hungaria magna, next vnto the Bastarci, the Parosita and the Samogeta. Next vnto the Samogeta are those people which are sayd to haue dogges faces, inhabiting vpon the desert shores of the Ocean. On the South side it hath the Alani, the Circassi, the Gazari, Greece and Constantinople; also the land of Iberia, the Catches, the Brutaches who are said to be Titmes shewing their heads all ouer, the landes also of Scythia, of Georgia, of Armenia, of Turkie. On the West side it hath Hungaria, and Russia. Also Comania is a most large and long countrey. The inhabitants whereof called Comani the Tartars slewe, some notwithstanding fled from them, and the rest were subdued vnder their bondage. But most of them that fled are returned againe. Afterward wee entered the lande of the Kangitta, which in many places hath great scarcetie of waters, where in there are but fewe inhabitants by reason of the foresayd defect of water. For this cause diuers of the seruants of Ierollaus duke of Russia, as they were traueling towards him into the land of Tartaria, died for thirst, in that desert. As befoze in Comania, so likewise in this countrey, wee found many skulles and bones of dead men lying vpon the earth like a dunghill. Through this countrey we were traueiling from the eight day after Easter vntill Ascension day. The inhabitants therof were Pagans, and neither they nor the Comanians vsed to till the ground, but liued onely vpon cattell, neither built they any houses but dwelled in tents. These men also haue the Tartars rooted out, and doe possesse and inhabite their countrey, howbeit, those that remained are reduced into their bondage.

Moreouer, out of the land of the Kangitta, we entered into the countrey of S Bisermini, who spake the language of Comania, but obserue the law of the Saracens. In this countrey we found innumerable cities with castles ruined, & many towne left desolate. The lord of this countrey was called Soldan Alti, who with al his progenie, was destroyed by the Tartars. This countrey hath most huge mountains. On the South side it hath Ierusalem and Baldach, and all the whole countrey of the Saracens. In the next territories adioyning doe inhabite two carnall brothers dukes of the Tartars, namely; Burin and Cadan, the sonnes of Thyaday, who was the sonne of Chingis Can. On the North side thereof it hath the land of the blacke Kythayans, and the Ocean. In the same countrey Syban the brother of Bathy remaineth. Through this countrey we were traueiling from the feast of Ascension, vntill eight daies befoze the feast of S. Iohn Baptist. And then we entered into the land of the blacke Kythayans, in which the Emperour built an house, where we were called in to drinke. Also the Emperours deputy in that place caused the chiefe men of the citie and his two sonnes to dauce befoze vs. Departing from hence, wee founde a certaine small sea, vpon the shore whereof stands a little mountaine. In which mountaine is reported to be a hole, from whence, in winter time such vehement tempests of winds doe issue, that traueilers can scarcely, and with great danger passe by the same way. In summer time, the noise in becke of the winde is heard there, but it proceedeth gently out of the hole. Along the shores of the foresaid sea we traualled for the space of many daies, which although it bee not very great, yet hath it many islandes, and wee passed by leauing it on our left hande. In this lande dwelleth Ordu, whome wee sayde to bee auncient vnto all the Tartarian dukes. And it is the Orda or court of his father which hee inhabiteth, and one of his wiues beareth rule there.

For it is a custome among the Tartars, that the Countes or Princes of noble men are not allotted, but alwayes some women are appointed to keepe and gouerne them, vpon whom certain gifts are bestowed, in like sort as they are giuen vnto their Lords. And so at length we arrived at the first court of the Emperour, wherein one of his wiues dwelt.

But becauſe we had not as yet ſeene the Emperour, they would not inuite vs nor admit vs into this Orda, but cauſed good attendance and entertainment, after the Tartars faſhion, to be giuen vnto vs in our owne tent, and they cauſed vs to ſtay there, and to reſreſh our ſelues with them one day. Departing thence vpon the euen of Saint Peter and Saint Paul, wee entered into the land of the Naymani, who are Pagans. But vpon the very feaſt day of the ſaide Apoſtles, there fel a mightie ſnowe in that place, and wee had extreame colde weather. This lande is full of mountaines, and colde beyonde meaſure, and there is little plaine ground to bee ſcene. Theſe two nations laſt mentioned beſed not to till their grounde, but, like vnto the Tartars, dwelt in tents, which the ſayde Tartars had deſtroyed. Through this countrey wee were trauailing many daies. Then entered wee into the lande of the Mongals, whome wee call Tartars. Through the Tartars lande wee continued our trauaile (as wee ſuppoſe) for the ſpace of ſome thre weekes, riding alwayes haſtily and with ſpeece, and vpon the day of Marie Magdalene we arrived at the court of Cuyne the Emperour elect. But therefore did we make great haſte all this way, becauſe our Tartarian guides were ſtraightly commaunded to bying vs vnto the court Imperiall with all ſpeece, which court hath bene theſe many yeeres, ordained for the election of the Emperour. Therefore riſing early, wee trauailed vntill night without eating of any thing, and oftentimes wee came ſo late vnto our lodging, that we had no time to eate the ſame night, but that which we ſhould haue eaten ouer night, was giuen vs in the morning. And often changing our horſes, wee ſpared no Horſe-fleſhe, but rode ſwiftly and without intermiſſion, as faſt as our horſes could trot.

How Cuyne entertained the Minorite Friers. Chap. 26.

But when wee were come vnto the court of Cuyne, hee cauſed (after the Tartars manner) a Tent and all expenſes neceſſarie to bee provided for vs. And his people entreated vs with more regarde and courteſie, then they did anie other Ambaſſadours. Howbeit wee were not called before his preſence, becauſe hee was not as yet elected, nor admitted vnto his empire. Notwithſtanding, the interpretation of the Popes letters, and the meſſage which we deliuered, were ſent vnto him by the ſayde Baſhy. And hauing ſtayed there ſixe or ſixe daies, hee ſent vs vnto his mother, vnder whome there was mainteyned a verie ſolemne and royall court. And being come thither, we ſaw an huge tent of fine white cloth pitched, which was, to our iudgement, of ſo great quantitie, that more then two thouſand men might ſtand within it, and round about it there was a wall of planks ſet vp, painted with diuers images. Wee therefore with our Tartars aſſigned to attende vpon vs, tooke our iourney thither, and there were all the Dukes aſſembled, eche one of them riding vp and downe with his traine ouer the hilles and dales. The firſt day they were all clad in white, but the ſecond in ſcarlet robes. Then came Cuyne vnto the ſaide tent. Before, the third day they were all in blew robes, and the fourth in moſt rich robes of Baldaſkin cloth. In the wall of boardes, about the tent aſoſeſaid, were two great gates, by one of the which gates, the Emperour only was to enter, and at that gate there was no gard of men appointed to ſtand, although it ſtood continually open, becauſe none durſt go in or come out the ſame way: all that were admitted, entred by another gate, at which there ſtood watchmen, with bowes, ſwords, & arrowes. And whoſoeuer approached vnto the tent beyond the bounds and limit aſſigned, being caught, was beaten, but if he fled, he was ſhot at with arrowes or iron. There were many that to our iudgement, had vpon their bydles, trappes, ſaddles, and ſuch like furniture, to the value of 20. markes in pure gold. The ſayde Dukes (as we thinke) communed together within the tent, and conſulted about the election of their Emperour. But all the reſidue of the people were placed farre away without the walles of board, & in this manner they ſtaied almoſt til noone. Then began they to drinke marcs milke, & ſo continued drinking til euen tide, and that in ſo great quantitie, as it was wonderfull. And they called vs in vnto them, and gaue vs of their ale, becauſe we could not drinke their marcs milke. And this they did vnto vs in token of great honoz. But they compelled vs to drinke ſo much, that in regard of our cuſtomary diet, wee coulde by no means endure it. Wherevpon, giuing them to vnderſtand, that that it was hurtful vnto vs, they cealed to compell vs any moze. Without the doore stood Duke Ieroflaus of Sufdal, in Russia, and a great many Dukes of the Kythayans, and of the Solangi. The two sonnes also of the king of Georgia, the ligier of the Caliph of Baldach, who was a Soldan, and (as we thinke) aboue ten Soldans of the Saracens beside. And, as it was tolde vs by the agents, there were moze then 4000. ambassadoys, partly of such as paide tributes, and such as presented gifts, and other Soldans, and Dukes, which came to yeeld themselves, and such as the Tartars had sent for, and such as were gouernours of lands. All these were placed without the lists, and had drinke giuen vnto them. But almost continually they all of them gaue vs and Duke Ieroflaus the vpper hand, when we were abroad in their companie.

AND to our remembrance, we remained there, about the space of foure weekes. The election was to our thinking there celebrated, but it was not published and proclaimed there. And it was greatly suspected so to be, because alwayes when Cuyne came forth out of the tent, he had a noyle of musicke, and was bowed vnto, or honoured with faire wands, hauing purple wooll vpon the tops of them, and that, so long as he remained abroad: which seruice was performed to none of the other Dukes. The foresaid tent or court is called by them Syra Orda. Departing thence, wee all with one accord rode 3. or 4. leagues vnto another place, where, in a goodly plaine, by a riuers side, betwene certaine mountaines, there was another tent erected, which was called the golden Orda, for there was Cuyne to be placed in the throne Emperiall, vpon the day of the Assumption of our Ladie. But, for the abundance of haile which fell at the same time, as is aboue said, the matter was deferred. There was also a tene erected vpon pillars, which were couered with plates of golde, and were ioyned vnto other timber with golden nailles. It was couered aboue with Baldakin cloth, but there was other cloth spread euer that, next vnto the ayre. Wee abode there vnto the feast of Saint Bartholomew, what time there was assembled an huge multitude standing with their faces towards the South. And a certaine number of them beeing a stones cast distant from the residue, making continuall prayers, and kneeling vpon their knees, proceeded farther and farther towards the South. Howbeit wee, not knowing whether they used incantments, or whether they bowed their knees to God or to some other, would not kneele vpon the ground with them. And hauing done so a long time, they returned to the tent, and placed Cuyne in his throne imperiall, and his Dukes bowed their knees before him. Afterwarde the whole multitude kneeled downe in like maner, except our selues, for wee were none of his subiects.

His inclination

niric.

His maiestic.

His lawlesse au-thoritic.

THis Emperour, when hee was exalted vnto his gouernment, seemed to bee about the age of forty or forty five yeeres. He was of a meane stature, very wise and policlike, and passing ferious and graue in all his demeanour. A rare thing it was, for a man to see him laugh or behaue himselfe lightly, as those Christians repute, which abode continually with him. Certaine Christians of his familie earnestly and strongly affirmed vnto vs, that he himselfe was about to become a Christian. A token and argument whereof was, that hee retained diuers Cleargie men of the Christians. Hee had likewise at all times a Chappell of Christians, neere vnto his great Tent, where the Clearkes (like vnto other Christians, and according to the custome of the Grecians) doe sing publicly and openly, and ring belles at certaine houres, bee there neuer so great a multitude of Tartars, or of other people in presence. And yet none of their Dukes doe the like. It is the manner of the Emperour neuer to talke his owne selfe with a stranger, though he be neuer so great, but heareth and answereth by a speaker. And when any of his subiects (howe great soeuer they bee) are in propounding any matter of importance vnto him, or in hearing his answer, they continue kneeling vpon their knees vnto the ende of their conference. Neither is it lawfull for any man to speake of any affaires, after they haue beene determined of by the Emperour. The sayde Emperour, hath in his affaires both publike and priuate, an Agent, and Secretary of estate, with Seribes and all other Officials, except aduocates. For, without the noyle of pleading, or sentence giuing, all things are done according to the Emperours will and pleasure. Other Tartarian princes do the like in those things which belong vnto the. But, be it known vnto al men, that whilst we remained at the said Emperours court, which hath bin ordained and kept for these many yeeres, the sayde Cuyne being Emperour new elect, together with al his princes, erected a flag of defiance against the Church of God, & the Romane empire, and against al Christian

Christian kingdomes and nations of the West, vntlesse peraduenture (which God forbid) they will condescend vnto those things, which he hath inoined vnto our lord the Pope, & to all potentates and people of the Christians, namely, that they wil become obedient vnto him. For, except Christendome, there is no land vnder heauen, which they stand in feare of, and for that cause they prepare themselves to battell against vs. This Emperours father, namely Occoday was poisoned to death, which is the cause why they haue for a short space abstained from warre. But their intent and purpose is (as I haue aboue said) to subduie the whole world vnto themselves, as they were commanded by Chingis Can. Hence it is that the Emperour in his letters writeth after this maner: The power of God, & Emperour of all men. Also, vpon his scale, there is this posie ingrauen: God in heauen, and Cuyne Can vpon earth, the power of God: the scale of the Emperour of all men.

Warre intended against all Christians.

Of the admission of the Friers and Ambassadors vnto the Emperour. Chap. 29.

In the same place where the Emperour was established into his throne, we were summoned before him. And Chingay his chiefe secretary hauing written downe our names, and the names of them that sent vs, with the name of the Duke of Solangi, & of others, cried out with a loud voice, rehearsing the said names before the Emperour, and the assembly of his Dukes. Which beeing done, each one of vs bowed his left knee foure times, & they gaue vs warning not to touch the threhold. And after they had searched vs most diligently for kniues, and could not find any about vs, we entered in at the dooze vpon the East side: because no man dare presume to enter at the West dooze, but the Emperour onely. In like maner, euery Tartarian Duke entred on the West side into his tent. Howbeit the inferiour sort doe not greatly regard such ceremonies. This therefore was the first time, when we entred into the Emperours tent in his presence, after he was created Emperour. Likewise all other ambassadours were there receiued by him, but very fewe were admitted into his tent. And there were presented vnto him such abundance of gifts by the saide Ambassadors, that they seemed to be infinite, namely in Samites, robes of purple, and of Baldakin cloth, like girdles wrought with golde, and costly skinner, with other gifts also. Likewise there was a certaine Sun Canopie, or small tent (which was to bee caried ouer the Emperours head) presented vnto him, being set full of precious stones. And a gouernour of one prouince brought vnto him a companie of camels couered with Baldakins. They had saddles also vpon their backs, with certaine other instruments, within the which were places for men to sitte vpon. Also they brought many horses & mules vnto him furnished wth trappers and caparisons, some being made of leather, and some of iron. And we were demanded whether we would bestow any gifts vpon him or no: But wee were not of abilitie so to doe, hauing in a maner spent all our prouision. There were also vpon an hill standing a good distance from the tents, more then 500. carts, which were all full siluer and of gold, and like garments. And they were all diuided betwene the Emperour and his Dukes, and euery Duke bestowed vpon his owne followers what pleased him.

Of the place where the Emperor and his mother tooke their leaues one of another, and of Ieroslaus Duke of Russia. Chap. 30.

Departing thence, we came vnto another place, where a wonderfull braue tent, all of red purple, giuen by the Kythayans, was pitched. Wee were admitted into that also, and alwaies when we entred, there was giuen vnto vs ale and wine to drinke, & foddren flesh (when we would) to eate. There was also a loftie stage built of boords, where the Emperours throne was placed, being very curiously wrought out of iutorie, wherein also there was golde and precious stones, and (as we remember) there were certain degrees or staires to ascend vnto it. And it was round vpon the top. There were benches placed about the saide throne, whereon the ladies sate toward the left hand of the Emperour vpon stooles, (but none sate aloft on the right hande) and the Dukes sate vpon benches below, the said throne being in the midst. Certaine others sate behinde the Dukes, and euery day there resorted great companie of Ladies thither. The three tents whereof we spake before, were very large, but the Emperour his wiues had other great and faire tentes made of white felt. This was the place where the Emperour parted companie with his mother: for she went into one part of the land, and the Emperour into another to execute iustice. For there was taken a certaine Concubine of this Emperour, which had poisoned his father to death, at the same time when the Tartars armie was in Hungarie, which, for the same cause returned home. For couer, vpon the foresaide Concubine, and many other of her confederats sentence of iudgement was pronounced, and they were put to death. At the same time Ieroslaus the great Duke of Soldai,

The death of Occoday reuenged, &c. Soldai, which which is a part of Russia, deceased. For being (as it were for honours sake) invited to eate and drink with the Emperours mother, and immediately after the banquet, returning vnto his lodging, he fell sicke, and within seuen dayes, died. And after his death, his body was of a strange blew colour, and it was commonly reported, that the said Duke was poisoned, to the ende that the Tartars might freely and totally possesse his Duke-dome.

bieth with the Legates.

TO be short, the Tartars brought vs vnto their Emperour, who when he had heard of them, that we were come vnto him, commanded that we should return, vnto his mother. For he was determined the next day, (as it is abovesaid) to set by a flag of defiance against all Countreys of the West, which he would haue vs in no case to know. Therefore returning, we staid some few dayes with his mother, and so returned backe again vnto him. With whom we continued for the space of one whole moneth in such extreme hunger and thirst, that we could scarce hold life and soule together. For the prouision allowed vs for foure dayes, was scanty sufficient for one day. Neither could we buy vs any sustenance, because the market was too farre off. Howbeit the Lorde prouided for vs a Russian goldsmith, named Cosmas, who being greatly in the Emperours fauour, procured vs some sustenance. This man shewed vnto vs the throne of the Emperour, which hee had made, because it was set in the proper place, and his scale, which he also had framed. Afterward the Emperour sent for vs, giuing vs to vnderstand by Chingay his chief Secretary, that wee should write downe our messages & affaires, and should deliuer them vnto him. Which thing we performed accordingly. After many daies he called for vs againe, demanding whether there were any with our Lord the Pope, which vnderstood the Russian, the Saracen, or the Tartarian language? To whom we answered, that we had none of those letters or languages. Howbeit, that there were certaine Saracens in the land, but inhabiting a great distance from our Lord the Pope. And wee saide, that wee thought it most expedient, that when they had writtten their mindes in the Tartarian language, and had interpreted the meaning thereof vnto vs, we should diligently translate it into our own tongue, and so deliuer both the letter and the translation thereof vnto our Lord the Pope. Then departed they from vs, and went vnto the Emperour. And after the day of S. Martine, we were called for againe. Then Kadac principal agent for the whole empire, and Chingay, and Bala, with diuers other Scribes, came vnto vs, and interpreted the letter word for word. And hauing writtten it in Latine, they caused vs to interpret vnto them eche sentence, to wit if we had erred in any word. And when both letters were writtten, they made vs to reade them ouer twise more, least we should haue mistaken ought. For they said vnto vs: Take heed that ye vnderstand all things thoroughly, for if you should not vnderstand the whole matter aright, it might breed some inconuenience. They wrote the said letters also in the Saracen tongue, that there might be some found in our dominions which could reade and interpret them, if need should require.

The Legates are loath to haue any Russian Ambassadors sent from the Tartars to the Christians.

AND (as our Tartars told vs) the Emperour was purposed to send his ambassadozs with vs. Howbeit, he was desirous (as we thought) that we our selues should craue that fauour at his hands. And when one of our Tartars being an ancient man, exhorted vs to make the said petition, we thought it not good for vs, that the Emperour should send his ambassadours. Therefore we gaue him answer, that it was not for vs to make any such petition, but if it pleased the Emperour of his owne accord to send them, we would diligently (by Gods assistance) see them conducted in safety. Howbeit, we thought it expedient for vs, that they should not goe, and that for diuers causes. First, because we feared, least they, seeing the dissentions and warres which are among vs, should be the more encouraged to make warre against vs. Secondly, we feared, that they would be instead of spies and intelligencers in our dominions. Thirdly, we misdoubted that they would be slaine by the way. For our nations be arrogant and proud. For when as those seruants (which at the request of the Cardinall, attended vpon vs, namely the legates of Almaine) returned vnto him in the Tartars attire, they were almost stoned in the way, by the Dutch, and were compelled to put off those garments. And it is the Tartars custome, neuer to bee reconciled vnto such as haue slaine their Ambassadors, till they haue reuenged themselves. Fourthly, least they should be taken from vs by mayne force. Fifthly, because there could come no good by their ambassade, for they were to haue none other commission, or authoritie, but onely to deliuer their Emperours letter vnto the Pope, and to the Princes of Christendome, which very same letters wee our selues selues had, and we knew right well, that much harme might ensue thereof. Therefore, the third day after this, namely, vpon the feast of Saint Brice, they gaue vs oure passe-port and a Letter sealed with the Emperours owne seale, sending vs vnto the Emperours mother, who gaue vnto eche of vs a gowne made of ffore-skinner, with the furre on the outside, and a piece of purple. And our Tartars stole a parde out of euery one of them. And out of that which was giuen vnto our seruant, they stole the better halfe. Which false dealing of theirs, we knew well enough, but would make no word thereof.

They are rewarded with gifts.

How they returned homewards. Chap. 33.

Then taking our iourney to returne, we trauailed all Winter long, lying in the deserts of tentimes vpon the snow, except with our feete wee made a piece of ground bare to lye vpon. For there were no trees, but the plaine champion field. And oftentimes in the morning, we found our selues all couered with snow driuen ouer vs by the wind. And so trauailing till the feast of our Lordes Ascension, we arriued at the court of Bathy. Of whom when wee had enquired, what answer he would send vnto our Lord the Pope, he said that he had nothing to giue vs in charge, but onely that we should diligently deliuer that which the Emperour had written. And, hauing receiued letters for our safe conduct, the thirteenth day after Pentecost, being Saturday, wee were proceeded as farre as Montij, with whome our foresaide associates and seruants remained, which were withheld from vs, and we caused them to be deliuered vnto vs. From hence wee trauailed vnto Corrensa, to whom, requiring gifts the second time at our hands, we gaue none, because we had not where withall. And hee appointed vs two Comanians, which liued among the common people of the Tartars, to be our guides vnto the cite of Kiow in Russia; Howbeit one of our Tartars parted not from vs, till we were past the vtmost gard of the Tartars. But the other guides, namely the Comanians, which were giuen vs by Corrensa, brought vs from the last garde vnto the cite of Kiow, in the space of fife dayes. And there we arriued fifteene dayes before the feast of Saint Iohn Baptist. Whereouer, the Citizens of Kiow hauing intelligence of our approach, came forth all of them to meete vs, with great ioy. For they reioyced ouer vs, as ouer men that had bene risen from death to life. So like wise they did vnto vs throughout all Russia, Polonia, and Bohemia. Daniel and his brother Wasilico made vs a royall feast, and interteined vs with them against our willes for the space of eight dayes. In the meane time, they with their Bishops, and other men of account, being in consultation together about those matters which we had propounded vnto them in our iourney towards the Tartars, answered vs with common consent, saying: that they would holde the Pope for their speciall Lord and Father, and the Church of Rome for their Lady & mistresse, confirming like wise al things which they had sent concerning this matter, before our coming, by their Abbate. And for the same purpose, they sent their Ambassadors and letters by vs also, vnto our Lord the Pope.

Excellentissimo Domino & Christianissimo, Lodouico Dei gratia Regi Francorum illustri, frater Willielmus de Rubruquis in ordine fratrum Minorum minimus salurem, & semper triumphare in Christo. Scriptum est in Ecclesiastico de sapiente, Interitum alienarum gentium transibit, bona & mala in omnibus tentabit. Hoc opus, Domine mi Rex, feci: sed vtinam vt sapiens & non stultus. Multi enim faciunt quod facit sapiens, sed non sapienter, sed magis stultè: de quorum numero timeo me esse. Tamen quocunque modo fecerim; quia dixistis mihi quando recessi à vobis, vt omnia scriberem vobis, quæcunque viderem inter Tartaros, & etiam monuistis vt non timerem vobis scribere longas literas, facio quod iniunxistis: Cum timore tamen & verecundia, quia verba congrua mihi non superunt, quæ debeam tantæ scribere Maiestati. Nouerit ergò vestra sancta maiestas, quòd anno Domini mille-simo ducentissimo, quinquagesimo tertio, nonas Maii ingressi sumus mare Ponti, quod Bulgarici vocant, Maius Mare: & habet mille octo miliaria in longum, vt didici à mercatoribus, & distinguitur quasi in duas partes. Circà medium enim eius sunt duæ prouinciæ terræ, vna ad Aquilonem, & alia ad meridiem. Illa quæ est ad meridiem dicitur Synopolis; & est castrum & portus Soldani Turchiæ, Quæ verò ad Aquilonem est, est Prouincia quædam, quæ nunc

dicitur à Latinis Gafaria, à Græcis verò qui inhabitant eam super litus maris dicitur Cassaria, hoc est Cæsaria. Et sunt promontoria quædam extendentia se in mare, & contra meridiem versus Synopolim, Et sunt trecenta milliaria inter Synopolim & Cassariam, Ita quod sint septingenta miliaria ab istis punctis versus Constantinopolim in longum & latum: & septingenta versus Orientem: hoc est, Hiberiam, quæ est prouincia Georgiæ. Ad prouinciã Gafariæ siue Cafariæ applicuimus, quæ est quasi triangularis, ad Occidentem habens ciuitatem, quæ dicitur Kersoua, in qua fuit Sanctus Clemens marterizatus, Et nauigantes corâ ea vidimus insulam in qua est templum illud quod dicitur Angelicis matibus præparatum. In medio verò quasi in cuspide ad meridiem habet ciuitatem quæ dicitur Soldaia, quæ ex transuerso respicit Synopolim: Et illuc applicant omnes Mercatores venientes de Turchia volentes ire ad terras Aquilonares, & è contrario venientes de Rossia & terris Aquilonaribus, volentes transire in Turchiam. Illi portant varium & griseum, & alias pelles pretiosas. Alij portant telas de cotone siue bombasio, & pannos sericos & species aromaticas, Ad Orientem verò illius prouinciæ est ciuitas quæ dicitur Matruga, vbi cadit fluuius Tanais in mare Pontiper orificium habens latitudinem duodecem milliarium, Ille enim fluuius antequam ingreditur mare Ponti, facit quoddam mare versus Aquilonem, habens in latitudine & longitudine septingenta milliaria, nusquam habens profunditatem vltra sex passus, vnde magna vasa non ingrediuntur illud. Sed mercatores de Constantinopoli applicantes ad prædictam ciuitatem Matertam, mittunt barcas suas vsque ad flumen Tanaim, vt emant pisces siccatos, sturiones, thofas, borbatas, & alios pisces infinitæ multitudinis. Prædicta verò prouincia Cassaria cingitur mari in tribus lateribus: ad Occidentem scilicet, vbi est Kersoua ciuitas Clementis, ad meridiem vbi est ciuitas Soldaia, ad quam applicuimus, quæ est cuspis prouinciæ, & ad Orientem Maricandis, vbi est ciuitas Materta, & orificium Tanais. Vltra illud orificium est Zikia, quæ non obedit Tartaris: Et Sucui & Hiberi ad Orientem, qui non obediunt Tartaris. Postea versus meridiem est Trapefunda quæ habet proprium Dominum nomine Guidonem, qui est de genere imperatorum Constantinopolitanorum, qui obedit Tartaris: postea Synopolis quæ est Soldani, Turchiæ qui similiter obedit: postea terra Valtacij cuius filius dicitur Astar ab auo materno, qui non obedit, Ab orificio Tanais versus Occidentem vsque ad Danubium totum est subditum. Etiam vltra Dannbium versus Constantinopolim, Valakia, quæ est terra Affani, & minor Bulgaria vsque in Solonomam omnes soluunt eistributum. Et etiam vltra tributum conductum sumpserunt annis nuper transactis de qualibet domo securim vnã, & totum frumentum quod inuenerunt in massa. Applicuimus ergo Soldaia in 12. Kalendas Iunij: & præuenerant nos quidam mercatores de Constantinopoli, qui dixerunt venturos illuc nuncios de terra sancta volentes ire ad Sartach, Ego tamen prædicaueram publicè in Ramis Palmarum apud Sanctam Sophiam, quod non essem nuncius, nec vester, nec alicuius, sed ibam apud illos incredulos secundum regulam nostram. Tunc cum applicuissem, monebant me dicti mercatores vt cautè loquerer, quia dixerunt me esse nuncium, & si non dicerem me esse nuncium, quod non præberetur mihi transitus. Tunc loquutus sum hoc modo ad capitaneos ciuitatis, imò ad vicarios capitaneorum, quia capitei iuerant ad Baatu portantes tributum, & non fuerant adhuc reuersi, Nos audiuimus, dixi, de Domino vestro Sartach in Terra Sancta quod esset Christianus: & gauisi sunt inde vehementer Christiani, & præcipuè Dominus Rex Francorum Christianissimus, qui ibi peregrinatur, & pugnat contra Saracenos, vt eripiat loca sancta de manibus eorum: vnde volo ire ad Sartach, & portare ei literas Domini Regis, in quibus monet eum de utilitate totius Christianitatis. Et ipsi receperunt nos grater, & dederunt nobis hospitium in ecclesia Episcopali. Et Episcopus ipsius ecclesiæ fuerat ad Sartach, qui multa bona dixit mihi de Sartach, quæ ego postea non inueni. Tunc dederunt nobis optionem vtrum vellemus habere bigas cum bobus ad portandum res nostras vel equos pro summiarijs, Et mercatores Constantinopolitani consuluerunt mihi quod non acciperem bigas, imò quod emerem proprias bigas cooperatas, in quibus apportant Ruteni pelles suas, & in illis includerem res nostras quas vellem quoridiè deponere, quia si acciperem equos, oporteret me in qualibet Herbergia deponere & reponere super alios, & præterea equitarem lentiori gressu iuxta boues, Et tunc acquieui consilio eorum malo, tunc quia fui in itinere vsq; Sarthach duobus mensibus, quod potuissem vno mense fecisse, si iuissem equis. Attuleram mecum de Constantinopoli fructus & vinum muscatum, & biscoctum delicatum de consilio mercatorum ad presentandū capitaneis primis, vt facilius pateret mihi transitus; quia nullus apud eos respicitur rectis oculis, qui venit vacua manu. Quæ omnia posui in vna biga, quando nō inueni ibi capitaneos ciuitatis, quia dicebāt mihi, quod gratissima foret Sarthach, si possem deferre ea vsq; ad eū. Attribuimus ergo iter tunc circa Kalend. Iunij cum bigis nostris quatuor cooperatis & cū alijs duabus quas accepimus ab eis, In quibus portabantur lectisternia ad dormiendū de nocte, & quinque equos dabant nobis ad equitandum, Eramus enim quinque personæ.

personæ. Ego & socius meus frater Bartholomeus de Cremona, & Goset lator præsentium, & homo dei Turgeinannus, & puer Nicolaus, quem emeram Constantinopoli de nostra electione. Dederunt etiam duos homines qui ducebant bigas & custodiebant boues & equos. Sunt autem alta promontoria super Mare à Kersoua vsque ad orificium Tanais : & sunt quadraginta castella inter Kersouam & Soldaiam, quorum quodlibet fere habet proprium idioma: inter quos erant multi Goti, quorum idioma est Teutonicum. Post illa monrana versus Aquilonem est pulcherrima sylua in planicie, plena fontibus & riualis : Et post illam syluam est planicies maxima, quæ durat per quinque dietas vsque ad extremitatem illius prouinciæ ad aquilonem, quæ coarctatur habens Mare ad Orientem & Occidentem : Ita quod est vnum fossatum magnum ab vno Mari vsque ad aliud. In illa planicie solebant esse Comani antequam venirent Tartari, & cogebant ciuitates prædictas & castra vt darent eis tributum, Et cum venerunt Tartari, tanta multitudo Comanorū intrauit prouinciā illam, qui omnes fugerunt vsque ad ripam Maris, quod comedebant se mutuo viui morientes : secundum quod narrauit mihi quidam mercator, qui hoc vidit : Quod viui deuorabant & lacerabant dentibus carnes crudas mortuorum, sicut canes cadauera. Versus extremitatem illius prouinciæ sunt lacus multi & magni : in quorum ripis sunt fontes salmastri, quorum aqua, quā cito intrat lacum, efficit salem durum admodum glaciei. Et de illis salinis habent Baari & Satch magnos reditus : quia de tota Russia veniunt illuc pro sale : & de qualibet biga onusta dant duas telas de cottone valentes dimidiam Ipperperam. Veniunt & per Mare multæ naues pro sale, quæ omnes dant tributum secundum sui quantitatem. Postquam ergo recessimus de Soldaia, tertia die inuenimus Tartaros : inter quos cum intraueram, vitum fuit mihi recte quod ingrederer quoddam aliud sæculum. Quorum vitam & mores vobis describam prout possum.

De Tartaris & domibus eorum.

NVsq̃uam habent manentem ciuitatem, sed futuram ignorant. Inter se diuiserunt Scythiam, quæ durat à Danubio vsque ad ortum solis. Et quilibet Capitaneus, secundum quod habet plures vel pauciores homines sub se, scit terminos pascuorum suorum, & vbi debet pascere hyeme & æstate, vere & autumno. In hyeme enim descendunt ad calidiores regiones versus meridiem. In æstate ascendunt ad frigidiores versus aquilonem. Loca pascuosa sine aquis pascunt in hyeme quando est ibi nix, quia niuem habent pro aqua. Domum in qua dormiunt fundant super rotam de virgis cancellatis, cuius tigna sunt de virgis, & conueniunt in vnā paruulā rotā superius, de qua ascendit collum sursum tanquam fumigatorium, quam cooperiunt filtro albo : & frequentius imbuunt etiam filtrum calce vel terra alba & puluere ossium, vt albens splendeat, & aliquando nigro. Et filtrum illud circa collum superius decorant pulchra varietate picturæ. Ante ostium similiter suspendunt filtrum opere polimitario variatum. Consumunt enim filtrum coloratum in faciendo vites & arbores, aues & bestias. Et faciunt tales domos ita magnas ; quod habent triginta pedes in latitudine. Ego enim mensuraui semel latitudinem inter vestigia rotarum vnus bigæ viginti pedum : & quando domus erat super bigam excedebat extra rotas in vtroque latere quinque pedibus ad minus. Ego numeraui in vna biga viginti duos boues trahentes vnā domum : Vndecem in vno ordine secundum latitudinem bigæ, & alios vndecem ante illos : Axis bigæ erat magnus ad modum arboris nauis : Et vnus homo stabat in ostio domus super bigam minans boues. Insuper faciunt quadrangulos de virgulis fissis attenuatis ad quantitatem vnus arcæ magnæ : & postea de vna extremitate ad aliam eleuant testudinem de similibus virgis, & ostiolum faciunt in anteriori extremitate : & postea cooperiunt illam cistam siue domunculā filtro nigro imbuto seu siue lacte ouino, ne possit penetrari pluuia : quod similiter decorant opere polimitario vel plumario. Et in talibus arcis ponunt totā suppellectilem suā & thesaurum : quas ligant foriiter super bigas alteras quas trahunt cameli, vt possint transuadare flumina. Tales arcas nunquam deponunt de bigis. Quando deponunt domus suas mansionarias, semper vertunt portam ad meridiem ; & consequenter collocant bigas cum arcis hinc & inde prope domum ad dimidium iactum lapidis : ita quod domus stat inter duos ordines bigarum quasi inter duos muros.

¶ Nota.

Matronæ faciunt sibi pulcherrimas bigas, quas nescirem vobis describere nisi per picturam. ¶ Imo omnia depinxissem vobis si sciuissem pingere. Vnus diues Moal siue Tartar habet bene tales bigas cum arcibus ducentas vel centum, Baatu habet sexdecem vxores: quælibet habet vnam magnam domum, exceptis alijs paruis, quas collocant post magnam, quæ sunt quasi camerae; in quibus habitant puellæ. Ad quamlibet istarum domorum appendent ducentæ bigæ. Et quando deponunt domus, prima vxor deponit suam curiam in capite occidentali, & postea alia secundum ordinem suum: ita quod vltima vxor erit in capite Orientali: & erit spaciū inter curiam vnius dominæ & alterius, iactus vnius lapidis. Vnde curia vnius diuitis Moal apparebit quasi vna magna Villa: tunc paucissimi viri erunt in ea. Vna muliercula ducet 20. bigas vel 30. Terra enim plana est. Et ligant bigas cum bobus vel camelis vnam post aliam: & sedebit muliercula in anteriori minans bouem, & omnes alia pari gressu sequentur. Si contingat venire ad aliquem malum passum, soluunt eas & transducunt sigillatim: Vadunt enim lento gressu, sicut agnus vel bos potest ambulare.

De lectis eorum & poculis.

Postquam deposuerint domus versa porta ad meridiem, collocant lectum domini ad partem aquilonarem. Locus mulierum est semper ad latus Orientale hoc est ad sinistrum domini domus cum sedet in lecto suo versa facie ad meridiem: locus verò virorum ad latus occidentale, hoc est ad dextrum. Viri ingredientes domum nullo modo suspenderent pharetram ad partem mulierum, Et super caput Domini est semper vna imago quasi puppa & statuuncula de filtro, quam vocant fratrem domini: alia similis super caput dominæ, quam vocant fratrem dominæ, affixa parieti: & superius inter vtramque illarum est vna paruula, macilenta, quæ est quasi custos totius domus. Domina domus ponit ad latus suum dextrum ad pedes lecti in eminenti loco pelliculam hædinam impletam lana vel alia materia, & iuxta illam statuunculam paruulam respicientem famulas & mulieres. Iuxta ostium ad partem mulieris est iterum alia imago cum vberè vaccino, pro mulieribus quæ mungunt vaccas. De officio faminarum est mungere vaccas. Ad aliud latus ostij versus viros est alia statua cum vberè equæ pro viris qui mungunt equas. Et cum conuenerint ad potandum primo spargunt de potu illi imagini, quæ est super caput domini: postea alijs imaginibus per ordinem: postea exit minister denum cum ciphō & potu, & spargit ter ad meridiem, qualibet vice flectendo genu; & hoc ad reuerentiam ignis: postea ad Orientem ad reuerentiam aeris: postea ad Occidentem ad reuerentiam aquæ: ad aquilonem proijciunt pro mortuis. Quando tenet dominus ciphum in manu & debet bibere, tunc primo antequam bibat, infundit terræ partem suam. Si bibit sedens super equum, infundit antequam bibat, super collum vel crinem equi. Postquam vero minister sic sparserit ad quatuor latera mundi, reuertitur in domum & sunt parati duo famuli cum duobus ciphis & totidem patenis vt deferant potum domino & vxori sedenti iuxta cum sursum in lecto. Et cum habet plures vxores, illa cum qua dormit in nocte sedet iuxta cum in die: & oportet quod omnes alia veniant ad domum illam illa die ad bibendum: & ibi tenetur curia illa die: & xenia quæ deferuntur, illa deponuntur in thesauris illius dominæ. Bancus ibi est cum vtre lactis vel cum alio potu & cum ciphis.

De potibus eorum & qualiter prouocant alios ad bibendum.

Faciunt in hyeme optimum potum, de riso, de millio, de melle: claret sicut vinum. Et deferatur eis vinum à remotis partibus. In æstate non curant nisi de Cosmos. Stat semper infra domum ad introitum portæ, & iuxta illud stat citharista cum citharula sua. Citharas & vielas nostras non vidi ibi, sed multa alia instrumenta, quæ apud nos non habentur. Et cum incipit bibere tunc vnus ministrorū exclamat alta voce, H A: & citharista percutit citharum. Et quando faciunt festum magnum, tunc omnes plaudunt manibus & saltant ad vocem citharæ, viri coram Domino, & mulieres coram domina. Et postquam dominus biberit, tunc exclamat minister sicut prius, & tacet citharista: tunc bibunt omnes in circuitu viri & mulieres: & aliquando bibunt cerratim valde turpiter & gulose. Et quando volunt aliquem prouocare ad potū arripiunt eum per aures & trahunt fortiter vt dilatent ei gulam, & plaudunt & saltant coram eo. Item cum aliqui volunt facere magnum festum & gaudium, vnus accipit ciphum plenum, & alij duo sunt ei à dextris & sinistris: & sic illi tres veniunt cantantes vsque ad illum cui debent porrigere ciphum, & cantant & saltant coram eo: & cum porrigit manum ad recipiendum ciphum, ipsi subito subito resiliunt, & iterum sicut prius reuertuntur, & sic illud ei ter vel quater retrahendo ciphum, donec fuerit bene exhilaratus & bonum habeat appetitum, & tunc dant ei ciphum, & cantant & plaudunt manibus & terunt pedibus donec biberit.

De cibarijs eorum.

DE cibis & victualibus eorum noueritis, quod indifferenter comedunt omnia morticina sua. Et inter tot pecora & armenta non potest esse quin multa animalia moriantur. Tamen in æstate quamdiu durat eis cosmos, hoc est lac equinum, non curant de alio cibo. Vnde tunc si contingat eis mori bouem vel equum, siccant carnes scindendo per tenues pecias & suspendendo ad solem & venum, quæ statim sine sale siccantur absque aliquo sapore. De intestinis equorum faciunt andulges meliores quàm de porcis: quas comedunt recentes: reliquas carnes reseruant ad hyemem. De pellibus bouum faciunt vtres magnos, quos mirabiliter siccant ad fumum. De posteriori parte pellis equi faciunt pulcherrimos foculares. De carne vnius arietis dant comedere quinquaginta hominibus vel centum. Scindunt enim minutatim in scutella cum sale & aqua, aliam enim salsam non faciunt, & tunc cum puncto cultelli vel furcinula, quas proprias faciunt ad hoc, cum qua solemus comedere pira & poma cocta in vino, porrigunt cuilibet circumstantium buccellam vnâ vel duas, secundum multitudinem comedentium. Dominus antequam proponitur caro arietis in primo ipse accipit quod placet ei: & etiam si dat alicui partem specialem, oportet quod accipiens comedat eam solus, & nemini licet dare ei. Si non potest totum comedere, asportat secum, vel dat gacioni suo, si est presens, qui custodiat ei: sin aliter, recondit in saptargat suo, hoc est in bursa quadrata, quam portant ad recondendum omnia talia, in qua & ossa recondunt, quando non habent spaciū bene rodendi ea, vt postea rodant, ne pereat aliquid de cibo.

Quomodo faciunt Cosmos.

Ipsū Cosmos, hoc est lac iumentinum fit hoc modo. Extendunt cordam longam super terram ad duos palos fixos in terra, & ad illam cordam ligant circiter horas tres, pullos equarum quas volunt mungere. Tunc stant matres iuxta pullos suos & permittunt se pacifice mungi. Et si aliqua est nimis indomita, tunc accipit vnus homo pullum & supponit ei permitentis parum sugere, tunc retrahit illum, & emunctor lactis succedit, Congregata ergo multitudo lactis, quod est ita dulce sicut vaccinum, dum est recens, fundunt illud in magnum vtrem siue buccellam, & incipiunt illud concutere cum ligno ad hoc aptato, quod grossum est inferius sicut caput hominis & cauatum subtus: & quam cito concutiunt illud, incipit bullire sicut vinum nouū, & acescere siue fermentari, & excutiunt illud donec extrahant butirum. Tunc gustant illud; & quando est temperate pungitium bibunt: pungit enim super linguam sicut vinum raspei dum bibitur. Et postquam homo cessat bibere, relinquit saporem super linguam lactis amygdalini, & multum reddit interiora hominis iucunda, & etiam inebriat debilia capita: multum etiam prouocat vrinam. Faciunt etiam Cara-cosmos, hoc est nigrum cosmos ad vsū magnorum dominorum, hoc modo. Lac equinum non coagulatur. Ratio enim est: quod nullius animalis lac nisi cuius feter venter non inuenitur coagulum. In ventre pulli equi non inuenitur: vnde lac equæ non coagulatur. Concutiunt ergo lac in tantum, quod omnino quod spissum est in eo vadat ad fundum rectâ, sicut saces vini, & quod purum est remanet superius, & est sicut serum, & sicut mustum album. Fæces sunt albæ multum, & dantur seruis, & faciunt multum dormire. Illud clarum bibunt domini: & est pro certo valde suavis potus & bonæ efficacæ. Bactu habet 30. casalia circa herbergiam suam ad vnâ dietam, quorum vnumquodq; qualibet die seruit ei de tali lacte centum equarum, hoc est, qualibet die lac trium millium equarū, excepto alio lacte albo, quod deferunt alij. Sicut enim in Syria rustici dant tertiam partem fructuum, quam ipsi afferunt ad curias dominorum suorum, ita isti lac equarū tertiæ diei. De lacte vaccino primò extrahunt butyrū & bulliunt illud vsque ad perfectâ decoctionē, & postea recondunt illud in vtribus arietinis quos ad hoc reseruant. Et non ponunt sal in butiro: tamen propter magnam decoctionē non putrescit: & reseruant illud contra hyemem. Residuū lac quod remanet post butirum permittunt acescere quantum acius fieri potest & bulliunt illud, & coagulatur bulliendo, & coagulum illud desiccant ad solem, & efficitur durum sicut scoria ferri. Quod recondunt in saccis contra hyemem: tempore hyemali quando deficit eis lac, ponunt illud acre coaguatum, quod ipsi vocant gri-vt, in vtre, & super infundunt aquam calidam, & concutiunt fortiter donec illud resoluatur in aqua; quæ ex illo efficitur tota acetosa, & illam aquam bibunt loco lactis. Summè cauent ne bibant aquam puram.

Magni domini habent casalia versus meridiem, de quibus afferunt eis milium & farinam contra hyemem. pauperes procurant sibi pro anetibus & pellibus commutando. Sclauī etiam implent ventrem suum aqua crassa, & hac contenti sunt. Mures cum longis caudis non comedunt & omne genus murium habens curtam caudam. Sunt etiam ibi multæ marmotes, quas ipsi vocant Sogur: quæ conueniunt in vna feuca in hyeme 20. vel 30. pariter, & dormiunt sex mensibus: quas capiunt in magna multitudine. Sunt etiam ibi, cuniculi habentes longam caudam sicut cati; & in summitate caudæ habent pilos nigros & albos. Habent & multas alias bestiolas bonas ad comedendum: quas ipsi valde bene discernunt. Ceruos non vidi ibi, lepores paucos vidi, gaselos multos. Asinos syluestres vidi in magna multitudine, qui sunt quasi muli. Vidi & aliud genus animalis quod dicitur Artak, quod habet recte corpus arietis & cornua torta, sed tantæ quantitatis, quod vix poteram vna manu leuare duo cornua: & faciunt de cornibus illis ciphos magnos. Habent falcones, gisfalcones, & herodios in magna multitudine: quos omnes perant super manum dexteram: & ponunt semper falconi vnam corrigiam paruulani circa collum, quæ pender ei vsque ad medietatem pectoris: per quam cum proijciunt eum ad prædam, inclinant eum sinistra manu caput & pectus falconis, ne verberetur à vento, vel ne feratur sursum. Magnum ergo partem victus sui acquirunt venatione. De vestibus & habitu eorum noueritis, quod de Cataya & alijs regionibus Orientis, & etiam de Perfide & alijs regionibus austri veniunt eis panni serici & aurei, & telæ de bambasio, quibus induuntur in æstate. De Russia, de Moxel, & Maiore Bulgaria & Pascatir, quæ est maior Hungaria, & Kersis: (quæ omnes sunt regiones ad Aquilonem & plenæ syluis); & alijs multis regionibus ad latus aquilonare, quæ eis obediunt, adducuntur eis pelles preciosæ multi generis: quas nunquā vidi in partibus nostris: Quibus induuntur in hyeme. Et faciunt semper in hyeme duas pelliceas ad minus: vnam, cuius pilus est ad carnem: aliam cuius pilus est extra contra ventum & niues, quæ multoties sunt de pellibus lupinis vel vulpibus vel papionibus. Et dum sedent in domo habent aliam delicatorem. Pauperes faciunt illas exteriores de canibus & capris, Quum volunt venari feras, conueniunt in magna multitudine & circumdant regionem in qua sciunt feras esse, & paulatim appropinquant sibi, donec concludant feras inter se quasi infra circulum, & tunc sagitant ad eas. faciunt etiam braccas de pellibus. Diuites etiam furrant vestes suas de stupra setæ, quæ est supra modum mollis, & levis & calida. Pauperes furrant vestes de tela de bambasio, de delicatiori lana quam possunt extrahere: de grossiori faciunt filtrum ad cooperiendum demos suas & cistas, & ad lectisternia. De lana etiam & tertia parte pilorum equi admixta, faciunt cordas suas. De filtro etiam faciunt pauellas sub sellis, & capas contra pluuiam. Vnde multum expendunt de lana. Habitu virorum vidistis.

Maiores
Hungaria.

Nota,

De rasura virorum & ornatu mulierum.

Viri radunt in summitate capitis quadrangulum, & ab anterioribus angulis ducunt rasuram cristæ capitis vsque ad tempora. Radunt etiam tempora & collum vsque ad summum concauitatis ceruicis: & frontem antè vsque ad frontinellam, super quam relinquunt manipulum pilorum descendendum vsque ad supercilia: In angulis occipitis relinquunt crines, quibus faciunt tricas, quas succingunt nodando vsque ad aures. Et habitus puellarum non differt ab habitu virorum, nisi quod aliquantulum est longior. Sed in crastino postquam est nupta radit caluariam suam à medietate capitis versus frontem, & habet tunicam latam sicut cucullam monialis, & per omnia latiore & longiore, fissam ante, quam ligat sub dextro latere. In hoc enim differunt Tartari à Turcis: quod Turci ligant tunicas suas ad sinistram, Tartari semper ad dextram. Postea habent ornamentum capitis, quod vocant botra, quod fit de cortice arboris vel alia materia, quam possunt inuenire, leuiore: & est grossum & rotundum, quantum potest duabus manibus completi; longum vero vnus cubiti & plus, quadrum superius, sicut capitellum vnus columinæ. Istud botra cooperiunt panno serico precioso; & est concauum interius: & super capitellum in medio medio vel super quadraturā illam ponunt virgulam de calamis pennarum vel cannis gracilibus longitudinis scilicet vnus cubiti & plus: & illam sibi virgulam ornant superius de pennis pavonis, & per longum in circuitu pennulis caudæ malardi, & etiam lapidibus præciolis. Diuites dominæ istud ornamentum ponunt in summitate capitis quod stringunt fortiter cum almucia, quæ foramen habet in summitate ad hoc aptatū, & in isto recondunt crines suos quos recolligūt a parte posteriori ad summitatem capitis quasi in nodo vno & reponunt in illo botta, quod postea fortiter ligant sub gurgure. Vnde quum equitant plures dominæ simul & videntur a longe, apparent milites, habentes galeas in capitibus cum lanceis eleuatis. Illud enim botta apparet galea de super lencea. Et sedent omnes mulieres super equos sicut viti diuersificantes coxas; & ligant cucullas suas panno serico aerij coloris super renes, & alia fascia stringunt ad mamillas: & ligant vnam peciam albam sub oculis, quæ descendit vsque ad pectus. Et sunt mulieres miræ pinguedinis, & quæ minus habet de nalo pulchrior reputatur. Deturpant etiam turpiter pinguedine facies suas: nunquam cubant in lecto pro puerperio.

nuptijs earum.

Officium fœminarum est ducere bigas, ponere domus super eas & deponere, mungere vaccas, facere butirum & griut, parare pelles, & consuere eas, quas consuunt filo deneruis. diuidunt enim nervos in minuta filā, & postea illa contorquent in vnum longum filum. Consuunt etiam foculares & foccos & alias vestes, Vestes vero nunquam lauant, quia dicunt quod Deus tunc irascitur, & quod fiant tonitrua si suspendantur ad siccandum: Imo lauant es verberant & eis auferunt. Tonitrua supra modum timent: tunc omnes extraneos emittunt de domibus suis; & inuoluunt se in filtris nigris, in quibus latitant, donec transierit. Nunquā etiā lauant scutellos, imo carne cocta aluē in quo debent ponere eam lauant brodio bulliente de caldaria, & postea refundunt in caldariam. faciunt & filtrum & cooperiunt domos, Viri faciunt solum arcus & sagittas, fabricant strepas & strana, & faciunt cellas, carpentant domos & bigas: custodiunt equos & mungunt equas, concutiunt ipsū cosmos & lac equinum, faciunt vtres in quibus reconditur: custodiunt etiam camelos; & onerant eos. Oues & Capras custodiunt mixtim & mungunt aliquando viri, aliquando mulieres. De lacte ouium inspissato & salso parant pelles. Cum volunt manus vel caput lauare implent os suum aqua & paulatim fundunt de ore suo super manus, & eadem humectant crines suos, & lauant caput suum. De nuptijs eorum noueritis, quod nemo habet ibi vxorem nisi emat eam: vnde aliquando sunt puellæ multum aduultæ ante quam nubant: semper enim tenent eas parentes, donec vendant eas. Seruant etiam gradus consanguinitatis primum & secundum: nullum autem seruant affinitatis. Habent enim simul vel successiue duas sorores. Nulla vidua nubit inter eos, hac ratione; quia credunt quod omnes qui seruiunt eis in hac vita seruiunt in futura. Vnde de vidua credunt, quod semper reuertitur post mortem ad primum maritum. Vnde accidit turpis consuetudo inter eos quod filius scilicet ducit aliquando omnes vxores patris sui, excepta matre. Curia enim patris & matris semper accidit iuniori fillo. Vnde oportet quod ipse prouideat omnibus vxoribus patris sui, quia adueniunt eæ cum curia paterna. Et tunc si vult vtitur eis pro vxoribus, quia non reputat sibi iniuriam, si reuertatur ad patrem post mortem. Cum ergo aliquis fecerit pactum cum aliquo de filia accipiendā, facit pater puellæ conuiuium, & illa fugit ad consanguineos, vt ibi lateat: Tunc pater dicit, Ecce filia mea tua est, accipe eam vbiunque inueneris: Tunc ille quærit eam cum amicis suis, donec inueniat eam, & oportet, quod vi capiat eam, & ducat eam quasi violenter ad domum.

Pellium paratæ

De iusticijs eorum & iudicijs, et de morte ac

sepultura eorum.

De iusticijs eorum noueritis, quod quando duo homines pugnant, nemo audet se intermittere. Etiam pater non audet inuare filium. Sed qui peiorem partem habet, appellat ad curiam domini. Et si alius post appellationem tangat eum, interficitur. Sed oportet quod statim absque dilatione vadat: Et ille qui passus est iniuriam ducit eum quasi captiuum. Neminem puniunt capitali sententia, nisi deprehensus fuerit in facto, vel confessus. Sed quum diffamatus est a pluribus, bene torquent eum, vt confiteatur. Homicidiū puniunt capitali sententia, & etiam coitum cum non sua. Non suam dico vel vxorem vel famulam: Sua enim sclaua licet vi prout liber. Item enorme furtum puniunt morte. Pro leui furto, sicut pro vno ariete, dummodo non fuerit sæpe deprehensus in hoc, verberant crudeliter. Et si dant centum ictus oportet quod habeant centum baculos, de illis dico, qui verberantur sententia curiæ. Item falsos nuncios, quia faciunt se nuncios & non sunt, interficiunt. Item sacrilegas, de quibus dicam vobis postea plenius, quia tales reputant veneficas. Quando aliquis moritur plangunt vehementer ululando: & tunc sunt liberi quod non dant vestigal vsque ad annum. Et si quis interest morti alicujus adulti, non ingreditur domum ipsius Mangucham vsque ad annum. Si paruulus est qui moritur, non ingreditur vsque post lunationem. Iuxta sepulturam defuncti semper relinquant domum vnã. Si est de nobilibus, hoc est de genere Chingis, qui fuit primus pater & dominus eorum, illius qui moritur ignoratur sepultura: & semper circa loca illa vbi sepeliunt nobiles suos est vna herbergia hominum custodientium sepulchras. Non intellexi quod ipsi reconducunt thesaurum cum mortuis. Comani faciunt magnum tumultum super defunctum & erigunt ei statuam versa facie ad orientem, tenentem citharam in manu sua ante vmbelicum, fabricant & diuitibus pyramides, id est domunculas acutas: & alicubi vidi magnas turres de tegulis coctis: alicubi lapideas domos, quamuis lapides non inueniantur ibi. Vidi quandam nouiter defunctum, cui suspenderant pelles sexdecem equorum, ad quodlibet laus mundi quatuor inter perticas altas: & apposerunt ei cosmos vt biberet, & carnes vt comederet: & tamen dicebant de illo quod fuerat baptizatus. Alias vidi sepulturas versus orientem. Areas scilicet magnas structas lapidibus, aliquas rotundas, aliquas quadratas, & postea quatuor lapides longos erectos ad quatuor regiones mundi circa aream. Et vbi aliquis infirmatur cubat in lecto & ponit signum super domum suam, quod ibi est infirmus, & quod nullus ingrediatur: vnde nullus visitat infirmum nisi seruiens eius. Quando etiam aliquis de magnis curijs infirmatur, ponunt custodes longe circa curiam, qui infra illos terminos neminem permittunt transire: timent enim ne mali spiritus vel ventus veniant cum ingredientibus. Ipsos diuinatores vocant tanquam sacerdotes suos.

Quando ergo ingressi sumus inter illos barbaros, visum fuit mihi, vt dixi superius, quod ingrederer aliud sæculum. Circumdederunt enim nos in equis postquam diu fecerant nos expectare sedentes in vmbra sub bigis nigris. Prima quæstio fuit, vtrum vnquam fuisset inter eos, habito quod non: incepterunt impudenter petere de cibarijs nostris, & dedimus de pane biscocto & vino quod attuleramus nobiscum de villa: & potata vna lagena vini, petierunt aliam, dicentes, quod homo non ingreditur domum vno pede, non dedimus eis, excusantes nos quod parum haberemus. Tunc quæsiuerunt vnde veniremus, & quo vellemus ire, dixi eis superiora verba, quod audieramus de Sartach, quod esset Christianus, & quod vellem ire ad eum, quia habebam deferre ei literas vestras. Ipsi diligenter quæsiuerunt, vtrum irem de mea voluntate, vel vtrum mitteret. Ego respondi quod nemo coegit me ad eundem, nec iuissem nisi voluissem: vnde de mea voluntate ibam, & etiam de voluntate superioris mei. Bene caui, quod nunquam dixi, me esse nuncium vestrum. Tunc quæsiuerunt quid esset in bigis, vtrum esset aurum vel argentum, vel vestes preciosæ, quas deferrem Sartach. Ego respondi, quod Sartach videt quid deferremus ei, quando perueniremus ad eum; & quod non intererat eorum ista quærere: sed faceret me deduci vsque ad capitaneum suum, & ipse si vellet mihi præbere ducatum vsque ad Sartach faceret: sin minus, reuerterer. Erat enim in illa prouincia vnus consanguineus Baatu, nomine Scacatai, cui dominus imperator Constantinopolitanus mittebat literas deprecatorias, quod me permitteret transire. Tunc ipsi acquieuerunt, præbentes nobis equos & boues & duos homines, qui deducerent nos. Et alij qui adduxerant nos sunt reuersi. Prius tamen antequam prædicta darent, fecerunt nos diu expectare petentes de pane nostro pro parvulis suis: Et omnia quæ videbant super famulos nostros, cultellos, chirothecas, bursas, corrigias, omnia admirantes & volentes habere. Excusabam me, quia longa nobis restabat via, nec debebamus ita cito spoliare nos rebus necessarijs ad tantam viam perficiendam. Tunc dicebant quod esset batrator. Verum est quod nihil abstulerint vi: Sed valde importune & impudenter petunt quæ vident. Et si dat homo eis perdit, quia sunt ingrati. Reputant se dominos mundi, & videtur eis, quod nihil debeat eis negari ab aliquo. Si non dat, & postea indigeat seruicio eorum, male ministrant ei. Dederunt nobis bibere de lacte suo vaccino, a quo contractum erat butirum, acetoso valde, quod ipsi vocant Apram: & sic recessimus ab eis. Et visum fuit mihi recte, quod euasissem de manibus dæmonum. In crastino peruenimus ad capitaneum, Ex quo recessimus a Soldaia vsque ad Sartach in duobus mensibus nunquam iacuimus in domo nec in tentorio, sed semper sub dio, vel sub bigis nostris, nec vidimus aliquam villam, vel vestigium alicujus ædificij vbi fuisset villa, nisi tumbas Comanorū in maxima multitudine. Illo sero dedit nobis garcio qui ducebat nos bibere cosmos; ad cuius haurtum totus fudaui propter horrorem & nouitatem, quia nunquam biberam de eo, valde tamen sapidum videbatur mihi, sicut vere est.

De curia Scacatay, & quod Christiani non bibunt cosmos.

MAnc ergo obuiamus bigis Scacatay. onustis domibus. Et videbatur mihi quod obuiaret mihi ciuitas magna. Mirabar etiam super multitudinem armentorum boum & equorum & gregum ouium: paucos videbam homines qui ista gubernarent. vnde inquisiui quor homines haberet sub se? & dictum fuit mihi, quod non plusquam quingentos, quorum medietatem transueramus in alia herbergia. Tunc incepit mihi dicere garcio qui ducebat nos, quod aliquid oporteret Scacatay dare: & ipse fecit nos stare, & præcessit nuncians aduentum nostrum. Iam erat hora plusquam tertia, & deposuerunt domos suas iuxta quandam aquam. Et venit ad nos interpret ipsius, qui statim cognito, quod nunquam fueramus inter illos, poposcit de cibis nostris, & dedimus ei, poscebat etiam vestimentum aliquod, quia dicturus erat verbū nostrum ante dominum suum. Excusauimus nos. Quæsiuit quid portaremus domino suo? Accepimus vnum flascum de vino, & impleuimus vnum veringal de biscocto & platellum vnum de pomis & alijs fructibus. Sed non placebat ei, quia non ferebamus aliquem pannum pretiosum. Sic ramen ingressi sumus cum timore & verecundia. Sedebat ipse in lecto suo tenens citharam in manu, & vxor sua iuxta eum: de qua credebam in veritate, quod amputasset sibi nasum inter oculos vt simior esset: nihil enim habebat ibi de naso, & vixerat locum illum quodam vnguento nigro, & etiam supercilia: quod erat turpissimum in oculis nostris. Tunc dixi ei verba supradicta. Vbiq̃ue enim oportebat nos dicere idem verbum. Super hoc enim eramus bene præmoniti ab illis qui fuerant inter illos, quod nunquam mutaremus verba nostra, Rogauī etiam eum vt dignaretur accipere munusculum de manu nostra, excusans me, quia monachus eram, nec erat ordinis nostri possidere aurum, vel argentum, vel vestes preciosas. Vnde non habebam aliquid talium, quod possem ei dare: sed de cibis nostris acciperet pro benedictione. Tunc fecit recipi, & distribuit statim hominibus suis qui conuenerant ad potandum. Dedit etiam ei literas Imperatoris Constantinopolitani: (Hoc fuit in octauis ascensionis) Qui statim eas Soldaiam misit vt ibi interpretarentur: quia erant in Græco, nec habebat secum qui sciret literas Græcas. Quæsiuit etiam à nobis, si vellemus bibere cosmos, hoc est, lac iumentinum. Christiani enim Ruteni, Græci, & Alani, qui sunt inter eos, qui volunt stricte custodire legem suam, non bibunt illud: Imo non reputant se Christianos postquam biberunt. Et sacerdotes eorum reconciliant eos, tanquam negassent fidem Christianam. Ego respondi, quod habebamus adhuc sufficienter ad bibendum: & cum ille potus deficeret nobis, oporteret nos bibere illud, quod daretur nobis. Quæsiuit etiam quid contineretur in literis nostris, quas mittebatis Sartach. Dixi quod clausæ erant bullæ nostræ: & quod non erant in eis nisi bona verba & amabilia. Quæsiuit & quæ verba diceremus Sartach? Respondi, Verba fidei Christianæ. Quæsiuit quæ? Quia libenter velle audire. Tunc exposui ei prout potui per interpretem meum, qui nullus erat ingenij, nec alicuius eloquentiæ, symbolū fidei. Quo audito, ipse tacuit & mouit caput. Tunc assignauit nobis duos homines, qui nos custodirent, & equos & boues: & fecit nos bigare secum, donec reuerteretur nuncius, quem ipse miserat pro interpretatione literarum imperatoris; & iuimus cum eo vsque in crastinum Pentecostes.

Nota diligentes

Qualiter Alani venerunt ad eos in vigilia

Pentecostes.

IN vigilia Pentecostes venerunt ad nos quidam Alani, qui ibi dicuntur ¶ Acias, Christiani secundum ritum Græcorum; habentes literas Græcas & sacerdotes Græcos: ramen non sunt schismatici sicut Græci; sed sine acceptione personarum venerantur omnem Christianum: & derulerunt nobis carnes coctas, rogantes vt comederemus de cibo eorum, & orarem pro quodam defuncto eorum. Tunc dixi quod vigilia erat tantæ solennitatis, quod illa die non comederemus carnes. Et exposui eis de solennitate, super quo fuerunt multum gauisi; quia omnia ignorabant quæ spectant ad ritum Christianum, solo nomine Christi excepto. Quæsiuerunt & ipsi & alij multi Christiani, Ruteni & Hungari, vtrum possent saluari, quia oportebat eos bibere cosmos, & comedere morticina & interfecta à Saracenis & alijs infidelibus:

quæ etiam ipsi Græci & Ruteni sacerdotes reputant quasi morticina vel idolis immolata : quia ignorabant tempora ieiunij : nec poterant custodire etiam si cognouissent. Tunc rectificabar eos prout potui, docens & confortans in fide. Carnes quas detulerant reseruauimus vsque ad diem festum : nihil enim inueniebamus venale pro auro & argento, nisi pro telis & alijs pannis : & illos non habebamus, Quum famuli nostri offerebant eis ipperpera, ipsi fricabant digitis, & ponebant ad nares, vt odore sentirent, vtrum essent cuprum. Nec dabant nobis cibum nisi lac vaccinum acre valde & scetidum. Vinum iam deficiebat nobis. Aqua ita turbabatur ab equis, quod non erat potabilis. Nisi fuisset biscoctum quod habebamus, & gratia dei, fortè fuissimur mortui.

De Saraceno qui dixit se velle baptizari, et de hominibus qui apparent leprosi.

IN die pentecostes venit ad nos quidam Saracenus, qui cum loqueretur nobiscum, incepimus exponere fidem. Qui audiens beneficia dei exhibita humano generi in incarnatione Christi, & resurrectionem mortuorum, & iudicium futurum, & quod ablutio peccatorum esset in baptismo : dixit se velle baptizari. Et cum pararemus nos ad baptizandum eum, ipse subito ascendit equum suum, dicens se iurum domum & habiturum consilium cum vxore sua. Qui in crastino loquens nobiscum, dixit quod nullo modo auderet accipere baptismum, quia tunc non biberet cosmos. Christiani enim illius loci hoc dicebant, quod nullus verus Christianus deberet bibere : & sine potu illo non posset viuere in solitudine illa. A qua opinione nullo modo potui diuertere illum. Vnde noueritis pro certo quod multum elongantur à fide propter illam opinionem quæ iam viguit inter illos per Rutenos, quorum maxima multitudo est inter eos. Illa die dedit nobis ille capitaneus vnum hominem, qui nos deduceret vsque ad Sartach : & duos qui ducerent nos vsque ad proximam herbergiam ; quæ inde distabat quinque dietas prout boues poterant ire. Dederunt etiam nobis vnam capram pro cibo & plures vires lactis vaccini, & de cosmos parum : quia illud preciosum est inter illos. Et sic arripientes iter rectè in aquilonem, visum fuit mihi quod vnam portam inferni transissemus. Garciones qui ducebant nos, incipiebant nobis audacter furari, quia videbant nos parum cautos. Tandem amissis pluribus vexatio dabat nobis intellectum. Peruenimus tandem ad extremitatem illius provincie, quæ clauditur vno fossiato ab vno mari vsque ad aliud : extra quam erat herbergia eorum apud quos intrassemus : videbantur nobis leprosi omnes : quia erant viles homines ibi collocati, vt reciperent tributum ab accipientibus sal a salinis superius dictis. Ab illo loco, vt dicebant, oportebat nos ambulare quindecim diebus, quibus non inueniremus populum. Cum illis bibimus cosmos : & dedimus illis vnum veringal plenum fructibus & panem biscoctum. Qui dederunt nobis octo boues, vnam capram pro tanto itinere, & nescio quot vires plenos lacte vaccino. Sic mutatis bobus arripuimus iter, quod perfecimus decem diebus vsque ad aliam herbergiam : nec inuenimus aquam in illa via nisi in fossis in conuallibus factis, exceptis duobus paruis fluminibus. Et tendebamus rectè in orientem ex quo exiimus prædictam provinciam Gasariæ, habentes mare ad meridiem & vastam solitudinem ad aquilonem : quæ durat per viginti dietas alicubi in latitudine : In qua nulla est sylua, nullus mons, nullus lapis. Herba est optima. In hac solebant pascere Comani, qui dicuntur Capchat. A Tentonicis verò dicuntur Valani, & provincia Valania. Ab Isidoro vero dicitur à flumine Tanai vsque ad paludes Meotidis & Danubium Alania. Et durat ista terra in longitudine a Danubio vsque Tanaim ; qui est terminus Asiæ & Europæ, itinere duorum mensum velociter equitando prout equitant Tartari : Quæ rota inhabitabatur à Comanis Capchat, & etiam vltra à Tanai vsque Ettiliam : Inter quæ flumina sunt decem dietæ magnæ. Ad aquilonem verò istius provincie iacet Russia, quæ vbiq; syluas habet, & protenditur à Polonia & Hungaria vsque Tanaim : quæ tota vastata est à Tartaris, & adhuc quotidie vastatur. Præponunt enim Rutenis, quia sunt Christiani, Saracenos : & cum non possunt amplius dare aurum vel argentum, ducunt eos & paruulos eorum tanquam greges ad solitudinem vt custodiant animalia eorum. Vltra Russiam ad aquilonem est Prussia, quam nuper subiugauerunt totam fratres Teutonici. Et certe de facili acquirerent Russiam, si apponerent manum. Si enim Tartari audirent, quod magnus sacerdos, hoc est, Papa faceret cruce signari contra eos, omnes fugerent ad solitudines suas.

IBbanus ergo versus orientem, nihil videntes nisi cælum & terram, & aliquando mare ad dextram, quod dicitur Mare Tanais, & etiam sepulturas Comanorum, quæ apparebant nobis à duabus

duabus leucis secundum quod solebant parentela eorum sepeiri simul. Quam diu eramus in solitudine bene erat nobis: quod tedium quod patiebar, quum veniebamus ad mansiones eorum non possem exprimere verbis. Volebat enim dux noster, quod ad quoslibet capitaneos ingrederer cum xeno: & ad hoc non sufficebant expensæ. Quotidie enim eramus octo personæ comedentes viaticum nostrum exceptis iuuenibus, qui omnes volebant comedere nobiscum. Nos enim eramus quinque, & ipsi tres qui ducebant nos: duo ducentes bigas, & vnus iurans nobiscum vsque ad Sartach. Carnes quas dabam non sufficebant; nec inueniebamus aliquid venale pro moneta. Et cum sedebamus sub bigis nostris pro vmbra, quia calor erat ibi maximus illo tempore, ipsi ita importune ingerebant se nobis, quod concubabant nos, volentes omnia nostra videre. Si arripiebat eos appetitus purgandi ventrem, non elongabant se a nobis, quam possit faba iactari. Imo iuxta nos colloquentes mutuo faciebant immunditias suas: & multa alia faciebant quæ erant supra modum tediosa. Super omnia grauabat me, quod cum volebam dicere eis aliquod verbum ædificationis, interpres meus dicebat, non facietis me prædicare; quia nescio talia verba dicere. Et verum dicebat. Ego enim perpendi postea, quum incepti aliquantulum intelligere idioma, quod quum dicebam vnum, ipse totum aliud dicebat, secundum quod ei occurrebat. Tunc videns periculum loquendi per ipsum, elegi magis tacere. Ambulauius ergo cum magno labore de mansionem in mansionem: ita quod paucis diebus ante festum beatæ Mariæ Magdalenæ veni ad fluium magnum Tanais: qui diuidit Asiam ab Europa, sicut Nilus fluius Egypti, Asiam ab Africa. In illo loco quo applicuimus fecerunt Baatu & Sartach fieri quoddam castrum de Rutenis in ripa orientali, qui transferunt nuncios & mercatores cum nauiculis. Ipsi transtulerunt nos primo & postea bigas ponentes vnam rotam in vna barca & aliam in alia, ligantes barcas ad inuicem; & sic remigantes transibant. Ibi egit dux noster valde stulte. Ipse enim credebat, quod illi de casali deberent nobis ministrare equos, & dimisit animalia quæ adduxeramus in alia biga, vt redirent ad dominos suos. Et quum postulauius ab eis animalia, ipsi respondebant quod habebant priuilegiū a Baatu, quod non tenerentur ad aliud, nisi transferre euntes & redeuntes: etiam a mercatoribus accipiebant magnum tributum. Stetimus ergo ibi in ripa fluminis tribus diebus. Prima die dederunt nobis magnam borbatam recentem: secunda die panem de siligine & parum de carnibus, quas acceperat procurator villæ ostiatim per diuersas domos. Tertia die pisces siccos, quos habent ibi in magna multitudine. Fluius ille erat ibi tantæ latitudinis, quantæ est Sequana Parisijs. Et antequam peruenissemus ad locum illum, transiuimus multas aquas pulcherrimas & piscosissimas: Sed Tartari nesciunt eos capere: nec curant de pisce nisi sit ita magnus, quod possint comedere carnes eius, sicut carnes arietinas. Ille fluius est terminus Orientalis Russiæ; & oritur de paludibus quæ pertingunt ad Oceanum ad aquilonem. Fluius vero currit ad meridiem in quoddam magnum Mare septingentorum millium, antequam pertingat ad Mare Ponti: Et omnes aquæ quas transiuimus vadunt ad illas partes. Habet etiam prædictum flumen magnam syluam in ripa Occidentali. Vltra locum illum non ascendunt Tartari versus Aquilonem: quia tunc temporis ¶ circa introitum Augusti incipiunt redire versus meridiem. Vnde aliud est castrum inferius vbi transeunt nuncij tempore hyemali. Eramus igitur ibi in magna angustia, quia nec equos nec boues inueniebamus pro pecunia. Tandem postquam ostendi eis, quod laboraui pro comuni vtilitate omnium Christianorum, accomodauerunt nobis boues & homines: nos autem oportebat ire pedibus. Tunc temporis metebant siliginem: triticum non proficiebat ibi bene. Milium habent in magna copia. Mulieres Rutenæ ornant capita sicut nostræ. Supertunica alia sua exterius ornant vario vel grisio a pedibus vsque ad genua. Homines portant capas sicut Teutonici: sed in capite portant pileos de filtro acutos in summitate longo acumine. Ambulauius ergo tribus diebus non inuenientes populum. Et cum essemus valde fatigati & boues similiter, nec sciremus quorsum possemus Tartaros inuenire, accurrerunt subito duo equi, quos recepimus cum gaudio magno, & ascenderunt eos dux noster & interpres, vt specularentur quorsum possemus populum inuenire. Tandem quarta die inuentis hominibus gauisi sumus tanquam naufragi venientes ad portum. Tunc acceptis equis & bobus iuius de mansionem ad mansionem donec peruenimus vsque ad herbergiam Sartach secundo Calendas Augusti.

De regione Sartach, & de gentibus illius.

Regio ista vltra Tanaim est pulcherrima, habens flumina & syluas ad aquilonem. Sunt sylvæ maximæ, quas inhabitant duo genera hominum: Moxel scilicet, qui sunt sine lege, puripagani. Ciuitatem non habent sed casulas in syluis. Dominus eorum & magna pars pars eorum fuerunt interfecti in Alemania, Tartari enim duxerant eos ad introitum Alemaniar. Vnde ipsi multum commendantur sperantes quod adhuc liberabuntur per eos à seruitute Tartarorum. Si mercator veniat ad eos, oportet quod ille apud quem primo descendit provideat ei quamdiu vult esse inter eos. Si quis dormiat cum vxore alterius, ille non curat nisi videar proprijs oculis: vnde non sunt Zelotypi. Abundant apud eos porci, mel, & cera, pelles preciosæ, & falcones. Post illos sunt alij qui dicuntur Merdas, quos latini vocant Merduos, & sunt Saraceni. Post illos est ¶ Etilia, quæ est maior fluuius, quam vnquam viderim: & venit ab Aquilone de maiori Bulgaria tendens ad meridiem: & cadit in quendam lacum habentem spacium quatuor mensium in circuitu, de quo postea dicam vobis. Ista ergo duo flumina Tanais & Etilia versus regiones Aquilonis per quas transiuimus non distant ab inuicem nisi decem dietis, sed ad meridiem multum diuiduntur ab inuicem. Tanais enim descendit in Mare Ponti: Etilia facit prædictum Mare siue lacum, cum alijs multis fluminibus, quæ cadunt in illum de Perside. Habebamus autem ad meridiem montes maximos in quibus habitant in lateribus versus solitudinem illam Cergis & Alani siue ¶ Acas, qui sunt Christiani & adhuc pugnant contra Tartaros. Post istos prope Mare siue lacum Etiliæ sunt quidam Saraceni qui dicuntur Lesgi, qui similiter obediunt. Post hos est Perta ferrea, quam fecit Alexander ad excludendas Barbaras gentes de Perside: de cuius situ dicam vobis postea, ¶ quia transiui per eam in reditu. Et inter ista duo flumina in illis terris per quas transiuimus habitabant Comani antequam Tartari occuparent eas.

INuenimus ergo Sartach prope Etiliam per tres dietas: cuius curia valde magna videbatur inobis: quia habet sex vxores, & filius eius primogenitus iuxta eum duas vel tres: & quælibet habet domum magnam & bigas forte ducentas. Accessit autem ductor noster ad quendam Nestorinum Coiat nomine, qui est vnus de maioribus Curiarum suarum. Ille fecit nos ire valde longe ad domini Iannam, Ita vocant illum qui habet officium recipiendi nuncios. In sero præcepit nobis dictus Coiat, vt veniremus ad eum. Tunc incepit quærere ductor noster quid portarem ei, & cepit multum scandalizari, quum vidit quod nihil parabamus ad portandum. Stetimus coram eo, & ipse sedebat in gloria sua & faciebat sonare citharam & saltare coram se. Tunc dixi ei verba prædicta qualiter veniremus ad dominum eius, rogans eum vt iuaret nos vt Dominus eius videret literas nostras. Excusauit etiam me quia monachus eram, non habens, nec recipiens, nec tractans aurum vel argentum vel aliquid preciosum, solis libris & capella in qua seruiuebamus deo exceptis: vnde nullum xenium afferebamus ei nec domino suo. Qui enim propria dimiseram, non poteram portator esse alienorum. Tunc respondit satis mansuete, quod bene faciebam ex quo eram monachus: sic seruarem vorum meum, & non indigebat rebus nostris; sed magis daret nobis de suis, si indigeremus: & fecit nos sedere & bibere de lacte suo. Et post pauca rogauit vt diceremus benedictionem pro eo, quod & fecimus. Quæsiuit & quis esset maior dominus inter Francos, Dixi, Imperator, si haberet terram suam in pace. Non, inquit, sed Rex Franciarum. Audiuerat enim de vobis à domino Baldewyno de Hannonia. Inueni etiam ibi vnum de Socijs domus Dominicæ, qui fuerat in Cypro, qui narrauerat omnia quæ viderat. Tunc reuersi sumus ad hospitium nostrum. In crastino misi ei vnum flasconem de vino Muscato, quod optime se custodierat in tam longa via; & cophinum plenum biscocto quod fuit ei gratissimum, & retinuit illo sero famulos nostros secum. In crastino mandauit mihi quod venirem ad curiam; afferens literas regis & capellam & libros mecum, quia dominus suus vellet videre ea: quod & fecimus, onerantes vnam bigam libris & capella, & aliam panem & vino & fructibus. Tunc fecit omnes libros & vestes explicari, & circumstabant nos in equis multi Tartari & Christiani & Saraceni: quibus inspectis, quæsiuit, si vellem ista omnia dare domino suo, quo audito, expaui, & displicuit mihi verbum, dissimulans tamen respondi, domine rogamus, quatenus dominus noster dignetur recipere panem istum, vinum & fructus non pro xenio quia exiguum quid est, sed pro benedictione, ne vacua manu veniamus coram eo. Ipse autem videbit literas domini regis, & per eas sciet, quæ de causa venimus ad eum: & tunc stabimus mandato eius nos & omnes res nostras. Vestes enim sanctæ sunt, & non licet eas contingere nisi sacerdotibus. Tunc præcepit quod induceremus nos ituri coram domino suo: quod & fecimus. Ego autem indutus preciosioribus vestibus accepi in pectore puluinar, quod erat valde pulchrum, & bibulum quod dederis mihi, psalterium pulcherrimum, quod dederat mihi domina regina, in quo erant picturæ pulchræ. Socius meus accepit missale & crucem, clericus indutus supercilicio accepit thuribulum: sic accessimus ante dominum eius:

& leuauerunt

filtrum quod pendeat ante ostium vt nos posset videre. Tunc fecerunt flectere genua ter clerico & interpreti : à nobis non requisierunt. Tunc monuerunt nos valde diligenter, vt cauere-remus ingrediendo & egrediendo ne tangeremus limen domus, & vt cantaremus aliquam benedictionem pro eo. Tunc ingressi sumus cantando, Salue regina. In introitu autem ostij sta-bat bancus cum cosinos & cum ciphis. Et conuenerant omnes vxores eius : & ipsi Moal. In-gredientes nobiscum comprimebant nos. Illic Coiac tulit ei thuribulum cum incenso, quod ipse respexit, tenens in manu diligenter : postea tulit ei psalterium quod valde respexit, & vxor eius sedens iuxta eum. Postea tulit bibulum, & ipse quæsiuit, si euangelium esset ibi. Dixi, etiam tota Scriptura Sacra. Accepit etiam crucem in manu sua, & quæsiuit de imagine, vtrum esset imago Christi? Respondi quod sic. Ipsi Nestoriani & Armeni nunquam faciunt super cruces suas figuram Christi. Vnde videntur male sentire de passione, vel erubescunt eam. Postea fecit circumstantes nos retrahere se, vt plenius posset videre ornamenta nostra. Tunc obtuli ei litteras vestras cum transcriptis in Arabico & Syriano. Feceram enim eas transferri in Acon in vtraque litera & lingua. Et ibi erant sacerdotes Armeni, qui sciebant Turcicum & Arabicum, & Ille Socius domus Domini qui sciebat Syriacum, & Turcicum & Arabicum. Tunc exiimus & deposuimus vestimenta nostra : & venerunt scriptores & ille Coiac, & fecerunt litteras interpretari. Quibus auditis, fecit recipi panem & vinum & fructus : vestimenta & libros fecit nos reportare ad hospitium. Hoc actum est in festo Sancti Petri ad vincula.

Qualiter habuerunt in mandatis adire Baatu patrem Sartach.

IN crastino mane venit quidam sacerdos frater ipsius Coiac postulans vasculum cum chris-mate, quia Sartach volebat illud videre, vt dicebat, & dedimus ei. Hora vespertina vocauit nos Coiac, dicens nobis : Dominus rex scripsit bona verba Domino meo : Sed sunt in eis difficilia, de quibus nihil auderet facere, sine consilio patris sui. Vnde oportet vos ire ad patrem suum, & duas bigas quas adduxistis heri cum vestimentis & libris dimittetis mihi, quia Dominus meus vult res diligentius videre. Ego statim suspicatus sum malum de cupidi-tate eius, & dixi ei. Domine, non solum illas sed etiam duas quas adhuc habemus relinquemus sub custodia vestra. Non inquit, illas relinquetis, de alijs facietis velle vestrum. Dixi quod hoc nullo modo posset fieri. Sed totam dimitteremus ei, Tunc quæsiuit si vellemus morari in terra? Ego dixi, Si bene intellexistis litteras domini regis, potestis scire, quod sic. Tunc dixit, quod oporteret nos esse patientes multum, & humiles. Sic discessimus ab eo illo sero. In crastino mane misit vnum sacerdotem Nestorinum pro bigis, & nos duximus omnes quatuor.
Tunc occurrens nobis frater ipsius Coiacis, seperauit omnia nostra ab ipsis rebus quas tule-ramus pridie ad curiam, & illa accepit tanquam sua, scilicet libros & vestimenta : & Coiac præceperat, quod ferremus nobiscum vestimenta quibus induci fueramus coram Sartach vt illis indueremur coram Baatu si expediret : quas ille sacerdos abstulit nobis vi, dicens : Tu attulisti eas ad Sartach, modo vis ferre Baatu? Et cum vellem ei reddere rationem, respondit mihi, Ne loquaris nimis, & vade viam tuam. Tunc necessaria fuit patientia, quia apud Sartach, non patebat nobis ingressus; nec aliquis erat, qui nobis exhiberet iusticiam. Time-bam etiam de interprete, ne ipse aliquid aliter dixisset, quam ego dixissem ei : quia ipse bene voluisset, quod de omnibus fecissemus xenium. Vnum erat mihi solacium, quia quum persensi cupiditatem eorum, ego subtraxi de libris Bibulum & sententias, & alios libros quos magis diligebam. Psalterium dominæ reginæ non fui ausus subtrahere, quia illud fuerat nimis notatum propter aureas picturas quæ erant in eo. Sic ergo reuersi sumus cum duobus residuis bigis ad hospitium nostrum. Tunc venit ille, qui debebat ducere nos ad Baatu, volens cum festinatione arripere iter : cui dixi quod nulla ratione ducerem bigas. Quod ipse retulit ad Coiac. Tunc præcepit Coiac quod relinqueremus eas apud ipsum cum garcione nostro:
quod & fecimus. Sic ergo cuntes versus Baatu recta in Orientem, tertia die peruenimus ad Etiliam : cuius aquas cum vidi, mirabar vnde ab Aquilone descenderunt tantæ aquæ. Antequam recederemus à Sartach, dixit nobis supradictus Coiac cum alijs multis scriptoribus curiæ, Nolite dicere quod dominus noster sit Christianus, sed Moal. Quia nomen Christianitatis videtur eis nomen cuiusdam gentis. In tantam superbiam sunt erecti, quod quamuis aliquid forte credant de Christo, tamen nolunt dici Christiani volentes nomen suum, hoc est,

TEmpore quo Franci ceperunt Antiochiam tenebat monarchiam in illis lateribus A-quilonis quidam qui vocabatur Concan, Con est proprium nomen : Can nomen dignitatis quod idem est qui diuinator. Omnes diuinatores vocant Can, Vnde principes ci-cuntur Can, quia penes eos spectat regimen populi per diuinationem. Vnde legitur in historia Antiochiæ, quod Turci miserunt propter succursum contra Francos ad regnum Con can. De illis enim partibus venerunt omnes Turci, Iste Con erat Cara-Catay. Cara idem est quod nigrum. Carai nomen gentis. Vndè Cara-Catay idem est quod nigri Catay. Et hoc dicitur ad differentiam ipsorum Catay qui erant in Oriente super Oceanum de quibus postea dicam vobis. Isti Catay erant in quibusdam alpibus per quas transui, Et in qua-dam planicie inter illas Alpes erat quidam Nestorius pastor potens & dominus super populum, qui dicebatur Yayman, qui erant Christiani Nestorini. Mortuo Con can eleuauit se ille Nestorius in regem, & vocabant eum Nestoriani Regem Iohannem : & plus dicebant de ipso in decuplo quàm veritas esset. Ita enim faciunt Nestoriani venientes de partibus illis. De nihilo enim faciunt magnos rumores, Vnde disseminauerunt de Sartach quod esset Christianus, & de Mangu Can & Ken can : quia faciunt maiorem reueren-tiam Christianis, quàm alijs populis, & tamen in veritate Christiani non sunt. Sic ergo exiuit magna fama de illo Rege Iohanne. Et quando ego transui per pascua eius, nullus a-liquid sciebat de eo nisi Nestoriani pauci. In pascuis eius habitat Kencam, apud cuius curiam fuit frater Andreas : & ego etiam transui per eam in reditu. Huic Iohanni erat frater quidam potens, pastor similiter, nomine Vut : & ipse erat ultra Alpes ipsorum Caracatay, distans à fratre suo spaciū trium hebdomadarum & erat dominus eiusdem Villulæ quæ dicitur Ca-racarum, populum habens sub se, qui dicebantur Cric, Merkit, qui erant Christiani Ne-storini. Sed ipse dominus eorum dimisso cultu Christi, sectabatur idola ; habens sacerdotes idolorum, qui omnes sunt inuocatores dæmonum & sorilegi. Ultra pascua istius ad decem vel quindecim dietas erant pascua Moal : qui erant pauperrimi homines sine capitaneo & sine lege, exceptis fortilegijs & diuinationibus, quibus omnes in partibus illis intendunt. Et iuxta Moal erant alij pauperes, qui dicebantur Tartari. Rex Iohannes mortuus fuit sine hærede, & ditatus est frater eius Vnc ; & faciebat se vocari Can : & mittebantur armenta greges eius vsque ad terminos Moal, Tunc temporis Chingis faber quidam erat in populo Moal : & furabatur de animalibus Vnc can quod poterat : In tantum quod conqueisti sunt pastores Vut domino suo. Tunc congregauit exercitum & equitauit in terram Moal, querens ipsum Cyngis. Et ille fugit inter Tartaros & latuit ibi. Tunc ipse Vut accepta prædâ Moal & à Tartaris reuersus est. Tunc ipse Cyngis allocutus est Tartaros & ipsos Moal dicens, Quia sine duce sumus opprimunt nos vicini nostri. Et fecerunt ipsum ducem & capitaneum Tartari & Moal. Tunc latenter congregato exercitu irruit super ipsum Vut, & vicit ipsum, & ipse fugit in Cathaiam, Ibi capta fuit filia eius, quam Cyngis dedit vni ex filijs in vxor-em, ex quo ipsa suscepit istum qui nunc regnat Mangu. Tunc ipse Cyngis premittebat vbique ipsos Tartaros : & inde exiuit nomen eorum, quia vbique clamabatur, Ecce Tartari veniunt. Sed per crebra bella modo omnes fere deleti sunt. Vnde isti Moal modo volunt ex-tinguere illud nomen, & suum eleuare. Terra illa in qua primo fuerunt, & vbi est adhuc cura Cyngiscan, vocatur Mancherule. Sed quia Tartari est regio circa quam fuit acquisitio eorum, illam ciuitatem habent pro regali, & ibi prope eligunt suum Can.

De Rutenis

DESartach autem vtrum credit in Christum vel non nescio. Hoc scio quod Christianus non vult dici. Inmò magis videtur mihi deridere Christianos. Ipse enim est in itinere Christianorum; scilicet Rutenorum, Blacorum, Bulgarorum minoris Bulgariae, Soldainorum, Kerkiforum, Alanorum: qui omnes transeunt per eum quum vadunt ad curiam patris sui deferre ei munera, vnde magis amplectitur eos. Tamen si Saraceni veniant, & maius afferant, citius expediuntur. Habet etiam circa se Nestorinos sacerdotes, qui pulsant tabulam, & cantant officium suum.

Est alius qui dicitur Berta super Baatu, qui pascit versus Portam ferream, vbi est iter Saracenorum omnium qui veniunt de Perside & de Turchia; qui euntes ad Baatu, & trans-euntes per eum, deferunt ei munera. Et ille facit se Saracenum, & non permittit in terra sua comedi carnes porcinas. Baatu in reditu nostro præceperat ei, quod transferret se de illo loco ultra Etiliam ad Orientem; nolens nuncios Saracenorum transire per eum, quia videbatur sibi damnosum.

Quatuor autem diebus quibus fuimus in curia Sartach, nunquam prouisum fuit nobis de cibo, nisi semel de modico cosmos. In via verò inter ipsum & patrem suum habuimus magnum timorem. Ruteni enim & Hungari, & Alani serui eorum, quorum est magna multitudo inter eos, associant se viginti vel triginta simul, & fugiunt de nocte, habentes pharetras & arcus, & quemcunque inueniunt de nocte interficiunt, de die latitantes. Et quando sunt equi eorum fatigati veniunt de nocte ad multitudinem equorum in pascuis, & mutant equos, & vnum vel duos ducunt secum, vt comedant quum indigerint. Occursum ergo talium timebat multum Dux noster. In illa via fuissimus mortui fame, si non portauissemus nobiscum modicum de biscocto.

Venimus tandem ad Etiliam maximum flumen. Est enim in quadruplo maius quam Sequana, & profundissimum: Veniens de maiori Bulgaria, quæ est ad Aquilonem, tendens in quendam lacum, siue quoddam mare, quod modò vocant mare Sircan, à quadam ciuitate, quæ est iuxta ripam eius in Perside. Sed Isidorus vocat illud mare Caspium. Habet enim montes Caspios, & Persidem à meridie: montes verò Musihet, hoc est, Assassinatorum ad Orientem, qui contiguantur cum montibus Caspijs: Ad Aquilonem verò habet illam solitudinem, in qua modò sunt Tartari. Prius verò erant ibi quidam qui dicebantur Canglæ: Et ex illo latere recipit Etiliam, qui crescit in æstate sicut Nilus Ægypti. Ad Occidentem verò habet montes Alanorum & Lesgi; & Portam ferream, & montes Georgianorum. Habet igitur illud mare tria latera inter montes, Aquilonare verò habet ad planiciem. Frater Andreas ipse circumdedit duo latera eius, meridionale scilicet & Orientale. Ego verò alia duo; Aquilonare scilicet in eundo à Baatu ad Mangu cham, Occidentale verò in reuertendo de Baatu in Syriam. Quatuor mensibus potest circumdari. Et non est verum quod dicit Isidorus, quod sit sinus exiens ab Oceano: nusquam enim tangit Oceanum, sed vnde que circumdatur terra.

Litteræ Regis Francorum.

Tota illa regio à latere Occidentali istius maris, ubi sunt Porta ferrea Alexandri, & montes Alaiorum, vsq; ad Oceanum Aquilonarem & paludes Mæotidis ubi mergitur Tanais, solebat dici Albania: de qua dicit Isidorus, quod habet canes ita magnos, tantæque feritatis, ut tauros premant, leones perimant. Quod verum est, prout intellexi à narrantibus, quod ibi versus Oceanum Aquilonarem faciunt canes trahere in bigis sicut boues propter magnitudinem & fortitudinem eorum. In illo ergo loco ubi nos applicuimus super Etliam est casale nouum, quod fecerunt Tartari de Rutenis mixtim, qui transponunt nuncios euntes, & redeuntes ad curiam Baatu: quia Baatu est in vltiori ripa versus Orientem: nec transitillum locum ubi nos applicuimus ascendendo in æstate, sed iam incipiebat descendere. De Ianuario enim vsque ad Augustum ascendit ipse, & omnes alij versus frigidas regiones, & in Augusto incipiunt redire. Descendimus ergo in naui ab illo casali vsque ad curiam eius. Et ab illo loco vsque ad villas maioris Bulgariæ versus Aquilonem, sunt quinque diætæ. Et miror quis Diabolus portauit illuc legem Machometi. A Porta enim ferrea, quæ est exitus Persidis, sunt plusquam triginta diætæ per transuersum, solitudinem ascendendo iuxta Etliam vsque in illam Bulgariam, ubi nulla est ciuitas, nisi quædam casalia propè ubi cadit Etlia in mare. Et illi Bulgari sunt pessimi Saraceni, fortius tenentes legem Machometi, quam aliqui alij. Quum ergo vidi curiam Baatu, expaui, quia videbantur propè domus eius, quasi quædam magna ciuitas protensa in longum, & populus vndiq; circumfusus, vsq; ad tres vel quatuor leucas. Et sicut populus Israel sciebat vnusquisq; ad quam regionem tabernaculi deberet figere tentoria: ita ipsi sciunt ad quod latius curiæ debeant se collocare, quando ipsi deponunt domus. Vnde dicitur curia Orda lingua eorum, quod sonat medium, quia semper est in medio hominum suorum: hoc excepto, quod rectè ad meridiem nullus se collocat, quia ad partem illam aperiuntur portæ Curiæ: Sed à dextris & à sinistris extendunt se quantum volunt secundum exigentiam locorum: dummodo rectè ante curiam, vel ex opposito curiæ non descendunt. Fuimus ergo ducti ad quendam Saracenum, qui non prouidebat nobis de aliquo cibo: sequenti die fuimus ad curiam, & fecerunt extendi magnum tentorium, quia domus non potuisset capere tot homines & mulieres, quos conuenerant. Monuit nos ductor noster ut non loqueremur, donec Baatu præciperet: & tunc loqueremur breuiter. Quasiuit etiam utrum misissetis nuncios ad eos. Dixi qualiter miseratis ad Kencham, & quod nec ad ipsum misissetis nuncios, nec ad Sartach literas, nisi credidissetis eos fuisse Christianos: quia non pro timore aliquo, sed ex congratulatione, quia audieratis eos esse Christianos, misistis. Tunc duxit nos ad papilionem, & monebatur, ne tangeremus cordas tentorii, quas ipsi reputant loco liminis domus. Stetimus ibi nudis pedibus in habitu nostro discooperitis capitibus, & eramus spectaculum magnum in oculis eorum. Fuerat enim ibi frater Iohannes de Plano carpini, sed ipse mutauerat habitum ne contemneretur, quia erat nuncius Domini Papæ. Tunc inducti fuimus vsque ad medium tentorii, nec requisierunt ut faceremus aliquam reuerentiam genua flectendo, sicut solent facere nuncios. Stetimus ergo coram eo quantum possit dici, Miserere mei Deus: & omnes erant in summo silentio. Ipse vero super solium longum sedebat & latum sicut lectus, totum deauratum, ad quod ascendebatur tribus gradibus, & vna domina iuxta eum. Viri vero diffusi sedebant à dextris dominiæ & à sinistris, quod non implebant mulieres ex parte vna, quia erant ibi solæ vxores Baatu, implebant viri. Bancus verò cum cosmos & ciphis maximis aureis & argenteis, ornatis lapidibus prætiosis erat in introitu tentorii. Respexit ergo nos diligentius, & nos eum: & videbatur mihi similis in statura Domino Iohanni de Bello monte cuius anima requiescit in pace. Erat etiam vultus eius tunc persusus gutta rosea. Tandem præcepit ut loquerer. Tunc ductor noster præcepit ut flecteremus genua, & loqueremur. Flexi vnum genua tanquam homini: tunc innuit quod ambo flecterem, quod & feci, nolens contendere super hoc, Tunc præcepit quod loquerer. Et ego cogitans quod orarem Dominum, quia flexeram ambo genua, Incepi verba oratione, dicens: Domine, nos oramus Dominum, à quo bona cuncta procedunt, qui dedit vobis ista terrena, ut det vobis post hæc cælestia: quia hæc sine illis vana sunt. Et ipse diligenter auscultauit, & subiunxit: Noueritis pro certo quod cælestia non habebitis, nisi fueritis Christianus. Dicit enim Deus, Qui crediderit & baptizatus fuerit, saluus erit: qui vero non crediderit, condemnabitur. Ad illud verbum ipse modestè submisit, & alij Moal inceperunt plaudere manus deridendo nos. Et obstupuit interpres meus, quem oportuit me confortare ne timerem. Tunc factò silentio, dixi: Ego veni ad filium vestrum, quia audiuius quod esset Christianus, & attuli ei literas ex parte Domini Regis Francorum: ipse misit me huc ad vos. Vos debetis scire scire qua de causa. Tunc fecit me surgere. Et quæsiuit nomen vestrum, & meum, & socij mei, & interpretis, & fecit omnia scribi. Quæsiuit etiam, quia intellexerat quod exieratis terram vestram cum exercitu vt haberetis bellum. Respondi, Contra Saracenos violantes domum Dei Hierusalem. Quæsiuit etiam si vnquam misissetis nuncios ad eum. Ad vos dixi nunquam. Tunc fecit nos sedere, & dari de lacte suo ad bibendum, quod ipsi valde magnum reputant, quando aliquis bibit cosmos cum eo in domo sua. Et dum sedens respicerem terram, præcepit vt eleuarem vultum, volens adhuc nos amplius respicere, vel fortè pro sortilegio: quia habent pro malo omine vel signo, vel pro mala Prognostica, quando aliquis sedet coram eis inclinata facie quasi tristis, maxime quum appodiat maxillam, vel mentum super manum. Tunc exiimus, & post pauca, venit Ductor noster ad nos, & ducens nos ad hospitium, dixit mihi, Dominus Rez rogat, quod retinearis in terra ista: & hoc non potest Baatu facere sine conscientia Mangucham. Vnde oportet quod tu & interpret tuus cati ad Mangucham. Socius verò tuus & alius homo reuertentur ad curiam Sartach ibi expectantes donec reuertaris. Tunc incepit homo D E I Interpret lugere reputans se perditum: Socius etiam meus contestari, quod citius amputarent ei caput, quam quod diuideretur à me. Et ego dixi, quod sine socio non possem ire: Et etiam quod benè indigebamus duobus famulis, quia si contingeret vnum infirmari, non possem solus remanere. Tunc ipse reuersus ad curiam dixit verba Baatu. Tunc præcepit: vadant duo sacerdotes & interpret: & Clericus reuertatur ad Sartach. Ille reuersus dixit nobis summam. Et quando volebam loqui pro Clerico, quod iret nobiscum, dixit, Non loquamini amplius, quia Baatu definiuit, & eo amplius non audeo redire ad curiam. De eleemosyna habebat Goset clericus viginti sex ipperpera, & non plus: quorum decem retinuit sibi & puero: & sexdecem dedit homini Dei pro nobis. Et sic diuisi sumus cum lachrimis ab inuicem: Illo redeunte ad curiam Sartach, & nobis ibi remanentibus.

De itinere fratrum versus curiam Mangucham.

IN Vigilia Assumptionis peruenit ipse clericus ad Curiam Sartach: & in crastino fuerunt Sacerdotes Nestorini induti vestimentis nostris coram Sartach. Tunc ducti fuimus ad alium hospitem, qui debebat nobis providere de domo & cibo & equis. Sed quia non habuimus quod daremus ei, omnia malè faciebat. Et bigauimus cum Baatu descendendo iuxta Etiliam quinque septimanas, Aliquando habuit socius meus tantam famem, quod dicebat mihi quasi lachrymando: videbatur mihi quod nunquam comederim. Forum sequitur semper Curiam Baatu. Sed illud erat tam longè à nobis, quod non poteramus ire. Oportebat enim nos ire pedibus pro defectu equorum. Tandem inuenerunt nos quidam Hungari, qui fuerant Clericuli, quorum vnus sciebat adhuc cantare multa corde, & habebatur ab alijs Hungaris quasi Sacerdos, & vocabatur ad exequias suorum defunctorum: Et alius fuerat competenter instructus in Grammatica: qui intelligebat quicquid dicebamus ei literaliter, sed nesciebat respondere: qui fecerunt nobis magnam consolationem, afferentes cosmos ad bibendum, & carnes aliquando ad comedendum: qui quum postulassent à nobis aliquos libros, & non haberem quos possem dare, nullos enim habebam, nisi Biblium & breuiarium, dolui multum. Tunc dixi eis, afferte nobis chartas, & ego scribam vobis, quamdiu erimus hic: quod & fecerunt. Et scripsi vtrasque horas Beatæ Virginis & officium defunctorum. Quodam die iunxit se nobis quidam Comanus, salutans nos verbis latinis, dicens, Saluete Domini. Ego mirans, ipso resalutato, quæsi ab eo, quis eum docuerat illam salutationem. Et ipse dixit quod in Hungaria fuit baptizatus à fratribus nostris qui docuerant illum eam. Dixit etiam quod Baatu quæsiuerat ab eo multa de nobis, & quod ipse dixerat ei conditiones ordinis nostri. Ego vidi Baatu equitantem cum turba sua, & omnes patres familias equitantes cum eo, secundum æstimationem meam non erant quingenti viri. Tandem circa sinem exaltationis sanctæ crucis venit ad nos quidam diues Moal, cuius patererat millenarius, quod magnum est inter eos, dicens, Ego vos debeo ducere ad Mangucham, & est iter quatuor mensium: & tantum frigus est ibi, quod finduntur ibi lapides & arbores pro frigore: Videatis vtrum poteritis sustinere. Cui respondi: Spero in virtute Dei, quod nos sustinebimus, quod alij homines possunt sustinere. Tunc dixit: Si non poteritis sustinere, ego relinquam vos in via. Cui respondi, hoc non esset iustum: quia non inuimus pro nobis, nisi missi à Domino vestro: Vnde ex quo vobis committimur, non debetis nos dimittere. Tunc dixit, benè erit. Post

Quinque septimanas iuxta Etiliam descendebant.

Et secunda die post exaltationem Sanctæ crucis incepimus equitare nos tres habentes signarios: & equitauius continuè versus Orientem vsque ad festum Omnium Sanctorum, per totam illam terram, & adhuc amplius habitabant Cangle, quædam parentela Romanorum. Postquam iucramus duodecim diebus ab Etilia inuenimus magnum flumen, quod vocant Iagag: & venit ab Aquilone de terra Pascatir descendens in prædictum mare. Idioma Pascatir & Hungarorum idem est: & sunt pastores sine ciuitate aliqua. Et contiguatur maiori Bulgariæ ab Occidente. Ab illa terra versus Orientem in latere illo Aquilonari non est amplius aliqua ciuitas. Vnde Bulgaria maior est vltima regio habens ciuitatem. De illa regione Pascatir exierunt Huni, qui postea dicti sunt Hungari. Vnde ipsa est maior Bulgaria. Et dicit Isidorus, quod perniciosus equis claustra Alexandri rupibus Caucasii feras gentes cohibentia transierunt: ita quod vsque in Ægyptum soluebatur eistributum. Destruerunt etiam omnes terras vsque in Franciam. Vnde fuerunt maioris potentia, quam sunt adhuc Tartari. Cum illis occurrerunt Blaci & Bulgari & Vandali. De illa enim maiori Bulgaria venerunt illi Bulgari: Et qui sunt vltra Danubium propè Constantinopolin, & iuxta Pascatir sunt Ilac, quod idem est quod Blac: sed B. nesciunt Tartari sonare: à quibus venerunt illi qui sunt in terra Assani. Vtrosque enim vocant Ilac, & hos & illos lingua Rutenorum & Polonorum, & Boëmorum. Sclauorum est idem idioma cum lingua Vandalorum, quorum omnium manus fuit cum Hunis: & nunc pro maiori parte est cum Tartaris quos Deus suscitauit à remotioribus partibus, populum inuluni, & gentem stultam, secundum quod dicit Dominus, Prouocabo eos, id est, non custodientes Legem suam, in eo qui non est populus, & in gente stulta irritabo eos: Hoc complectur ad litteram super omnes nationes non custodientes Legem Dei. Hoc quod dixi de terra Pascatir scio per fratres Prædicatores, ¶ qui inierunt illuc ante aduentum Tartarorum. Et ex tunc erant ipsi subiugati à vicinis Bulgariis Saraccis, & plures eorum facti Saraceni. Alia possunt sciri per Chronica: quia constat quod illæ prouinciæ post Constantinopolim, quæ modo dicuntur Bulgaria, Valachia, Sclauonia, fuerunt prouinciæ Græcorum. Hungaria fuit Pannonia. Equitauius ergo per terram Cangle à festo Sanctæ crucis vsque ad festum Omnium Sanctorum, quolibet die ferè quantum est à Parisijs vsque Aurelianum, secundum quod possum estimare, & plus aliquando: secundum quod habebamus copiam equorum. Aliquando enim mutabamus bis in die vel ter equos. Aliquando ibamus duobus diebus vel tribus, quibus non inueniebamus populum, & oportebat leuius ire. De viginti vel triginta equis nos semper habebamus peiores, quia extranei eramus. Omnes enim accipiebant ante nos equos meliores. Mihi semper providebant de fortiequo, quia eram ponderosus valde: sed vtrum suauiter ambularet vel non, de hoc non audeim facere quæstionem. Nec etiam audebam conqueri, si durè portaret, sed fortunam suam oportebat vnumquemque sustinere. Vnde oriebatur nobis difficillimus labor: quia multoties fatigabantur equi, antequam possemus peruenire ad populum. Et tunc oportebat nos percutere & flagellare equos, ponere etiam vestes super alios saginarios, mutare equos saginarios; aliquando nos duos ire in vno equo.

DE fame & siti, frigore & fatigatione non est numerus. Non enim dant cibum nisi in sero. In mane dant aliquid bibere, vel sorbere milium. In sero dabant nobis carnes, scapulam arietis cum costis & de brodio ad mensuram bibere. Quando habebamus de brodio carniū ad satietatem optimè reficiebamur. Et videbatur mihi suauissimus potus & maximè maximè nutriendi. Peria sexta permanebam ieiunius usque ad noctem, nihil hauriens. Tunc oportebat me in tristitia & dolore comedere carnes. Aliquando oportebat nos comedere carnes semicostas vel ferè crudas propter defectum materiæ ignis, quando iacebamus in campis & de nocte descendebamus: quia tunc non poteramus benè colligere stercore equorum vel bo-um: aliam materiam ignis rarè inueniebamus: nisi fortè alicubi aliquas spinas. In ripis etiam aliquorum fluminum sunt alicubi sylvar. Sed hoc rarè. In principio despiciebat nos multum Ductor noster, & fastidiebat eum ducere tam viles homines. Postea tamen quando incepit nos melius cognoscere, ducebat nos per curias diuitum Moallorum: & oportebat nos erare pro ipsis. Vnde si habuisssem bonum interpretem, habebam oportunitatem seminandi multa bona. Ille Chingis primus Cham habuit quatuor filios, de quibus egressi sunt multi, qui omnes habent modo magnas curias: & quotidie multiplicantur & diffunduntur per illam Vastam solitudinem, quæ est sicut mare. Per multos ergò illorum ducebat nos Ductor noster. Et mirabantur supra modum, quia volebamus recipere aurum, vel argentum, vel vestes præciosas. Querebant etiam de magno Papa, si esset ita senex sicut audierant: audierant enim quod esset quingentorum annorum. Querebant de terris nostris si ibi essent multæ oues, & boues, & equi. De Oceano mari non potuerunt intelligere, quod esset sine termino vel sine ripa. In vigilia omnium Sanctorum dimisimus viam in Orientem, ¶ quia iam populus descenderat multum versus meridiem: Et direximus iter per quasdam Alpes rectè in meridiem continuè per octo dies. In illa solitudine vidi multos asinos, quos vocant Colan, qui magis assimilantur mulis: quos multum prosequuti sunt Dux nocte & focij eius, sed nihil profecerunt propter nimiam velocitatem eorum. Septima die inceperunt nobis apparere ad meridiem montes altissimi: & intrauimus planiciem, quæ irrigabatur sicut hortus, & inuenimus terras cultas. In octauis omnium Sanctorum intrauimus villam quandam Saracenorum nomine Kenchat: cuius capitaneus occurrebat extra villam duci nostro cum ceruisa & ciphis. Hic est enim mos eorum; quod de omnibus villis subditis eis, occurratur nuncijs Baatu, & Mangu cham cum cibo & potu. Tunc temporis ibant ibi super glaciem. Et prius à festo Sancti Michaelis habueramus gelu in solitudine. Quæsiui de nomine Prouinciæ illius: sed quia iam eramus in alio territorio nescierunt mihi dicere, nisi à nomine ciuitatis, quæ erat valdè parua. Et descendebat magnus fluuius de montibus, qui irrigabat totam regionem, secundum quod volebant aquam ducere: nec descendebat in aliquod mare, sed absorbebatur à terra: & faciebat etiam multas paludes. Ibi vidi vites, & bibi bis de vino.

De interfectione Ban & habitatione Teutonorum.

Sequenti die venimus ad aliud casale propinquius montibus. Et quæsiui de montibus, de quibus intellexi, quod essent montes Caucafi: qui contiguantur ex vtraque parte maris ab Occidente vsque ad Orientem: & quod transueramus mare supradictum, quod intrat Etalia. Quæsiui etiam de Talas ciuitate, in qua erant Teutonici serui Buri, de quibus dixerat frater Andreas, de quibus etiam quæsiueram multum in curia Sartach & Baatu. Sed nihil poteram intelligere, nisi quod Ban dominus eorum fuerat interfectus tali occasione. Ipse non erat in bonis pascuis. Et quadam die dum esset ebrius, loquebatur ita cum hominibus suis. Nonne sum de genere Chingis can sicut Baatus (Et ipse erat nepos Baatu vel frater) quare non vadam super ripam Etalia, sicut Baatu, vt pascam ibi? Quæ verba relata fuerunt Baatu. Tunc ipse Baatu scripsit hominibus illius, vt adducerent ei dominum ipsorum vinctum: quod & fecerunt. Tunc Baatu quæsiuit ab eo si dixisset tale verbum: & ipse confessus est, tamen excusauit se, quia ebrius erat: (quia solent condonare ebrijs:) & Baatu respondit: Quomodo audebas me nominare in ebrietate tua? Et fecit ei amputari caput. De illis Teutonicis nihil potui cognoscere vsque ad curiam Mangu. Sed in supradicto casali intellexi, quod Talas erat post nos iuxta mōtes per sex dietas. Quando veni ad curiam Mangu cham, intellexi quod ipse Mangu transulerat eos de licentia Baatu versus Orientem spacio itineris vnus mensis à Talas ad quandam villam quæ dicitur Bolac: vbi fodiunt aurum, & fabricant arma. Vnde non potui ire nec redire per eos. Transiui eundo satis prope, per tres dietas fortè, ciuitatem illam: sed ego ignoravi: nec potuisssem etiam declinare extra viam, si benè sciuissem. A prædicto casali iui-mus ad Orientem iuxta montes prædictos: & ex tunc intrauimus inter homines Mangu cham, qui vbique cantabant & plaudebant coram ductore nostro: quia ipse erat nuncius Baatu. Hunc enim honorem exhibent sibi mutuo, vt homines Mangu cham recipiant nuncios Baatu prædicto modo: Et similiter homines Baatu nuncios Mangu. Tamen homines Baatu superiores sunt, nec exequuntur ita diligenter. Paucis diebus post hæc intrauimus Alpes, in quibus solebant habitare Cara catay: & inuenimus ibi magnum fluuium, quem oportuit nos transire nauigio. Post hæc intrauimus quandam uallem, ubi vidi castrum quoddam destructum, cuius muri non erant nisi de luto, & terra colebatur ibi. Et post inuenimus quandam bonam villam quæ dicitur Equius, in qua erant Saraceni loquentes Persicum: longissimè tamen erant à Perside. Sequenti die transgressi illis Alpibus quæ descendeant à magnis montibus ad meridiem, ingressi sumus pulcherrimam planiciem habentem montes altos à dextris, & quoddam mare à sinistris, siue quandam lacum qui durat quindecim dietas in circuitu. Et illa planicies tota irrigabatur ad libitum aquis descendentibus de montibus, quæ omnes recipiuntur in illud mare. In æstate rediimus ad latus Aquilonare illius maris, ubi similiter erant magni montes. In planicie prædicta solebant esse multæ villæ: sed pro maiori parte omnes erant destructæ, ut pascere ibi Tartari: quia optima pascua erant ibi. Vnum magnam villam inuenimus ibi nomine Cailac, in qua erat forum, & frequentabant eam multi mercatores. In illa quieuius quindecim diebus, expectantes quendam scriptorem Baatu, qui debebat esse socius ducis nostri in negotijs expediendis in curia Mangu. Terra illa solebat dici Organum: & solebant habere proprium idioma, & propriam literam: Sed hæc tota erat occupata à Contomannis. Etiam in literatura illa & idiomate solebant facere Nestorini de partibus illis. Dicuntur Organa, quia solebant esse optimi Organistæ vel Citharistæ, ut dicebatur mihi. Ibi primo vidi Idolatrias, de quibus noueritis, quod sunt multæ scilicet in Oriente, Quod Nestorini et Saraceni sunt mixti & Idolatre.

Iugures populi, Idolatre.

Cailac.

Primi sunt Iugures, quorum terra contiguatur cum terra prædicta Organum inter montes illos versus Orientem: Et in omnibus ciuitatibus eorum sunt mixti Nestorini & Saraceni, Et ipsi etiam sunt diffusi versus Persidem in ciuitatibus Saracenorum. In prædicta ciuitate Cealac habebant etiam ipsi tres Idolatrias, quarum duas intraui, ut viderem stultitias eorum. In prima inueni quendam, qui habebat cruciculam de atramento super manum suam. Vnde credidi quod esset Christianus: quia ad omnia quæ quærebam ab eo, respondebat ut Christianus. Vnde quæsi ab eo: Quare ergo non habetis crucem & imaginem Iesu Christi? Et ipse respondit, non habemus consuetudinem. Vnde ego credidi quod essent Christiani: sed ex defectu doctrine omitterent. Videbam enim ibi post quandam cistam, quæ erat eis loco altaris, super quam ponunt lucernas & oblationes, quandam imaginationem habentem alas quasi Sancti Michaelis: & alias quasi ipsorum tenentes digiros sicut ad benedicendum. Illo sero non potui aliud inuenire. Quia Saraceni in tantum inuiant eos, quod nec etiam volunt loqui inde eis. Vnde quando quærebam a Saracenis de ritu talium, ipsi scandalizabantur. In crastino fuerunt kalendæ & pascha Saracenorum & murau hospitium: ita quod fui hospitatus prope aliam Idolatriam, Homines enim colligunt nuncios, quilibet secutum posse suum vel portionem suam. Tunc intrans Idolatriam prædictam inveni sacerdotes Idolorum. In kalendis enim aperiunt templa sua, & ornant se sacerdotes, & offerunt populi oblationes de pane & fructibus. Primum ergo describo vobis ritus communes omnes Idolatarum: & postea istorum Iugurum, qui sunt quasi secta diuisa ab alijs. Omnes adorant ad Aquilonem complosis manibus: & prosternebant se genibus flexis ad terram, ponentes frontem super manus. Vnde Nestorini in partibus illis nullo modo iungunt manus orando: sed orant extensis palmis ante pectus. Porrigunt templa sua ab Oriente in Occidentem: & in latere Aquilonari faciunt cameram vnam quasi eorum exuentem: vel aliter, Si est domus quadrata, in medio domus ad latus aquilonare intercludunt vnam cameram in loco chori. Ibi ergo collocant vnam arcam longam & laram sicut mensam vnam. Et post illam arcam contra meridiem collocant principale idolum: quod ego vidi apud Caracatum, ita magnum sicut pingitur Sanctus Christophorus. Et dixit mihi quidam sacerdos Nestorinus, qui venerat ex Cataya, quod in terra illa est Idolum ita magnum, quod potest videri à duobus dietis, Et collocant alia idola in circuitu, omnia pulcherrime deaurata: Super cistam illam, quæ est quasi mensa vna, ponunt lucernas & oblationes. Omnes portæ templorum sunt apertæ ad meridiem contrario modo Saracenis. Item habent campanas magnas sicut nos. Ideo credo quod orientales Christiani noluerunt habere eas. Rutheni tamen habent & Græci in Gasaria.

fuit apud Caracatum frater Wilhelmus.

De templis eorum & idolis, & qualiter se habent in officio deorum suorum.

OMnes sacerdotes eorum rasum habent totum caput & barbam; sunt vestiti de croceo, & seruant castitatem, ex quo radunt caput: Et viuunt pariter centum vel ducenti in vna congregatione. Diebus quibus intrant templum, ponunt duo scamna, & sedent è regione chorus contra chorum habentes libros in manibus, quos aliquando deponunt super illa scamna: & habent capita discooperta quadiu insunt in tēplo, legentes in silencio, & tenentes silentium. Vnde cum ingressus fuissē apud Oratorium quoddam eorum, & inuenissē eos ita sedentes, multis modis tentavi eos prouocare ad verba, & nullo modo potui. Habent etiam quocunque vadunt quandam restem centum vel ducentorum nucleorum, sicut nos portamus pater noster: Et dicunt semper hæc verba: Ou nam Haclani: hoc est, Deus tu nosti; secundum quod quidem eorum interpretatus est mihi. Et toties expectant remunerationem à Deo, quoties hoc dicendo memoratur Dei. Circa templum suum semper faciunt pulchrum atrium, quod bene includunt muro: & ad meridiem faciunt portam magnam, in qua sedent ad colloquendum, Et super illam portam erigunt perricam longam, quæ emineat si possint, super totam villam. Et per illam perricam potest cognosci, quod domus illa sit templum Idolorum. Ista communia sunt omnibus Idolatris. Quando ergo ingressus fui prædictam Idolatriam, inueni sacerdotes sedentes sub porta exteriori. Illi quos vidi, videbantur mihi fratres Franci esse rasis barbis. Tyaras habebant in capitibus cartaceas. Istorum Iugurum sacerdotes habent ralem habitum quocunque vadunt: semper sunt in tunicis croceis satis strictis accincti desuper recte sicut Franci: & habent pallium super humerum sinistrum descendens inuolutum per pectus & dorsum ad latus dextrum sicut diaconus portans casulam in quadragesima. Istorum literas acceperunt Tartari. Ipsi incipiunt scribere sursum, & ducunt lineam deorsum, & eodem modo ipsi legunt & multiplicant lineas a sinistra ad dextram. Isti multum vtuntur cartis & characteribus pro sortilegio. Vnde templa sua plena sunt breuibis suspensis. Et Mangu-cham mittit vobis literas in idiomate Moal & literatura eorum. Isti comburunt mortuos suos secundum antiquum modum, & recondunt puluerem in summitate pyramidis. Cum ergo sedissem iuxta prædictos sacerdotes, postquam ingressus fueram templum & vidissem idola eorum multa magna & parua: quæsiui ab eis, quid ipsi crederent de Deo. Qui responderunt, Non credimus nisi vnum Deum. Et ego quæsiui. Creditis quod ipse sit spiritus vel aliquid corporale? Dixerunt, credimus quod sit spiritus. Et ego: Creditis quod nunquam sumperit humanam naturam? Dixerunt, minime. Tunc ego: ex quo creditis, quod non sit nisi vnus spiritus, quare facitis ei imagines corporales, & tot insuper? Et ex quo non creditis quod factus sit homo, quare facitis ei magis imagines hominum, quàm alterius animalis? Tunc responderunt, Nos non figuramus istas imagines Deo. Sed quando aliquis diues moritur ex nostris, vel filius, vel vxor, vel aliquis charus eius facit fieri imaginem defuncti, & ponit eam hic: & nos veneramus eam ad memoriam eius. Quibus ego, Tunc ergo non facitis ista nisi propter adulationem hominum. Immo dixerunt ad memoriam. Tunc quæsiuerunt à me quasi deridendo: vbi est Deus? Quibus ego, Vbi est anima vestra? Dixerunt, in corpore nostro. Quibus ego, Nonne est vbique in corpore tuo & totum regit, & tamen non videtur? Ita Deus vbique est, & omnia gubernat, inuisibilis tamen, quia intellectus & sapientia est. Tunc cum vellem plura ratiocinari cum illis, interpres meus fatigatus, non valens verba exprimere, fecit me tacere. Istorum sectæ sunt Moal siue Tartari, quantum ad hoc, quod ipsi non credunt nisi vnum Deum: tamen faciunt de filtro imagines defunctorum suorum, & induunt eas quinque pannis preciosissimis, & ponunt in vna biga vel duabus, & illas bigas nullus audeat tangere: & sunt sub custodia diuinorum suorum, qui sunt eorum sacerdotes, de quibus postea narrabo vobis. Isti diuinatores semper sunt ante curiam ipsius Mangu & aliorum diuitum: pauperes enim non habent eos; nisi illi qui sunt de genere Chingis. Et cum debent bigare, ipsi præcedunt, sicut columna nubis filios Israel, & ipsi considerant locum metandi castra, & post deponunt domos suas, & post eos rota curia. Et tunc cum sit dies festus siue kalendæ ipsi extrahunt prædictas imagines & ponunt eas ordinate per circuitum in domo sua. Tunc veniunt Moal & ingrediuntur domum illam, & inclinant se imaginibus illis & venerantur illas. Et illam domum nemini ingredi extraneo licet: Quadam enim vice volui ingredi & multum durè increpatus fui.

Prædicti vero Iugures, qui sunt mixti cum Christianis & Saracenis, per frequentes disputationes, vt credo, perueniunt ad hoc, quod non credunt nisi vnum deum. Et isti fuerunt habitantes in ciuitatibus, qui post obediuerunt Chingis Cham: vnde ipse dedit regi eorum suam. Et ipsa Caracarum est quasi in territorio eorum: Et tota terra regis sue presbyteri Iohannis & Vut fratris eius circa terras eorum: Sed isti in pascuis ad aquilonem, illi Iugures inter montes ad meridiem. Inde est quod ipsi Moal sumpserunt literas eorum. Et ipsi sunt magni scriptores eorum: & omnes fere Nestorini sciunt literas eorum. Post istos sunt ipsi Tangut ad orientem inter montes illos, homines fortissimi, qui ceperunt Chingis in bello. Et pace facta dimissus ab eis, postea subiugauit eos. Isti habent boues fortissimos habentes caudas plenas pilis sicut equi, & ventres pilosos & dorsa. Baffiores sunt alijs bobus in tibijs, sed ferociores multum. Isti trahunt magnas domos Moallorum: & habent cornua gracilia, longa, acutissima: ita quod oportet semper secare summitates eorum. Vacca non permittit se iniungi nisi canteretur ei. Habent etiam naturam bubali quia si vident hominem indutum rubeis, insilunt in eum volentes interficere. Post illos sunt Tebet homines solentes comedere parentes suos defunctos, vt causa pietatis non facerent aliud sepulchrum eis nisi viscera sua. Modo tamen hoc dimiserunt, quia abominabiles erant omni nationi. Tamen adhuc faciunt pulchros cithos de capitibus parentum, vt illis bibentes habeant memoriam eorum in iocunditate sua. Hoc dixit mihi qui viderat. Isti habent multum de auro in terra sua. Vnde qui indiget auro, fodit donec reperiat, & accipiat quando indiget, residuum condens in terra: quia si reponeret in arca vel in thesauro, crederet quod Deus auferret ei aliud quod est in terra. De istis hominibus vidi personas multum deformes. Tangut vidi homines magnos sed fuscis. Iugures sunt mediocri staturæ sicut nostri. Apud Iugures est fons & radix ideomatis Turci & Comanici. Post Tebet sunt Langa & Solanga, quorum nuncios vidi in curia: Qui adduxerant magnas bigas plusquam decem, quarum quælibet trahebatur sex bobus. Isti sunt parui homines & fuscis sicut Hispani: & habent tunicas si cut supertunicale diaconi manicis parum strictioribus: & habent in capitibus mitras sicut episcopi. Sed pars anterior est parum interior quam posterior, & non terminatur in vnum angulum: sed sunt quadræ desuper, & sunt de stramine rigidato per calorem magnum, & limato in tantum, quod fulget ad radium solis sicut speculum vel galea bene burnita. Et circa tempora habent longas berdas de eadem materia affutas ipsi mitræ; quæ se extendunt ad ventum sicut duo cornua egressientia de temporibus. Et quando ventus nimis iacet eas plicat eas per medium mitræ superius à tempore in tempus: & iacent sicut circulus extransuerso capitis. Et principalis nuncius quando veniebat ad curiam, habebat tabulam de dente elephantino ad longitudinem vnius cubiti, & ad latitudinem vnius palmi, rasam multum: Et quodcumque loquebatur ipsi Cham, vel alicui magno viro, semper aspiciebat in illam tabulam, & si inueniret ibi ea quæ dicebat: nec respiciebat ad dexteram vel sinistram, nec in faciem illius cui loquebatur. Etiam accedens coram domino & recedens nusquam respicit nisi in tabulam suam. Ultra istos sunt alij homines, vt intellexi pro vero, qui dicuntur Muc, qui habent villas, sed nulla animalia sibi appropriant: tamen sunt multi greges & multa armenta in terra ipsorum, & nullus custodit ea. Sed cum aliquis indiget aliquo, ascendit collem & clamat, & omnia animalia audientia clamorem accedunt circa illum, & permittunt se tractari quasi domestica. Et si nuncius vel aliquis extraneus accedat ad regionem illam, ipsi includunt eum in domo, & ministrant ei necessaria, donec negotium eius fuerit expeditum. Quia si iret extraneus per regionem, animalia ad odorem eius fugerent, & efficerentur syluestria. Ultra est magna Cathaya, cuius incolæ antiquitus vt credo dicebantur Seres. Ab ipsis enim veniunt optimi pannifera. Et ille populus dicitur Seres a quodam oppido eorum. Bene intellexi, quod in illa regione est oppidum habens muros argenteos & propugnacula aurea. In ista terra sunt multæ prouinciæ, quarum plures adhuc non obediunt Moallis, Et inter *

The iournal of frier William de Rubruquis a French man of the order of the minorite friers, vnto the East parts of the worlde. An.Dom. 1253.

In his most Soueraigne, & most Christian Lord Lewis, by Gods grace the renowned king of France, frier William de Rubruk, the meanest of the Minorites order, witheth health & continual triumph in CHRIST.

It is written in the booke of Ecclesiasticus concerning the wise man: He shall trauell into forren countries, and good and euill shall he trie in all things. The very same action (my lord and king) haue I atchieued: howbeit I wish that I haue done it like a wise man, and not like a foolc. For many there be, that perforce the same action which a wise man doth, not wisely but more vndiscreetly: of which number I feare

my selfe to be one. Notwithstanding howsoeuer I haue done it, because you commanded mee, when I departed from your highnes, to write all things vnto you, which I should see among the Tartars, and you wished me also that I should not feare to write long letters, I haue done as your maiestie intiained me: yet with feare and reuerence, because I want wordes and eloquence sufficient to write vnto so great a maiestie. Be it knowen therefore vnto your sacred Maiestie, that in the yeare of our Lord 1253, about the Moneth of May, we entered into the sea of Pontus, which the Bulgarians call the great sea. It containeth in length (as I learned of certayne merchants) 1008 miles, and is in a maner, diuided into two parts. About the midst thereof are two prouinces, one towards the North, and another towards the South. The South prouince is called Synopolis, and it is the castile and porte of the Soldan of Turkie: but the North prouince is called of the Latines, Galaria: of the Greeks, which inhabit vpon the sea shore thereof, it is called Casfaria, that is to say Casaria. And there are certayne head lands stretching forth into the sea towards Synopolis. Also, there are 300. miles of distance betweene Synopolis and Casfaria. Inso much that the distance from those points or places to Constantinople, in length and breadth is about 700. miles: and 700. miles also from thence to the East, namely to the countrey of Hiberia which is a prouince of Georgia. At the prouince of Casfaria we arrived, which prouince is, in a maner, three square, hauing a citie on the West part thereof called Kersoua, wherein S. Clement suffered martyrdome. And sayling before the said citie, we sawe an island, in which a Church is sayd to be built by the hands of angels. But about the midst of the said prouince toward the South, as it were, vpon a sharpe angle or point, standeth a citie called Soldaia directly ouer against Synopolis. And there doe all the Turkie merchants, which traffique into the North countries, in their iourney outward, arrive, and as they retorne homeward also from Russia, and the said Northerne regions, into Turkie. The foresaid merchants transport thither ermines and gray furs, with other rich and costly skinned. Others carrie cloathes made of cotton or bombast, and silke, and diuers kindes of spices. But vpon the East part of the said prouince standeth a citie called Matriga, where the riuer Tanais dischargeth his streames into the sea of Pontus, the mouth whereof is twelue miles in breadth. For this riuer, before it entereth into the sea of Pontus, maketh a little sea, which hath in breadth and length seuen hundred miles, & it is in no place thereof about fife paces deepe, whereupon great vessels cannot saile ouer it. Howbeit the merchants of Constantinople, arriving at the foresaid citie of Matriga, send their barkes vnto the riuer of Tanais to buy dried fishes, Sturgeons, Chollies, Barbils, and an infinite number of other fishes. The foresaid prouince of Casfaria is compassed in with the sea on three sides thereof: namely on the West side, where Kersoua the citie of Saint Clement is situate: on the South side the citie of Soldaia whereat we arrived: on the East side Maricandis, and there stands the citie of Matriga vpon the mouth of the riuer Tanais. Beyond the sayd mouth standeth Zikia, which is not in subiection vnto the Tartars: also the people called Sueni and Hiberi towards the East, who likewise are not vnder the Tartars dominion. Moreover towards the South, standeth the citie of Trapefunda, which hath a gouernour proper to it selfe, named Guydo, being of the linage of the emperours of Constantinople, and is subiect vnto the Tartars. Next vnto that is Synopolis the citie of the Soldan of Turkie, who likewise is in subiection vnto them. Next vnto these lyeth the countrey of Vastacius, whose sonne is called Astar, of his grandfather by the mothers side, who is not in subiection. All the land from the mouth of Tanais Westward as farre as Danubius is vnder their iurisdiction. Next beyond Danubius also, towards Constantinople, Valakia, which is the land of Assanus, and Bulgaria minor as farre as Solonia, doe all pay tribute vnto them. And besides the tribute imposed, they haue also, of late yeares, exacted of euery household an axe, and all such cozne as they found lying on heapes. We arrived therefore at Soldaia the twelfth of the Kalends of June. And diuers merchants of Constantinople, which were arrived there before vs, reported that certaine messengers were coming thither from the holy land, who were desirous to trauell vnto Sarrach. Notwithstanding I my self had publicly giuen out vpon Palme Sunday within the Church of Sancta Sophia, that I was not your nor any other mans messenger, but that I traualled vnto those infidels according to the rule of our order. And being arriued, the said merchants admonished me to take diligent heede what I spake: because they hauing reported me to be a messenger, if I should say the contrary, that I were no messenger, I could not haue free passage granted vnto me. The I spake after this maner vnto the gouernours of the citie, or rather vnto their Lieutenants, because the gouernours themselves were gone to pay tribute vnto Baaru, & were not as yet returned. We heard of your lord Sarrach (quoth I) in the holy land, that he was become a Christian: and the Christians were exceeding gladd therof, & especially the most Christian king of France, who is there now in pilgrimage, & fighteth against the Saracens to rideme the holy places out of their handes: wherfore I am determined to go vnto Sarrach, & to deliuer vnto him y letters of my lord the king, wherein he admonisheth him concerning the good and commoditie of all Christendome. And they receiued vs with gladnes, and gaue vs entertainment in the eatherdall Church. The bishop of which Church was with Sarrach, who told me many good things concerning the saide Sarrach, which afterward I found to be nothing so. Then put they vs to our choyce, whether we woulde haue cartes and oren, or packe horses to transport our cariages. And the marchants of Constantinople aduised me, not to take cartes of the citizens of Soldaia, but to buy covered cartes of mine owne, (such as the Russians carrie their skins in) and to put all our cariages, which I would buy, lie take out, into them: because, if I should vse horses, I must be constrained at euery baite to take downe my cariages, and to lift them vp againe on sundry horses backs: and besides, that I should ride a more gentle pace by the oren drawing the cartes. Wherfore, contenting my selfe with thete euil counsell, I was traueilling vnto Sarrach 2. moneths which I could haue done in one, if I had gone by horse. I brought with me from Constantinople (being by the marchants aduised so to doe) pleasant fruits, muscadel wine, and delicate bisket bread to present vnto the gouernours of Soldaia, to the end I might obtaine free passage: because they looke fauourable vpon no man which commeth with an emptie hand. All which thinges I bestowed in one of my cartes, (not finding the gouernours of the citie at home) for they told me, if I could carrie them to Sarrach, that they would be most acceptable vnto him. We tooke our iourney therefore about the kalends of June, with fower covered cartes of our owne and with two other which wee borrowed of them, wherein we carried our bedding to rest vpon in the night, and they allowed vs fure horses to ride vpon. For there were iust fure persons in our company: namely, I my selfe and mine associate frir Bartholomew of Cremona, and Gofet the bearer of these presents, the man of God Turgemannus, and Nicolas my seruant, whome I bought at Constantinople with some part of the almes bestowed vpon me. Moreouer, they allowed vs two men, which draue our carts and gaue attendance vnto our oren and horses. There be high promontories on the sea shore from Kersoua vnto the mouth of Tanais. Also there are fortie castles betweene Kersoua and Soldaia, euery one of which almost haue their proper languages: amongst whome there were many Gothes, who spake the Dutch tongue. Beyond the said mountaines towards the North, there is a most beautiful wood growing on a plaine full of fountaines & freshets. And beyond the wood there is a mightie plaine champion, continuing fure dayes iourney vnto the very extremitie and borders of the said prouince northward, and there it is a narrow Isthmus or neck land, hauing sea on the East & West sides therof, inso much that there is a ditch made frō one sea vnto the other. In the same plaine (before the Tartars sprang vp) were the Comanians wont to inhabite, who compelled the fore sayd cities and castles to pay tribute vnto them. But when the Tartars came vpon them, the multitude of the Comanians entred into the fore sayd prouince, and fled all of them, euen vnto the sea shore, being in such extreame famine, that they which were alive, were constrained to eate vp those which were dead: and (as a marchant reported vnto me who sawe it with his owne eyes) that the living men deuoured and roze with their teeth, the raw flesh of the dead, as dogges would gnawe vpon carrion. Towards the borders of the sayd prouince there be many great lakes: vpon the banks wherof are salt pits or fountaines, the water of which so soone as it entereth into the lake, becometh hard salte like vnto ice. And out of those salte pittes Baaru and Sarrach haue great reuenues: for they repayze thither out of all Russia for salte: and for each carte loade they giue two webbes of cotton amounting to the value of half an Yperpera. There come by sea also many ships for salt, which pay tribute euery one of them according to their burden. The third day after wee were departed out of the precincts of Soldaia, we found the Tartars. Amongst whome being entered, me thought I was come into a new world. Whose life and maners I wil describe vnto your Highnes as well as I can.

Of the Tartars, and of their houses. Chap. 2.

They haue in no place any settled citie to abide in, neither knowe they of the relectfall citie to come. They haue diuided all Scythia among themselves, which stretcheth from the riuer Danubius euen vnto the rising of the sunne. And euery of their capitaines, according to the great or small number of his people, knoweth the bounds of his pastures, and where he ought to feed his cattel winter and summer, Spring and autumnne. For in the winter they descend vnto the warme regions southward. And in the summer they ascend vnto the colde regions northward. In winter when it snowe lyeth vpon the ground, they feede their cattell vpon pastures without water, because then they vse snow in stead of water. Their houses wherein they sleepe, they ground vpon a round foundation of wickers artificially wrought and compacted together: the rooffe whereof consisteth (in like sort) of wickers, meeting aboue into one little roundell, out of which roundell ascendeth upward a necke like vnto a chimney, which they couer with white felte, and oftentimes they lay moxer or white earth vpon the sayd felt, with the powder of bones, that it may shine white. And sometimes also they couer it with blacke felte. The sayd felte on the necke of their house, they doe garnish ouer with beautifull varietie of pictures. Besoze the dooze likewise they hang a felt curiously painted ouer. For they spend all their coloured felte, in painting vines, trees, birds, and beastes therevpon. The sayd houses they make so large, that they containe thirtie foore in breadth. For measuring once the breadth betweene the wheele-ruts of one of their cartes, I found it to be 20 feete ouer: and when the house was vpon the carte, it stretched ouer the wheeles on each side fife secte at the least. I told 22. oren in one teame, drawing an house vpon a cart, eleuen in one order according to the breadth of the carte, and eleuen moxe besoze them: the arletree of the carte was of an huge bignes like vnto the mast of a ship. And a fellow stood in the dooze of the house, vpon the fozeftall of the carte vziuing forth the oren. For ouer, they make certaine fouresquare baskets of small slender wickers as big as great chestes: and after ward, from one side to another, they frame an hollow lidd or couer of such like wickers, and make a dooze in the foze side thereof. And then they couer the sayd chest or little house with black felt rubbed ouer with tallow or sheeps milke to keepe the raine from soaking throug, which they decke likewise with painting or with feathers. And in such chests they put their whole houthold stuffe & creature. Also the same chests they do strongly bind vpon other carts, which are drawn with camels, so þend they may wade throug riuers. Neither do they at any time take down the sayd chests from off their carts. When they take down their dwelling houses, they turne the doozes alwayes to the South: & next of all they place the carts laden with their chests, here & there, within half a stons cast of þ house: in so much that the house standeth between two ranks of carts, as it were, between two wals. The marrons make for themselves most beautiful carts, which I am not able to describe vnto your maiestie but by pictures onlie: for I would right willingly haue painted al things for you, had my skill bin ought in that art. One rich Moal or Tartar hath 200. or 100. such cartes with chests. Duke Baatu hath sixteene wiues, euery one of which hath one great house, besides other little houses, which they place behind the great one, being as it were chambers for their maidens to dwel in. And vnto euery of the said houses do belong 200. cartes. When they take their houses from off the cartes, the principal wife placeth her court on the West frontier, and so all the rest in their order: so that the last wife dwelleth vpon the East frontier: and one of the said ladies courts is distant from another about a stons cast. Wherevpon the court of one rich Moal or Tartar will appeare like vnto a great village, very few men abiding in the same. One woman will guide 20. or 30. cartes at once, for their countries are very plaine, and they binde the cartes with camels or oren, one behind another. And there sits a wench in the foremost carte vziuing the oren, and al the residue follow on a like pace. When they chance to come at any bad passage, they let them loose, and guide them ouer one by one: for they goe a slowe pace, as fast as a lambe or an oxe can walke.

The benefice of a painter in strange countries.

Of their beds, and of their drinking pots. Chap. 3.

Having taken downe their houses from off their cartes, and turning the doozes Southward, they place the bed of the master of the house, at the North part thereof. The womens place is alwaies on the East side, namely on the left hand of the good man of the house sitting vpon his bed with his face Southwards: but the mens place is vpon þ West side, namely at the right hand of their master. When they enter into the house, wil not in any case hang their quivers on the

the womens side. Over the masters head there is alwayes an image, like a puppet, made of felte, which they call the masters brother: and another ouer the head of the good wife or mistresse, which they call her brother being fastened to the wall: and aboue betwene both of them, there is a little leane one, which is, as it were the keeper of the whole house. The good wife or mistresse of the house placeth aloft at her beds fete, on the right hand, the skinne of a Kidde stuffed with wooll or some other matter, and neare vnto that a litle image or puppet looking towards the maidens and women. Next vnto the doore also on the womens side, there is another image with a cowes bodder, for the women that milke the kine, for it is the duety of their women to milke kine. On the other side of the doore next vnto the men, there is another image with the vdder of a mare, for the men which milke mates. And when they come together to drinke and make merie, they sprinkle parte of their drinke vpon the image which is aboue the masters head: afterward vpon other images in order: then goeth a seruant out of the house with a cuppe full of drinke sprinkling it thise towards the South, and bowing his knee at euery time: and this is done for the honour of the fire. Then perfourmeth he the like superstitious idolatrie towards the East, for the honour of the ayre: and then to the West for the honour of the water: & lastly to the North in the behalfe of the dead. When the maister holdeth a cuppe in his hande to drinke, befoze he tasteth thereof, hee powreth his part vpon the ground. If he drinke sitting on horse backe, hee powreth out part thereof vpon the necke or maine of his horse befoze hee himselfe drinke. After the seruant aforesaide hath so discharged his cuppes to the fower quarters of the world, hee returneth into the house: and two other seruants stand ready with two cuppes, and two balons, to carrie drinke vnto their master and his wife, sitting together vpon a bed. And if he hath moze wiues then one, she with whome hee slept the night befoze, sitteth by his side the daye following: and all his other wiues must that day resorte vnto the same house to drinke: and there is the court holden for that day: the giftes also which are presented that daye are layd vp in the chests of the layd wife, And vpon a bench stands a vessell of milke or of other drinke and drinking cuppes.

Of their drinckes, and how they prouoke one another to drinking. Chap. 4.

In winter time they make excellent drinke of Rife, of Pill, and of horie, being well and high coloured like wine. Also they haue wine brought vnto them from farre countries. In summer time they care not for any drinke, but Cosmos. And it standeth alwaies within the entrance of his doore, and next vnto it stands a minstrell with his fidele. I sawe there no such cisterns and vials as ours commonly be, but many other muscalle instruments which are not vsed among vs. And when the master of the house begins to drinke, one of his seruants cryeth out with a lowde voice H A, and the minstrell playes vpon his fidele. And when they make any great sollemne feast, they all of them clap their hands & daunce to the nople of musique, the men befoze their master and the women befoze their mistresse. And when the master hath drunke, then cries out his seruant as befoze, and the minstrell stayeth his musique. Then drinke they all around both men and women: and sometimes they carowse for the victorie very filthily and drunkenly. Also when they will prouoke any man, they pul him by the eares to the drinke, and so lug and draw him strongly to stretch out his throte clapping their handes and dauncing befoze him. Whereouer when some of them will make great feasting and reioycing, one of the company takes a full cuppe, and two other stand, one on his right hand and another on his left, and so they three come singing to the man who is to haue the cuppe reached vnto him, still singing and dauncing befoze him: and when he stretcheth forth his hand to receiue the cuppe, they leape suddenly backe, returning againe as they did befoze, and so hauing deluded him thrice or fower times by drawing backe the cuppe vntill he be merie, and hath gotten a good appetite, then they giue him the cuppe, singing and dauncing and stamping with their fete, vntill he hath done drinking.

Of their foode and victuals. Chap. 5.

Concerning their foode and victuals, be it knowen vnto your Highnesse that they do, without difference or exception, eat all their dead carrions. And amongst so many droues it cannot be, but some cattell must needes die. Howbeit in summer, so long as their Cosmos, that is, their mares milke tasteth, they care not for any foode. And if they chance to haue an ore or an horse dye, they drie the flesh thereof: for cutting it into thin slices and hanging it vp against the Sunne and the wind, it is presently dried without salt, and also without stench or corruption. They make make better puddings of their hoxles then of their hogs, which they eate being new made: the rest of the flesh they reserve untill winter. They make of their ore skins great bladders or bags, which they doe wonderfully dye in the smoake. Of the hinder part of their hoxse hides they make very fine sandals & pantofles. They giue vnto 50. or an 100. men the flesh of one ram to eat. For they mince it in a bowle with salt and water (other sauce they haue none) and then with the point of a knife, or a litle forke which they make for the same purpose (such as wee vse to take roasted peares or apples out of wine withal) they reach vnto euery one of the company a morsell or twaine, according to the multitude of guesstes. The master of the house, before the rams flesh be distributed, first of all himselfe taketh thereof, what he pleaseth. Also, if he giueth vnto any of the company a speciall part, the receiuer therof must eat it alone, and must not impart ought therof vnto any other. Not being able to eate it by all, he caries it with him, or deliuerit vnto his boy, if he be present, to keepe it: if not, he puts it vp into his Saptargat, that is to say, his foure square buget, which they vse to carpy about with them for the sauuing of all such prouision, and wherein they lay vp their bones, when they haue not time to gnaw them thoroughly, that they may burnish them after ward, to the end that no whit of their food may come to nought.

How they make their drinke called Cosmos. Chap. 6.

Their drinke called Cosmos, which is mares milke, is prepared after this maner. They fasten along line vnto 2. posts standing firmly in the ground, & vnto the same line they tie the young soles of those mares, which they mean to milke. Then come the dams to stand by their soles gently suffering themselves to be milked. And if any of them be too unruly, then one takes her sole, & puts it vnder her, letting it suck a while, and presently carpying it away againe, there comes another man to milke the said mare. And hauing gotten a good quantity of this milke together (being as sweet as cowes milke) while it is newe they powre it into a great bladder or bag, and they beat the said bag with a piece of wood made for the purpose, hauing a club at the lower ende like a mans head, which is hollow within: and so soone as they beat vpon it, it begins to boile like newe wine, & to be sower and sharpe of taste, and they beate it in that maner till butter come thereof. Then taste they thereof, and being indifferently sharpe they drinke it: for it biteth a mans tongue like the wine of raspes, when it is drunk. After a man hath taken a draught therof, it leaueth behind it a taste like the taste of almon milke, and goeth downe very pleasantly, intoxicating weake braines: also it causeth vyne to be auoied in great measure. Likewise Caracosmos, that is to say black Cosmos, for great lordes to drinke, they make on this maner. First they beat the said milke so long till the thickest part thereof descend right downe to the bottome like the lees of white wine, and that which is thin and pure remaineth aboue, being like unto whay or white must. The said lees or dregs being very whire, are giuen to seruants, and will cause them to sleepe exceedingly. That which is thinne and cleare their masters drinke: and in very deed it is marvellous sweete and wholesome liquor. Duke Baatu hath thirty cottages or granges within a daies journey of his abiding place: euery one of which serueth him daily with the Caracosmos of an hundred mares milke, and so all of them together euery day with the milke of 3000. mares, besides white milke which other of his subiects bring. For euen as the husbandmen of Syria bestow the third part of their fructs and carie it vnto the courts of their lordes, euen so doe they their mares milke euery third day. Out of their cowes milke they first churme butter, boyling the which butter vnto a perfect decoction, they put it into rams skinner, which they reserve for the same purpose. Neither doe they salte their butter: and yet by reason of the long seeching, it putrifieth not: and they keepe it in store for winter. The churmilke which remaineth of the butter, they let alone till it be as sower as possibly it may be, then they boile it and in boiling, it is turned all into curdes, which curds they drie in the sun, making them as hard as the drosse of iron: and this kind of food also they store vp in sachel against winter. In the winter season when milke faileth them, they put the foresaid curds (which they cal Gry-vt) into a bladder, and pouring hot water thereinto, they beat it lustily till they haue resolu'd it into the said water, which is thereby made exceedingly sower, and that they drinke in stead of milke. They are very scrupulous, and take diligent heed that they drinke not fayze water by it selfe.

Of the beastes which they eat, of their garments, and of their maner of hunting. Chap. 7.

Great lordes haue cottages or granges towards the South, from whence their tenants bring them Millet and meale against winter. The poozer sort provide themselves of such necessities, for exchange of rams, & of other beastes skins. The Tartars slaues fill their bellies with thick water, & are therewithall contented. They wil neither eate mife with long taitles, nor any kinde of mife with thoxe taitles. They haue also certaine litle beastes called by the Sogur, which lie in a caine twenty or thirty of them together, at the whole winter sleeping there for the space of six moneths: and these they take in great abundance. There are also a kind of conies hauing long tayles like vnto cats: & on the outside of their tayles grow blacke & white haire. They haue many other small beasts good to eat, which they know and discerne right well. I saw no Deere there, & but a fewe hares, but a great number of Rabbits. I saw wild asses in great abundance, which be like vnto Asies. Also I saw another kind of beast called Arrak, hauing in al resemblance the body of a ram, & crooked hornes, which are of such bignes, that I could scarce lift vp a paire of them with one hand: & of these hornes they make great drinking cups. They haue Falcons, Gierfalcons, & other haukes in great plenty: all which they carry vpon their right hands: & they put alwaies about their Falcons necks a string of leather, which hangeth down to y^e midst of their gorges, by the which string, whē they cast them off the fist at their game, with their left hand they bow downe the heads & breasts of the sayd haukes, lest they should be tossed vp & downe, & beaten with the wind, or lest they should soare too high. Wherefore they get a great part of their victuals, by hunting & hauking. Concerning their garments and attire be it knowen vnto your Maiestie, that out of Cataya & other regions of the East, out of Persia also and other countries of the South, there are brought vnto them stuffs of silke, cloth of gold, & cotton cloth, which they weare in time of summer. But out of Russia, Moxel, Bulgaria the greater, & Pascatir, that is Hungaria the greater, and out of Kersis (all which are Northerne regions & full of woods) & also out of many other countries of the North, which are subiect vnto them, the inhabitants bring them rich and costly skins of diuers sortes (which I neuer saw in our countries) wherewithal they are clad in winter. And alwaies against winter they make themselves two gownes, one with the fur inward to their skin, & another with the furre outward, to defend them from wind & snow, which for the most part are made of woodues skins, or Fox skins, or els of Hapions. And whē they sit within the house, they haue a finer gowne to weare. The poorer sort make their vpper gowne of dogs or of goats skins. When they goe to hunt for wild beasts, there meets a great company of them together, & inuironing the place round about, where they are sure to find some game, by litle & litle they appoach on al sides, til they haue gotten the wild beasts into the midst, as it were into a circle, & then they discharge their arrowes at them. Also they make themselves breeches of skins. The rich Tartars sometimes fur their gowns with pelluce or silke bagg, which is exceeding soft, light, & warme. The poorer sort do line their clothes with cottō cloth which is made of the finest wooll they can pick out, & of the outer part of the said wooll, they make felt to couer their houses and their chests, and for their bedding also. Of the same wooll, being mixed with one third part of horse haire, they make all their copdage. They make also of the said felt coverings for their shooles, and caps to defende their heads from the weather: for all which purposes they spend a great quantity of their wooll. And thus much concerning the attyre of the men.

Great expence

Of the fashion which the Tartars vse in cutting their haire, and of the attire of their women. Chap. 8.

The men haue a plot foure square vpon the crownes of their heads, and from the two formost corners they haue, as it were, two seames downe to their temples: they haue also their temples and the hinder part of their head euen vnto the nape of the necke: likewise they haue the forepart of their scalp downe to their foreheads, & vpon their foreheads they leaue a locke of hayre reaching downe vnto their eye browes: vpon the two hindermost corners of their heads, they haue two lockes also, which they twine and braid into knots and so bind and knit them vnder each eare one. Howeouer their womens garments differ not from their mens, sauing that they are somewhat longer. But on the morrowe after one of their women is married, she shaues her scalp from the middell of her head down to her forehead, & weares a wide garment like vnto the hood of a Nunne, yea larger and longer in all parts then a Nunnes hood, being open before and girt vnto them vnder the right side. For herein doe the Tartars differ from the Turkes: because the Turkes fashion their garments to their bodie on the left side: but the Tartars alwaies on the right side. They haue also an ornament for their heads which they call Borca, being made of the barke of a tree, or of some such other lighter matter as they can find, which by reason of the thiknes & roundnes thereof cannot be holden but in both hands together: & it hath a square sharp spire rising fro the top thereof, being more then a cubite in length, & fashioned like vnto a pinacle. The said Borca they couer al ouer with a piece of rich silke: & it is hollow within: & vpon the midst of the sayd spire or square toppe, they put a bunch of quills or of slender canes a cubite long and more: & the sayd bunch, on the top thereof, they beautifie with Peacocks feathers, & round about al y^e length thereof, with the feathers of a Gallards tale, & with precious stones also. Great ladies weare this kind of ornament vpon their heads binding it strongly with a certain hat or copse, which hath an hole in the crowne, fit for the spire to come come through it: & vnder the foresaid ornament they couer the haire of their heads, which they gather by round together frō the hinder part thereof to the crowne, & so lay them by in a knot or bundle within the said Botta, which afterward they bind strongly vnder their throates. Whereupon when a great company of such gentlewomen ride together, and are beheld a far off, they seem to be sound-ers with helmes on their heads carrying their launces vp right: for the said Botta appeareth like an helmet with a launce ouer it. At their women sit on horsebacke bestriding their horses like men:

 & they bind their hoods or golwines about their waistes with a skie coloured silke skarfe, & with another skarfe they girde it about their breasts: & they bind also a piece of white silke like a muffler or maske vnder their eyes, reaching down vnto their breast. These gentlewomen are exceeding fat, & the lesser their noses be, the fairer are they esteemed: they daube ouer their sweet faces with grease too shamefully: and they neuer lie in bed for their trauel of childbirth.

Of the duties inioined vnto the Tartarian women, and of their labours, and also of their mariages. Chap. 9.

The duties of women are, to daine cares: to lay their houses vpon cares & to take them downe again: to milke kine: to make butter & Gry-vt: to dresse skins & to sow them, which they vsually sowe with thread made of sinewes, for they diuide sinewes into slender threads, & then twine the into one long thread. They make sandals & socks & other garments. Whoeu they neuer wash any apparel: for they say that God is then angry, & that dreadfull thunder wil ensue, if washed garments be hanged forth to drie: yea, they beat such as wash, & take their garments frō them. They are wonderfully afraid of thunder: for in the time of thunder they thrust all strangers out of their houses, & then wrapping themselves in black felt, they lie hidden therein, til the thunder be ouerpast. They neuer wash their dishes or bowles: yea, when their flesh is sodden, they wash the platter wherein it must be put, with scalding hot broth out of the pot, & then polye the said broth into the pot againe.
 They make felts also, & couer their houses therewith. The duties of the men are to make bowes & arrowes, stirrops, bydles, and saddles: to build houses & carts, to keepe horses: to milke mares: to churne Cosmos and mares milke, & to make bags wherein to put it: they keepe camels also & lay burthens vpon them. As for sheepe & goates they tend and milke them, as well the men as the women. Which sheeps milke thicked & salted they dresse and tan their hides. When they wil wash their hands or their heads, they fill their mouthes full of water, & spouting it into their hands by fittle and litle, they spynckle their haire & wash their heades therewith. As touching mariages, your Highnes is to vnderstand, that no man can haue a wife among them till he hath bought her: whereupon sometimes their maids are very stale before they be married, for their parents alwaies keepe the till they can sel them. They keepe the first and second degrees of consanguinitie inuolable, as we do:
 but they haue no regard of the degrees of affinity: for they wil marrie together, or by succession, two sisters. Their widowes marie not at al, for this reason: because they beleue, that al who haue ser-ued them in this life, shall do them seruice in the life to come also. Whereupon they are perswaded, that euery widow after death shall retorne vnto her owne husband. And here hence ariseth an abominable & filthy custome among them, namely that the sonne marieth sometimes all his fathers wiues except his owne mother: for the court or house of the father or mother falleth by inheritance alwaies to the yonger son. Whereupon he is to prouide for all his fathers wiues, because they are part of his inheritance as well as his fathers possessions. And then if he will he vscth them for his owne wiues:
 for he thinks it no iniurie or disparagement vnto himselfe, although they retorne vnto his father after death. Therfore whe any man hath bargained with another for a maid, the father of the said damsel makes him a feast: in the meane while she flecth vnto some of her kinsfolks to hide her selfe.
 Then saith her father vnto the bydegrome: Lo, my daughter is yours, take her where soeuer you can find her. Then he and his friends seek for her till they can find her, and hauing found her hee must take her by force and carry her, as it were, violently vnto his owne house.

Of their execution of iustice and iudgement: and of their deaths and burials. Chap. 10.

Concerning their lawes or their execution of iustice, your Maiesty is to be aduertised, that when two men fight, no third man dare intrude himself to part them. Yea, the father dare not help his owne sonne. But he that goes by the worst must appeale vnto the court of his lord. And whosoever els offereth him any violence after appeale, is put to death. But he must go presently without all delay: and he that hath suffered the iniury, carrieth him, as it were captiue. They punish no man with sentence of death, vnles hee bee taken in the deed doing, or confesse the same.
 But being accused by the multitude, they put him vnto extreame torture to make him confesse the crueltie. They punish murder with death, and carnall copulation also with any other

other besides his owne. By his own, I meane his wife or his maid seruant, for he may vse his slaue as he listeth himself. Vicious theft also or felony they punish with death. If of a light theft, as namely for stealing of a ram, the party (not being apprehended in the deed doing, but otherwise detected) is cruelly beaten. And if p executioner laies on an 100. strokes, he must haue an 100. slaues, namely for such as are beaten vpon sentence giuen in the court. Also counterfeite messengers, because they feine themselves to be messengers, when as indeed they are none at all, they punish with death. Sacrilegious persons they vse in like maner (of which kind of malefactours your Maiesty shall vnderstand moze fully hereafter) because they esteeme such to be witches. When any man dieth, they lament & howle most pitifully for him: & the said mourners are free from paying any tribute for one whole yeare after. Also whosocuer is present at the house where any one growen to mans estate lieth dead, he must not enter into the court of Mangu-Can til one whole yere be expired. If it were a child deceased he must not enter into the said court til the next moneth after. Neere vnto the graue of the partie deceased they alwaies leaue one cottage. If any of their nobles (being of the stocke of Chingis, who was their first lord & father) deceaseth, his sepulcher is unknowen. And alwayes about those places where they interre their nobles, there is one house of men to keep the sepulchers. I could not learn that they vse to hide treasures in the graues of their dead. The Comaniás build a great toomb ouer their dead, & erect the image of the dead party thereupon, with his face towards the East, holding a drinking cup in his hand, before his nauel. They erect also vpon the monuments of rich men, Pyramides, that is to say, little sharpe houses or pinacles: & in some places I saw mighty towers made of brick, in other places Pyramides made of stones, albeit there are no stones to be found thereabout. I saw one newly buried, in whose behalfe they hanged by 16. horse hides, vnto each quarter of the world 4, betweene certain high posts: & they set besides his graue Cosmos for him to drink, & flesh to eat: & yet they sayd that he was baptizd. I beheld other kinds of sepulchers also towards the East: namely large flowres or pavements made of stone, some round & some square, & then 4. long stones pitched vpright, about the said pavement towards the 4. regions of the world. When any man is sicke, he lieth in his bed, & causeth a signe to be set vpon his house, to signifie that there lieth a sicke person there, to the end that no man may enter into the sayd house: whereupon none at all visite any sicke party but his seruant only. Howouer, when any one is sicke in their great courts, they appoint w. schynen to stand round about the said court, who wil not suffer any person to enter within the precincts thereof. For they feare least euill spirits or winds should come together with the parties that enter in. They esteeme of soothsayers, as of their priests.

Of our first entrance among the Tartars, and of their ingratitude. Chap. II.

And being come amongst those barbarous people, me thought (as I said before) y I was entred into a new world: for they came flocking about vs on horse back, after they had made vs a long tyme to awaite for them sitting in the shadow, vnder their black carts. The first question which they demanded was whether we had euer bin with them heretofore, or no: And giuing the answer that we had not, they began impudently to beg our victuals fro vs. And we gaue them some of our biscet & wine, which we had brought with vs from the towne of Soldaia. And hauing drunke off one flaggon of our wine they demanded another, saying, that a man goeth not into the house with one foote. Howbeit we gaue them no moze, excusing our selues that we had but a litle. Then they asked vs, whence we came, & whither we were bound: I answered them with the words aboue mentioned: that we had heard concerning duke Sartach, that he was become a Christian, & that vnto him our determination was to trauel, hauing your Maiesties letters to deliuer vnto him. They were very inquisitiue to know whether I came of mine own accord, or whether I were sent: I answered that no man compelled me to come, neither had I come, vnles I my selfe had bin willing: & that therefore I was come according to mine own wil, & to the will of my superiour. I tooke diligent heed neere to say that I was your Maiesties ambassadoz. Then they asked what I had in my carts; whether it were gold or siluer, or rich garments to carie vnto Sartach: I answered that Sartach should see what we had brought, when we were once come vnto him, & that they had nothing to do to aske such questions, but rather ought to conduct me vnto their capitaine, and that he, if he thought good, should cause me to be directed vnto Sartach: if not, that I would returne. For there was in the same prouince one of Baatu his kinsmen called Scacati, vnto whom my lord the Emperour of Constantinople had written letters of request, to suffer me to passe through his territory. With this answer of ours they were satisfied, giuing vs horses & oxen, & two men to conduct vs. Howbeit before they would allow vs the foresayd necessities for our iourney, they made vs to awaite a long while, begging our bread for their pong bzats, wondering at all things which they sawe about our seruants, as their knives, gloves, purses, & points, and desiring to haue them. I excused my selfe that we

we had a long way to trauel, & that we must in no wise so soon deppriue our selues of things necessary, to finish so long a iourney. Then they said that I was a very varlet. True it is, that they tooke nothing by force from me: howbeit they will beg that which they see very importunately & shamelessly. And if a man bestow ought vpon the, it is but cost lost, for they are thankles wretches. They esteeme themselves lords & think y nothing should be denied the by any man. If a man giues them nought, & afterward stands in neede of their seruice, they will do right nought for him. They gaue vs of their cowes milke to drinke after y butter was cheerned out of it, being very sower, which they cal Apram. And so we departed from the. And in verie deed it seemed to me y we were escaped out of the hands of diuels. On the morrow we were come vnto the captain. From the time wherein we departed from Soldaia, till we arrived at the court of Sartach, which was the space of two moneths, we neuer lay in house or tent, but alwaies vnder the starry canopy, & in the open aire, or vnder our carts. Neither yet saw we any village, nor any menton of building where a village had bin, but the graues of the Comanians in great abundance. The same euening our guide which had conducted vs, gaue vs some Cosmos. After I had drunke thercof I sweat most extreamly for the nouelty and strangenes, because I neuer dranke of it before. Notwithstanding me thought it was very sauory, as indeed it was.

Of the court of Scacatai: and how the Christians drinke no Cosmos. Chap. 12.

On the morrowe after we met with the cartes of Scacatai laden with houses, and me thought that a mighty citie came to meete me. I wondered also at the great multitude of huge ounces of oxen, & horses, and at the flockes of sheepe. I could see but a few men that guided all these matters: whereupon I inquired how many men he had vnder him, & they told me that he had not aboue 500. in all, the one halfe of which number we were come past, as they lay in another lodging. Then the seruant which was our guide told me, that I must present somewhat vnto Scacatai: & so he caused vs to stay, going himselfe before to giue notice of our coming. By this time it was past three of the clocke, and they vnladed their houses nere vnto a certain water: And there came vnto vs his interpreter, who being aduertised by vs that wee were neuer there before, demanded some of our victuals, & we yielded vnto his request. Also he required of vs some garment for a reward, because he was to interpret our sayings vnto his master. Howbeit we excused our selues as well as wee could. Then he asked vs, what we would present vnto his Lord: And we tooke a flagon of wine, & filled a maund with bisket, & a platter with apples & other fruits. But he was not contented therewith, because we brought him not some rich garment. Notwithstanding we entred so into his presence with feare and bashfulness. He sate vpon his bed holding a citron in his hand, and his wife sate by him: who (as I verily thinke) had cut and pared her nose betweene the eyes, that she might seeme to be more flat and saddle-nosed: for she had left her selfe no nose at all in that place, having annointed the very same place with a black ointment, and her eye browes also: which sight seemed most ugly in our eyes. Then I rehearsed vnto him the same wordes, which I had spoken in other places before. For it stode vs in hand to vse one and the same speech in all places. For we were well forewarned of this circumstance by some which had been amongst the Tartars, that we should neuer varie in our tale. Then I besought him, that he would vouchsafe to accept that small gifte at our hands, excusing my selfe that I was a Donke, and that it was against our profession to possesse gold, or silver, or precious garments, and therefore that I had not any such thing to giue him, howbeit he should receiue some part of our victuals in stead of a blessing. Whereupon he caused our present to be receiued, and immediately distributed the same among his men, who were mette together for the same purpose, to drinke and make merrie. I deliuered also vnto him the Emperour of Constantinople his letters (this was eight dayes after the feast of Ascension) who sent them forthwith to Soldaia to haue them interpreted there: for they were written in Greeke, and he had none about him that was skilfull in the Greeke tongue. He asked vs also whether we would drinke any Cosmos, that is to say mares milke: (For those that are Christians among them, as namely the Russians, Grecians, and Alanians, who keep their own law very strictly, wil in no case drinke thereof, yea, they accompt themselves no Christians after they haue once drunke of it, & their priests reconcile them vnto the Church as if they had renounced the Christian faith.) I gaue him answer, that we had as yet sufficient of our owne to drinke, and that when our drinke failed vs, we must be constrained to drinke such as should be giuen vnto vs. He enquired also what was contained in our letters, which your Paiesie sent vnto Sartach? I answered: that they were sealed by, and that there was nothing contained in them, but good and friendly wordes. And he asked what wordes wee would deliuer vnto Sartach? I answered: the wordes of Christian faith. He asked again what these wordes were: For he was very desirous to heare the. Then I expounded vnto him as well as I could, by mine interpreter, (who had no wit nor any utterance of speech) the Apostles creed. Which after he had heard, holding his peace, he shooke his head. Then hee assigned vnto vs two men, who shoulde giue attendance vpon our selues, vpon our horses, and vpon our Oren. And hee caused vs to ride in his companie, till the messenger whome hee had sent for the interpretation of the Emperours letters, was returned. And so wee traueiled in his companie till the morrow after Pentecost.

Howe the Alanians came vnto vs on Pentecost or Whitson euen. Chap. 13.

Vpon the euen of Pentecost, there came vnto vs certaine Alanians, who are there called * Acias, being Christians after the maner of the Grecians, vsing greeke bookes and Grecian priests: howbeit they are not schismaticques as the Grecians are, but without acceptis of persons, they honour al Christians. And they brought vnto vs sodden flesh, requesting vs to eat of their meat, and to pray for one of their company being dead. Then I sayd, because it was the euen of so great and so solemne a feast day, that we would not eat any flesh for that time. And I expounded vnto them the solemnitie of the sayd feast, whereat they greatly reioyced: for they were ignorant of all things appertaining to Christian religion, except only the name of Christ. They and many other Christians, both Russians, and Hungarians demanded of vs, whether they might be saued or no, because they were constrained to drinke Cosmos, & to eat the dead carcases of such things, as were slaine by the Saracens, and other infidels: Which euen the Greeke & Russian priests themselves also esteeme as things strangled or offered vnto idoles: because they were ignorant of the times of fasting, neither could they haue obserued them albeit they had knowen them. Then instructed I them as well as I could and strengthened them in the faith. As for the flesh which they had brought we reserued it untill the feast day. For there was nothing to be sold among the Tartars for gold & siluer, but only for cloth and garments, of the which kind of merchandise wee had none at all. When our seruants offered them any coine called Yperpera, they rubbed it with their fingers, and put it vnto their noses, to try by the smell whether it were copper or no. Neither did they allow vs any foode but cowes milke onely which was very lowe & filthie. There was one thing most necessary greatly wanting vnto vs, for the water was so foule and muddie by reason of their horses, that it was not meete to be drunk. And but for certaine biscet, which was by the goodnes of God remaining vnto vs, we had undoubtedly perished.

Of a Saracen which said that he would be baptized: and of certaine men which seemed to be lepers. Chap. 14.

Vpon the day of Pentecost there came vnto vs a certain Saracen, vnto whome, as hee talked with vs, we expounded the Christian faith. Who (hearing of Gods benefits exhibited vnto mankind by the incarnation of our Saviour Christ, and the resurrection of the dead, & the iudgement to come, & that in baptisme was a washing away of sinnes) sayd, that hee would be baptized. But when we prepared our selues to the baptizing of him, he suddenly mounted on horsebacke, saying that he would goe home and consult with his wife what were best to be done. And on the morrow after he told vs, that he durst in no case receiue baptisme, because then he should drinke no more Cosmos. For the Christians of that place affirme that no true Christians ought to drinke thereof: and that without the said liquor he could not liue in that desert. From which opinion, I could not for my life remoue him. Therefore be it knowen of a certainty vnto your highnes, that they are much estranged from the Christian faith by reason of that opinion which hath bin broached & confirmed among them by the Russians, of whom there is a great multitude in that place. The same day Scacaray the captaine aforesayd gaue vs one man to conduct vs to Sartach, and two other to guide vs vnto the next lodging, which was distant from that place fife dayes iourney for oren to trauell. They gaue vnto vs also a goate for victuals, and a great many bladders of cowes milke, & but a little Cosmos, because it is of so great estimation among them. And so taking our iourney directly toward the North, we thought that wee had passed through one of hell gates. The seruants which conducted vs began to play the bold theues with vs, seeing vs take so little heed vnto our selues. At length hauing lost much by their theeuery, harne taught vs wisdome. And then we came vnto the extremity of that prouince, which is fortified with a ditch from one sea vnto another: without the bounds wherof their lodging was situate. Into the which, so soone as we had entred, al the inhabitants there seemed vnto vs to be infected with leprosie: for certain base fellows were placed there to receiue tribute of al such as tooke salt out of the salt pits aforesaid. From that place

they told vs that we must trauel fifteen daies iourney, before we shuld find any other people. With them wee thanke Cosmos, and gaue vnto them a basket full of fruites and of bisket. And they gaue vnto vs eight oxen and one goate, to sustaine vs in so great a iourney, and I knowe not how many bladders of milke. And so changing our oxen, we tooke our iourney which we finished in tenne dayes, arriuing at another lodging: neither found we any water all that way, but onely in certaine ditches made in the valleyes, except two small riuers. And from the tinte wherein wee departed out of the foresaid prouince of Casaria, we trauailed directly Eastward, hauing a Sea on the South side of vs, and a waste desert on the North, which desert, in some places, reacheth twenty dayes iourney in breadth, and there is neither tree, mountaine, nor stone therein. And it is most excellent pasture, where the Comanians, which were called Capthac, were wont to feede their cattell. Howbeit by the Dutch men they are called Valani, and the prouince it selfe Valania. But I sidore calleth all that tract of land stretching from the riuier of Tanais to the lake of Meotis, and so along as farre as Danubius, the countrey of Alania. And the same land continueth in length from Danubius vnto Tanais (which diuideth Asia from Europe) for the space of two moneths iourney, albeit a man should ride poste as fast as the Tartars vse to ride: and it was all ouer inhabited by the Comanians, called Capthac: yea and beyond Tanais, as farre as the riuier of Edil or Volga: the space betwene the two which riuers is a great and long iourney to bee trauailed in ten dayes. To the North of the same prouince lieth Russia, which is full of wood in all places, and stretcheth from Polonia and Hungaria, euen to the riuier of Tanais: and it hath bene wasted all ouer by the Tartars, and as yet is daily wasted by them.

Russia.

Of our afflictions which we sustained: and of the Comanians maner of buriall. Chap. 15.

They preferre the Saracens before the Russians, because they are Christians, and when they are able to giue them no more golde nor silver, they dye them and their children like flockes of sheepe into the wilderness, constraining them to keepe their cattell there. Beyond Russia lieth the countrey of Prussia, which the Dutch knights of the order of Saint Maries hospitall of Ierusalem haue of late wholly conquered and subdued. And in very deede they might easily winne Russia, if they would put to their helping hand. For if the Tartars should but once know, that the great Priest, that is to say, the Pope did cause the ensigne of the crosse to bee displayed against them, they would flee all into their desert and solitarie places. We therefore went on towards the East, seeing nothing but heauen and earth, and sometimes the sea on our right hand, called the Sea of Tanais, and the sepulchres of the Comanians, which appeared vnto vs two leagues off, in which places they were wont to burie their kinred altogether. So long as we were travelling through the desert, it went reasonably well with vs. For I cannot sufficiently expresse in words the irkesome and tedious troubles which I sustained, when I came at any of their places of abode. For our guide would haue vs goe in vnto euery Captaine with a present, and our expenses would not extend so farre. For we were euery day eight persons of vs spending our waifaring prouision, for the Tartars seruants would all of them eate of our victuals. We our selues were five in number, and the seruants our guides were three, two to drive our carts, and one to conduct vs vnto Sarach. The flesh which they gaue vs was not sufficient for vs: neither could we finde any thing to be bought for our money. And as we sat vnder our carts in the coole shadowe, by reason of the extreme and vehement heate which was there at that time, they did so importunately and shamelessly intrude themselves into our companie, that they would euen tread vpon vs, to see whatsoeuer things we had. Pausing list at any time to ease themselves, the filthy lozels had not the maners to withdraue themselves farther from vs, then a beane can bee cast. Yea, like vile slouens they would lay their tails in our presence, while they were yet talking with vs: many other things they committed, which were most tedious and loathsome vnto vs. But aboue all things it grieved me to the very heart, that when I would utter ought vnto them, which might tend to their edification, my foolish interpreter would say: you shall not make me become a preacher now: I tell you, I cannot nor I will not rehearse any such wordes. And true it was which he saide, For I perceiued after ward, when I began to haue a litle smattering in the language, that when I spake one thing, he would say quite another, whatsoeuer came next vnto his witlesse tongues end. Then seeing the danger I might incurre in speaking by such an interpreter, I resolved much rather to holde my peace, and thus we trauailed with great toile from lodging to lodging, till at the length, a fewe dayes before the feast of Saint Marie Magdalene, we arriued at the banke of the mightie riuier Tanais which diuideth Asia from Europa, euen as the riuier Nilus of Egypt disioyneth Asia from Africa. At the same place where wee arriued, Baatu and Sartach did cause a certaine cotcage to be built, vpon the Gallerne banke of the riuer, for a companie of Russians to dwell in, to the ende they might transport Ambassadors and merchants in ferrie-boates ouer that part of the riuer. First they ferried vs ouer, and then our carts, putting one wheele into one lyter, and the other wheele into another lyter, hauing bounde both the lyters together, and so they prowe them ouer. In this place our guide played the foole most extreamely. For hee imagining that the said Russians, dwelling in the cottages, should haue prouided vs horses, sent home the beaſts which we brought with vs, in another cart, & they might returne vnto their owne maſters. And when we demanded to haue ſome beaſts of the, they answered, that they had a priuiledge from Baatu, whereby they were bound to none other ſeruice, but only to ferry ouer goods & commers: and that they receiued great tribute of marchants in regard therof. We ſtaid therefore by the ſaid riuer ſide three daies. The firſt day they gaue vnto vs a great freſh turbut: the ſecond day they beſtowed rye bread, and a litle fleſh vpon vs, which the purcuſer of the village had taken vp at euery houſe for vs: and the third day dyed fiſhes, which they haue there in great abundance. The ſaide riuer was euen as broad in that place, as the riuer of Sein is at Paris. And beſore we came there, we paſſed ouer many goodly waters, and full of fiſh: howbeit the barbarous and rude Tartars know not how to take them: neither do they make any reckoning of any fiſh, except it be ſo great, that they may pray vpon the fleſh therof, as vpon the fleſh of a ram. This riuer is the limite of the Eaſt part of Ruſſia, and it ſpringeth out of the ſennes of Marotis, which ſennes ſtretch vnto the North Ocean. And it runneth Southward into a certain great ſea 700. miles about, beſore it fallerh into the ſea called Pórus Euxinus. And al the riuers, which we paſſed ouer, ran with full ſtream into thoſe quarters. The ſoreſaid riuer hath great ſtope of wood alſo growing vpon the Weſt ſide thereof. Beyond this place the Tartars aſcend no farther vnto the North: for at that ſeaſon of the yere, about the firſt of Auguſt, they begin to returne backe vnto the South. And therfore there is another cottage ſomewhat lower, where paſſengers are ferried ouer in Winter time. And in this place wee were dyuen to great extremitie, by reaſon that we could get neither horses, nor oxen for any money. At length, after I had declared vnto them, that my coming was to labour for the common good of all Chriſtians, they lent vs oxen & men; howbeit we our ſelues were faine to trauel on foote. At this time they were reaping their rye. Wheat proſpereth not wel in that ſoile. They haue the ſeed of Willium in great abundance. The Ruſſian women attire their heads like vnto our women. They imbroder their ſafeguards or gowns on the outſide, from their feet vnto their kners with particoloured or grey ſuffe. The Ruſſian men weare caps like vnto the Dutch men. Alſo they weare vpon their heads certain ſharpe, & high-crowned hats made of felt, much like vnto a ſugar loafe. Then traueiled we 3. daies together, not finding any people. And when our ſelues and our oxen were exceeding weary and faine, not knowing how far off we ſhould find any Tartars, on the ſudden, there came two horses running towards vs, which we tooke with great ioy, and our guide and interpreter mounted vpon their backs, to ſee, how far off they could deſcry any people. At length vpon the fourth day of our iourney, hauing found ſome inhabitants, we reioyced like ſea-faring men, which had eſcaped out of a dangerous tempeſt, and had newly recouered the haven. Then hauing taken freſh horses, and oxen, we paſſed on from lodging to lodging, till at the laſt, vpon the ſecond of the Kalends of Auguſt, we arrived at the habitation of Duke Sartach himſelfe.

Of the dominion of Sartach, and of his Subiects. Chap. 16.

The region lying beyond Tanais, is a very goodly countrey, hauing ſtope of riuers and woods toward the North part thereof. There be mighty huge woods which two ſorts of people do inhabit. One of them is called Moxel, being meere Pagans, and without law. They haue neither townes nor cities, but only cottages in y woods. Their lord & a great part of themſelves were put to the ſword in high Germanie. Whereupon they highly commend the braue courage of the Almans, hoping as yet to be deliuered out of the bondage of the Tartars, by their meanes. If any merchant come vnto them, he muſt prouide things neceſſary for him, with whom he is firſt of all entertained, all the time of his abode among them. If any lieth with another mans wiſe, her huſband, vnleſſe he be an ciewitnes therof, regardeth it not: for they are not iealous ouer their wiues. They haue abundance of hogs, and great ſtope of hony & ware, and diuers ſorts of rich & coſtly ſkins, and plenty of falcons. Next vnto them are other people called Merclas, which the Latines call Merdwi, and they are Saracens. Beyond them is the riuer of Etilia or Volga, which is y mightieſt riuer that euer I ſaw. And it iſſueth from the North part of Bulgaria the greater, & ſo trending along Southward, diſimboqueth into a certain lake containing in circuit the ſpace of 4. moneths trauel, whereof I will ſpeak hereafter. The two ſoreſaid riuers, namely Tanais & Etilia, otherwiſe called Volga, towards the Northzen regions through the which we traueiled, are not diſtanc aſunder aboue 7. daies iourney, but but Southward they are diuided a great space one from another. For Tanais descenderth into the sea of Pontus: Et ilia maketh the foresaid sea of lake, with the help of many other riuers which fall therinto out of Persia. And we had to the South of vs huge high mountains, vpon the sides wherof, towards the said desert, doe the people called Cergis, and the Alani or Acas inhabit, who are as yet Christians, & wage warre against the Tartars. Beyond the, next vnto the sea of lake of Et ilia, there are certaine Saracens called Lesgi, who are in subiection vnto the Tartars. Beyond these is Porta ferrea, or the yron gate, now called Derbent, which Alexander built to exclude the barbarous nations out of Persia. Concerning the situation whereof, your maiestie shall vnderstand moze about the end of this Treatise: for I traualled in my returne by the very same place. Betwene the two foresaid riuers, in the regions through the which we passed did the Comanians of olde time inhabit, before they were oucrun by the Tartars.

Of the Court of Sartach, and of the magnificence thereof. Chap. 17.

As we found Sartach lying within three daies iourney of the riuer Et ilia: whose Court seemed vnto vs to be very great. For he himselfe had fixe wiues, and his eldest sonne also had three wiues: euery one of which women hath a great house, & they haue ech one of them about 200. cartes. Our guide went vnto a certaine Nestorian named Coiac, who is a man of great authoritie in Saracens Court. He made vs to goe very farre vnto the Lozbes gate. For so they call him, who hath the office of enterreining Ambassadors. In the euening Coiac commanded vs to come vnto him. Then our guide began to enquire what we would present him withal, & was exceedingly offended, when he saw that we had nothing ready to present. We stood before him, and he sate maiestically, hauing mulicke and dauncing in his presence. Then I spake vnto him in the wordes before recited, telling him, for what purpose I was come vnto his lorde, and requesting so much fauour at his hands, as to bring our letters vnto the sight of his Lord. I excused my selfe also, that I was a Monk, not hauing, nor receiuing, nor vsing any golde, or siluer, or any other precious thing, save onely our bookes, and the vestiments wherein wee serued God: and that this was the cause why I brought no present vnto him, nor vnto his Lord. For I that had abandoned mine owne goods, could not be a transporter of things for other men. Then hee answered very courteously, that being a Monk, and so doing, I did well: for so I should obserue my vow: neither did himselfe stand in neede of ought that we had, but rather was readie to bestow vpon vs such things as we our selues stood in neede of: and he caused vs to sit downe, and to drinke of his milke. And presently after he requested vs to say our deuotions for him: and we did so. We enquired also who was the greatest Prince among the Franckes: And I laide, the Emperour, if he could inioy his owne dominions in quiet. No (quoth he) but the king of France. For he had heard of your Highnes by lord Baldwine of Henault. I found there also one of the Knights of the Temple, who had bene in Cyprus, and had made repozt of all things which he sawe there. Then returned wee vnto our lodging. And on the morow we sent him a flagon of Pulcabel wine (which had lasted very wel in so long a iourney) and a boze full of bisket, which was most acceptaible vnto him. And he kept our seruants with him for that euening. The next morning he commanded me to come vnto the Court, and to bring the kings letters and my vestimentes, and bookes with me: because his Lorde was desirous to see them. Which we did accordingly, lading one cart with our bookes and vestimentes, and another with bisket, wine, and fruites. Then he caused all our bookes and vestimentes to bee laide forth. And there stood round about vs many Tartars, Christians and Saracens on horseback. At the sight whereof, he demanded whether I would bestow all those things vpon his Lord or no: Which saying made me to tremble, and grieved me full sore. Howbeit, dissembling our griefe as well as we could, we shapd him this answere: Sir, our humble request is, that our Lorde your master would vouchsafe to accept our bread, wine, and fruites, not as a present, because it is too meane, but as a benediction, least we should come with an emptie hand before him. And he shall see the letters of my soueraigne Lord the king, and by them he shall vnderstand for what cause we are come vnto him, and then both our selues, and all that we haue, shall stand to his curtesie: for our vestimentes be holy, and it is unlawfull for any but Priests to touch them. Then he commanded vs to inuest our selues in the saide garments, that we might goe before his Lord: and wee did so. Then I my selfe putting on our most precious ornaments, tooke in mine armes a very faire cushion, and the Bible which your Maiestie gaue me, and a most beautifull Psalter, which the Queenes Grace bestowed vpon me, wherein there were goodly pictures. Mine associate tooke a missal and a crosse: and the cleerke hauing put on his surplesse, tooke a censler in his hand. And so wee came vnto the presence of his Lord: and they lifted vp the felt hanging before his doore, that hee might behold behold vs. Then they caused the clearke and the interpreter thise to bow the knee : but of vs they required no such submission. And they diligently admonished vs to take heed, that in going in, and in coming out, we touched not the threshold of the house, and requested vs to sing a benediction for him. Then we entered in, singing Salve Regina. And within the entrance of the doore, stood a bench with cosmes, and drinking cups thereupon. And all his wines were there assembled. Also the Moals of rich Tartars thrusting in with vs pressed vs toze. Then Coiar caried vnto his lord the censer with incense, which he beheld very diligently, holding it in his hand. Afterward hee caried the Psalter vnto him, which he looked earnestly vpon, and his wife also that sat beside him. After that he caried the Bible: then Sartach asked if the Gospel were contained therein? Yea (said I) and all the holy scriptures besides. He tooke the crosse also in his hand, and demanded concerning the image, whether it were the image of Christ or no: I said it was. The Nestorians & the Armenians doe neuer make the figure of Christ vpon their crosses. Wherefore either they seem not to think wel of his passion, or els they are ashamed of it. Then he caused them that stood about vs, to stand aside, that he might more fully behold our ornaments. Afterward I deliuered vnto him your Hailesties letters, with the translation thereof into the Arabike, & Syriake languages. For I caused them to be translated at Acon into the character, & dialect of both the saide tongues. And there were certain Armenian priests, which had skil in the Turkish & Arabian languages. The aforesaid knight also of the order of the Temple had knowledge in the Syriake, Turkish, & Arabiantongues. Then we departed forth, and put off our vestiments, and there came vnto vs certaine Scribes together with the fozesaid Coiar, & caused our letters to be interpreted. Which letters being heard, he caused our bread, wine and frutes to be receiued. And he permitted vs also to carie our vestiments and bookes vnto our owne lodging. This was done vpon the feast of S. Peter ad vincula.

No good consequence.

How they were giuen in charge to goe vnto Baatu the Father of Sartach. Chap. 18.

THe next morning betimes came vnto vs a certaine Priest, who was brother vnto Coiar, requesting to haue our booke of Christine, because Sartach (as he said) was desirous to see it: and so we gaue it him. About euentide Coiar sent for vs, saying: Oh lord your king wrote good words vnto my lord and master Sartach. Howbeit there are certaine matters of difficulty in them concerning which he dare not determine ought, without the aduise and counsell of his father. And therefore of necessitie you must depart vnto his father, leauing behind you the two carts, which you brought hither yester day with vestiments and bookes, in my custodie: because my lorde is desirous to take more diligent view therof. I presently suspecting what mischiefe might ensue by his couetousnes, said vnto him: Sir, we will not onely leaue those with you, but the two other carts also, which we haue in our possession, will we commit vnto your custodie. You shall not (quoth he) leaue those behinde you, but for the other two carts first named, we will satisfie your request. I saide that this could not conveniently be done: but needes we must leaue all with him. Then he asked, whether we meant to tarie in the land: I answered: If you thoroughly understand the letters of my lorde the king, you know that we are euen so determined. Then he replied, that we ought to bee patient and lowly: and so we departed from him that euening. On the morrowe after he sent a Nestorian Priest for the carts, and we caused all the foure carts to be deliuered. Then came the fozesaid brother of Coiar to meet vs, and separated all those things, which we had brought the day before vnto the Court, from the rest, namely, the bookes and vestiments, and tooke them away with him. Howbeit Coiar had commanded, that we should carie those vestiments with vs, which wee ware in the presence of Sartach, that we might put them on before Baatu, if neede should require: but the said Priest tooke them from vs by violence, saying: thou hast brought them vnto Sartach, and wouldest thou carie them vnto Baatu? And when I would haue rendred a reason, he answered: be not too talkatiue, but goe your wayes. Then I saue that there was no remedie but patience: for wee could haue no access vnto Sartach himselfe, neither was there any other, that would doe vs iustice. I was affaide also in regard of the interpreter, least he had spoken other things then I saide vnto him: for his will was good that we should haue giuen away all that wee had. There was yet one comfort remaining vnto me: for when I once perceiued their couetous intent, I conueyed from among our bookes the Bible, and the sentences, and certaine other bookes which I made speciall account of. Howbeit I durst not take away the Psalter of my soueraigne Lady the Queene, because it was too wel known, by reason of the golden pictures therein. And so we returned with the two other carts vnto our lodging. Then came he that was appointed to be our guide vnto the court of Baatu, willing vs to take our iourney in all poste-haste: vnto whom I said, that I would in no case haue the carts to goe with me. Which thing he declared vnto Coiar. Then Coiar commaun-

ded, that we should leaue them and our seruant with him: And we did as he commanded. And so traueling directly Eastward towards Baatu, the third day we came to Ecilia of Volga: the streams whereof when I beheld, I wondered from what regions of the North such huge and mighty waters should descend. Before we were departed from Sartach, the foresaid Coiar, with many other Scribes of the court said vnto vs: doe not make report that our Lord is a Christian, but a Moal. Because the name of a Christian seemeth vnto them to be the name of some nation. So great is their pride, that albeit they beleue perhaps some things concerning Christ, yet will they not bee called Christians, being desirous that their owne name, that is to say, Moal should be exalted aboue all other names. Neither wil they be called by the name of Tartars. For the Tartars were another nation, as I was informed by them.

They are come as farre as Volga.

The Tartars will be called Moal.

Howe Sartach, and Mangu-Can, and Ken-Can doe reuerence vnto Christians. Chap. 19.

AT the same time when the French-men tooke Antioch, a certaine man named Con Can had dominion ouer the Northzen regions, lying thereabouts. Con is a proper name: Can is a name of authority or dignitie, which signifieth a diuiner or soothsayer. All diuiners are called Can amongst them. Whereupon their princes are called Can, because that vnto them belongeth the gouernment of the people by diuination. Wee doe reade also in the historie of Antiochia, that the Turkes sent for aide against the French-men, vnto the kingdome of Con Can. For out of those parts the whole nation of the Turkes first came. The said Con was of the nation of Kara-Caray, Kara signifieth blacke, and Caray is the name of a countrey. So that Kara-Caray signifieth the blacke Caray. This name was giuen to make a difference between the foresaid people, and the people of Caray, inhabiting Eastward ouer against y^e Ocean sea: concerning whom your maiesty shall vnderstand moze hereafter. These Carayans dwelt vpon certaine Alpes, by the which I traualled. And in a certain plaine countrey within those Alpes, there inhabited a Nestorian shephard, being a mighty gouernour ouer the people called Yayman, which were Christians, following the sect of Nestorius. After the death of Con Can, the said Nestorian exalted himselfe to the kingdome, and they called him King Iohn, reporting ten times moze of him then was true. For so the Nestorians which come out of those parts, vse to doe. For they blaze abroade great rumors, and reports vpon iust nothing. Whereupon they gaue out concerning Sartach, that he was become a Christian, and the like also they reported concerning Mangu Can, and Ken Can: namely because these Tartars make moze account of Christians, then they doe of other people, and yet in very deede, themselves are no Christians. So like wise there went forth a great report concerning the said king Iohn. Howbeit, when I traualled along by his territories, there was no man that knew any thing of him, but onely a few Nestorians. In his pastures or territories dwelleth Ken Can, at whose Court Friar Andrew was, And I my selfe passed by it at my returne. This Iohn had a brother, being a mightie man also, and a shephard like himselfe, called Vur, and he inhabited beyond the Alpes of Cara Caray, being distant from his brother Iohn, the space of three weekes iourney. He was lord ouer a certain village, called Cara Carum, hauing people also for his subiects, named Crit, or Merkit, who were Christians of the sect of Nestorius. But their Lord abandoning the worship of Christ, followed after idoles, retaining with him priests of the saide idoles, who all of them are worshippers of deuils and sozcerers. Beyond his pastures some tenne or fifteene dayes iourney, were the pastures of Moal, who were a poore and beggerly nation, without gouernour, and without Lawe, except their soothsayings, and their diuinations, vnto the which detestable studies, all in those partes doe apply their mindes. Neere vnto Moal were other poore people called Tartars. The foresaid king Iohn died without issue male, and thereupon his brother Vur was greatly enriched, and caused himselfe to be named Can: and his houses and flockes raunged euery vnto the borders of Moal. About the same time there was one Cyngis, a blacke smich among the people of Moal. This Cyngis stole as many cattel from Vur Can, as he could possibly get: insomuch that the shephards of Vur complained vnto their Lord. Then provided he an armie, and marched vp into the countrey of Moal to seeke for the saide Cyngis. But Cyngis fledde among the Tartars, and hidde himselfe amongst them. And Vur hauing taken some spoiles both from Moal, and also from the Tartars, returned home. Then spake Cyngis vnto the Tartars, and vnto the people of Moal, saying: Sirs, because we are destitute of a gouernour and Captaine, you see howe our neighbours do oppresse vs. And the Tartars and Moals appointed him to be their Chieftaine. Then hauing secretly gathered together an armie, he brake in suddenly vpon Vur, and ouercame him, and Vur fledde into Caraya. At the same time was the daughter of Vur taken, which Cyngis married vnto one of his sonnes, by whom she conceiued, & brought forth the great Can, which now reigneth, called Mangu-Can. Then Cyngis sent þ Tartars before him in al places where he came: and thereupon was their name published and spread abroade: for in all places the people would cry out: Loe, the Tartars come, the Tartars come. Howbeit, through continuall warres, they are now, all of them in a maner, consumed and brought to nought. Whereupon the Moals indour what they can, to extinguisht the name of the Tartars, that they may exalt their owne name. The countrey wherein they first inhabited, and where the Court of Cyngis Can as yet remaineth, is called Mancherule. But because Tartaria is the region, about which they haue obtained their conquests, they esteeme that as their royall and chiefe citie, and there for the most part doe they elect their great Can.

Of the Russians, Hungarians, and Alanians: and of the Caspian Sea. Chap. 20.

Dj, Berca.

NOW, as concerning Sartach, whether he belceues in Christ, or no, I knowe not. This I am sure of, that he will not be called a Christian. Hea rather he seemeth vnto mee to deride and scoffe at Christians. He lieth in the way of the Christians, as namely of the Russians, the Valachians, the Bulgarians of Bulgaria the lesser, the Soldaianes, the Kerkis, and the Alanians: who all of them passe by him, as they are going to the Court of his father Baatu, to carie gifts: whereupon he is moze in league with them. Howbeit, if the Saracens come, and bring greater gifts then they, they are dispatched sooner. He hath about him certaine Nestorian Priestes, who pray vpon their beades, and sing their deuotions. Also, there is another vnder Baatu called Berta, who feedeth his cattell toward Porta ferrea, or Derbent, where lieth the passage of all those Saracens, which come out of Persia, and out of Turkie to goe vnto Baatu, and passing by, they giue rewards vnto him. And he professeth himselfe to be a Saracene, and will not permit swines flesh to be eaten in his dominions. Howbeit, at the time of our returne, Baatu commanded him to remoue himselfe from that place, and to inhabite vpon the East side of Volga: for hee was unwilling that the Saracens messengers should passe by the saide Berta, because he sawe it was not for his profite. For the space of foure dayes while we remained in the court of Sartach, we had not any victuals at all allowed vs, but once onely a litle Cosmos. And in our iourney betweene him and his father, wee traueiled in great feare. For certaine Russians, Hungarians, and Alanians being seruants vnto the Tartars (of whom they haue great multitudes among them) assemble themselves twentie or thirtie in a companie, and so secretly in the night conueying themselves from home, they take bowes and arrowes with them, and whome soeuer they finde in the night season, they put him to death, hiding themselves in the day time. And hauing tired their horses, they goe in the night vnto a company of ocher horses feeding in some pasture, and change them for newe, taking with them also one or two horses besides, to eate them when they stand in neede. Our guide therefore was for a straide, least we should haue met with such companions. In this iourney wee had died for famine, had we not caried some of our bisket with vs. At length we came vnto the mighty riuer of Ecilia, or Volga. For it is foure times greater, then the riuer of Sein, and of a wonderfull depth: and issuing forth of Bulgaria the greater, it runneth into a certaine lake or sea, which of late they call the Hircan sea, according to the name of a certain citie in Persia, standing vpon the shore thereof. Howbeit Isidore calleth it the Caspian sea. For it hath the Caspian mountaines and the land of Persia situate on the South side thereof: and the mountaines of Musket, that is to say, of the people called Assassini towards the East, which mountaines are conioyned vnto the Caspian mountaines: but on the North side thereof lieth the same desert, wherein the Tartars doe now inhabite. Howbeit heretofore there dwelt certaine people called Changla. And on that side it receiuieth the streams of Ecilia; which riuer increaseth in Sommer time, like vnto the riuer Nilus in Egypt. Vpon the West part thereof, it hath the mountaines of Alani, and Lesgi, and Porta ferrea, or Derbent, and the mountaines of Georgia. This Sea therefore is compassed in on thre sides with the mountaines, but on the North side with plaine grounde. Frier Andrew, in his iourney traueiled round about two sides therof, namely the South and the East sides: and I my selfe about ocher two, that is to say, the North side in going from Baatu to Mangu-Can, and in returning likewise: and the West side in comming home from Baatu into Syria. A man may trauel round about it in foure moneths. And it is not true which Isidore reporteth, namely that this Sea is a bay or gulfe comming forth of the Ocean: for it doeth, in no part thereof, ioyne with the Ocean, but is intrenched on all sides with lande.

Of the court of Baatu : and howe we were interteined by him. Chap. 21.

AL the region extending from the West Hoze of the foresaid sea, where Alexanders Iron gate,
A other wise called the cite of Derbent, is situate, and from the mountaines of Alania, all along by the fennes of Meois, whereinto the river of Tanais falleth, and so forth, to the North Ocean, was wont to be called Albania, Of which countrey Isidore reporteth, that there be dogs of such an huge stature, and so fierce, that they are able in fight to match bulles, and to master lions. Which is true, as I understand by divers, who tolde me, that there towardes the North Ocean they make their dogges to draw in carts like oren, by reason of their bignesse and strength. Moreover, upon that part of Ecilia where we arrived, there is a new cottage built, wherein they have placed Tartars and Russians both together, to ferrie over, and transport messengers going and conning to and fro the court of Baatu. For Baatu remaineth upon the farther side towards the East. Neither ascendeth hee in Sommer time more Northward then the foresaide place where we arrived, but was even then descending to the South. From Januarie untill August both he and all other Tartars ascend by the banks of rivers towards cold and Northly regions, and in August they begin to returne backe againe. We passed downe the streame therefore in a barke, from the foresaid cottage unto his court. From the same place unto the villages of Bulgaria the greater, standing toward the North, it is fittie dayes iourney. I wonder what deuill caried the religion of Mahomet thither. For, from Derbent, which is upon the extreame borders of Persia, it is about 30. daies iourney to passe ouerthwart the desert, and so to ascend by the banke of Ecilia, into the foresaid countrey of Bulgaria. All which way there is no cite, but onely certaine cottages neere unto that place where Ecilia falleth into the sea. Those Bulgarians are most wicked Saracens, more earnestly professing the danable religion of Mahomet, then any other nation whatsoeuer. Moreover, when I first beheld the court of Baatu, I was astonied at the sight thereof: for his houses or tents seemed as though they had bene some huge and mighty citie, streching out a great way in length, the people ranging vp and downe about it for the space of some thye or foure leagues. And even as the people of Israel knew every man, on which side of the tabernacle to pitch his tent: euen so euery one of them knoweth right well, towards what side of the court he ought to place his house when he takes it from off the cart. Whereupon the court is called in their language Horda, which signifieth, the midst: because the gouernour or chieftaine among them dwels alwaies in the midst of his people: except onely that directly towards the South no subiect or inferiour person placeth himselfe, because towards that region the court gates are set open: but unto the right hand, and the left hand they extend theselues as farre as they will, according to the conueniencie of places, so that they place not their houses directly opposite against the court. At our arrival we were conducted unto a Saracen, who provided not for vs any victuals at all. The day following, we were brought unto the court: and Baa-tu had caused a large tent to be erected, because his house or ordinarie tent could not containe so many men and women as were assembled. Our guide admonished vs not to speake, till Baatu had gi-uen vs commandement so to doe, and that then we should speake our mindes briefly. Then Baatu demanded whether your Maiestie had sent Ambassadors unto him or no: I answered, that your Maiestie had sent messengers to Ken-Can: and that you would not haue sent messengers unto him, or letters unto Sartach, had not your Highnes bene perswaded that they were become Christians:
because you sent not unto them for any feare, but onely for congratulation, and curtesies sake, in regard that you heard they were conuerted to Christianity. Then led he vs unto his pavilion: and wee were charged not to touch the cordes of the tent, which they account in stead of the threshold of the house. There we stood in our habite bare-footed, and bare-headed, and were a great and strange spectacle in their eyes. For indeed frater Iohn de Plano Carpini had bin there before my coming: howbeit, because he was the Popes messenger, he changed his habit that he might not be countenued. Then we were brought into the very midst of the tent, neither required they of vs to do any reuerence by bowing our knees, as they vse to doe of other messengers. Wee stood therefore before him for the space wherein a man might haue rehearsed the Psalme, Miserere mei Deus: and there was great silence kept of all men. Baatu himselfe sate upon a seate long and broad like unto a bed, guilt all ouer, with thye staires to ascend thereunto, and one of his ladies sate beside him. The men there assembled, sate downe scattering, some on the right hand of the saide Lady, and some on the left. Those places on the one side which the women filled not vp (for there were only the wines of Baatu) were supplied by the men. Also, at the very entrance of the tent, stood a bench furnished with cosins, and with stately great cuppes of silver, and golde, being richly set with precious stones. Baatu beheld vs earnestly, and we him: and he seemed to me to resemble in personage, Mon-ſieur Iohn de beau mont, whoſe ſoule reſteth in peace. And hee had a freſh ruddie colour in his countenance. At length he commanded vs to ſpeake. Then our guide gaue vs direction, that we ſhould bow our knees & ſpeak. Whereupon I bowed one knee as vnto a man: then he ſignified that I ſhould kneele vpon both knees: and I did ſo, being loath to contend about ſuch circumſtaunces. And again he commanded me to ſpeake. Then I thinking of praier vnto God, becauſe I kneeled on both my knees, began to pray on this wiſe: Sir, we beſeech the Lord, from whom all good things doe proceed, and who hath giuen you theſe earthly benefices, that it would pleaſe him hereafter to make you partaker of his heauely bleſſings: becauſe the former without theſe are but vain and in- profitable. And I added further, Be it known vnto you of a certaintie, that you ſhal not obtain the ioyes of heauen, vnles you become a Chriſtian: for God ſaith, Whoſoeuer beleueth & is baptizd, ſhal be ſaued: but he that beleueth not, ſhal be condemned. At this word he modeſtly ſmiled: but the other Moals began to clap their hands, and to deride vs. And my ſilly interpreter, of whom eſpecial- ly I ſhould haue receiued comfort in time of need, was himſelf abaſhed & vterly daſht out of coun- tenance. Then, after ſilence made, I ſaid vnto him, I came vnto your ſonne, becauſe we heard that he was become a Chriſtian: and I brought vnto him letters on the behalfe of my ſouereigne Lord the king of France: and your ſonne ſent me hither vnto you. The cauſe of my coming therefore is beſt known vnto your ſelfe. Then he cauſed me to riſe vp. And he enquired your maieties name, and my name, and the name of mine aſſociate and interpreter, and cauſed them all to be put down in writing. He demaunded likewiſe (becauſe he had bene informed, that you were departed out of your owne countreys with an armie) againſt whom you waged warre: I answered: againſt the Saracens, who had defiled the houſe of God at Ieruſalem. He asked alſo, whether your Highnes had euer before that time ſent any meſſengers vnto him, or no: To you ſir: (ſaid I) neuer. Then cauſed he vs to ſit downe, and gaue vs of his milke to drinke, which they account to be a great fauour, eſpecially when any man is admitted to drinke Coſmos with him in his own houſe. And as I ſate looking downe vpon the ground, he commanded me to liſe vp my countenance, being deſirous as yet to take moze diligent view of vs, or els perhaps for a kinde of ſuperſtitious obſeruation. For they eſtimate it a ſigne of ill lucke, or a prognostication of euill vnto them, when any man ſits in their preſence, holding downe his head, as if he were ſad: eſpecially when he leanes his cheeke or chinne vpon his hand. Then we departed forth, and immediately after came our guide vnto vs, and conduc- ting vs vnto our lodging, ſaide vnto me: Your maſter the King requeſteth that you may remaine in this land, which requeſt Baatu cannot ſatiffie without the knowledge and conſent of Mangu- Can. Wherefore you, and your interpreter muſt of neceſſitie goe vnto Mangu- Can. Howbeit your aſſociate, and the other man ſhall returne vnto the court of Sartach, ſtaying there for you, till you come backe. Then began the man of God mine interpreter to lament, eſteeming himſelfe but a dead man. Mine aſſociate alſo proteſted, that they ſhould ſooner chop off his head, then withdraue him out of my companie. Howeuer I my ſelfe ſaide, that without mine aſſociate I coulde not goe: and that we ſtood in neede of two ſeruants at the leaſt, to attend vpon vs, becauſe, if one ſhould chance to fall ſicke, we coulde not be without another. Then returning vnto the court, he told theſe ſayings vnto Baatu. And Baatu commanded ſaying: let the two prieſts and the interpreter goe together, but let the clearke returne vnto Sartach. And coming againe vnto vs, hee tolde vs euſo. And when I would haue ſpoken for the clearke to haue had him with vs, he ſaide: No moze words: for Baatu hath reſolued, that ſo it ſhall be, and therefore I dare not goe vnto the court any moze. Go- ſet the clearke had remaining of the almes money beſtowed vpon him, 26. Yperperas, and no moze; 10. whereof he kept for himſelfe and for the lad, and 16. he gaue vnto the man of God for vs. And thus were we parted aſunder with teares: he returning vnto the court of Sartach, and our ſelues remaining ſtill in the ſame place.

Vpon Aſſumption euen our clearke arriued at the court of Sartach. And on the morrow after, the Neſtorian prieſtes were adozned with our beſtiments in the preſence of the ſaide Sar- tach. Then wee our ſelues were conducted vnto another hoſte, who was appointed to pro- uide vs houſeroome, victualles, and horſes. But becauſe wee had not ought to beſtowe vpon him, hee did all things vntowardly for vs. Then wee rode on ſortwarde with Baatu, deſcen- ding along by the banke of Etilia, for the ſpace of five weekes together: Sometimes mine aſſociate was ſo extremelie hungrie, that hee would tell mee in a manner weeping, that it lared with him as though hee had neuer eaten any thing in all his life before. There is a faire or market following the court of Baatu at all times: but it was ſo farre diſtant from vs that we coulde not haue recourse therunto. For wee were constrained to walke on foote for want of horses. At length certaine Hungarians (who had sometime bene after a sort Clergie men) found vs out: and one of them could as yet sing many songs without booke, and was accompanied of other Hungarians as a Priest, and was sent for vnto the funerals of his deceased countrey men. There was another of them also pzeily wel instructed in his Grammer: for hee could vnderstand the meaning of anything that wee spake, but could not answer vs. These Hungarians were a great comfort vnto vs, bying vs Cosinos to drinke, yea, and sometimes flesh for to eat also: who, when they requested to haue some bookes of vs, and I had not any to giue them (for indeede we had none but one p a Bible, and a bzeuiarie) it grieved mee exceedingly. And I saide vnto them: Bying mee some inke and payce, and I will wyte for you so long as we shall remaine here: and they did so. And I copied out for them Horas beatae Virginis, and Officium defunctorum. Moreover, vpon a certaine day, there was a Comanian that accompanied vs, saluting vs in Latine, and saying: Saluete Domini. Wondering thereat and saluting him againe, I demaunded of him, who had taught him that kinde of salutation: Hee saide that hee was baptized in Hungaria by our Frriers, and that of them hee learned it. He saide moreover, that Baacu had enquired many things of him concerning vs, and that hee tolde him the estate of our order. Afterwarde I sawe Baacu riding with his companie, and all his subiects that were householders or masters of families riding with him, and (in mine estimation) they were not fye hundred persons in all. At length about the ende of Holy roode, there came a certaine rich Moal vnto vs (whose father was a Millenarie, which is a great office among them) saying: I am the man that must conduct you vnto Mangucan, and wee haue thither a iourney of foure moneths long to trauell, and there is such extreame colde in those parts, that stones and trees doe euen rite asunder in regarde thereof. Therefore I would wish you thoroughly to aduise your selues, whether you be able to indure it or no. Vnto whome I answered: I hope by Gods helpe that we shalbe able to brooke that which other men can indure. Then he saide: if you cannot indure it, I wil forsake you by the way. And I answered him: it were not iust dealing for you so to doe: for wee goe not thither vpon any businesse of our owne, but by reason that we are sent by your lord. Wherefore sithence we are committed vnto your charge, you ought in no wise to forsake vs. Then he saide: all shalbe well. Afterward hee cauled vs to shewe him all our garments: and whatsoeuer hee deemed to be lesse needfull for vs, he willed vs to leaue it behinde in the custodie of our hoste. On the morrow they brought vnto ech of vs a furred gowne, made all of rammes skinner, with the wool stil vpon them, and breeches of the same, and bootes also of bulkins according to their fashion, and hooes made of felt, and hoods also made of skinner after their maner. The second day after Holy rood, we began to set forward on our iourney, hauing thre guides to direct vs: and we rode continually Eastward, till the feast of All Saints. Throughout all that region, and beyonde also did the people of Changle inhabit, who were by parentage descended from the Romanes. Vpon the North side of vs, wee had Bulgaria the greater, and on the South, the foresaid Caspian sea.

Of the riuier of Iagac: and of diuers regions or nations. Chap. 23.

HAuing traueiled twelue dayes iourney from Etilia, wee found a mightie riuier called Iagac: which riuier issuing out of the North, from the land of Pascacir, descended into the foresaid sea. The language of Pascacir, and of the Hungarians is all one, and they are all of them shepheards, not hauing any cities. And their countrey bordereth vpon Bulgaria the greater, on the West frontier thereof. From the North east part of the said countrey, there is no citie at all. For Bulgaria the greater is the farthest countrey that way, that hath any citie therein. Out of the forenamed region of Pascacir, proceeded the Hunnes of olde time, who afterwarde were called Hungarians. Next vnto it is Bulgaria the greater. Isidore reporteth concerning the people of this nation, that with swift horses they trauesed the impregnable walles and boundes of Alexander, (which, together with the rocks of Caucasus, serued to restraine those barbarous and blood-thirstie people from inuading the regions of the South) insomuch that they had tribute paid vnto them, as farre as Egypt. Likewise they wasted all countreys euen vnto France. Whereupon they were more mightie then the Tartars as yet are. And vnto them the Blacians, the Bulgarians, and the Vandalis ioyned themselves. For out of Bulgaria the greater, came those Bulgarians. Moreover, they which inhabit beyond Danubius, neere vnto Constantinople, and not farre from Pascacir, are called Ilac, which (sauiing the pronunciation) is al one with Blac, (for the Tartars cannot pronounce the letter B) from whom also descended the people which inhabit the land of Assani. For they are both of the called Ilac (both these, & the other) in y languages of the Russians, y Polonians, & the Bohemians.

The Sclauonians speake all one language with the Vandals, all which banded themselues with the Hunnes: and now for the most part, they vnite themselues vnto the Tartars: who God hath raised vp from the vtmost partes of the earth, according to that which the Lord saith: I will prouoke them to enuy (namely such as keepe not his Law) by a people, which is no people, and by a foolish nation will I anger them. This prophesie is fulfilled, according to the literal sense thereof, vpon all nations which obserue not the Law of God. All this which I haue written concerning the land of Pascatir, was told me by certaine Friers prædicants, which traailed thither before euer the Tartars came abroad. And from that time they were subdued vnto their neighbors the Bulgarians being Saracens, whereupon many of them proued Saracens also. Other matters concerning this people, may be known out of Chronicles. For it is manifest, that those prouinces beyond Constantinople, which are now called Bulgaria, Valachia, & Sclauonia, were of old time prouinces belonging to the Greekes. Also Hungaria was heretofore called Pannonia. And wee were riding ouer the land of Cangle, from the feast of Holy roode, vntill the feast of All Saints: traueiling almost euery day (according to mine estimation) as farre, as from Paris to Orleans, and sometimes farther, as we were prouided of poste horses: for some dayes we had change of horses twice or thrise in a day. Sometimes we traailed two or thre daies together, not finding any people, and then we were constrained not to ride so fast. Of 20. or 30. horses we had alwayes the woozst, because wee were strangers. For euery one tooke their choice of the best horses before vs. They prouided mee alwayes of a strong horse, because I was very corpulent & heauy: but whether he ambled a gentle pace or no, I durst not make any question. Neither yet durst I complaine, although he trotted full soze. But euery man must be contented with his lot as it fell. Whereupon wee were exceedingly troubled: for oftentimes our horses were tired before we could come at any people. And then wee were constrained to beate and whip on our horses, and to lay our garments vpon other empty horses: yea and sometimes two of vs to ride vpon one horse.

Of the hunger, and thirst, and other miseries, which wee sustained in our iourney. Chap. 24.

OF hunger and thirst, colde and wearinesse, there was no end. For they gaue vs no victuals, but onely in the euening. In the morning they vsed to giue vs a litle drinke, or some sodden Miller to sup off. In the euening they bestowed flesh vpon vs, as namely, a shoulder and breast of rams mutton, and euery man a measured quantitie of bzoath to drinke. When we had sufficient of the flesh-bzoath, we were maruellously wel refreshed. And it seemed to me most pleasant, and most nourishing drinke. Euery Saterday I remained fasting vntil night, without eating or drinking of ought. And when night came, I was constrained, to my great grief and sorow, to eat flesh. Sometimes we were faine to eat flesh halfe sodden, or almost rawe, and all for want of feluel to seethe it withal: especially when we lay in the fields, or were benighted before we came at our iourneys end: because we could not then conueniently gather together the doung of horses or ore: for other feluel we found but seldom, except perhaps a few thornes in some places. Like wise vpon the bankes of some riuers, there are woods growing here and there, howbeit they are very rare. In the beginning our guide highly disdained vs, and it was tedious vnto him to conduct such base fellows. Afterward, when he began to know vs somewhat better, he directed vs on our way by the courts of rich Moals, and we were requested to pray for them. Wherefore, had I caried a good interpreter with me, I should haue had opportunitie to haue done much good. The foresaid Chingis, who was the first great Can or Emperour of the Tartars, had foure sonnes, of whome proceeded by naturall descent many children, euery one of which doeth at this day enioy great possessions: and they are daily multiplied and dispersed ouer that huge and waste desert, which is, in dimensions, like vnto the Ocean Sea. Our guide therefore directed vs, as we were going on our iourney, vnto many of their habitations. And they maruelled exceedingly, that we would receiue neither gold, nor silver, nor precious and costly garments at their hands. They inquired also, concerning the great Pope, whether he was of so lasting an age as they had heard: For there had gone a report among them, that he was 500. yeres olde. They inquired likewise of our countreis, whether there were abundance of sheep, oxen, & horses or no: Concerning the Ocean sea, they could not conceiue of it, because it was without limits or banks. Upon the euen of y^e feast of All Saints, we forsook the way leading towards the East, (because the people were now descended very much South) and we went on our iourney by certaine Alpes, or mountaines directly Southward, for the space of 8. dayes together. In the foresaid desert I saw many asses (which they cal Colan) being rather like vnto mules: these did our guide & his companions chase very eagerly: howbeit, they did but lose their labour: for the beastes were too swift for them. Upon the 7. day there appeared to the South of vs huge high mountaines, and we entred into a place which was well watered, and fresh as a garden, and found land tilled and manured. The eight day after the feast of All Saints, we arriued at a certain towne of the Saracens, named Kenchar, the gouernour whereof met our guide at the townes end with ale and cups. For it is their maner at all townes and villages, subiect vnto them, to meet the messengers of Baatu and Mangu-Can with meate and drinke. At the same time of the yere, they went by on the yce in that countrey. And before the feast of S. Michael, we had frost in the desert. I enquired the name of that prouince: but being now in a strange territorie, they could not tell mee the name thereof, but onely the name of a very smal citie in the same prouince. And there descended a great riuer downe from the mountaines, which watered the whole region, according as the inhabitants would giue it passage, by making diuers channells and sluices: neither did this riuer exonerate it selfe into any sea, but was swallowed up by an hideous gulfie into the bowels of the earth: and it caused many fennes or lakes. Also I saw many vines, and drinke of the wine thereof.

How Ban was put to death: and concerning the habitation of the Dutch men. Chap. 25.

The day following, we came vnto another cottage neere vnto the mountains. And I enquired what mountains they were, which I vnderstood to be the mountains of Caucasus, which are stretched forth, & continued on both parts to the sea, from the West vnto the East: and on the West part they are conioyned vnto the foresaid Caspian sea, wherinto the riuer of Volga dischargeth his streams. I enquired also of the city of Talas, wherein were certaine Dutchmen seruants vnto one Buri, of whom Friar Andrew made mention. Concerning whom also I enquired very diligently in the courts of Sarrach & Baatu. Howbeit I could haue no intelligence of them, but onely that their lord & master Ban was put to death vpon the occasion following: This Ban was not placed in good and fertile pastures. And vpon a certain day being drunken, he spake on this wise vnto his men. Am not I of the stocke and kindred of Chingis Can, as well as Baatu? (for in very deede he was brother or nephew vnto Baatu.) Why then doe I not passe and repasse vpon the banke of Ecilia, to feed my cattel there, as freely as Baatu himselfe doeth? Which speeches of his were reported vnto Baatu. Whereupon Baatu wrote vnto his seruants to bring their Lord bound vnto him. And they did so. Then Baatu demanded of him whether he had spoken any such words: And hee confessed that he had. Howbeit, (because it is the Tartars maner to pardon drunken men) he excused himselfe that he was drunken at the same time. Howe durst thou (quoth Baatu) once name mee in thy drunkenness? And with that hee caused his head to be chapt off. Concerning the foresaid Dutchmen, I could not vnderstand ought, till I was come vnto the court of Mangu-Can. And there I was informed that Mangu-Can had remoued them out of the iurisdiction of Baatu, for the space of a moneths iourney from Talas Eastward, vnto a certaine village, called Bolac: where they are set to dig gold, and to make armour. Whereupon I could neither goe nor come by them. I passed very neere the saide citie in going forth, as namely, within thre dayes iourney thereof: but I was ignorant that I did so: neither could I haue turned out of my way, albeit I had knowen so much. From the foresaide cottage we went directly Eastward, by the mountaines aforesaid. And from that time we trauielled among the people of Mangu-Can, who in all places sang and daunced before our guide, because hee was the messenger of Baatu. For this curtesie they doe alfoord eche to other: namely, the people of Mangu-Can receiving the messengers of Baatu in maner aforesaid: and so likewise the people of Baatu intertaining the messengers of Mangu-Can. Notwithstanding the people of Baatu are more surly and steute, and shewe not so much curtesie vnto the seruantes of Mangu-Can, as they doe vnto them. A fewe dayes after, wee entered vpon those Alpes where the Cara Carayans were wont to inhabite. And there wee found a mightie riuer: insomuch that wee were constrained to imbarke our selues, and to saile ouer it. Afterward we came into a certaine valley, where I saw a castle destroyed, the walles whereof were onely of mudde: and in that place the ground was tilled also. And there wee founde a certaine village, named Equius, wherein were Saracens, speaking the Persian language: howbeit they dwelt an huge distance from Persia. The day following, hauing passed ouer the foresaide Alpes which descended from the great mountains Southward, we entred into a most beautiful plaine, hauing high mountaines on our right hande, and on the left hande of vs a certaine Sea or lake, which containeth fiftene dayes iourney in circuite. All the foresayde plaine is most commodiously watered with certaine freshets distilling from the said mountaines, all which do fall into the lake. In Sommer time wee returned by the North shore of the saide lake, and there were great mountaines on that side also. Vpon the forenamed plaine there were wont to bee great store of villages: but for the most part they were all wasted, in regarde of the fertile pastures, that the Tartars might feede their cattel there. Wee found one great citie there named Cailac, wherein was a mart, and great store of Merchants frequenting it. In this citie wee remained fifteene dayes, staying for a certaine Scribe or Secretarie of Baatu, who ought to haue accompanied our guide for the dispatching of certaine affaires in the court of Mangu. All this countrey was wont to be called Organum: and the people thereof had their proper language, and their peculiar kinde of writing. But it was altogether inhabited of the people called Contomanni. The Nestorians likewise in those parts vsed the very same kinde of language and writing. They are called Organa, because they were wont to be most skilfull in playing vpon the Organes or citherne, as it was reported vnto me. Here first did I see worshippers of idoles, concerning whom, bee it knowen vnto your maiestie, that there be many sects of them in the East countries.

The people called Iugures
idolaters.

The first sort of these idolaters are called Iugures: whose land bordereth vpon the foresaid land of Organum, within the said mountains Eastward: and in all their cities Nestorians do inhabit together, and they are dispersed likewise towards Persia in the cities of the Saracens. The citizens of y^e foresaid city of Cailac had 3. idole-Temples: and I entred into two of them, to beholde their foolish superstitions. In the first of which I found a man hauing a crosse painted with ink vpon his hand, wherupon I supposed him to be a Christian: for he answered like a Christian vnto all questions which I demanded of him. And I asked him, Why therefore haue you not the crosse with the image of Iesu Christ therupon? And he answered: We haue no such custome. Whereupon I conjectured that they were indeede Christians: but, that for lacke of instruction they omitted the foresaide ceremonie. For I saw there behind a certaine chest (which was vnto them in steed of an altar, wherupon they set candles and oblations) an image hauing wings like vnto the image of Saine Michael, and other images also, holding their fingers, as if they would blesse some body. That euening I could not find any thing els. For the Saracens doe onely invite men thither, but they will not haue them speake of their religion. And therfore, when I enquired of the Saracens concerning such ceremonies, they were offended therat. On the morrow after were the Kalends, and the Saracens feast of Pascheouer. And changing mine Inne or lodging the same day, I tooke by mine aduise neere vnto another idole-Temple. For the citizens of the said citie of Cailac doe continually invite, & lovingly intertaine all messengers, euery man of them according to his abilitie and portion. And entering into the foresaid idole-Temple, I found the Priests of the said idoles there. For alwayes at the Kalends they set open their Temples, and the priests adorne themselves, and offer by the peoples oblations of bread and fruits. First therefore I will describe vnto you those rites and ceremonies, which are common vnto all their idole-Temples: and then the superstitions of the foresaid Iugures, which be, as it were, a sect distinguished from the rest. They doe all of them worship towards the North, clapping their hands together, and prostrating themselves on their knees vpon y^e earth, holding also their foreheads in their hands. Whereupon the Nestorians of those parts will in no case ioine their hands together in time of prayer: but they pray, displaying their hands before their breasts. They extend their Temples in length East and West: and vpon the North side they build a chamber, in manner of a Vestry for themselves to goe forth into. Or sometimes it is otherwise. If it be a foure square Temple, in the midst of the Temple towards the North side thereof, they take in one chamber in that place where the quire should stand. And within the said chamber they place a chest long and broad like vnto a table: and behinde the saide chest towards the South stands their principall idole: which I sawe at Caracarum, and it was as bigge as the idole of Saine Christopher. Also a certaine Nestorian priest, which had bin in Catay, saide that in that countrey there is an idole of so huge a bignes, that it may be seen two daies iourney before a man come at it. And so they place other idoles round about the foresaid principall idole, being all of them finely gilt ouer with pure golde: and vpon the saide chest, which is in manner of a table, they set candles and oblations. The doores of their Temples are alwayes opened towards the South, contrary to the custome of the Saracens. They haue also great belles like vnto vs. And that is the cause (as I thinke) why the Christians of the East will in no case vse great belles, notwithstanding they are common among the Russians, and Grecians of Galaria.

Of their Temples and idoles: and howe they behaue themselves in worshipping their false gods: Chap. 27.

All their Priests had their heads and beards shauen quite ouer: and they are clad in saffron coloured garments: and being once shauen, they lead an vnmaried life from that time forward: and

and they lue an hundred or two hundred of them together in one clouster or couent. Upon those dayes when they enter into their temples, they place two long soozmes therein: and so sitting vpon the sayd soozmes like singing men in a quier, namely the one halfe of them directly ouer against the other, they haue certaine books in their hands, which sometimes they lay downe by them vpon the soozmes: and their heads are bare so long as they remaine in the temple. And there they reade softly vnto themselves, not vtering any voice at all. Whereupon comming in amongst them, at the time of their superstitious deuotions, and finding them all sitting mute in maner aforesayde, I attempted diuers waies to prouoke them vnto speech, and yet could not by any means possible. They haue with them also whithersoener they goe, a certaine string with an hundred or two hundred nuthels thereupon, much like to our bea-ronle which we cary about with vs. And they doe alwayes utter these wordes: Om mam Haclani, God thou knowest: as one of them expounded it vnto me. And so often doe they expect a reward at Gods hands, as they pronounce these wordes in remembrance of God. Round about their temple they doe alwayes make a faire court, like vnto a churchyard, which they enuiron with a good wall: and vpon the South part thereof they build a great portal, wherein they sit and conferre together. And vpon the top of the said portall they pitch a long pole right vp, exalting it, if they can, about all the whole towne besides. And by the same pole all men may knowe, that there stands the temple of their idoles. These rites and ceremonies aforesayd be common vnto all idolaters in those parts. Going vpon a time towardes the foresayd idole-temple, I found certain priests sitting in the outward portall. And those which I sawe, seemed vnto me, by their shauen beards, as if they had bene French men. They wore certaine ornaments vpon their heads made of paper. The priests of the foresaide Iugures doe vse such attire whithersoener they goe. They are alwayes in their saffron coloured iackets, which be very straight being laced or buttoned from the bosome right downe, after the French fashion. And they haue a cloake vpon their left shoulder descending before and behind vnder their right arme, like vnto a deacon carrying the housel-bore in time of lent. Their letters of kind of writing the Tartars did recetue. They begin to write at the top of their paper drawing their lines right downe: and so they reade and multiply their lines from the left hand to the right. They doe vse certaine papers and characters in their magical practises. Whereupon their temples are full of such short scroules hanging round about them. Also Mangu-Can haith sent letters vnto your Maestie written in the language of the Moals or Tartars, and in the foresayd hand or letter of the Iugures. They burne their dead according to the ancient custome, and lay by the ashes in the top of a Pyramis. Now, after I had sit a while by the foresaid priests, and entered into their temple and seene many of their images both great and small, I demanded of them what they beleued concerning God: And they answered: We beleue that there is onely one God. And I demanded farther: Whether do you beleue that he is a spirit, or some bodily substance? They saide: We beleue that he is a spirit. Then said I: Doe you beleue that God euer tooke mans nature vpon him? They answered: Noe. And againe I said: Sithence ye beleue that he is a spirit, to what end doe you make so many bodily images to represent him? Sithence also you beleue not that hee was made man: why doe you resemble him rather vnto the image of a man then of any other creature? Then they answered saying: we frame not those images whereby to represent God. But when any rich man amongst vs, or his soune, or his wife, or any of his friends deceaseth, hee causeth the image of the dead party to be made, and to be placed here: and we in remembrance of him doe reuerence thereunto. Then I replied: you doe these things onely for the friendship and flatterie of men. Noe (said they) but for their memory. Then they demanded of me, as it were in scoffing wise: Where is God? To whom I answered: where is your soule? They said, in our bodies. Then saide I, is it not in euery part of your bodie, ruling and guiding the whole bodie, and yet notwithstanding is not seene or perceived? Then so God is euery where and ruleth all things, and yet is he inuisible, being vnderstanding and wisdom it selfe. Then being desirous to haue had some more conference with them, by reason, that mine interpreter was weary, and not able to expresse my meaning, I was constrained to keepe silence. The Moals or Tartars are in this regard of their sect: namely they beleue that there is but one God: howbeit they make images of felt, in remembrance of their deceased friends, couering them with fine most rich and costly garments, and putting them into one or two carts, which carts no man dare once touch: and they are in the custody of their soothsayers, who are their priests, concerning whom I will giue your Highnesse more at large to vnderstand hereafter. These soothsayers or diuiners do alwayes attend vpon the court of Mangu and of other great personages. As for the poorer or meaner sorte, they haue them not, but such onely as are of the stocke and kindred of Chingis. And when they are to remoue or to take any journey, the said diuiners goe before them, euen as the cloude pillar went before the children of Israel. And they appoint ground where the tents must be pitched, and first of all they take downe their owne houses: & after them the whole court doth the like. Also vpon their festiual daies or kalends they take forth the foresayd images, and place them in order rounde, or circle wise within the house. Then come the Moals or Tartars, and enter into the same house, bowing themselves before the said images and worship them. Moreover, it is not lawfull for any stranger to enter into that house. For vpon a certaine time I my selfe would haue gone in, but I was chidden full well for my labour.

Of diuers and sundry nations: and of certaine people which were wont to eate their owne parents. Chap. 28.

But the foresayd Iugures (who liue among the Christians, and the Saracens) by their sundry disputations, as I suppose, haue bene brought vnto this, to beleue, that there is but one onely God. And they dwell in certaine cities, which after ward were brought in subiection vnto Chingis Can: whereupon he gaue his daughter in marriage vnto their king. Also the citie of Caracorum is selfe in a manner within their territory: and the whole countrey of king or Presbyter Iohn, & of his brother Vutlyeth neere vnto their dominions: sauing, that they inhabite in certaine pastures Northward, and the sayde Iugures betwene the mountaines towards the South. Whereupon it came to passe, that the Moals receiued letters from them. And they are the Tartars principall scribes: & al the Nestorians almost can skill of their letters. Next vnto them, between the foresayd mountaines Eastward, inhabite the nation of Tangut, who are a most valiant people, and tooke Chingis in battell. But after the conclusion of a league hee was set at libertie by them, and after ward subdued them. These people of Tangut haue oren of great strength, withtailes like vnto horses, and with long shagge haire vpon their backs and bellies. They haue legges greater then other oren haue, and they are exceedingly fierce. These oren drayne the great houses of the Moals: and their hornes are slender, long, streight, and most sharpe pointed: insomuch that their owners are faine to cut off the endes of them. A cowe will not suffer her selfe to be coupled vnto one of them, vntles they whistle or sing vnto her. They haue also the qualities of a Buffe: for if they see a man clothed in reb, they run vpon him immediately to kill him. Next vnto them are the people of Teber, men which were wont to eate the carcases of their deceased parents: that for pities sake, they might make no other sepulchre for them, then their owne bowels. Howbeit of late they haue left off this custome, because that thereby they became abominable and odious vnto al other nations. Notwithstanding vnto this day they make fine cups of the skuls of their parents, to the ende that when they drinke out of them, they may amidst all their iollities and delights call their dead parents to remembrance. This was tolde mee by one that saw it. The sayd people of Teber haue great plentie of golde in their land. Whosoever therefore wanteth golde, diggeth till he hath found some quantitie, and then taking so much thereof as will serue his turne, he layeth by the residue within the earth: because, if he should put it into his chest or storhouse, hee is of opinion that God would withhold from him all other gold within the earth. I sawe some of those people, being very deformed creatures. In Tangut I saw lusty tall men, but byrowne and swart in colour. The Iugures are of a middle stature like vnto our French men. Amongst the Iugures is the originall and roote of the Turkish, and Comanian languages. Next vnto Teber are the people of Langa and Solanga, whose messengers I saw in the Tartars court. And they had brought more then ten great cartes with them, euery one of which was drawen with fire oren. They be litle byrowne men like vnto Spaniards. Also they haue iackets, like vnto the bypper vestment of a deacon, sauing that the sleeves are somewhat streighter. And they haue miters vpon their heads like bishops. But the fore part of their miter is not so hollow within as the hinder part: neither is it sharpe pointed or cornered at the toppe: but there hang downe certaine square flappes compacted of a kinde of straw which is made rough and rugged with extreme heat, and is so trimmed, that it glittereth in the sunne beames, like vnto a glasse, or an helmet well burnished. And about their temples they haue long bands of the foresayd matter fastened vnto their miters, which bouer in the wind, as if two long hornes grew out of their heads. And when the winde tosseth them by and downe too much, they tie them ouer the midd of their miter from one temple to another: and so they lie circle wise ouerthwart their heads. Moreover their principall messenger comming vnto the Tartars court had a table of elephants tooth about him of a cubite in length, and a handfull in breadth, being very smoothe. And whensoever hee spake vnto the Emperour himselfe, or vnto any other great personage, hee alwayes beheld that table, as if hee had found therein those things which hee spake: neither did he cast his eyes to the right hand, nor to the left, nor vpon his face, with whom he talked. Yea, going too and fro before his lord, hee looketh no where but only vpon his table. Beyond this (as I vnderstand of a certainty) there are other people people called Muc, hauing villages, but no one particular man of them appropriating any cattell vnto himselfe. Notwithstanding there are many flockes and droones of cattell in their countrey, & no man appointed to keepe them. But when any one of them standeth in neede of any beast, hee ascenderth vnto an hill, and there maketh a shout, and all the cattell which are within hearing of the noyse, come flocking about him, and suffer themselves to be handled and taken, as if they were tame. And when any messenger or stranger cometh into their countrey, they shut him vp into an house, ministering there things necessary vnto him, vntill his businesse he dispatched. For if auncie stranger should trauell through that countrey, the cattell would flee away at the very sent of him, and so would become wilde. Beyond Muc is great Cathaya, the inhabitants whercof (as I suppose) were of olde time, called Seres. For from them are brought most excellent stufes of silke. And this people is called Seres of a certain towne in the same countrey. I was credibly informed, that in the said countrey, there is one towne hauing wailes of siluer, and bulwarkes or towers of golde. There be many prouinces in that land, the greater part whereof are not as yet subdued vnto the Tartars. And amongst * mention of their former ancient Charters from Edward the Confessor, William the Conqueror, William Rufus, Henry the second, king Richard the first, king John, and Henry the third continued vnto them.

Edward by the grace of God king of England, lord of Ireland, & duke of Gascoigne, to all Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Priors, Carles, Barons, Justices, Shirifs, Prothonots, Officers, & to all Bayliffes and true subiects greeting. You shall knowe that for the faithfull seruice that our Barons of the five Ports hitherto to our predecessors kings of England, & vnto vs lately in our armie of Wales haue done, and for their good seruice to vs and our heires kings of England, truly to be continued in time to come, we haue granted & by this our Charter confirmed for vs and our heires, to the same our Barons and to their heires, all their liberties and freedoms. So that they shall be free from all toll, and from all custome; that is to say from all lastage, tallage, passage, cariage, riuage, alponlage, and from all wecke, and from all their sale, carping and recarping through all our realme and dominion, with Locke and souke, toll and theme. And that they shall haue Infangtheke, and that they shall be weckefree, lastagefree, and louecopfree. And that they shall haue Denne and Strande at great Yarmouth, according as it is contained in the ordinance by vs thereof made perpetually to bee obserued. And also that they are free from all shires and hundredes: so that if any person will plead against them, they shall not aunswere nor pleade otherwise then they were wont to plead in the time of the lord, king Henrie our great grandfather: And that they shall haue their findelles in the sea and in the land: And that they be free of all their goods and of all their marchandise as our freemen. And that they haue their honours in our court, and their liberties throughout all the land wheresoeuer they shall come. And that they shall be free for euer of all their lands, which in the time of Lord Henrie the king our father they possessed: that is to say in the 44. yere of his reign, from all manner of summonces before our Justices to any manner of pleadings, iourneying in what shire soeuer their lands are. So that they shall not be bound to come before the Justices aforesaid, except any of the same Barons doe implead any man, or if any man be impleaded. And that they shall not pleade in any other place, except where they ought, and where they were wont, that is to say, at Shepeway. And that they haue their liberties and freedoms from henceforth, as they and their predecessors haue had them at any time better, more fully and honourably in the time of the kings of England, Edward, William the first, William the second, Henrie the king our great grandfather, and in the times of king Richard, and king John our grandfathers, and lord king Henrie our father, by their Charters: as the same Charters which the same our Barons thereof haue, and which we haue seene, doe reasonably testifie. And we forbid that no man vniuilly trouble them nor their marchandise vpon our forseiture of ten pounds. So neuertheless, that when the same Barons shall faile in doing of Justice or in receiuing of Justice, our Warden, and the wardens of our

heires of the Cinque Portes, which for the time shall be, their Portes and liberties may enter for to doe their full Justice. So also that the sayd Barons and their heires, do unto vs and to our heires kings of England by the peare their full seruice of 57. Shippes at their costs by the space of fiftene dayes at our somoune, or at the somoune of our heires. We haue granted also unto them of our speciall grace that they haue Outfangehyse in their lands within the Portes aforesayd, in the same manner that Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Carles and Barons, haue in their manours in the countie of Kent. And they be not put in any Assises, Iuries, or Recognisances by reason of their forreine tenure against their will: and that they be free of all their owne wines for which they do trauaile of our right pyse, that is to say, of one tunne before the mast, and of another behinde the mast. We haue granted furthermore unto the said Barons for vs and our heires, that they for ever haue this libertie, that is to say, That we or our heires shall not haue the wardship or mariages of their heires by reason of their landes, which they holde within the liberties and Portes aforesayde, for the which they doe their seruice aforesayd: and for the which wee and our progenitoys had not the wardships and mariages in tyme past. But we our aforesayd confirmation vpon the liberties and freedoms aforesayde, and our grants following to them of our especiall grace, of newe haue caused to be made, sauing alwaies in al things our kingly dignitie: And sauing unto vs and to our heires, plea of our crowne, life and member. Wherefore we will and surely command for vs and our heires that the aforesaid Barons and their heires for ever haue all the aforesaid liberties and freedoms, as the aforesaid Charters do reasonably testifie. And that of our especiall grace they haue outfangehyse in their lands within the Portes aforesaid after the manner that Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Carles and Barons haue in their manours in the countie of Kent. And that they be not put in Assises, Iuries, or Recognisances by reason of their forreine tenure against their will. And that they bee free of their owne wines for which they trauaile of our right pyse or custome, that is to say of one tunne of wine before the mast, and of another tunne behinde the mast. And that likewise for ever they haue the libertie aforesayde: that is to say: That wee and our heires haue not the wardships or mariages of their heires by reason of their landes which they holde within the liberties and Portes aforesayd, for which they doe their seruice aforesaid, and for which wee and our predecessoys the wardships and mariages haue not had in tymes past. But our aforesaid confirmation of their liberties and freedoms aforesaid and other grants following to them of our especiall grace of newe we haue caused to bee made. Sauing alwayes and in all things our regall dignitie. And sauing unto vs and our heires the pleas of our crowne of life and member as is aforesayd. In the yeere of our Lord 1359. Iohn the French king craftily, and vnder pretence of peace, offered vnto Edward the third king of England, Flanders, Picardie, Gascoigne, and other territories which he had spoiled and wasted: for the ratifying of which agreement, the foresaid king Edward sent his ambassadoys into France, but the Frenchmen gainsaid them in all their articles and demaunds. Whereupon the king of England being prouoked, speedily prepared himselfe and his forces to crosse the seas, carping with him Edward Prince of Wales his heire apparant, and Henry duke of Lancaster and almost all his Nobles, with a thousand wagons and cartes attending vpon them. And the said king had at Sandwich eleuen hundred ships exceedingly well furnished: with which preparation he passed ouer the seas, to abate the Frenchmens arrogancie: leaving his yonger sonne Thomas of Woodstocke, being very tender of age, as his vicegerent in the Realme of England; albeit not without a protectour, &c.

TDuching the description of the North partes, I haue taken the same out of the voyage of James Cnoyen of Hartzeuan Buske, which allegeth certaine conquests of Arthur king of Britaine: and the most part, and chiefeſt things among the rest, he learned of a certaine priest in the king of Nozwapes court, in the yeere 1364. This priest was descended from them which king Arthur had sent to inhabite these Islands, and he reported that in the yeere 1360, a certaine English Frier, a Franciscan, and a Mathematician of Oxford, came into those Islands, who leauing them, and passing further by his Magicall Arte, described all those places that he sawe, and tocke the height of them with his Astrolabe, according to the forme that I (Gerard Mercator) haue set downe in my mappe, and as I haue taken it out of the aforesaid James Cnoyen. Hee sayd that those foure Indraughts were drawne into an inward gulfie of whirlepoole, with so great a force, that the ships which once entred therein, could by no meanes be driuen backe againe, and that there is neuer in those parts so much winde blowing, as might be sufficient to driue a Cozne mill.

Giraldus Cambrensis (who flozished in the yeere 1210, vnder king John) in his booke of the miracles of Ireland, hath certaine words altogether alike with these, videlicet:

There is a notable whirlepoole on the coast of Nozwap, called Palestrandie, about the latitude of 68.

Not farre from these Islands (namely the Hebrides, Island &c.) towards the North there is a certaine woonderful whirlepoole of the sea, whereinto all the waues of the sea from farre haue their course and recourse, as it were without stoppe: which, there conueying themselves into the secret receptacles of nature, are swallowed up, as it were, into a bottomlesse pit, and if it chance that any shippe doe passe this way, it is pulled, and drawen with such a violence of the waues, that elsloones without remedy, the force of the whirlepoole deuoureth the same.

The Philosophers describe foure indraughts of this Ocean sea, in the foure opposite quarters of the world, from whence many doe coniecture that as well the flowing of the sea, as the blasts of the winde, haue their first originall, Nicholas De Linna.

ANno 1360. (that is to wit, in the 34. yeere of the triumphant king Edward the third) a frier of Oxford, being a good Astronomer, went in companie with others to the most Nozthzen Islands of the world, and there leauing his company together, hee trauailed alone, and purposefully described all the Noztherne Islands, with the indrawing seas: and the recozd thereof at his returne he deliuered to the king of England. The name of which booke is Inuentio Fortunata (aliter fortunæ) qui liber incipit a gradu 54. vique ad polum. Which frier for sundry purposes after that did fise times passe from England thither, and home againe.

Inuentio Fortunata,

It is to be noted, that from the haue of Linne in Nozfolke (whereof the foresaid Franciscan frier tooke his name) to Island, it is not aboue a fortnights sailing with an ordinarie winde, and hath bene of many yeeres a very common and vsuall trade: which further appeareth by the priuileges granted to the fishermen of the towne of Blacknie in the said Countie of Nozfolke, by king Edward the third, for their exemption and freedome from his ordinarie seruice, in respect of their trade to Island.

ABout the same time L. Henry the Earle of Derby trauailed into Prussia, where, with the helpe of the Marshall of the same Province, and of a certaine king called Wyot, hee vanquished the armie of the king of Lettowe, with the captiuitie of foure Lithuanian Dukes, and the slaughter of thre, besides more then thre hundred of the principall common souldiers of the sayd armie which were slaine. The Citie also which is called Wil or Vilna, into the castle whercof the king of Lettow named Skirgalle fled for his sauegard, was, by the valour of the sayd Earle especially and of his followers, surprisid and taken. For certaine of the chiefe men of his familie, while others were slouthfull or at least ignorant of their intent, skaling the walles, aduanced his colours thereupon. And there were taken and slaine foure thousand of the common souldiers, and amongst others was slaine the king of Poland his brother, who was our professed enemie. And the castle of the foresaid Citie was besieged for the space of fve weekes: but by reason of the infirmities and inconueniences wherewith the whole armie was annoyed, the great masters of Prussia and of Lifland would not stay any longer. There were conuerted of the nation of Lettowe eight persons vnto the Christian faith, And the master of Lifland carried home with him into his countrey thre thousand captiues.

The voyage of Thomas of Woodstocke Duke of Gloucester into Prussia, in the yeere 1391. written by Thomas Walsingham.

Eodem tempore dux Glouerniæ Dominus ¶ Thomas de Woodstock, multis mercentibus, iter apparauit versus le Pruys: quem non Londinensium gemitus, non communis vulgi moeror retinere poterant, quin proficisci vellet. Nam plebs communis tam Vrbana quam rustica metuebant quod eo absente aliquod nouum detrimentum succresceret, quo præfente nihil tale timebant. Siquidem in eo spes & solatium totius patriæ reposita videbantur. AT the same time the Duke of Gloucester Lord Thomas of Woodstock (the yongest sonne of Edward the thirde) to the great grieve of many, tooke his iourney towards Prussia: whom neither the Londoners moones nor yet the lamentation of the communaltie could restraine from his intended expedition. For the common people both of the Citie and of the countrey feared lest in his absence some new calamitie might happen; which they feared not while he was present. For in him the whole nation seemed to repose their hope and comfort. Howbeit hauing scarce passed as yet the bounds of his owne countrey, he was immediatly by hard fortune tossed vp and downe with dangerous stormes and tempests, and was brought into such distresse, that he despaired euen of his owne life. At length, hauing not without danger of death, sailed along the coastes of Denmarke, Norway, and Scotland, he returned into Northumberland, and went to the castle of Tinnmouth as vnto a place of refuge known of olde vnto him: where, after hee had refreshed himselfe a fewe dayes, hee tooke his iourney toward his Mannour of Plasby, bringing great ioy vnto the whole kingdome, as well in regard of his safetie as of his returne.

The Epistle of Albinus is a sufficient testimony of this matter: part whereof I will here put downe.

First we doe render vnto almighty God most humble thanks for the saluation of soules, and the sinceritie of the Catholique faith, which we, to your great commendation, haue found signified in your letters. As touching those pilgrimes, who for the loue of God and their owne soules health, are desirous to resort vnto the Churches of the holy Apostles, let them goe in peace without all disturbance. But if any be found amongst them not honouring religion, but following their owne gain, they are to pay their ordinarie customes at places conuenient. Who, if in any place they chance to be afflicted with any iniust oppression, let them make their supplication vnto vs, or vnto our Judges, and we will see iustice executed to the full.

An ancient testimonie translated out of the olde Saxon lawes, containing among other things the aduancement of Marchants for their thrise crossing the wide seas, set downe by the learned Gentleman Master William Lambert pagina 500. of his perambulation of Kent.

It was sometime in English lawes, that the people and the lawes were in reputation: and then were the wisest of the people worship-worthy, euery one after his degree: Earle, and Churle, Thein, and vader-Thein. And if a churle thriued so, that hee had fully five hides of his owne land, a Church and a Kitchin, a Belhouse, and a gate, a seate, and a seuerall office in the Kings hall, then was he thenceforth the Theins right worthy. And if a Thein so thriued, that he serued the king, and on his message rid in his household, if he then had a Thein that followed him, the which to the kings iourney five hides had, and in the kings seate his Lord serued, and thise with his errand had gone to the king, he might afterward with his forcoth his lords part play at any great neede. And if a Thein did thriue so, that he became an Earle; then was he afterward an Earles right worthy. And if a Marchant so thriued, that he passed thriue ouer the wide seas, of his owne craft, he was thenceforth a Theins right worthy. And if a scholar so thriued, that he row learning that he degree had, and serued Christ, he was then afterward of dignitie and peace so much worthy, as thereunto belonged: vntesse he forsaite so, that he the vse of his degree vlen might.

YOU are to vnderstand, that at the feast of Easter, there was a great company of Nobles with Pope Iohn and Conradus the Emperour assembled at Rome, namely all the princes of the nations from mount Garganus vnto the West Ocean sea. Who all of them honourably entertained mee, and welcomed mee with rich and magnificent gifts; but especially the Emperour bestowed vnto mee costly presents and rewards vpon mee, both in vessels of golde and siluer, and also in cloakes and garments of great value. Wherefore I conferred with the Emperour himselfe and the Pope, and with the other Princes who were there present, concerning the necessities of all my subjects both Englishmen and Danes; that a more saourable law & secure peace in their way to Rome might bee graunted vnto them, and that they might not bee hindered by so many stops & impediments in their iourney, and wearied by reason of iniust exactions. And the Emperour condescended vnto my request, and king Rodolphus also, who hath greatest authoritie ouer the foresaid stops and streights, and all the other princes confirmed by their Edicts, that my subjects, as well Marchants, as others who traualled for deuotions sake, should without all hindrance and restraint of the foresaid stops and customers, goe vnto Rome in peace, and returne from thence in safetie.

de pacis fœdere & intercurſu mercandiſandi || Anno 1. Henrici 3. 1216.

Henricus Dei gratia &c. Haquino eadem gratia Regi Norwegiæ salutem, Immenſas nobilitati vestræ referimus gratiarum actiones de his quæ per literas vestras & prudentem virum Abbatem de Lifa, nobis significastis, volentes & desiderantes fœdus pacis & dilectionis libenter nobiscum inire, & nobiscum confœderari. Bene autem placeat & placebit nobis quod terre nostre cõmunes sint, & Mercatores & homines qui sunt de potestate vestra libere & sine impedimento terram nostram adire possint, & homines & Mercatores nostri similiter terrâ vestram. Dum tamen literas vestras patentes super hoc nobis destinetis, & nos vobis nostras transmittemus. Interim autem bene volumus & concedimus, quod Mercatores tam de terra vestra quàm nostra eant, veniant, & recedant per terras nostras. Et si quid vestræ sederit voluntati, quod facere valeamus, id securè nobis significetis. Detinuimus autem adhuc Abbatem prædictum, vt de naui vestra & rebus in ea contentis pro posse nostro restitutionem fieri faceremus: per quem de statu nostro & Regni nostri vos certificare curabimus, & quàm citius &c. HENRY by the grace of God, &c. vnto Haquinus by the same grace King of Norway, sendeth greeting. Wee render vnto your highnesse vnspokeable thanks for those things which by your letters, and by your discrete subiect the Abbat of Lisa, you haue signified vnto vs, and also for that you are right willing and desirous to begin and to conclude betweene vs both, a league of peace and amitie. And wee for our part both now are, and hereafter shalbe well contented, that both our lands be common, to the ende that the Marchants and people of your dominions may freely and without impediment resort vnto our land, and our people and Marchants may likewise haue recourse vnto your territories. Provided, that for the confirmation of this matter, you send vnto vs your letters patents, and wee will send ours also vnto you. Nowbeit in the meane while wee doe will and freely graunt, that the Marchants both of our and your lands, may goe, come, and returne to and from both our Dominions. And if there be ought in your minde, whereby we might stand you in any stead, you may boldly signifie the same vnto vs. Wee haue as yet deteined the foresaid Abbat, that wee might, to our abilitie, cause restitution to be made for your ship, and for the things therein contained: by whome wee will certifie you of our owne estate, and of the estate of our kingdome so soone, &c. A Charter graunted for the behalfe of the Marchants of Colen in the twentieth yeere of Henry the third, confirmed by King Edward the first, as it is extant in the roule of Charters, in the eighteenth yeere of King Edward the first.

The King vnto Archbishops &c. greeting. Be it knowen vnto you, that wee haue quite claimed, and for vs and our heires released our welbeloued the Citizens of Colen and their marchandize, from the payment of those two shillings which they were wont to pay out of their Gildhall at London, and from all other customes and demaunds, which pertaine vnto vs, either in London, or in any other place of our Dominions: and that they may safely resort vnto Fayers throughout our whole Kingdome, and buy and sell in the Citie of London. Wherefore we will and firmly command for vs and our heires, that the fozenamed Marchants of Colen may enioy the liberties and free priuiledges aboue-mentioned, throughout our whole kingdome of England as is aforesaid. in the one and fortieth yeere of Henry the third.

HENRY by the grace of God King of England, Lord of Ireland, Duke of Normandie and Aquitaine, and Earle of Anjou, to all his Bailiffs sendeth greeting. Know ye that at the instant request of our welbeloued and trusty brother Richard Earle of Cornewal being of late elected king of the Romanes, we haue receiued vnder our protection and defence, and vnder our safe and secure conduct, the citizens of Lubek in Alemain, with all their goods and wares, which they shall bring or cause to be brought into our kingdome. We haue also granted vnto them, that of all their goods and merchandize, nothing shal be seized vnto the vse of our selues, or of any other without their owne consent, but that they may freely sell and exercise traffike therewith, according as they shall thinke expedient. And therefore we straightly command you, that neither your selues do offer, nor that you permit any other to offer any impediment or molestation vnto the said Burgers or vnto their messengers, either at their coming into our land, with their goods and merchandize, in the time of their abode there, or at their departure from thence, and that pee neither molest them your selues, nor yet suffer them by others to be molested, contrary to the aforesaid Charter. In testimonie whereof, we haue caused these our Letters to be made Patents, during the space of seuen yeeres next following.

Provided, that the sayd Burghers doe in the meane time behaue themselves well and faithfully towards our foresaid elected brother. Witnesse our selues at Westminster the eleventh day of March, in the one and fortieth yeere of our reigne, by king Edward the first, in the 31 yeare of his reigne commonly called Carta mercatoria, Anno Domini 1303.

Edwardus Del gratia Rex Angliæ, Dominus Hiberniæ, dux Aquitaniæ, Archiepiscopis, Episcopis, Abbatibus, Prioribus, Comitibus, Baronibus, Iustitiarijs, Vicecomitibus, præpositis, ministris, & omnibus balliuis & fidelibus suis salutem. Circa bonum statum omnium mercatorum subscriptorum regnorum, terrarum, & prouinciarum, videlicet Alemanniæ, Franciæ, Hispaniæ, Portugalliæ, Nauarræ, Lombardiæ, Thuscæ, Prouinciæ, Cataloniæ, ducatus nostri Aquitaniæ, Tholofaniæ, Caturuni, Flandriæ, Brabantie, & omnium aliarum terrarum & locorum extraneorum, quocunq; nomine censeantur, venientium in regnum nostrum Angliæ & ibidem conuersantium nos præcipua cura sollicitat, qualiter sub nostro dominio tranquillitatis & plenæ securitatis immunitas eisdem mercatoribus futuris temporibus præparetur. Vt itaque vota ipsorum reddantur ad nostra & regni nostri seruitia promptiora, ipsorum petitionibus fauorabiliter annuentes, & pro statu eorundem plenius assecurando, in forma quæ sequitur ordinantes, pro nobis & hæredibus nostris in perpetuum subscripta dictis mercatoribus duximus concedenda.

In primis videlicet quod omnes mercatores dictorum regnorum & terrarum saluè & secure sub tuitione & protectione nostra in dictum regnum nostrum Angliæ, & vbique infra potestatem nostram alibi veniant cum mercandis suis quibuscunque, de muragio, pontagio & pannagio liberi & quieti. Quodque infra idem regnum & potestatem nostram in ciuitatibus, burgis, & villis mercatorijs possunt mercari duntaxat in grosso tam cum indigenis seu incolis eiusdem regni & potestatis nostræ prædictæ, quam cum alienigenis, extraneis, vel priuatis. Ita tamen quod merces, quæ vulgariter mercerie vocantur, ac species, minutatim vendi possint, prout antea fieri consuevit. Et quod omnes prædicti mercatores mercandisas suas, quas ipsos ad prædictum regnum & potestatem nostram adducere, seu infra idem regnum & potestatem nostram emere, vel alias acquirere contigerit, possint quo voluerint tam infra regnum & potestatem nostram prædictam, quam extra ducere vel portare facere, præterquam ad terras manifestorum & notiorum hostium regni nostri, soluendo consuetudines quas debebunt: vinis duntaxat exceptis, quæ de eodem regno seu potestate nostra, postquam infra idem regnum seu potestatem nostram ducta fuerint, sine voluntate & licentia speciali non liceat eis educere quoquo modo.

Item quod prædicti mercatores in ciuitatibus, burgis, & villis prædictis pro voluntate sua hospitari valeant, & morari cum bonis suis ad gratiam ipsorum, quorum sunt hospitia sue domus.

Item quod quilibet contractus per ipsos mercatores cum quibuscunque personis vndeunque fuerint super quocunque genere mercandis initus, firmus sit & stabilis, ita quod neuter mercatorum ab illo contractu possit recedere, vel resilire, postquam denarius Dei inter principales personas contrahentes datus fuerit & receptus. Et si forsan super contractu eiusmodi contentio oriatur, fiat inde probatio aut inquisitio secundum vsus & consuetudines seriarum & villarum.

Exceptio contra notorios regni hostes.

vbi dictum contractum fieri contigerit & iniri.

4. Item promittimus præfatis mercatoribus pro nobis & hæredibus nostris in perpetuum concedentes, quod nullam prisam vel arrestationem, seu dilationem occasione prisæ de cætero de mercimonijs, mercandis seu alijs bonis suis per nos vel alium seu alios pro aliqua necessitate vel casu contra voluntatem ipsorum mercatorum aliquatenus faciemus, aut fieri patiemur, nisi statim soluto precio pro quo ipsi mercatores alijs eiusmodi mercimonia vendere possint, vel eis aliter satisfacto, ita quod reputent se contentos: Et quod super mercimonia, mercandis, seu bona ipsorum per nos vel ministros nostros nulla appreciatio aut estimatio imponetur.

5. Item volumus quod omnes balliui & ministri feriarum, ciuitatum, burgorum, & villarum mercatoriarum mercatoribus antedictis conquerentibus coram ijs celerem iustitiam faciant de die in diem sine dilatione secundum legem mercatoriam, de vniuersis & singulis quæ per eandem legem poterunt terminari. Et si forte inueniatur defectus in aliquo balliuorum vel ministrorum prædictorum, vnde iidem mercatores vel eorum aliquis dilationis incommoda sustinuerint vel sustineant, licet mercator versus partem in principali recuperauerit damna sua, nihilominus balliuus vel minister alius versus nos, prout delictum exigit puniatur. Et punitionem istam concedimus in fauorem mercatorum prædictorum pro eorum iustitia naturanda.

6. Item quod in omnibus generibus placitorum, saluo casu criminis pro quo infligenda est poena mortis, vbi mercator implacitatus fuerit, vel alium implacitauerit, cuiuscunque conditionis idem implacitatus extiterit, extraneus vel priuatus, in nundinis, ciuitatibus, siue Burgis, vbi fuerit sufficiens copia mercatorum prædictarum terrarum, & inquisitio fieri debeat, sit medietas inquisitionis de eisdem mercatoribus, & medietas altera de probis & legalibus hominibus loci illius vbi placitum illud esse contigerit. Et si de mercatoribus dictarum terrarum numerus non inueniatur sufficiens, ponentur in inquisitione illi qui idonei inueniuntur ibidem, & residij sint de alijs bonis hominibus & idoneis de locis in quibus placitum illud erit.

7. Item volumus, ordinamus, & statuimus, quod in qualibet villa mercatoria & feria regni nostri prædicti & alibi infra potestatem nostram pondus nostrum in certo loco ponatur, & ante ponderationem statera in præsentia emptoris & venditoris vacua videatur, & quod brachia sint equalia: & ex tunc ponderator ponderet in æquali. Et cum stateram posuerit in æquali statim amoueatur manus suas, ita quod remaneat in æquali: quodque per totum regnum & potestatem nostram sit vnum pondus & vna mensura: & signostandardi nostri signentur: Et quod quilibet possit habere stateram vnius quaternionis, & infra, vbi contra domini loci, aut libertatem per nos & antecessores nostros concessam illud non fuerit, siue contra villarum & feriarum consuetudinem hæcenus obseruatam.

Lex mercatoria, quæ

8. Item volumus & concedimus, quod aliquis certus homo fidelis & discretus Londini residens assignetur iustitarius mercatoribus memoratis, coram quo valeant specialiter placitare, & debita sua recuperare celeriter, si Vicecomites & Maiores eis non facerent de die in diem celeris iustitiæ complementum: Et inde fiat Commissio extra Cartam præsentem concessa mercatoribus antedictis: scilicet de his quæ sunt inter mercatores & mercatores secundum legem mercatoriam deducenda.

Antiquæ Custumæ.

9. Item ordinamus & statuimus, & ordinationem illam statutumque pro nobis & hæredibus nostris in perpetuum volumus firmiter obseruari, quod pro quacunque libertate, quam nos vel hæredes nostri de cætero concedemus, præfati mercatores supradictis libertates vel earum aliquam non amittant. Pro prædictis autem libertatibus & liberis consuetudinibus obtinendis, & prisis nostris remittendis iidem supradicti mercatores vniuersi & singuli pro se & omnibus alijs de partibus suis nobis concorditer & vnanimiter concesserunt, quod de quolibet dolio vini, quod adduceant vel adduci facient infra regnum & potestatem nostram, & vnde marinarijs fretum soluere tenebuntur, soluent nobis & hæredibus nostris nomine Custumæ duos solidos ultra antiquas custumas debitas & in denarijs solui consuetas nobis, aut alias infra quadraginta dies, postquam extra naues ad terram posita fuerint dicta vina. Item de quolibet sacco lanarum, quem dicti mercatores, aut alij nomine ipsorum ement & è regno educunt, aut emi & educi facient, soluent quadraginta denarios de incremento ultra custumam antiquam dimidiæ marçæ, quæ prius fuerat persoluta. Et pro lasta coriorum extra regnum & potestatem nostram vehendorum dimidiam marcæ supra id quod ex antiqua custumâ ante soluebatur. Et similiter de trecentis pellibus lanitis extra regnum & potestatem nostram ducendis quadraginta denarios ultra certum illud, quod de antiqua antiqua cultuma fuerat prius darum. Item duosolidos de quolibet scarlato & pannotincto in grano. Item decem & octo denarios de quolibet panno, in quo pars grani fuerit intermixta. Item duodecem denarios de quolibet panno alio sine grano. Item duodecem denarios de qualibet æris quintalla.

Cumque de præfatis mercatoribus nonnulli eorum alias exercere soleant mercandisas, vi de Auerio ponderis, & de alijs rebus subtilibus, sicut de pannis Tarsensibus, de serico, & cindallis, de sera & alijs diuersis mercibus, & de equis etiam & alijs animalibus, blado & alijs rebus & mercandis multimodis, quæ ad certam custumam facile poni non poterunt, iidem mercatores concesserunt dare nobis & heredibus nostris de qualibet libra argenti estimationis seu valoris rerum & mercandiarum huiusmodi, quocunque nomine censeantur, tres denarios de libra in introitu rerum & mercandiarum ipsarum in regnum & potestatem nostram prædictam infra viginti dies postquam huiusmodi res & mercandis in regnum & potestatem nostram adductæ & etiam ibidem exoneratæ seu venditæ fuerint. Et similiter tres denarios de qualibet libra argenti in educatione quarumcunque rerum & mercandiarum huiusmodi emparum in regno & potestate nostris prædictis ultra custumas nobis aut alijs ante datas. Et super valore & estimatione rerum & mercandiarum huiusmodi de quibus tres denarij de qualibet libra argenti sicut prædicitur sunt soluendi, credatur eis per literas, quas de Dominis aut socijs suis ostendere poterunt: Et si literas non habeant stetur in hac parte prædictorum mercatorum, si præfentes fuerint, vel valetorum suorum in eorundem mercatorum absentia, iuramentis.

Liceat insuper socijs de societate prædictorum mercatorum infra regnum & potestatem nostram prædictas, lanas vendere alijs suis socijs, & similiter emere ab iisdem absque custuma soluenda. Ita tamen quod dictæ lanæ ad tales manus non deueniant, quod de custuma nobis debita defraudemur. Et præterea est sciendum, quod postquam supradicti mercatores semel in vno loco infra regnum & potestatem nostram custumam nobis concessam superius pro mercandis suis in forma soluerint supradicta, & suum habeant inde warantum, siue huiusmodi mercandis infra regnum & potestatem nostram remaneant, siue exterius deferantur, (exceptis vinis, quæ de regno & potestate nostris prædictis sine voluntate & licentia nostra sicut prædictum est, nullatenus educantur:) Volumus, ac pro nobis, ac heredibus nostris concedimus, quod nulla exactio, prisæ, vel præstatio, aut aliquod onus super personas mercatorum prædictorum, mercandisas seu bona eorundem aliquatenus imponatur contra formam expressam superius & concessam. The aforesaid generall Charter in English.

EDward by the grace of God king of England, lord of Ireland, duke of Aquitaine, to Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Priors, Carles, Barons, Justices, Vicounts, gouernours, officers, and all bayliffes, and his faithfull people sendeth greeting. Wee haue speciall care for the good estate of all marchants of the kingdomes, lands, and countreys following: to wit of Almaine, France, Spaine, Portugal, Nauarre, Lombardie, Florence, Prouence, Catalonia, of our duchie of Aquitaine, Tholosa, Caturlune, Flanders, Brabant, and of all other forreine countreys and places by what name soeuer they be called, which come into our kingdome of England, and there remayne, that the sayd marchants may liue in quiet and full securitie vnder our dominion in time to come. Wherefore that their hearts desires may bee moze readily inclined to our seruice and the seruice of our kingdome, wee fauourably agreeing to their petitions, for the fuller asring of their estate, haue thought good to graunt to the sayd marchants for vs and our heires for euer these priuiledges vnder written, ordaining in forme as followeth.

First, that all marchantes of the sayd kingdomes and countreys may come into our kingdome of England, and any where else into our dominion with their marchandises whatsoeuer safely and securely vnder our defence and protection without paying wharfage, pontage, or pannage. And that in Cities, Boroughs, and market towneſ of the sayd kingdome and dominion they may traffique onely by the great as well with the naturall subiects and inhabitantes of our aforesayde kingdome and dominion, as with forreiners, straungers, or priuate persons. Yet so, that marchandises which are commonly called mercerie wares,

In exception for trafficking with known enemies of the

and spices, may be sold by the small, as heretofore hath bin accustomed. And that all the aforesaid marchants may carry or cause to be carried whither they will, as well within our realme or dominion, as out of the same; saving unto the countreys of the manifest and knowne enemies of our kingdome, those marchandises which they shall bring into our foresayd realme and dominion, or buy, or otherwise purchase in our sayd realme and dominion, paying such customes as they ought to doe: except onely wines, which it shall not be any wayes lawfull for them to carry out of our sayd realme and dominion without our speciall fauour and licence, after they be once brought into our realme and dominion.

2. Item that the aforesaid marchants may at their pleasure lodge & remaine with their goods in the cities, boroughs, and townes aforesaid, with the good liking of those which are owners of their lodgings.

3. Item that euery bargaine made by the said marchants with any maner of persons, of what places soeuer they be, for any kind of marchandise what soeuer, shalbe firme & stable, so that none of both the marchants shall shrinke or giue backe from that bargaine, after that the earnest penie be once giuen and taken betwene the principall bargainers. And if peradventure any strife arise about the same bargaine, the triall and inquirie thereof shall be made according to the uses and customes of the sayes and townes where it chanced that the said bargaine was made and contracted.

4. Item, we promise the aforesaid marchants granting for euer for vs and our heires, that from hence forth we will not in any wise make nor cause to be made any stay or arrest, or any delay by reason of arrest of their wares, marchandises or other goods, by our selues, or by any other or others for any neede or accident against the will of the sayd marchants, without present payment of such a price as the marchants would haue sold those marchandises for to other men, or without making of them other satisfaction, so that they shall hold themselves well contented: and that no price or valuation shalbe set vpon their wares, marchandises, & goods by vs or by any officer of ours.

Where is this law now become?

Item, we will that all bayliffes and officers of sayes, cities, boroughs, and market townes shall doe speedie iustice from day to day without delay according to the lawe of Marchants to the aforesaid marchants when they shall complaine before them, touching all and singular causes, which may be determined by the same law. And if default be found in any of the bayliffes or officers aforesaid, where by the sayd marchants or any of them haue sustained, or do sustaine any damage through delay, though the marchant recouer his losses against the partie principall, yet the bayliffe or other officer shall be punished to vs ward, according to the qualitie of the default. And we doe graunt this punishment in fauour of the aforesaid marchants in regard of the hastening of their iustice.

Item, that in al maner of pleas, saving in case where punishment of death is to be inflicted, where a marchant is impleaded, or sueth another, of what condition soeuer hee bee which is sued, whether stranger or home borne, in sayes, cities, or boroughs, where sufficient numbers of marchants of the foresayd countreys are, and where the triall ought to bee made, let the one halfe of the Iurie be of the sayd marchants, and the other halfe of good and lawfull men of the place where the suite shall fall out to bee: and if sufficient number of marchants of the sayd countreys cannot bee found, those which shall be found fit in that place shall be put vpon the iurie, and the rest shall be chosen of good and fit men of the places where such suit shall chance to be.

Item we will, we ordaine, and wee appoint, that in euery market towne and saye of our realme aforesaid and elsewhere within our dominion our weight shall bee set in some certaine place; and that before the weighing the balance shall bee scene empty in the presence of the buyer and of the seller, and that the scales bee equall: and that afterward the weigher weigh in the equall balance. And when hee hath set the balances euen, let him straightway remooue his hands, so that the balance may remayne euen: And that throughout all our kingdome and dominion there be one weight and one measure, and that they be marked with the marke of our standard. And that euery man may haue a weight of one quarter of an hundred, and vnder, where the same hath not bin contrary to the liberty of the lord of the place, and contrary to the libertie granted by vs and our predecessors, or contrary to the custome of townes and sayes which hath hitherto bene obserued.

8. Item we will and we grant that some certaine saythfull and discrete man resident in London be appointed to doe Iustice to the aforesaid marchants, before whome they may haue their suites decided, and may speedie recouer their debts, if the Schiriffes and Maior should not from day to day giue them speedie iustice. And hereof let a Commission be made: which we grant unto the aforesaid marchants besides this present Charter: to wit of such things as betwene marchant and marchant are to be decided according to the lawe of marchants.

9. Item we ordaine and appoynt, and wee will that this ordinance and statute shall firmly bee obserued for euer for vs and our heires, that the aforesaid marchants shal not loose the aforesaid liberties herties nor any of them, for any libertie whatsoeuer, which wee or our heires hereafter shall grant. And for the obtayning of the aforesayd liberties and free customes, and for remission of our arreſting of their goods, the aforesayd marchants all and euery of them for themselves and all other of their parties with one accorde and one consent haue granted vnto vs, that of euery tyme of wine, which they shall bring or cause to be brought into our realme and dominion, for which they shall bee bound to pay freight vnto the mariners, besides the olde customes which are due and were woont to bee payd vnto vs, they will pay vnto vs and to our heires in the name of a custome two shillings in money, either out of hande, or else within fortye dayes after the sayd wines shall bee brought on land out of the shippes. Item for euery sacke of wooll, which the sayd marchants or others in their name shall buy and carie out of the realme, or cause to bee brought and caried out, they will pay fortye pence aboue the old custome of halfe a marke, which was payed heretofore: And for a last of hides to bee carped out of our realme and dominion halfe a marke aboue that which heretofore was payed by the olde custome. And likewise for thre hundred felles with the wooll on them to bee transported out of our realme and dominion fortye pence, aboue that certaine rate which before was payed by the olde custome: Also two shillings vpon euery scarlate and euery cloth dyed in graine. Item eightene pence for euery cloth wherein any kind of graine is mingled. Item twelue pence vpon euery cloth dyed without graine, Item twelue pence vpon euery quintall of copper.

And whereas sundrie of the aforesayd marchants are woont to exercise other marchandises, as of Hauer de pois, and other fine wares, as sarrenets, lawnes, cindalles, and like, and diuers other marchandises, and to sell hoxles and other beastes, coyne, and sundrie other things and marchandises, which cannot easily bee reduced vnto a certaine custome: the sayd marchants haue granted to giue vnto vs, and to our heires of euery pound of siluer of the estimation and value of these kinde of goods and marchandises, by what name soeuer they be called, thre pence in the pound in the bringing in of these goods into our realme and dominion aforesayd, within twentye dayes after these goods and marchandises shall be brought into our realme and dominion, and shall be there vnladen and solde. And likewise thre pence vpon euery pound of siluer in the carrying out of any such goods and marchandises which are bought in our realme and dominion aforesayd aboue the customes beforetime payd vnto vs or any of our progenitozs. And touching the value and estimation of these goods and marchandises, whereof thre pence of euery pound of siluer, as is aforesayd, is to be payd, credite shall be giuen vnto them vpon the letters which they are able to shewe from their masters or parteners. And if they haue no letters in this behalfe, we will stand to the othe of the aforesayd marchants if they bee present, or in their absence to the othes of their seruants.

Whereouer, it shall be lawfull for such as be of the company of the aforesayd marchants within our realme and dominion aforesayd, to sell wooll to other of their company, and likewise to buy of them without paying of custome. Yet so, that the said wooll come not to such hands, that wee be defrauded of the custome due vnto vs. And furthermore it is to be vnderstood, that after that the aforesayd marchants haue once payd in one place within our realme and dominion, the custome aboue granted vnto vs in forme aforesayd for their marchandises, & haue their warrant therof, whether these marchandises remaine within our kingdome or be caried out (excepting wines, which in no wise shall be caried forth of our realme and dominion aforesayd, without our fauour & licence as is aforesayd) we wil and we grant for vs and our heires, that no execution, attachment, or loane, or any other burthen be layd vpon the persons of the aforesayd marchants, vpon their marchandises or goods in any case, contrary to the forme before mentioned and granted. The faithfull & principall witnesses of these pntesses are these, Robert Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, Walter bishop of Couetrey and Lichfield, Henry Lacie of Lincolne, Humfrey de Bohune, Earle of Herford and Essex, high Constable of England, Adomare of Valentia, Geofrey of Gaymal, Hugh Spenser, Walter Beauchampe Seneſchall of our house, Robert of Bures, and others. Given by our owne hand at Windesore the first day of February, in the yere of our reigne xxxi.

The letters of Edward the second vnto Haquinus king of Norway, concerning the English marchants arrested in Norway, and their goods to be freed from arrest.

The mighty Prince, lord Haquinus, by the grace of God the famous king of Norway his most deare friend, Edward by the same grace of God, king of England, lord of Ireland, duke of Aquitaine, greeting and sincere loue. We maruell not a little, and are much disquieted in our cogitations, considering the greouances and oppressions, which (as we haue beene informed by pitifull complaints) are at this present, moze then in times past, without any reasonable cause inflicted vpon our subiects, which doe vsually resort vnto your kingdome for traffiques sake. For of late one William the sonne of Laurence of Wainfleete, and one Simon the sonne of Alan of the same towne, and Guido the sonne of Marbew, and their associates our marchants, in complayning wise declared vnto vs: that hauing sent certaine of their factors and seruants, with thre shippes into your dominions, there to exercise traffique, and the sayd shippes being laden in the hauen of your towne of Tonnesbergh, with Herrings and other commodities, to a great value: and also the said mariners, men, and seruants of the foze sayd shippes, being licenced by vertue of the safe conduct which you had granted them, freely to returne from your kingdome vnto the parts of England with their shippes and goods aforesayd, but afterward not being able to depart out of your hauen by reason of contrary windes: certaine of your bayliffes vpon occasion of the slaughter of a knight being himselfe also of late your bayliffe of Vikia, committed by malefactozs and Pirates vpon the sea, whilst the sayd shippes remained in the hauen aforesayd, did at your commandement (as they say) arrest, and for a long season also deteined

decreined vnder that arrest, the foresaid ships, with all the men and goods that were in them: namely vntill such time, as the men and mariners aforesaid (beeing dyuen perforce, and constrained thereunto) should lay in sufficient securitie for the payment of fortye pounds sterling, vpon a certain day appointed, vnto your vse, for euery of the foresaid ships: and also vntill they had moꝛeouer deliuered threē pledges, for the bringing of the saide ships and men backe againe into the foresaid haven, before the feast of the natiuitie of S. Iohn the Baptist next ensuing, then and there to stand vnto your fauour and curtesie, as touching the said persons, and those ships of theirs: which dealing, the parties themselves take very grievously, yea, and all others that heare thereof thinke it to be a strange and vnwouced course. And because it is most vndoubtedly contrary to all reason, equitie, iustice, and lawe, that the faults or demerits of offenders should in any sort be punished in such persons, or in their goods, as neither haue bene accessory nor partakers in the crime, nor haue had any society with the saide offenders: we doe heartily intreat and request your Highnes, that weighing and pondering the matter in the balance of iustice, you would of your loue and friendship, command the foresaid pledges to be set at libertie, and the said securitie vnto be released and acquitted. And know you this for a certaintie, that if the foresaid malefactors, who (as it is reported) slewe your Knight aforesaid, shall any where within our realme and dominions be found, we wil cause iustice and iudgement to be executed vpon them, according to the Lawe and custome of our sayde Realme. For we cannot in these times conueniently and well indure, that the ships aforesaid, or any other ships of our kingdome (which ought alwayes to be in a readinesse for our seruice) should without speciall licence, depart out of our saide kingdome, vnto foꝛeigne dominions. Nowe, what you shall thinke good at this our request to perfoꝛme in the premisses, may it please you by the bearer of these presents to returne an answer vnto vs, Geuen at Windsoꝛe the 16. of April.

Magnifico Principi Dom. Haquino Dei gratia regi Norwegie illustri, amico suo charissimo, Edwardus eadem Dei gratia Rex Anglie, dominus Hybernice, & dux Aquitanie, salutem cum dilectione sinceram. Querelam dilectorum Mercatorum nostrorum Thomae de Swyn de Waynflete, & Simonis filij Alani de eadem recepimus, continentem, Quod cum ipsi nuper quosdam seruientes suos infra regnum vestrum pro suis ibidem exercendis mercimonijs transmississent, Thesaurarius vester bona & mercimonia predictorum Thomae & Simonis ad valenciam quadraginta librarum, quae seruientes predicti in villa de Northberne in sua custodia habuerunt, die Sancti Michaelis vltimo preterita fecit absque causa rationabili arrestandi, & ea adhuc taliter arrestata detinet iniuste, in ipsorum Thomae & Simonis damnum non modicum & depauperationem manifestam, Et quia eisdem mercatoribus nostris subuenire volumus, quatenus suadene iustitia poterimus in hac parte, vestram amicitiam requirimus cum affectu, quatenus audita querela predictorum Thomae & Simonis, vel ipsorum attorneyum super restitutione bonorum & mercimoniorum predictorum impendere velitis eisdem celeris iustitiae complementum: Ita quod pro defectu exhibitionis iustitiae super arrestatione predicta non oporteat nos pro mercatoribus nostris predictis de alio remedio providere. The mightie Prince Lord Haquinus, by the grace of God the famous King of Norway, his most deare friend Edward by the same grace of God king of England, Lorde of Ireland, and Duke of Aquitaine, greeting and sincere loue. Wee receiued the complaint of our welbelov'd Merchants Thomas de Swyn of Waynflete, and Simon the sonne of Alanus of the same towne: the contents whereof are, that whereas of late, the saide parties sent certaine of their seruants to traffike in your kingdome, your Treasurer vpon the feast of S. Michael last past, without any iust or reasonable occasion, caused the goods and merchandise of the foresaid Thomas and Simon, to the value of fortye pound, which their said seruants had vnder their custodie at the towne of Northberne, to be arrested, and as yet also iniuriouly deteineth the same vnder the same arrest, to the great damage and impouerishing of the sayd Thomas and Simon. And forasmuch as our desire is to succour these our marchants so far forth as we can, Justice requiring no lesse in this behalfe, wee doe right earnestly request you, that hauing hearde the complaint and supplication of the foresayde Thomas and Simon, or of their Attorneyes, you woulde of your leue and friendship, vouchsafe them speedie administration of Justice, about the restitution of their goods and marchandise aforesayde: least that for want of the exhibiting of Justice about the foresaid arrest, we be constrained to prouide some other remedie for our marchants aforesaid. Our request is, that you would by the bearer of these presents, returne an answer vnto vs, what you are determined to doe, at this our instant motion. Given as aboue.

Magnifico Principi Domino Haquino Dei gratia Regi Norwegiæ illustri, amico suo charissimo, Edwardus eadem Dei gratia Rex Angliæ, dominus Hybernæ, & dux Aquitanie, salutem cum dilectione sincera. Pro mercatoribus nostris Lennæ, & partium vicinarum, quos Balliuus & Officiarij vestri ciuitatis vestræ Bergen dudum ceperunt, & stricto carceri manciparunt, quorum multi vt iam intelleximus, propter alimentorum subtractionem & duritiam, ac asperitatem carceris petierunt, vt ipsorum & bonorum suorum deliberationem præcipere curaretis, vestræ serenitati Regiæ nostras nuper transmissis literas speciales. Sed vos, retentis adhuc in carcere nostris mercatoribus sicut prius, nobis per literas vestras quas audiuius & intelleximus diligenter, inter cætera rescripsistis, quod quidam mercatores de regno vestro de iniurijs, violentijs & arrestationibus, quibus in regno nostro his diebus sunt, vt asserunt, contra iustitiam aggravati, multipliciter conqueruntur, adijciendo in vestris literis memoratis, quod quidam iniquitatis filij in villa Lennæ, ad piscandum vt dicebant halecia venientes, quendam militem Balliuum vestrum, in Vikia vnâ cum decem alijs subditis vestris, in vestris & regni vestri negotijs existentibus crudeliter occiderunt. Super quibus mens nostra grauatur quàmplurimum & turbatur, præsertim quum nunquam nostræ fuerit voluntatis, quod iniuriæ, violentiæ, seu arrestationes aliquæ mercatoribus, vel alijs de regno vestro per aliquos de regno & potestate nostris fierent indebitè vel iniuste: nec adhuc intelligere possumus, quod mercatoribus vestris per aliquem vel aliquos de subditis nostris huc vsque aliter factum fuerit: Scientes pro certo quod si nobis per inquisitiones legitimas constare poterit huiusmodi grauamina subditis vestris infra regnum nostrum illata fuisse, nos sufficientes emendas, & satisfactiones debitas super illis, celerisque iustitiæ complementum fieri faciemus. Et insuper simalfactores prædicti, qui præsumptum militem, & alios secum existentes, vt præmittitur, occiderunt, de regno, seu potestate nostra sint, vel infra idem regnum vel potestatem poterunt inueniri, de ipsis iudicium & iustitiam fieri præcipimus, secundum Leges & consuetudines regni nostri. Et quia inter nos & vos, nostrisque & vestros subditos hinc inde foueri desideramus mutuam concordiam & amorem; ita quod mercatores nostri & vestri mercandisas suas in nostris & vestris regnis & dominijs liberè, & absque impedimento valeant exercere, prout temporibus progenitorum nostrorum fieri consuevit, & ex dictarum literarum vestrarum serie collegimus euidenter vos promptos esse similiter, & paratos ad omnia & singula, quæ pro vobis & vestris subditis super discordijs, contentionibus, aut grauaminibus inter nostros & vestros subditos qualitercunque suscitatis pro bono pacis & iustitiæ fuerint æquanimiter facienda: Nos consimilia pro nobis & nostris, quantum ad nos & ad ipsos attinet, illius amore, qui pacis author fore dinoscitur, & pro quere & commodo populi vtriusque regnorum nostrorum, quatenus ius & ratio dictitauerint, promittimus nos facturos: Vestram amicitiam requirentes obnixius & rogantes, quatenus mercatores nostros prædictos, qui adhuc superstites relinquuntur, quos etiam tempore, quo dicta feloniam committi dicebatur, interclusos tenebat custodia carceralis, iubere velitis nostri contemplatione, zeloque iustitiæ ab huiusmodi custodia liberari, bona ab ipsis capta eis prout iustum fuerit restitui faciendo. Et vt deliberatio mercatorum nostrorum prædictorum, & bonorum suorum eò facilius concedatur, placeat vobis cum diligentia debita ponderare, quod Galsfridus Drewe, & quidam alij mercatores nostri de Lenne, quibusdam mercatoribus de regno vestro occasione eiusdem grauaminis ipsis mercatoribus vestris, ad sectam Tidemanni Lippe insin-

regnum nostrum, vt dicebatur, illati, centum libras sterlingorum persoluerunt, sicut in quodam scripto indentato inter Ingelramum Lende de Thorenden, & quosdam alios mercatores vestros ex parte vna, & præfatum Galfridum, & quosdam alios de regno nostro similiter ex altera confecto, vidimus contineri. Si qui verò de subditis vestris de aliquibus subditis nostris, de aliqua iniuria ipsi facta querelas in curia nostra deponere voluerint, & prosequi cum effectu, ipsorum subditorum vestrorum petitiones admittere, & eis super querelis huiusmodi plenam & celerem iustitiā fieri faciemus. Ita quod iidem subditi vestri exinde reputare debebunt merito se contentos, Et interim de excessibus & grauaminibus subditis vestris infra regnum nostrum qualitercunque illatis inquiri faciemus cum diligentia veritatem. Vestra igitur voluntatis beneplacitum in præmissis nobis rescribere velitis per præsentium portitorem. Data apud Westminster tertio die Aprilis.

The mightie Prince king Haquinus, by the grace of God the famous king of Norway, his most deare friend Edward by the same grace of God, king of England, lord of Ireland, Duke of Aquitaine, greeting and sincere loue. We sent of late vnto your royall maiestie our special letters, for the behalfe of our late marchants of Lenne, and of the coast adioyning (whome your haulty and officers of the citie of Bergen lately apprehended, committing them to close prison, many of whome, as we vnderstand, are, for want of due nourishment, and by reason of the extremitie & loathsomnesse of the prison, quite perished) that you would cause them and their goods to bee released. Howbeit, you reteining as yet our marchants in durance as before, in your letters, which we haue diligently heard, and thoroughly vnderstood, haue, amongst other matters, returned this answer vnto vs: that certaine marchants of your kingdome doe make sundrie complaints of iniuries, violences and arrests, whereby they haue lately (as themselves auouch) contrary to iustice bene aggriued and oppressed in our dominions: adding moreouer in your sayde letters, that certaine sonnes of iniquitie of the towne of Lenne, cunning, as they saide, to fish for herings, cruelly murdered a certaine Knight, who was in times past your bayliffe of Vikia, together with ten others of your subiects, being imployed about the affaires of your kingdome. In consideration whereof our minde is exceedingly and aboue measure griened and troubled, especially sithence it was neuer any part of our intent, that any iniuries, violences, or arrests should vniuersally be inflicted vpon any marchants, or any others of your realme by any of our kingdomes: neither can we as yet haue any intelligence, that any such hard measure hath bene offered vnto any of your marchants, by any one or moe of our subiects: giuing you for a certaintie to vnderstand, that if vpon lawfull inquisition we shalbe aduertised of any such grieuances, which haue bene offered vnto your subiects within our realme, we will cause speedie iustice to be administred, and sufficient recompence, and due satisfaction to be made in regarde thereof. And moreover, if the saide malefactors, which, as it is aforesaid, slewe the forenamed Knight, and others of his companie, either be appertaining vnto our kingdome and dominion, or may at any time be found within our saide kingdome or dominion, we will command iustice and iudgement to be executed vpon them, according to the lawes and customes of our realme. And forasmuch as our desire is, that mutuall concord and amitie should be maintained and cherished between your and our subiects on both parts: so that our and your marchants may, in both our Realmes and dominions, freely and without impediment exercise their traffique, as in the times of our progenitors it hath bene accustomed: Whereas also we euidently gathered out of the contents of your letter, that you are in like sort readie and willing to put all things in practise, which are by you and your subiects (for the taking away of discords, contentions, and molestations howsoever occasioned, and sprung by betwene your and our subiects) louingly to be performed: we also doe promise for our selues, and our subiects, so much as in vs and them lieth, for his sake who is knowne to be the author of peace, and for the benefite & tranquillitie of both our Realmes (as iustice and reason shall moue vs) to doe the like. Desiring and earnestly requesting at your hands, that of your loue and friendship, hauing regard of vs, and consideration of iustice, you would commaund that our foresaide marchants, who as yet remaine alieue, and who also at the time of the saide felonie committed, were shut vp in close prison, be deliuered out of the saide prison, causing their goods which haue bene taken from them, to bee, according vnto iustice, restored to them again. And that the deliuerie of our foresaide marchants and goods, may be the more easily peeced vnto, may it please you with diligenr obseruation to consider, that Gefferey Drew, and certaine other of our marchants of Lenne, vpon occasion of the grieuances offered vnto your marchants within our Realme, (as the report goeth) at the suite of Tidman Lippe, paide vnto the same your marchants an hundredth pound sterling: euen as in a certain Indenture made betwene

of traffique betwene England and Norway.

betwene Ingelram Lende of Thorenden, and some other of your marchants on the one part, and betwene the foresaide Gefrey, and certaine of our marchants on the other part, wee sawe contened. Whereupon, if any of your subiects be minded to exhibite, and effectually to prosecute their complaints in our Court, concerning any of our subiects, or of any iniury done vnto them, we will cause the petitions of those your subiects to be admitted, and also full and speedie iustice to be administered, vpon any such like complaints of theirs. Insomuch, that those your subiects shal thinke themselves right well and sufficiently contented therewithall. And in the meane space we will cause diligent inquisition of the truth to be made, of all excesses and grieuances howsoever offered vnto your subiects wthin our dominions. May it please you therefore, by the bearer of these presents, to returne an answer vnto vs, what you are determined to doe in the premises. Given at Westmister, the third day of April.

The King vnto his Collectors of custome, for wooll and woollen fells, in his port of London, greeting. Whereas we vpon the 20. of May, in the first yeere of our reigne, considering the damages and grieuances that haue diuersly happened vnto the marchantes of our realme, vpon occasion that the marchantes both of our owne, & of other countreys, buying by wooll and woollen fells within our kingdome and dominions, haue, for the better sale thereof, at their pleasure conueyed theselues, and trasported the said wooll & fells into sundry places within the prouinces of Brabant, Flanders and Artoys: and being desirous also, to our power, to prouide a remedie against such damages and inconueniences, haue ordained by our counsel, that all marchantes, both home-bozne and aliens, buying by such woolls and fells, within our kingdome and dominion afoze said, and being desirous to transport them into the fozesaid prouinces, there to bee solde, may carrie the said woolls and fells, or cause them to be caried to some certaine staple, within any of the said prouinces, by the Maior and Communitie of the said marchantes of our realme, to be appointed and assigned, and when they shall thinke it expedient, to be changed and remoued, and not vnto any other place within the said prouinces whatsoeuer: and whereas also, amongst other things, we haue granted vnto the marchantes of our fozesaid realme, for vs and our heires, that the Maior and Councel of the said marchantes for the time being, may impole vpon all marchantes, home-bozne or aliens whatsoeuer, that shall transgresse the fozesaid ordination, and shall thereof lawfully be conuicted, certaine summes of money to be paid for their offences, and that such summes must by our ministers and officers, to our vse, be leuied out of the goods and wares of the marchantes so offending, wherefoeuer they shall chance to be found within our kingdome and dominions afoze said, as in our Charter made for the same purpose, it is more plainly exprest, (which Charter we haue caused to be published vpon the Sea-coasts, throughout all the countreys of our realme, and a strong prohibition to be proclaimed, that no marchantes, neither home-bozne, nor strangers, may in any wise transgresse the tenour of the fozesaid Charter, vnder the pnalities therein contained) and whereas afterward it beeing giuen vs to vnderstand, that diuers marchantes both home-bozne, and aliens, bought by such wooll and woollen felles within our said Realme and dominions, and conueyed theselues with the said woolls and felles for the sale thereof, vnto other places within the fozesaid prouinces, besides the said Staple, which was, according to our graunt afoze said, appointed and ordained by the Maior and communitie of the said marchantes of our Realme, in some one of those prouinces, to the contempt of our authoritie, and contrary to the Charter of the ordination, publication, and inhibition afoze said, wee assigned certaine of our faithfull subiects, in diuers parts of our Realme, to make inquisition for such woolls and woollen felles, as were conueyed vnto any other place of the said prouinces, then vnto the Staple, so that by these meanes, the pnalities due vnto vs might bee leuied vnto our vse: and hauing intelligence also, that in a manner all marchantes both home-bozne, and strangers battering such wares in our kingdome, are culpable of the premises, and that many being indicted thereupon, and others fearing to bee indicted, doe cause their woolls and woollen felles to bee auouched vnder the names of persons sons not culpable, and to be sent ouer vnto certaine strangers being also culpable, and not minding perhaps to return any moze into our realme, that they may so escape the foresaid forfeitures, and defraud vs of the penaltie, appertaining of right vnto vs, (which abuses, if they were suffered so to goe unpunished woulde rebound vnto our extreame hinderance:) and being likewise desirous to withstand such deceitfull dealing, and so farre forth as wee can, to prevent our owne losses, we firmly command, and streightly charge you, that you doe receiue of euery particular marchant, desirous to conuey any wools, or woollen fells out of the foresaid port, into any forreign dominions, a corporall oath vpon Gods holy Euangelists: that they shall auouch all those wools and woollen fells vnder his name vnto whom they doe properly belong, & vnder the name of none other: and then taking sufficient security from the owner of those wools and fells, or in his name, in regard whereof you wil vnder take to warrantize, and make good vnto vs those penalties and forfeitures which shal vnto vs appertaine, for all wools, and woollen fells conueied or sent by any of the foresaid marchants vnto any of the said prouinces of Flanders, Brabant, and Artoys, contrary to the Charter of the Proclamation and inhibition aboue mentioned (if they shal chance to be conuincied hereof) that first, our due custome being receiued, you doe permit the said wools and woollen fells to passe out of the foresaid port into forreign countries. Witness the king at Douer the 18. day of June. By the king himselfe and his Counsell.

And afterwarde by a Writte vnder the Kings priuie Seale there was a like commandement giuen vnto the Collectors of the custome aforesayde in the portes, underwritten.

A Catalogue of the great Masters of the Order of the Dutch knights, commonly called the Hospitalaries of Ierusalem:

and what great exploit es euery of the saide Masters hath atchieued, either in conquering the land of Prussia, or in taming and subduing the Infidels, or els in keeping them vnder their obedience and subiection, taken out of Munster.

The order of the Dutch knights had their first original at Ierusalem in the pere of our Lorde 1190, within the Hospitall of the blessed Virgine: and the first Master of the saide order was called Henrie of Walpor, vnder whome many good things, and much wealth and riches were throughout all Germanie and Italic procured vnto the order: and the saide Hospitall was removed from Ierusalem vnto Ptolemais, otherwise called Acon, and the foresaid Order grew and mightily increased, whereof I will hereafter discourse moze at large in my Treatise of Syria, Henrie of Walpor deceased in the yeere of Christ 1200. The 2. Master was Otto of Kerpen, and he continued Master of the Order for the space of five yeeres. The 3. was Hermannus Bart a godly and deuout person, who deceased in the yeere 1210, being interred at Acon, as his predecessors were. The 4. was Hermannus de Salza, who thirtie yeeres together gouerned the saide Order, and managed the first expedition of warre against the infidels of Prussia, and obtained another Master also in Prussia to bee his Deputie in the same region. In the yeere 1239. the knights of the sword, who traueiled into Liuania to conuert the inhabitants thereof vnto Christ, seeing they were not of sufficient force to perfoyme that enterpryse, and that their enemies increased on all sides, they vniued themselves vnto the famous Order of the Dutch knights in Prussia, that their worthie attempt might bee defended and promoted by the aide and assistance of the saide Dutch knights. At the very same time the ensigne of the crosse was erected throughout all Germanie against the Prussians, and a great armie of souldiers was gathered together, the Burgrate of Meidenburg being generall of the armie, who combining themselves vnto the Dutch knights, ioynd battell with the Infidels, and slew about fife hundred Gentiles, who beforetime had made horrible inuasions and in-roades into the dominions of Christians, wasting all with fire and sword, but especially the land of Colm, and Lubonia, which were the Prouin-

Ensignes fratres.

tes of Conradus Duke of Mallowia, whose, the Teutonic knights having made to huge a slaughter, built the castle of Reden, betweene Pomerania and the land of Colm, and so by degrees they gotte footing in the lande, and daylie erected moze castles, as namely, Cruzburg, Willenburg, Resil, Bartenstein, Brunsborg, and Heilsburg, and furnished them all with garrisons. The first Master of the Order was Conradus Landgravius, the brother of Lodouick, which was husband vnto Ladie Elizabeth. This Conradus, by his fathers inheritance, gaue great riches and possessions vnto the Order, and caused Ladie Elizabeth to be interred at Marburg, within the religious house of his laide Order. Under the government of this Master, Acon in the lande of Palestina was subdued vnto the Saracens. Moreover, in the yeere 1254, there was another great armie of Souldiers prepared against Prussia, by the Princes of Germanie. For Odoacer, alias Odoacer king of Bohemia, Otto Marques of Brandenburg, the Duke of Austria, the Marques of Moravia, the Bishops of Colen and of Olmurz came marching on with great strength of their Nobles and common souldiers, and intreating the lande of Prussia in the Winter season, they constrained the inhabitants thereof to receiue the Christian faith, and to become obedient vnto the knights. After which exploit, by the aduise and assistance of king Odoacer, there was a castle built vpon a certaine hill of Samogiria, which immediately after grewe to be a great citie, being at this day the seate of the Prince of Prussia: and it was called by Odoacer Kunigsberg, that is to say, Kings Mount, or Mount royall, being finished in the yeere 1255. Out of this fort the knights did brydle and restraîne the furie of the Infidels on all sides, and compelled them to obedience. The first Master was called Boppo ab Osterna, under whom the citie of Kunigsberg was built. At the very same instant the knights beeing occupied about the warre of Curland, the Prussians conspiring together, and abandoning the Christian faith, in furious manner armed themselves against the Christians, defaced and burnt down Churches, slew Priests, and to the vtmost of their abilitie, banished all faithfull people. The report of which misdeemeanour being published throughout all Germanie, an huge armie was leuiued and sent for the defence and succour of the knights, which marching into the land of Naran, made many slaughters, & through the inconstancie of fortune sometimes woonne, and sometimes lost the victorie. Also the Infidels besieged these three castles, namely, Bartenstein, Cruzberg and Kunigsberg, and brought extreame famine vpon the Christians contained within the laide fortes. Againe, in the yeere of our Lord 1262, the Earle of Iuliers, with other Princes and great chivalrie came downe, and giuing charge vpon the Prussians, put three thousand of them to the edge of the sword. Afterward the Prussians banding themselves together, were determined to spoile the castle of Kunigsberg, but their confederacie being disclosed, they had the repulse. And when the knights had pertrailed against them, they laide in pledges, and yet for all that were not afraid to bryake their fidelitie. For vpon a certaine time, after they had giuen diuers pledges, they slew two noble knights of the Order, and so by that meanes incensed the principall of the laide order, in somuch that they caused two paire of gallions to be set vp besides the castle, & certie of the Prussians pledges to be hanged thereupon. Which seueritie so bered and provoked the Prussians, that in reuenge of the said iniury, they renewed bloody and cruel warres, slew many Christians, yea, and put 40. knights with the master of the Order, and the Marshal, vnto the edge of the sword. There was at the same instant in Pomerania a Duke called Suandepolcus, professing the Christian faith, but being ioyned in league with the Prussians, he indeuoured for many yeeres, not onely to expell the knights, but all Christians whatsoeuer out of the lande of Prussia, in which warre the forelaide knights of the Order suffered many abuses. For they lost almost all their castles, and a great number of themselves also were slaine. This Suandepolcus put in practise many lewde attempts against religion. For albeit he was baptised, he did moze mischief then the very Infidels themselves, untill suchtime as the knights being assisted by the Princes of Germanie, brought the laide Duke and the Prussians also into such straights, that (maugre their heads) they were constrained to sue for peace. Afterward Suandepolcus lying at the point of death, admonished his sonnes that they should not doe any iniurie vnto the knights of the order, affirming that himselfe neuer prospered so long as he vied warre against them. Howbeit his sonnes for a certaine time obserued not their fathers counsel, untill at length one of them named Warrelaus, was created one of the Order, and the other called Samborus bestowed by legacie his goods and possessions vpon the laide Order, receiuing maintenance and exhibition from the laide Order, during the terme of his life. It returned also vnder the government of the foresayde Master Boppo, that one Syy Martine a Golin beeing accompanied with another knight, went into the countrey to see howe the Prussians were employed. And meeting with three Prussians, they slew two, and the thirde they reserued to guide them the directest way. But this guide betrayed them into their enemies handes, Which when they perceiued, they slew the Traytour, Then five Prussian horsemen came riding and tooke them, delivering them bounde to the custodie of two. And the other three pursued the horses of the two, which broke loose in the time of the escape. And they tarrying somewhat long, the other two would have beheaded the two Knights in the meane season. And as one of them was striking with his drawn sword, at the necke of Sir Martine, hee saide unto them: Sirs, you doe unwisely in that you take not off my garment before it bee defiled with blood. They therefore loosing the cordes wherewith hee was bounde, to take off his garment, set his armes more at libertie. Which Sir Martine well perceiuing reached his keeper such a bore, that his sword fell to the ground. Which hee with all speede taking up, slew both the keepers and unbounde his fellowe Knight. Moreover, seeing the other three Prussians comming furiously upon them, with stout couragious hearts they made towarde the saide Prussians, and slew them, and so escaped the danger of death. The seventh great Master was Hanno de Sangerhusen, who deceased in the yeere one thousand two hundred seventhie five. The eighth was Hartmannus ab Heldringen who deceased in the yeere 1282. The ninth was Burkardus a Schuenden being afterwarde made knight of the order of Saint Johns. The tenth was Conradus a Feuchtuwang: under this man the Citie of Acon in Palestina was sacked by the Soldan, and manie people were slayne. The Templars which were therein returned home out of Fraunce, where they had great renewes. The Knights of Saint John, who also had an Hospitall at Acon, changed their place, and went into the Isle of Cyprus, and from thence departing unto Rhodes, they subued that Ilande unto themselves. Nowe the Dutch Knights abounded with wealth and possessions throughout all Germanie, being Lordes of a good part of Prussia, Liuania, and Curland, whose chiefe house was then at Marburg, till such time as it was remooued unto Marienburg, a Towne of Prussia. The eleventh great Master was Godfrey Earle of Hohenloe. Under this man the knights sustained a great overthrow in Liuania: but hauing strengthened their armie, they slew neere unto Ryefoure thousande of their enemies. The twelfth Master was Sifridus a Feuchtuwang. Under this man, the principall house of the Order was translated from Marburg to Marienburg, which in the beginning was established at Acon, and from thence was remooued unto Venice, and from Venice unto Marburg. This Sifridus deceased in the yeere 1341. The thirteenth Master was called Charles Befart of Triers. This man built a fort upon the river of Minimel, and it was named Christminimel. The foureteenth was Warners ab Orsele, whome a certaine knight of the Order slew with his sword. The 15, was Ludolphus Duke of Brunswick, who built the Towne of Ylgenburg, and deceased 1352. The fiftenth was Theodoricus Earle of Aldenborg, and hee built the Towne of Bartenstein. The seuententh was Ludolphus surnamed King. The eighteenth was Henrie a Tufimer. The nineteenth Winnicus a Knoppenrodt. In this mans time the knights took the king of the Lithuanians named Kinkut captiue, and kept him prisoner in Marienburg halfe a yeere, but by the helpe of a seruant, hauing broken out of the Castle, hee escaped away by night. But fearing that hee was layde waite for in all places, hee left his horse, and went on foote through unknownen pathes. In the day time hee hidde himselfe in secrete places, and in the night hee continued his iourney untill hee came unto Massouia. But all the Knights ioye was turned into sorow, after they had lost so great an enemy. The twentieth grand Master was Conradus Zolner of Rotenstein. The one and twentieth Conradus Walenrod. The two and twentieth Conradus a Iungingen, who deceased in the yeere one thousand four hundredeth and seuen. The three and twentieth Vricus a Iungingen. This man dyed in battell in the yeere one thousand four hundredeth and tenne: which battell was fought against Vladislaus Father of Casmire. Both partes had leuiued mightie and huge forces: unto the Polonians the Lithuanians and the Tartars had ioyned themselves, ouer whome one Viroldus was captaine: the Dutch Knights had taken up Souldiers out of all Germanie. And when each armie had encamped themselves one withintwentic furlongs of another, (hoping for victorie and impatient of delay) the great Master of the Prussians sent an Herald to denounce warre unto the King, and immediately (alarme beeing giuen) it is reported that there were in both armies fourtie thousand horsemen in a readinesse. Vladislaus commaunded the Lithuanians and the Tartars to giue the first onfette, and placed the Polonians in the reerwarde of the battell: on the contrarie side, the Prussians regarded least of all to reserve any strong troupes behinde, which might rescue such as were wearie, and renewe the fight, if neede shoulde require, but set forward the flower and chualrie of all his Souldiers in the verie forefront of the battell. The charge beeing giuen certaine unarmed Tartars

Tartars & Lithuanians were slaine handmoorth; howbeit the multitude pressed on, neither durst the fearefull Polonians turne their backs, and so a cruell battell was fought vpon the heapes of dead carcases. The combate continued a long time, terrible slaughters were committed, and the Lithuanians and Tartars were slaine like sheepe. But when newe and fresh enemies continually issued forth, the Dutch knights being wearied, began to fight more faintly. Which Vladislaus no sooner perceined, but in all haste hee sends forwarde his mightie and well armed bande of Polonians, who suddenly breaking in renewed the skirmish. The Dutch were not able to withstand the furie of the fresh troupes (great oddes there is betwene the wearied Souldier and him that comes in a fresh) insomuch that the knights with their people were constrained to flee. The master of the Order seeing his souldiers give way vnto the enemy, gathered a companie together, and with blode him in the face, howbeit himselfe was slaine for his labour, the flight of his people proued greater and more dishonourable, neither did the Dutch cease to flee, so long as the Polonian continued the chase. There fell on the Knights partie manie thousands of men, and the Polonians gotte not the victorie without great spoile and damage. This battell was foughten in regard of the bounds of regions in the yeere 1410. All Prussia following the happie successe of the Polonian king (except Marienburg onely) yielded themselves vnto him being Conquerour. Howbeit the Emperour Sigismund taking by the quartell, peace was ordained betwene the knights and Polonia, and a league concluded, certaine summes of moncy also were paid vnto the Polonian, Prussia was restor'd vnto the knights, neither was the saide order disturbed in the possession of their lands vntill the time of Friderick. The 24. Master was Henric Earle of Plaen. This man being deposed by the Chapter, was 7. yerres holden prisoner at Danczik. The 25. Master was Michael Kuchenmeister, that is, master of the Cookes of Sternberg. The 26. was Paulus a Rusdorff. The 27. Conradus ab Ellerichshausen. This man, after diuers and sundry conflicts betwene the Dutch knights, and the king of Polonia, concluded a perpetuall league with the saide king. Howbeit the citizens of Dantzic secretly going about to obtayne their freedome, that the foresaide Order might haue no dominion ouer them, made sute vnto the Polonian king to be their Protector. This Conradus died in the yeere 1450. The 28. was Lewis ab Ellerichshausen. Under this man there arose a dangerous sedition in Prussia betwene the chiefe cities and the knights of the Order. The citizens demanded libertie, complaining that they were oppressed with diuers molestations. Whereupon they priuily made sute vnto Casimir then king of Polonia. The Master of the Order seeing what would come to passe began to expostulate with the king, that he kept not the peace which had bene concluded betwene them to last for euer. Also Frederick the Emperour commaunded the Prussians to returne vnto the obedience of the knights, who by the dint of their swordes had released that prouince out of the hands of Infidels, and had bought it with the shedding of much blood. Notwithstanding the popular sort persisting still in their stubborn determination, proceeded at length to open warre. The cities adhering vnto the king vsurped diuers Castles belonging to the Master, tooke certain Commanders and knights, yea, and some they slewe also. Fiftie and five townes conspired together in that rebellion: but thinking their estate and strength not sure enough against their own gouernors without foreign aide, they chose king Casimir to be their lord. Whereupon the Polonian king marched into Prussia with a great armie, taking possession of such cities as yielded themselves vnto him, and proceeding forward against Marienburg, besieged the castle and the towne. In the meane season the Master hauing hired an armie of Germane souldiers, suddenly surprised the king at vnawares in his tents, and slewe about 300. Polonians, tooke prisoners 136. noblemen, spoiled their tents, tooke away their horses, victuals, and armour, insomuch that the king himselfe hardly escaped vpon one horse. These things came to passe in the yeere 1455. The Master hauing thus obtained the victorie, sent his armie into the countrey, and recouered the castles and cities which he had lost, to the number of 80. putting many of his enemies also vnto the sword. Moreover, he recouered Kunigsberg being one of the foure principall cities, which are by name Thorne, Elburg, Kunigsberg, and Gdanum, that is to say, Danczig. And when the warre was longer protracted then the Master could well beare, and a whole yerres wages was unpaid vnto his captains, those captaines which were in the garison of Marienburg conspired against the Master, and for a great summe of money betrayed the castle of Marienburg vnto the king. Which practice being knowne, the Master fled to Kunigsberg, and newe warre was begonne, and great spoile and desolation was wrought on both sides: vntill at length, after composition made, the king recaptured Pomerella, and all the castles and townes therein, together with Marienburg and Elburg: and the master intored Samicia, Kunigsberg, &c. This composition was concluded in the yeere 1466. The 29. Master was Henric Reuss, first being deputie, and afterwarde Master of Prussia. The 30. was Henric a Richenberg, who deceased in the yeere 1477. The 31. called

The great master overcometh the king of Polonia.

Martine Truchses died in the yeere 1489. The 32. John a Tieslen died in the yeere 1500. The 33. being Duke of Saxonie, and marques of Misk, deceased in the yeere 1510. This man began to call in question, whether the foresaid composition concluded betweene the king of Polonia, and the Order, were to bee obserued or no: especially sithence it concerned certaine articles against equitie and reason. Therupon he appealed vnto the Bishop of Rome, vnto the Emperour, vnto the princes and electors of Germany, and pcrnauiled with them so farre forth, that there was a day of hearing appointed at Posna in Polonia. And the Legates of both parts meeting heard complaines and excuses, & dispatched no other businesse. In the meane time Prince Frederick deceased in the tenth yeere of his gouernment. The 34. Master was Albertus marques of Brandenburg, whom the King of Polonia did so grieuouly molest with war, and opprest all Prussia with such extreme rigour, that the Prince of the countrey was constrained to make a league of foure yeeres with him, and to yeeld vnto such conditions, as turned to the vtter ouerthrowe of the whole Order. And amongst other conditions are these which follow. Sithence that the originall of all discorde betweene Polonia and the order doeth from hence arise, for that hitherto in Prussia, no lawfull heyre and successor hath bozne rule and authoritie, but diuers and sundry haue had the gouernment therof, by whose means the nations haue bene prouoked one against another, much Christian blood hath bin shed, the lands and inhabitants grieuouly spoiled, and many widowes and Orphanes made: the Popes, Emperours, and Princes being often sollicitated for the establishing of that perpetual league, which Casimir hath heretofore concluded &c. Sithence also that the truce which hath bene agreed vpon of both parties is in thoyt time to be expired, and that it is to bee feared, that bloody warres will then be renewed, and that all things will proue worse and worse, vnlesse some lawfull composition be made, and some good and wholesome deuise be put in practise, as well for the benefit of the King and of his posteritie, as for the commoditie of the whole common weale of Prussia, especially considering that Albertus the Marques refused not to submitte himselfe to the Councell of the King, &c.

England against infidels.

Whereas it is apparant, that diuers and sundry times heretofore, your famous progenitours and predecessours the kings of England haue alwaies bene gracious promoters and speciall friends vnto the generall Masters of the land of Prussia, and of the whole order: whereas also they haue vouchsafed, by their Barons, Knights, and other their nobles of the kingdome of England, vnto the Masters and order aforesaid, sundry and manifolde fauourable assistances in the conquest of the Infidels (in whose steppes your excellent Maiestie insisting, haue, in these your dayes shewed your selfe in like sort right graciously affected vnto the Master generall which nowe is, and vnto his famous predecessour) in due consideration of the premisses, and in regard also of diuers other affaires, which are at this present to be propounded vnto your Highnes, the foresaid Master general which now is hath caused vs his messengers to be sent with letters of credence vnto your Maiestie: humbly praying, and earnestly beseeching your roial clemency, that in times to come, the said Master general, his successors, & our whole Order may of your bounty most graciously obtaine the same fauour, beneuolence, and stedfast amity & friendship, which hath bin continued from the times of your foresaid predecessor: in regard wherof we do offer the said Master of ours, and our whole company, vnto your Highnes, as your perpetual and deuote friends. Notwithstanding (most soueraigne Prince) certaine other things we haue to propound vnto your Grace, in the name & behalfe of our saide Master and Order, by way of complaint, namely, that at certaine times past, and especially within the space of x. yeeres last expired, his subiects and marchants haue sustained sundry damages and ablations of their goods, by diuers subiects and inhabitants of your realme of England, and that very often, both by sea and land: the which, for the behalf, and by the appointment of the Master general aforesaid, & of his predecessor, are put downe in registers, and recorded in the writings of his cities in the land of Prussia, of which parties dammified, some haue obtained letters fro the Master general that that now is, & also from his predecessor, vnto your renowned grandfather R. Edward of famous Edward the 3. memory, and sundry times vnto your highnes also, to haue restitution made for their goods taken from them: wherby they haue nothing at al preuailed, but heaping losse vpon losse haue mispent their time & their charges: both because they were not permitted to propound & exhibit their complaints & letters befoze your maiesty, and also for diuers other impediments. Certain of them also considering how others of their countriemen had laboured in vain, & fearing the like successe, haue troubled the Master general very often with grievous and sundry complaints, craving & humbly beseeching at his hands, that he would vouchsafe graciously to prouide for the as his faithful & loial subiects, as touching the restitution of their losses: especially seeing y^e so much wealth of the English marchants was euery yeere to be found in Prussia, as being arrested, they might obtaine some reasonable satisfaction for their losses. Which thing the Master general aforesaid & his predecessor also haue deferred vnto this present (albeit to y^e great losse of their subiects) therby hauing merer & principal respect vnto those special curtesies and fauours which your excellent Maiesty & your worthy progenitors haue right graciously vouchsafed vpon our Masters and Orders: neither yet for the iniuries aforesaid, was there euer any maner of offence, or molestation offered vnto any of your subiects noble or ignoble whatsoeuer. Moreover, in the name & behalfe of our foresaid Master general we do propound vnto your excellency by way of complaint, that in the yere last past, 6. dayes after y^e feast of the Ascension, certain persons of your realm of England, with their ships & captains comming vnto the port of Flanders, named Swen, & finding there, amongst sundry other, 6. ships of Prussia resident, which had there arriued wth diuers goods & marchandises: and being informed that they were of Prussia, & their friends, they caused them & their ships to remain nere vnto their owne ships, protesting vnto them, that they should in no sort be molested or dammified by theselues or by any other of their company, & that they would faithfully defend them, as if they were their own people, fro y^e hands of their aduersaries: & for their farther security & trust, they deliuered some of their own men & their standers into our mens ships: howbeit a while after being stirred vp, & bent far otherwise, they took out of y^e foresaid ships al kind of armors, wherewith they were to gard & defend themselves fro pirats, & they detained the masters of those ships, not suffering them to return vnto their own ships & companies, one also of y^e said ships (hauing taken al the goods out of her) they consumed with fire. And within 3. daies after they came with one accord vnto y^e abouenamed ships, and tooke away from them all goods and marchandises which they could find, and all the armour and weapons of the said ships, the chestes also of the marchants, of the ship-masters, & of other persons they brake open, taking out money, jewels, garments, & diuers other commodities: and so they inflicted vpon them irreuererable losses and unkind grieuances. And departing out of the foresaid haven, they caried 2. of the Prussian ship-masters with the, as their captiues vnto an haven of England called Sandwich. Who, being afterward released, were compelled to sweare, that they should not declare y^e iniuries offered vnto them, either befoze your roiall maiesty, or your hon. Councell, or your chancelor: neither were they permitted to come on thore. And being offered such hard measure, when they made pitifull mones & complaints vnto your foresaide subiects, amongst other matters they spake on this wise vnto them: Do you complain of iniuries & losses offered vnto you? Lo, in your own countrey of Prussia there are English marchants, & goods sufficient, go your waies home therfore, & recouer your losses, taking two for one: and in this maner they were left, & so departed. Afterward returning vnto y^e land of Prussia, they & their friends repaired vnto the Master general, ioinly and wth one consent making their complaint vnto him of the losses which had bin inflicted vpon the by your subiects. And prostrating theselues at his feet, they all and euery of them made their humble lutes, y^e he would haue compassion on them, as vpon his poore subiects, regarding the selues, their wiues, & children, and pitying their distress, and penury, and that he would graciously procure some redress for them. And when he offered his letters vnto them, wishing them to prosecute their cause befoze your highnes, they answered that they were no way able to defray the expenses, and that others, who were in like sort dammified, had laboured that way altogether in vain & to no purpose: beseeching him again and again, that he would by another kind of means, namely by arresting of your marchants and their goods, procure the restitution of their losses. At length the Master general being moued by so many and so great complaints, and by the molestation of his subiects, caused (albeit full foze against his will) a certaine portion of English marchants goods to be laid hold on, and to be arrested, in his cities of Elburg & Danzick, and to be bestowed in sure places, vntil such time as he might conveniently by his messengers propound and exhibit all and singular the premisses vnto your highnes. And so far as much as the foresaid Master general and our Orders do know no iust occasion, wherby they haue deferred your maiesties indignation, but are timely and most undoubtedly perswaded, to finde all curtesie, fauour, and friendship at your Highnesse, according to your wonted clemencie: the said Master general therefore maketh

no doubt, that al the aboue wyritten damages & molestations, being in such sort, against God and iustice, offered vnto his subiects by yours, be altogether vnknown vnto your magnificence, & committed against your mind: wherfore presently vpon the foresaid arrest of your marchants goods, he dispatched his messengers vnto your roial maiesty. Wherof one deceased by the way, namely in the territory of Holland: & the other remained sick in those parts for a long season: & so that ambassage took none effect. Wherfore the said master general was desirous to send vs now y second time also vnto your Highnes. We do make our humble sute therfore, in the name & behalf of our Maister and Order aforesaid, vnto your kingly supremacy, that, hauing God and iustice before your eyes, and also the dutifull and obsequious demeanour of the said master, and order towards you, you would vouchsafe to extend your gracious clemency, for the redresse of the premises: wherby the foresaid losses may be restored and repaid vnto our subiects. All which notwithstanding, that it would please you of your wisdom & prouidence to procure so absolute a remedy, by meanes whereof, in time to come, such dealings and inconueniences may be auoided on both parts, & finally that your marchants may quietly be possessed of their goods arrested in Prussia, and our marchants may be admitted vnto the possession of their commodities attached in England, to conuert & apply them vnto such uses, as to themselves shal seem most conuenient. Howbeit (most gracious prince and lord) we are to sollicite your Highnesse, not onely about the articles to be propounded concerning the losses aforesaid, but moze principally, for certain sinister reports and superstitious slanders, wherewith certaine of your subiects, not seeking for peace, haue falsly informed your maiesty, & your most honorable & discrete Council: affirming that at the time of y aforesaid arrest your marchants were barbarously intreated, that they were cast into lothsom prisons, drenched in myze and waier vp to y neck, restrained from all conference and company of men, and also that their meat was thown vnto them, as a bone to a dog, with many other enozimities, which they haue most slanderously deuised concerning the master general aforesaid, and his people, and haue published them in these dominions: vpon the occasion of which falshoods certain marchants of our parts, and of other regions of Alemain (who, of your special beneuolence, were indued with certaine priuileges and fauours in your citie of London, and in other places) were, as malefactors, apprehended and caried to prison, until such time as the truely was moze apparrant. Whereupon, the foresaide master general propoundeth his humble sute vnto your maiesty, that such enemies of truely and concord, your Maiesty would vouchsafe in such sort to chastise, that they may be an example vnto others presuming to doe the like.

Howeouer, (high and mighty Prince and lord) it was reported vnto our Maister general, that his former Legats required of your maiesty safe conduct freely to come into your highnesse Realme. Which when hee heard, he was exceedingly offended therat, sithence vndoubtedly they did not this at his commaundement or direction. We therfore humbly beseech your Grace, as touching this ouersight, to holde the Maister general excused, because there is no need of safe conduct, betwene so speciall friends.

Furthermore, sundry damages and complaints of the foresaid general Maister, and his subiects are byessly exhibited, and put downe in the billes following. Also, all and singular damaged persons, besides other proofes, were compelled to verifie their losses by their sojmall othes, taken vpon the holy Bible.

Lastly, we doe make our humble suite and petition vnto the prouidence and discretion of your Highnes, and of your honorable Councell, that concerning the premises, and all other matters propounded, or to be propounded vnto your Maiesty, we may obtaine a speedy answer, and an effectual end. If or it would rebound vnto our great charges and losse to make any long delays.

An agreement made by the Ambassadors of England and Prussia, confirmed by king Richard the second.

Richard by the grace of God, king of England, and France, and lord of Ireland, To all, vnto whom these present letters shall come, greeting. We haue seene and considered the composition, ordination, concord, and treatie, betwene our welbeloued cleark, master Nicholas Stocker, licentiat in both lawes, Walter Sibel, and Thomas Graa, citizens of our cities of London & York, our messengers and ambassadoys on the one part: and the honourable and religious personages, Conradus de Walrode, great commander, Sifridus Walpode de Bassenheim, chiefe hospitalary commander in Elburg, and Vlricus Hachenberg Treasurer, the messengers and ambassadoys of the right reuerend and religious lord, lord Conradus Zolner de Rothenstein, master general of the knightly order of the Dutch hospital of Saint Mary at Ierusalem on the other part, lately concluded and agreed vpon in these wordes. In the name of the supream and indiuisible Trinitie, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost, Amen. Inasmuch as the author of peace will haue peace-makers makers to be the sons of blessednes, and the execrable enemy of peace to be expelled out of the dominions of Christians: therefore for the perpetuall memorie of the thing, be it known vnto all men who shall see or heare the tenour of these presents: that there being matter of dissension and discord bred betwene the most renowned prince and king, Richard by the grace of God king of England and France, and lord of Ireland, and his subiects on the one part: and the right reuerend and religious lord, lord Conradus Zolner de Rothenstein, Master generall of the knightly order of the Dutch hospitall of S. Marie at Ierusalem, and his land of Prussia, and his subiects also, on the other part: the foresaid lord and generall master, vpon mature counsell and deliberation had, sent his honourable ambassadours to wards England vnto the fozenamed most soueraigne prince and king, to propound and make their complaint vnto him of violence and iniuries offered (as it is sayd) by the English vnto the Prussians: in consideration whereof certaine goods of the marchants of England were arrested in the land of Prussia. Whose complaint the foresaid most gracious prince did courteously and friendly admit, receiue, and accept, and after many speeches uttered in this treaty, louingly dismissed them vnto their owne countrey againe, promising by his letters vnto the foresaid reuerend Master generall, that hee would dispatch his ambassadours vnto the land of Prussia. Whereupon, in the yeere 1388, he sent the hono: and reuerend personages Master Nicholas Srocker licentiate of both lawes, Thomas Graa, and Walter Sibill, citizens of London and Yorke, with sufficient authority and full commandement, to handle, discusse, and finally to determine the foresaid busines, and with letters of credence vnto the right reuerend lord and master generall aforesaid. Which ambassadours, together with Iohn Beuis of London their informer, and the letters aforesaid, and their ambassage, the said right reuerend lord and Master generall, at his castle of Marienburgh, the 28, of Iuly, in the yeare aforesaid, reuerently and honourably receiued and entertained: and in his minde esteemed them worthy to treat and decide the causes aforesaid: and so vnto the sayd ambassadours he ioyned in commission on his behalfe, thre of his owne counsellors, namely the honourable and religious personages Conradus de Walrode great commander, Seiffridus Walpode de Bassenheim chiefe hospitalary and commander in Elburg, Wolricus Hachenberger treasurer, being all of the order aforesaid. Which ambassadoys so entreating about the premises, and sundry conferences and consultations hauing passed between them, friendly and with one consent, concluded an agreement and concord in manner following: That is to say:

First, that all arrestments, repossessments, and impignozations of whatsoever goods and marchandises in England and Prussia, made before the date of these presents, are from henceforth quiet, free, and released, without all fraud and dissimulation: inasmuch that the damages, charges and expenses occasioned on both parts by reason of the foresaid goods arrested, are in no case hereafter to be required or chalenged by any man: but the demands of any man whatsoever propounded in this regard, are and ought to be altogether frustrate and void, and all actions which may or shall be commenced by occasion of the sayd goods arrested, are to be extinct and of none effect.

Whereafter, it is secondly concluded and agreed, that all and singular Prussians pretending themselves to be iniured by the English at the Port of Swen, or elsewhere, howsoever, and whensoever, before the date of these presents, hauing receiued the letters of the foresaid right reuerend lord and Master generall, and of the cities of their abode, are to repayre towards England, vnto the sayd hon: embassadours, who are to assist them, and to propound and exhibite their complaints, vnto the fozenamed lord and king. The most gracious prince is bounde to doe his indeuor, that the parties damnified may haue restitution of their goods made vnto them, or at least complete iustice and iudgement without delay. Also in like maner all English men affirming themselves to haue bene endamaged by Prussians, wheresoever, howsoever, and whensoever, are to haue recourse vnto the often fozenamed right reuerend lord the Master generall, with the letters of their king and of the cities of their abode, propounding their complaints and causes vnto him. Who likewise is bound to doe his indeuor that the sayd losses and damages may be restored, or at the least that speecie iudgement may be, without all delays, executed. This caueat being premised in each clause, that it may and shall be freely granted and permitted vnto euery man that will civilly make his suite and complaint, to doe it either by himselfe, or by his procurator or procuratores.

Also thirdly it is agreed, that whosoever of Prussia is determined criminally to propound his criminal complaints in England: namely that his brother or kinsman hath bene slaine, wounded, or maimed, by English men, the same partie is to repayre vnto the cite of London in England, and vnto the sayd ambassadoys, bringing with him the letters of the sayd right reuerend lord the Master generall, and of the cities of their abode: which ambassadoys are to haue free and full authority, according to the complaines of the men of Prussia, and the answers of the English men, to make and ordaine a friendly reconciliation or honest recompence betwene such parties: which reconcili-

liation the sayd parties reconciled are bound undoubtedly & without delay to obserue. But if there be any English man found, who shall rashly contradict or contemne the composition of the foresayd ambassadoys: then the sayd ambassadoys are to bring the forenamed Prussian plaintifes before the presence of the kings Maiestie: and also to make supplication on the behalfe of such plaintifes, that complete iustice and iudgment may without delays bee administered, according as those suites are commenced. Whereouer whatsoeuer English man, against whom anie one of Prussia would enter his action, shall absent himselfe at the terme, the sayd ambassadoys are to summon and ascite the foresayd English man to appere at the terme next ensuing, that the plaintifes of Prussia may in no wise seeme to depart or to returne home, without iudgement or the assistance of lawe. Nowe if the sayd English man being summoned shall be found disobedient, the forenamed ambassadoys are to make their appeale and supplication in manner aforesayd. And in like sort in all respects shall the English plaintifes be dealt with all in Prussia, namely in the citie of Dantzik, where the deputies of the sayd citie and of the citie of Elburg shall take vnto themselves two other headboroughs, one of Dantzik, and the other of Elburg: which foure commissioners are to haue in all respects, the very like authoritie of deciding, discussing, and determining all criminall complaints propounded criminally, by English men against any Prussian or Prussians, by friendly reconciliation, or honest recompense, if it be possible. But if it cannot friendly be determined, or if anie Prussian shall not yeeld obedience vnto any such order or composition, but shall be found to contradict and to contemne the same: from thenceforth the said foure deputies and headboroughs are to make their appeale and supplication vnto the Maister generall of the land aforesayd, that vnto the sayd English plaintifes speedy iudgement and complete iustice may be administered. But if it shall so fall out that any of the principall offenders shall decease, or already are deceased in either of the sayd countries, that then it shall bee free and lawfull for the plaintife to prosecute his right against the goods or heires of the party deceased. Also, for the executing of the premises the termes vnder written are appointed: namely the first, from the Sunday whereupon Quasi modo geniti is to be sung next ensuing, vntill the seventh day following: The second vpon the feast of the holy Trinitie next to come, and for seuen dayes following: The third vpon the eight day after Saint Iohn Baptist next to come, & for seuen daies following: The fourth, last, and peremptory terme shall be vpon the feast of S. Michael next to come, and vpon seuen dayes next following. And from thenceforth all causes which concerne death, or the mayming of a member, with all actions proceeding from them, are to remaine altogether void and extinct. And if peradventure any one of the foresayd ambassadoys, shall in the meane season dye, then the other two shall haue authoritie to chuse a third vnto them. And if after the date of these presents any cause great or small doth arise or spring forth, it must bee decided in England and in Prussia, as it hath bene accustomed in times past and from ancient times.

The priuiledges of the English marchants in Prussia.

Also, it is farther concluded and agreed vpon, that all lawfull marchants of England whofoeuer shall haue free licence and authoritie, with all kindes of shippes, goods, and marchandises, to resort vnto euery port of the land of Prussia, and also to transport all such goods and marchandises by farther vnto any other place in the sayde land of Prussia, and there with all kindes of persons freely to bargain and make sale, as heretofore it hath from auncient times bene accustomed. Which priuiledge is granted in all things and by all circumstances vnto the Prussians in England. And if after the date of these presents, betwene the sayd kingdome of England, and land of Prussia any dissension or discorde (which God forbid) should arise: then the foresayd souereigne prince and king of England, and the sayd right reuerend lord the Maister generall be mutually by their letters and messengers to giue certificate and intimation one vnto another, concerning the matter and cause of such dissension and discorde: which intimation, on the behalfe of the foresayd souereigne prince & king of England, shall be deliuered in the forenamed castle of Marienburg: but on the behalfe of the sayd right reuerend lord the Maister generall, such intimation shall be giuen in the citie of London aforesayd, vnto the Maior of the said city: that then such a denuntiation or intimation being made, the marchants of England and the subiects of the land of Prussia may, within the space of one yeere next following, freely and safely returne home with all their goods & marchandises: if at the least, in the mean while, some composition, & friendly league betwene the two foresayd countreies be not in some sort concluded. And that all the premises may more firmly and faithfully be put in due practise and execution on both partes, for the strong and inuiolable keeping of peace and tranquillity: and also for the full confirmation and strengthening of all the sayde premises, the three foresayd honourable and religious personages being by the said right reuerend lord the Maister general appointed as commissioners to deale in the aboue written ordination and composition, haue caused their seales vnto these presents to be put:

put : and the sayd ordination also, and letter in the same tenour word for word, and in all points euen as it is inserted into these presents, they haue mutually receiued fro the abouenamed thre ambassadours of the right soueraigne king of England vnder their seales. Given at the castle of Marienburg in the yeare of our lord aforesayd, vpon the twentieth day of the month of August. And we therfore doe accept, approue, ratifie, and by the tenour of these presents doe confirme, the composition, ordination, concord, and treaty aforesayd. In testimony whereof we haue caused these our letters to be made patents. Witnessse our selues at Westminster the 22. of October, in the thirticth yeare of our reigne.

By the king and his counsell.

The letters of Conradus de Iungingen, Master generall of Prussia, written vnto Richard the second, king of England, in the yeere 1398, for the renouncing of a league and composition concluded betweene England and Prussia, in regard of manifold iniuries offered vnto the Prussians.

Our humble commendations, with our earnest prayers vnto God for your Maiestie, premised. Most renowned prince and mighty lord, it is not (we hope) out of your Maiesties remembrance, how our famous predecessor going immediately before vs sent certaine letters of his vnto your highnesse, effectually contayning sundry complaints of grieuances, iniuries and losses, wherewith the marchants of his lande and Order being woont in times past to visite your kingdome with their goods and marchandises, haue bene contrary to their liberties and priuileges annoyed with manifold iniuries and wrongs. Especially sithens they haue bene molested in your realme, being contrary to the friendly composition made and celebrated by the hono: personages, master Nicholas Stocket, Thomas Graa and Walter Sibil, in the yeare 1388, with the assistance of their coarbiters on our part, and contrary to God and all iustice, eppressed with manifold damages, losses, and grieuances: as in certaine articles exhibited vnto our predecessors aforesayd it doeth more manifestly appeare. In consideration whereof being vehemently moued by the dammified parties, he humbly besought your highnesse by his messengers and letters, for complement and execution of iustice. About the which assayres your Maiestie returned your letters of answer vnto our sayd predecessor, signifying that the sayd businesse of articles concerned al the commonalty of your realme, and that your highnesse purposed, after consultation had in your parliament, to send a more deliberate answer concerning the premises, vnto our predecessor aforesayd. Howbeit he being by death translated out of this present worlde, and our selues by the providence of God succeeding in his roome, and also long time expecting an effectuall answer from your highnesse, are not yet informed as we looked for: albeit the complaints of iniuries and losses offered vnto our subiects doe continually increafe. But from hencefoorth to provide a remedie and a caueat for the time to come, the sayd complaint doeth vpon great reasons moue and inuite me. Sithens therfore in regard of the sayd composition, neither you nor your subiects may be indged in the empire: and sithens plaine reason requireth that the one be not enriched by the others losse: as vndoubtedly our subiects shoulde sustaine great damage by the composition aforesayd, by vertue whereof your subiects doe enioy all commodities in our lande, and contrariwise our subiects in your realme haue suffered, & as yet sundry wayes do suffer manifold discommodities, losses and iniuries. Wherefore (most soueraigne prince and mighty lord) being reasonably moued vpon the causes aforesayd, we doe, by the aduise of our counsellers, reuoke and repeale the sayd composition concluded as is aboue written, together with the effect thereof, purely and simply renouncing the same by these presents: refusing hereafter to haue either our selues or our subiects in any respect to stand bound by the vertue of the sayd composition: but from hencefoorth, and for the times heretofore also, bee it altogether void and of none effect.

Provided not withstanding, that from the time of the notice of this denunciation given vnto the hono: Maior of your cite of London, for the space of a yeare next ensuing, it shall be lawfull for all marchants of your kingdome whatsoeuer, with their goods and marchandises to retorne home, according to the forme in the foresayd composition expessed: conditionally that our subiects may euen so in all respects be permitted to depart, with the safety of their goods and liues out of your dominions: this present renunciation, reuocation, and retractation of the order and composition aforesayd, notwithstanding. Howbeit in any other assayres whatsoeuer, deuoutly to submit our selues vnto your highnesse pleasur and command, both our selues, and our whole order are right willing willing and desirous : and also to benefite and promote your subiects we wil indelicat to the best of our ability. Given in our castle of Marienburg in the yeare of our Lord 1398, and vpon the 22. day of February.

Frater Conradus de Iungingen, master generall of the Order of the Dutch knights of S. Maries hospital at Ierusalem.

A briefe relation of William Esturmy, and Iohn Kington concerning their ambassages into Prussia, and the Hans-townes.

IN primis, that in the month of July, and in the yeare of our Lord 1403, and the fift yeare of the reigne of our soueraigne Lord the king that now is, there came into England the ambassadours of the mighty lord Fr. Conradus de Iungingen, being then Master general of Prussia, with his letters directed vnto our foresayd soueraigne lord the king, requiring amends and recompense for certaine iniuries vniuersally offered by English men vnto the subiects of the sayd Master generall, written in 20. articles, which amounted vnto the summe of 19120. nobles and a halfe &c.

Item, that the third day of the moneth of October, in the yeare of our Lord abovesayd, and in the fift yere of the reigne of our soueraigne lord the king, between the reuerend father in God, Henrie then bishop of Lincolne lord chancelor, and William lord de Roos high treasurer of England, on the one party and the sayd ambassadours on the other party, it was (according to their petition) amongst other things ordayned : namely that the liege people of our soueraigne lord the king should freely be permitted, vntill the feast of Easter then next after ensuing to remaine in the land of Prussia, and from thence with their goods & marchandises to returne vnto their own home : and also, that the subiects of the sayd Master generall in the kingdome of England shoulde haue licence and liberty to doe the like. Provided alwayes, that after the time aboue limited, neither the English marchants in the land of Prussia, nor the Prussian marchants in the realme of England should vse any traffique of marchandise at all, vntill in the meane space it were otherwise agreed and concluded by the sayd king and the sayd Master generall.

Item, immediately after our sayd soueraigne lord the king sent his letters by Iohn Browne marchant of Lin vnto the foresayd Master generall, for to haue mutuall conuersation and intercourse of dealing to continue some certain space, betwene the marchants of England and of Prussia: promising in the same letters, that he would in the meane season send vnto the foresayd Master his ambassadoys to intreat about the pretended iniuries aforesaid : which letters the foresayd Master, for diuers causes, refused to peeble vnto, as in his letters sent vnto our lord the king, bearing date the 16. day of the moneth of July, in the yeare of our lord 1404. more plainly appeareth.

Item, that after the receit of the letters of the Master aforesaid, which are next aboue mentioned, our sayd king, according to his promise, sent William Esturmy knight, Th. Iohn Kington clerke, and William Brampton citizen of London, from his court of parliament holden at Coventrie, very slightly informed, as his ambassadours into Prussia.

Item, before the arrivall of the sayd ambassadours in Prussia, all intercourse of traffique betwene the English and the Prussians, in the realme of England, and in the land of Prussia was altogether restrained and prohibited : and in the same land it was ordayned and put in practise, that in whatsoeuer port of the land of Prussia any English marchant had arrived with his goods, he was not permitted to conueigh the sayd goods, out of that port, vnto any other place of the land of Prussia, either by water, or by lande, vnder the payne of the forfeiting of the same : but was enioyned to sell them in the very same port, vnto the Prussians onely and to none other, to the great preiudice of our English marchants.

Item, that after the arrivall of the sayd English ambassadours in the land of Prussia, it was ordayned, that from the eighth day of the moneth of October, in the yeare of our lord 1405, all English marchants whatsoeuer should haue free liberty to arrive with all kindes of their marchandise in whatsoeuer port of the land of Prussia, and to make sale of them in the said land, as hath heretofore from aunient times bene accustomed. Also sundry other commodious priuiledges vnto the realme of England were then ordayned and established : as in the indentures made for this purpose it doth more manifestly appeare.

Item, the said English ambassadours being arrived in the land of Prussia, demanded of the sayd Master generall, a reformation and amends, for the damages and iniuries offered by the Prussians vnto the liege people of our soueraigne lord and king, written in fiftene articles ; which losses amounted vnto the summe of 4535. nobles.

Item, the said Master generall, besides the articles exhibited vnto our soueraigne lord the king (as it is aboue mentioned) deliuered vnto the sayd ambassadours diuers other articles of certaine iniuries injuries offered (as ye sayth) vniuersally by English men, vnto his subiects, which amounted vnto the summe of 500. nobles.

Item, it was after ward concluded, that vpon the first of May next then ensuing, namely in the peere of our Lord 1406, or within the space of one yeare immediately following there should bee made a conuenient, iust, and reasonable satisfaction, for all molestations vniuersally offered on both partes, as well on the behalfe of our soueraigne lord the king, as of the foresayd Master general. Which satisfaction not being performed, the Prussians with their goods & marchandises, within three moneths after the end of the sayd yeare next following, were without molestation or impediment, enioined to depart out of the realme of England with their ships and goods, and the English men likewise, out of the territories and dominions of the said Master general, & both of them, without any further admonition, to abstaine & separate themselves, from both the countreys aforesayd. For the performance of which premises, the ambassadoys on both parts being sufficiently instructed, were appointed to meete the first day of May, at the towne of Dordraet in Holland.

Item, that the sayd William Esturmy and John Kingdon in their returne homewards from Prussia towards England passed through the chiefe cities of the Hans, and treated in such sort with the Burgomasters of them, that there were sent messengers and agents, in the behalfe of the common societie of the Hans marchantes, vnto the towne of Dordraet, to conferre with the ambassadoys of England, about the redressing of injuries attempted on both parts: where diuers agreements were set downe betwene the sayd ambassadoys, and messengers, as in the indentures made for the same purpose it doth more manifestly appeare.

Item, that the meeting appointed at the towne of Dordraet, vpon the first of May, was by the letters of the foresayd ambassadoys, proroged vnto the first of August then next ensuing; and after ward by vertue of the kings letters vnto the first day of March next following: and there was another day of prorogation also.

Item, that after the prorogations aforesayd, the ambassadoys of England, and the messengers & commissioners of Prussia met together at the towne of Hage in Holland, the 28. day of August, in the yeare of our lord 1407. And there was a treaty between the concerning the summe 25934. nobles and an halfe, demanded on the behalfe of the sayd Master generall for amends and recompense in consideration of wrongs offered vnto himselfe and vnto his subiects of Prussia, as is aforesayd. Also the sayd Master and his Prussians, besides the summe not yet declared in the articles, which is very small, are to rest contented and satisfied with the summe of 8957. nobles, in lieu of all the damages aforesayd: no times of payment being then assigned or limited, but after ward to be reasonably limited and assigned, by our sayd soueraigne lord the king. In so much, that our said soueraigne lord the king is to write his full intention & determination concerning this matter, in his letters to be deliuered the 16. day of March, vnto the aldermen of the marchants of the Hans residing at Bruges. Other wise, that from thence forth all league of friendship shall bee dissolved betwene the realme of England and the land of Prussia.

Also it is farther to be noted, that in the appointment of the summe next before written to be disbursed out of England, this condition was added in writing, namely, that if by lawfull testimonies it may sufficiently and effectually be proued, concerning the chiefe articles abouewritten, or any part of them, that satisfaction was made vnto any of those parties, to whom it was due: or that the goods, of and for the which complaint was made on the behalfe of Prussia, in the sayd articles, did or doe pertaine vnto others, or that any other iust, true, or reasonable cause may lawfully be proued & alledged, why the foresayd sums or any of them ought not to be payed: that the in the summes contained in the articles abouementioned, so much only must be cut off, or stopped, as shalbe found, either to haue bene payd already, or to appertaine vnto others, or by any true, iust, and reasonable cause alleaged, not to be due. Neither is it to be doubted, but for the greater part of the summe due vnto the Prussians, that not our lord the king, but others (which will in time be nominated) are, by all equity and iustice, to be compelled to make satisfaction.

Also, at the day and place aboue mentioned it was appointed and agreed vpon, that our lord the king and his liege subiects, for the said 4535. nobles demanded of the English in consideration of recompense to be made for injuries offered vnto the Prussians, are to discharge & pay the summe of 764. nobles, which are not as yet disbursed: but they haue reserued a petition to them, vnto whom the sayd summe is due, or if they please, there shalbe made satisfaction: which will be very hard and extreme dealing.

Item, that in the last assembly of the sayd ambassadoys of England and messengers of Prussia, holden at Hage, made as is aforesayd, for the behalfe of England, there were exhibited anew certain articles of injuries against the Prussians. The value of which losses amounted vnto the summe of 1825. nobles and three shillings.

Item

Item, on the contrary part for the behalfe of the Prussians the summe of 1355. nobles, eight shillings and six pence.

Item, forasmuch as diuers articles propounded, as well on the behalfe of England, as of Prussia, and of the cities of the Hans, both heretofore and also at the last conuention holden at Hage, were so obscure, that in regard of their obscurity, there could no resolute answer be made vnto them: and other of the sayd articles exhibited, for want of sufficient proofes, could not clearly be determined vpon: it was appointed and concluded, that all obscure articles given by by any of the foresayd parties whatsoeuer, ought before the end of Easter then next ensuing, and within one whole yeare after, to be declared before the Chancelour of England, for the time being: and other articles evidently exhibited, but not sufficiently proued, to be proued, vnder paine of perpetuall exclusion. Which being done accordingly, complete iustice shall be administered on both parts.

Item, as concerning the eleuenth article, for the behalfe of the Prussians, first exhibited, which contained losses amounting vnto the summe of 2445. nobles: as touching the first article on the behalfe of England exhibited in the land of Prussia, containing losses which amounted to the summe of 900. nobles: after many things alleadged on both parts, relation thereof shall be made in the audience of the king and of the Master generall: so that they shall set downe, or vaine, and determine such an ende and conclusion of those matters, as shall seeme most expedient vnto them.

Now concerning the Liouonians who are subiect vnto the great Master of Prussia.

IN primis, that the Master of Prussia demanded of the sayd English ambassadours, at their being in Prussia, on the behalfe of them of Liouonia, who are the sayd Master his liege people, to haue restitution of their losses, vniuersally (as he sayeth) offered vnto them by the English, namely, for the robbing and rifling of three ships. The value of which ships and of the goods contained in them, according to the computation of the Liouonian marchants, doeth amount vnto the summe of 8037. pound, 12. shillings 7. pence.

Howbeit afterward the truth being inquired by the sayd ambassadours of England, the losse of the Liouonians exceedeth not the summe of 7498. pound, 13. shillings, 10. pence halfe penny farthing.

Item, forasmuch as in the sayd ships, on the behalfe of the sayd Master, and of certaine cities of the Hans, there are alleadged about 250. men very barbarously to be drowned, of whome some were noble, and others honourable personages, and the rest common marchants & mariners, there was demanded, in the first dyet or conuention holden at Dordrecht, a recompense at the handes of the sayd English ambassadours: albeit this complaint was exhibited in the very latter end of all the negotiations, in forme of a scedule, the tenor whereof is in writing at this present, & beginneth in maner following: Cum vita hominum &c. Howbeit in the last conuention holden at Hage, as is aforesaid, it was concluded betweene the ambassadours of England, and the messengers and commissioners of the land of Prussia, and of the cities of the Hans; that our sayd soueraigne lord the king, should, of his great pietie, vouchsafe effectually to deuise some conuenient and wholesome remedie for the soules of such persons as were drowned.

Item, that our sayd soueraigne lord the king will signifie in writing his full purpose & intention as touching this matter, vnto the aldermen of the Hans marchants residing at Bruges, vpon the sixteenth day of March next following. Otherwise, that from hencefoorth all amity and friendship, betweene the realme of England and the land of Prussia shall be dissolued.

Neither is it to be doubted, but that a great part of the sayd goods, for the which they of Liouonia doe demand restitution, namely ware and furies, rebounded vnto the vse and commoditie of our soueraigne lord the king. And also our said soueraigne lord the king gaue commandement by his letters, that some of the sayd goods should be deliuered vnto others. And a great part of them is as yet reserved in the towne of Newcastle. One Benteld also hath the best of the sayd three ships in possession. Also it is reported and thought to be true, that certaine Furriers of London, which will be detected in the end, haue had a great part of the sayd goods, namely of the Furies.

Now as concerning the cities of the Hans.

IN primis the Hamburgers exhibited nine articles, wherein they demanded restitution for certaine damages offered, as they sayd, by the English men, the value of which losses amounted vnto the summe of 9117. nobles, 20. pence. For the which, after due examination, there was promised restitution to the summe of 416. nobles, 5. shillings. Besides the two articles propounded ded against the of Scardeburg, the summe wherof was 231. pounds, 15. s. 8. d. concerning the which there was sentence giuen in England by the commissioners of our lord the king, the execution wherof was promised vnto the said Hamburgers by the ambassadoys of England: leaue and licence being reserued vnto the sayd Hamburgers, of declaring or explaining certaine obscure articles by them exhibited, which declaration was to be made at the feast of Easter then next to come, or within one yeare next ensuing the said feast, vnto the chancelor of England for the time being, and of pꝛouing the sayd articles and others also, which haue not as yet sufficiently bene pꝛoued. Which being done they are to haue full complement and execution of iustice.

Also by the Hamburgers there are demaunded 445. nobles from certaine of the inhabitants of Linne in England, Which summe, if it shalbe pꝛoued to be due vnto any English men, the Hamburgers are to rest contented with those goods, which they haue already in their possessions.

Item, they of Breine propounded sixe articles, wherein the summe coueined amounteth vnto 4414. nobles. And there was no satisfaction promised vnto them. But the same libertie and licence was reserued vnto them, in like manner as before vnto the Hamburgers. Breine.

Item, they of Scraleslund propounded 23. articles, wherof the summe amounted vnto 7415. nobles, 20. d. for the which there was promised satisfaction of 253. nobles, 3. q. Also here is a caveat to be obserued: that they of Scraleslund had of English mens goods a great summe particularly to be declared, which will peraduenture suffice for a recompense. And some of their articles are concerning iniuries offered before 20, 22, 23, 24. yeress past. Also their articles are so obscure that they will neuer, or very hardly be able to declare or pꝛoue them. Howbeit there is reserued the very same libertie vnto them, that was before vnto the Hamburgers. Scraleslund.

Item, they of Lubec propounded 23. articles, the summe whereof extended vnto 8690. nobles and an halfe: whereupon it was agreed, that they should haue paid vnto them 550. nobles. There was reserued the same libertie vnto them, which was vnto the men of Scraleslund. Lubec.

Item, they of Griepswold exhibited 5. articles, the summe whereof amounted vnto 2092. nobles and an halfe. For the which there was promised satisfaction of 153. nobles and an halfe. And the said men of Griepswold haue of the goods of English men in possession, to the value of 22015. nobles, 18. s. as it is reported by them of Linne. And the same libertie is reserued vnto them that was vnto the Hamburgers. Griepswold.

Item, they of Campen propounded ten articles, the summe wherof extended vnto 1405. nobles. There is no satisfaction promised vnto them: but the same libertie is reserued vnto them, which was vnto the other aboue mentioned. Campea.

Item, the ambassadoys of England demanded of the citizens of Rostok & Wismer, for damages & iniuries by them committed against the subiects of the foresayd soueraigne king 32407. nobles, 2. s. 10. d. And albeit euery of the foresayd cities sent one of their burgomasters vnto the towne of Hage in Holland, to treat with the English ambassadoys, it was in the end found out, that they had not any authoritie of negotiating or concluding ought at al. And therfore they made their faithfull promises, that euery of the said cities should send vnto our soueraigne Lord the king one or two procurators or procuratoys sufficiently instructed to treat & conclude with our said soueraigne lord the king about the damages and iniuries aforesaid at the feast of the natiuite of Saint Iohn the Baptist.

Compositions and ordinances concluded between the messengers of Frater Conradus de Iungingen master generall of Prussia: and the chancelor and treasurer of the realme of England 1403.

In the yere of our Lord 1403, vpon the feast of S. Michael the Archangel, the right hono: Henrie bishop of Lincoln, chancelor of England, and the lord de Roos high treasurer of England, & the ambassadoys of Prussia, Iohn Godek of Danizik, & Henry Monck of Elbing, masters of the same cities haue at Westminster treated in manner of composition about the articles underwritten: between the most soueraigne lord the king of England, and the right reuerend & honorable Conradus de Iungingen Master general of Prussia, as concerning the iniuries offered vnto the people of Prussia and Liouonia vpon the sea by the English.

First, that all ships with their appurtenances, & the commodities of the mariners, according vnto the condition of the things, and all other goods taken away by the English, which are actually vndiuided & whole, are incontinently & with al speed to bee restored. And if there bee any defect in ought, the value of the said defect is to be accounted, & with other losses of goods to be restored, at the terme of the restitution to be made and deliuered.

Item, that all ships, damages, and goods (as they are contained in our bill of accusation) which are not now immediately restored, are to be restored and payd in the land of Prussia, between this and the terme appointed, with full execution and complement of iustice.

Item, concerning the persons throwen ouer boord or slaine in the sea: it shall remayne to bee determined at the will and pleasure of the most mighty prince the king of England, and of the right reuerend the Master of Prussia.

Item, betwene this and the terme appointed for the restoring of the goods taken away, & untill there be due payment & restitution of the said goods performed, the marchants of England and of Prussia are in no wise to exercise any traffique of marchandise at all in the foresaid lands.

Memorandum; that the third day of the moneth of October, in the yere of our Lord 1403. and in the fift yere of the reigne of the most mighty prince and lord, king Henrie the fourth, by the grace of God king of England and France &c. betwene the reuerend father Henrie bishop of Lincoln, chancelor, and the right honorable William lord de Roos, high treasurer of England, both of them counsellors vnto the sayd soueraigne king on the one party, and the right worshipfull Iohn Godeke, and Henrie Moneke, sent as messengers by the right reuerend and religious personage, Frater Conradus de Iungingen Master generall of the Dutch knights of the Order of S. Mary on the other party: it was, at the request and instancie of the sayd messengers, appoynted, and mutually agreed vpon, that all the liege people and subiects of the sayd soueraigne lord and king shall haue free licence and liberty untill the feast of Easter next ensuing, safely to trauel vnto the land of Prussia aforesayd, there to remaine, and thence, with their ships, marchandises, & other their goods whatsoeuer, to returne vnto their owne home: which on the other side, all the subiects of the sayd Master general may, within the terme prefixed, likewise doe, in the foresaid realme of England. Provided alwaies, that after the time aboue limited, neither the sayd marchants of the realme of England may in the land of Prussia, nor the marchants of that land, in the realme of England, exercise any traffique at all: vnles it be otherwise ordained by some composition, betwene the foresaid king of England, & the said Master general in the meane time concluded. In witnesse whereof, one part of this present Indenture is to remaine in the custodie of the foresaid messengers. Given in the Chapter-house of the Church of S. Paul at London, the day and yere aboue written.

The letters of the chancelor and treasurer of England, vnto Frater Conradus de Iungingen, master generall of Prussia 1403.

Right reuerend and mighty lord, your honorable messengers Iohn Godeke, and Henry Moneke, the bearers hereof comming of late befoze the presence of our most soueraigne lord the king of England and of France, and being welcomed by our said lord with a chearefull and fauorable countenance, they presented certaine letters on your behalfe vnto the kings Maiestie, with that reuerence which becomed them: expounding vnto his highnes, sundry piracies & molestacions offered of late vpon the sea, by his liege people & subiects vnto yours, contrary to the leagues of peace and amitie, which hitherto (by Gods grace) haue bene maintained and continued on both parts. In consideration of which piracies and molestacions, your messengers demanded full restitution and recompense to be made, either vnto the dammished parties, or vnto their procurators. We therefore at that time, especially being in the presence of our soueraigne (who with his puissant army tooke his progresse towards the remote part of Wales being subiect vnto his dominion, to see iustice executed vpon his people of those parts, who very rashly haue presumed to rebell against him their soueraigne, contrary to their allegiance) right well perceived that it was his highnesse intencion, that euery one should haue due iustice faithfully administrated vnto him, especially your subiects, and that with all fauour, whom he hath alwayes in times past right graciously intreated, as if they had bene his owne liege subiects and native countrey men, whome also hee purposed hereafter friendly to protect: insomuch that betwene him and his subiects on the one party, and betwene you and yours on the other party, great abundance and perfection of mutuall amitie may increase. And therefore we offered vnto your foresayd messengers, after they had particularly declared vnto vs such piracies and wrongs, to sende the kings letters vnto them of whom complaint was made, firmly intypning them, vnder grievous penalties, that without delay they restore or cause to be restored vnto the parties dammished, or vnto their procurators, all ships, marchandises, wares, and goods, by them taken or violently stolne from your subiects. And that your said messengers may partly attaine their desire, we haue commaunded certaine ships, marchandises, wares, and goods, found in certaine hauens, to be deliuered vnto them. Howbeit, as touching other goods, which are perhaps perished or wanting by infortunate dissipation or destruction, and for the which the said messengers of yours demand satisfaction to be made vnto them within a certain time by vs limited: may it please your hono^r to vnderstand, that that in the absence of our sayd soueraigne lord the king, being as yett so distant from vs, wee can in no wise limit or set downe any such terme of time. Notwithstanding, at the prosperous returne of our soueraigne, we are determined to commune with him about this matter. Of whose answer so soone as we be certified, we purpose to signifie his intention vnto you by our letters. Sithens also (right reuerend and mighty lord) your sayd messengers are contented, for the present, to accept of our offer: aforesayde, as indeede by all reason they ought thereat to rest content, especially whereas by this meanes they shall the more speedily attaine vnto the effect of their purposes (to the shorthe and wished execution and performance of which offer, we will, by Gods helpe, endeavour, to the utmost of our ability) may it be your will and pleasure, that as in the kingdome of England, your marchants and subiects are courteously intreated: euen so the marchants and liege people of our soueraigne lord the king and of his kingdome, peaceably frequenting your parts, either in regard of traffique or of any other iust occasion, may there in like manner friendly be vsed, and with your marchants and subiects suffered to communicate; and to haue intercourse of traffique, inioyng the commodities of the ancient league. By this also the seruent zeale and affection which you beare vnto the royall crowne of England, shall vnboubtedly appeare: albeit betwene the famous houses of England and of Prussia, the bandes of vnfained loue and friendship haue bin successiuelly confirmed and kept inuolable in times past. And thus (right reuerend and mighty lord) wishing vnto you increase of honour and prosperitie, wee take our leaues. Written at London the fift of October, in the yeare of our lord 1403.

By the chancelor, the treasurer, and other lords of the hono:
counsell of the king of England and France, being personally present at London.

The letters of king Henry the 4. vnto Conradus de Jungingen the master general of Prussia, for mutual conuersation and intercourse of traffique to continue between the marchants of England and of Prussia, for a certaine terme of time,

Emy by the grace of God, king of England & France, and lord of Ireland, to the noble and mighty personage of sacred religion, Frater Conradus de Jungingen Master general of the Order of the Dutch knights of S. Marie &c. our most deare and wellbeloued friend, greeting, and continuall increase of our ancient and sincere amity. By the grieuous complaynts of our liege subiects concerning traffique, as it were circularwise too & fro both our dominions, we haue often bene aduerised that in regard of diuers iniuries and damages, which as well our as your marchants (who by their dealings in marchandise were wont peaceably to vse mutual conuersation together, whereupon very many commodities are known to haue proceeded) haue, by occasion of pirates, rousing by and do wne the sea, sometimes heretofore sustained: both the sayd marchants of our & of your dominions do abstaine themselves fro their wonted mutual conuersation & traffique, as they haue likewise carefully abstained at sometimes heretofore, and especially from that time, where'in at the instant request of your messengers, being of late before our presence, the free access of our marchants vnto your territories and dominions, & of your marchants vnto our realmes hath bene forbidden. Sithens therefore (our most deare friend) such iniuries (if any) as haue bene attempted against your subiects, were neuer committed by our will and consent, as we thinke that your selfe on the other side haue done the like: sithens also, so much as in vs lieth, wee are ready to exhibit full iustice with fauour vnto any of your people being desirous to make complaint, so that accordingly iustice may equally be done vnto our marchants by you & your subiects, which marchants haue in like sort bene iniured, wishing with all our heart, that the ancient friendship & loue, which hath continued a long time between our realme and your territories and dominions, may perseuere in time to come, and that sweet and acceptable peace, which is to be embraced of al Christians, may according to the good pleasure of the author of peace, be nourished & maintained: we do most heartily require the sayd friendship, exhorting you in the Lord that you would on your behalf consent & obtaine (euen as, if you shall so do, we for our part will consent likewise) that from this present vntil the feast of Easter next ensuing (al molestations & iniuries which may be offered ceasing on both parts) our subiects by your territories & dominions, & your subiects by our realmes, may peaceably & securely trauele, & that according to their wonted manner, they may friendly conuerse & exercise mutual traffick together: because we are determined to send vnto you & your counsel in the mean time some of our ambassadozs, friendly to intercede about the foresaid pretended iniuries, so far forth as they shall concerne our subiects, At whose arriual we stand in good hope that by the due administration of iustice on both parts, such order (by Gods assistance) shalbe taken, that mutual peace and tranquillity may be established between vs in times to come. Also our desire is in particular, that our marchants & liege subiects may haue more free passage granted them vnto the parts of Sconia, for the prouiding of herrings and of other fishes there; that they may there remaine, and from thence also may more securely returne vnto their owne home: and we beseech you in consideration of our owne selues, that you would haue our marchants and liege subiects especially recommended vnto you, safely protecting them (if need shall require) vnder the shadow of your defence: euen as you would haue vs to deale in the like case with your owne subiects. Moreover, whatsoeuer you shall thinke good to put in practice in this behalfe, may it please you of your friendship, by our faithfull subiect Iohn Browne the bearer hereof to giue vs to vnderstand. In the sonne of the glorious virginie fare ye well, with continuall prosperity and felicity according to your owne hearts desire. Given vnder our priuie seale, at our palace of Westminster, the fift day of Iune, and in the fift yere of our reigne.

Postscriptum.

Right reuerend and our most deare friend: albeit our welbeloued Arnold de Dassele the procurator of your foresaid messengers, being desirous at this time to make his final returne vnto your parts, by reason of the affayres, for which he hath remained in our realme of England, cannot as yet obtaine his wished expedition: notwithstanding you of your sincere affection ought not to maruel or any whit to be grieved thereat: because troubles of wars arising, which in some sort concerned our selues, and especially in regard of the continuall assaults of the French men & Britons against vs and our kingdome, for the offence of whom, and our owne defence, our liege subiects (especially they, of whom your subiects dammified haue made their complaints) haue armed themselves to combat vpon the sea: we could not grant vnto the foresayd Arnold such and so speedy an expedition, as he earnestly desired to haue. Vnto the which Arnold your procurator we haue offered in as short time as may be, to administer complete iustice with fauour, to the end that for this cause he might dispose himselfe to remaine in our realme of England: & yet not withstanding wee would do the very same euen in the absence of the sayd procurator, Given as aboue.

To the most renowned prince and mighty Lord, Henrie king of England &c. our gracious Lord.

Our humble recommendations, with our most instant and continuall prayers for you being graciously by your Maiestie taken in good part &c. Most soueraigne king, mighty prince, gracious lord, and vnto vs most vnfaignedly beloued, we receiued of late your gracious letters by your Maiesties liege subiect Iohn Brown, the contents wherof seemed to be these following: first that of long time heretofore, there haue bene between the marchants of your realm & of our lands, not only quiet & peaceable access one vnto another, but also mutual participation, & common traffique of their wares, being right commodious & auailable for them both: howbeit, that now the foresaid profitable conuersation, by reason of certain notozious robberies, committed vpon the sea by pyrates against both parts, & the wonted access also of your subiects vnto our dominions, were altogether forbidden. Moreover, you call to remembrance the ancient amity & friendship betweene both our lands, with the inualluable commodity of sweet amiable peace, which are by all faithfull Christians, to the utmost of their endeuour to be embraced. Whereupon you of your exceeding clemency, do offer your Maiesties full consent, that the foresaid prohibition being released vntil the feast of Easter next ensuing, the said marchants of your dominions may in our territories, and our marchants likewise may in your realms (al molestations ceasing) exercise their wonted traffique: especially stithens in the mean season your royall wisdom hath determined to direct vnto vs your hono: ambassadoys in friendly sort to treat and parle with vs as touching the pretended iniuries, so far forth as they may concerne your subiects. Adding moreover in particular that when your people shall repaie vnto the parts of Sconia to fish for herrings, hauing consideration & regard vnto your maiestie, we would haue them especially recommended vnto our protection &c. Most soueraigne lord & king, & gracious prince, wee doe with vnfaigned and hearty affection embrace the oracles of your maiesties most courteous & acceptable offer: wherein you haue vned most diligent & effectually persuasions, that complement of iustice should be done vnto the parties iniuried, & that peace & friendship should take place, making no doubt of your own royall person, nor of our selues or of any apertaining vnto vs, but that our inclinations and desires in this regarde are all one and the same: neither would we lightly transgresse the limits of your persuasions without some iust, weighty, & reaso-reasonable caule, forasmuch as the matters perswaded are in very deepe most happy preferuatiues of a common weale, yea & of nature it selfe. Whereouer whereas your highnes hath rather requested vs, that the prohibition of your subiects accesse vnto our dominions might, vntill the feast of Easter next ensuing, be released: we answered (vnder correction of your maiesties more deliberate counsell) that it is farre more expedient for both parts to haue the sayd prohibition continued then released, vntill such time as satisfaction be performed on both sides vnto the parties endamaged, not in wordes only, but actually & really in deedes, or by some course of law or friendly composition, if there is no equal no indifferent kinde of consozt or trade between the impouerished party and him that is enriched, betwene the partie which hath obtayned iustice and him that hath obtayned none between the offender and the party offended: because they are not moued with like affecti- ons. For the remembrance of iniuries easily stirreth by inconsiderate motions of anger. Also, such a kinde of temperance or permission, as it were, by way of contrariety breedeth more bitterness then sweetnes, more hate then loue: whereupon more grieuous complaints aswel vnto your highnes as vnto our selues, might be occasioned. The lord knoweth, that euen now we are too much wearied and disquieted with the importunate and instant complaints of our subiects, insonmuch that wee cannot at this present by any conuenient meanes release or dissolue the sayd prohibition, before wee be sufficiently informed by your maiesties ambassadozs, of the satisfaction of our endamaged subiects. Ifurthermore, wheres your maiesties request, concerning your subiects that shal come vnto the parts of Sconia, is that we would defend them vnder our protection: be it known vnto your highnes, that for diuers considerations vs reasonably mouing, being prouoked by the queene of Denmarke and her people, being also vged thereunto full soze against our wils, for the repel- ling and auoiding of iniuries, we haue sent forth our armie against them. Howbeit for a certaine time a truce is concluded on both parts, so that our people are actually returned home. Farre be it from vs also, that our subiects being occupied in wares, should in any sort willingly molest or reproch any strangers, of what landes or nations soeuer, not being our professed enemies. For this should be to oppresse the innocent in stead of the guilty, to condemne the iust for the vni- iust: then which nothing can be more cruel, nor a reuenge of greater impietie. In very deepe (most gracious prince and lord) we are moued with right hearty sympathy and compassion for any inconuenience which might happen in your regiment: wishing from the bottome of our hearts, that all affayres may right prosperously and happily succcede, about the royall person and regiment of your most excellent Maieste, and that continually. The like whereof wee hope from you: most humbly commending our selues, and our whole Order vnto your highnes. Given at our castle of Marienburgh, the 16. day the moneth of July, in the yere of our Lord 1404.

Margaret queen of Denmarke.

An agreement made betweene king Henry the fourth and Conradus de Iungingen Master generall of the land of Prussia.

This Indenture made between Sir William Esturmy knight, Iohn King- ton clerke, and William Brampton citizen of London the ambassadozs, com- missioners, & messengers of the most mighty prince and lord, our souereigne lord Henrie by the grace of God king of England and France, and lord of Ireland, for the repaying, reformation, and amends of whatsoeuer damages, grieuances, excesses, violences, and iniuries in any sort vniustly attempted, done, or offered, by our sayd soueraigne lord the king and his liege people and subiects, vnto the great and mighty lord Conradus de Iungingen Master general of the order of the Dutch knights of S. Maries hospitall of Ierusalem, or his subiects: and for the requiring, de- manding, and receiuing of such like reparations, reformations & amends, by the foresayd lord the Master general, for the behalfe of himselfe or any of his subiects whatsoeuer, from & in the name of our soueraigne lord the king & his subiects, vnto the sayd Master general, into his land of Prussia, by our souereigne lord the king, & appointed as ambassadozs on the one party: And betweene the hono: Lords and religious personages Conradus de Lichtenstein great commander, Warnherus de Terringen chiefe hospitalary & commander in Elbing, & Arnold de Hacken treasurer, the pro- curatozs & commissioners of the great & mighty lord the Master general, being in like & equal sort and in all respects, as the ambassadozs of England are, authorized on the contrary side by the au- thoritie and power of the sayd Master general on the other part, witnesseth: That diuers treaties & conferences being holden between the said ambassadozs, messengers, & procuratozs or commis- sioners of & concerning the reparations, reformations & amends of certaine damages, grieuances, excesses, violences & iniuries offered and attempted, aswel by the Prussians against the English as by the English against the Prussians, and of other actes vniuilly committed on both parts: in conclusion, after the sayd treatise, the foresayd ambassadours, procuratoys and commissioners by vertue of the authorizy committed vnto them appoynted, and with one consent agreed vnto the articles vnder writtten.

Inprimis, that for the consideration of mutuall loue and woonted friendship, and of pceace and tranquillity hereafter to be continued and mainained, and also that the articles vnderwritten may more prosperously be brought vnto a wished effect, betwene our said soueraign lord the king & his liege people & subiects, & the subiects, people, & inhabitants of the territories and dominions of the foresayd lord the Haster generall, it is agreed and concluded, that all liege marchants of England whatsoeuer, shall haue free licence and libertie to arriue with their shippes, goods and marchandises whatsoeuer, at any Porte of the land of Prussia, and also the sayd goods and marchandises farther vnto any place of the sayd land of Prussia to transport, and there with any person or persons freely to contract and bargaine, euen as heretofore, and from auncient times it hath bene accustomed. Which liberty in all respects is granted vnto the Prussians in England.

Item it is farther agreed betweene the sayd ambassadours, procuratoys, and commissioners, that whereas of late, namely in the yeare of our lord 1403, the sayd Haster generall by his discreet subiects Iohn Godek of Dantzik, and Henry Monek of Elbing, his ambassadoys & messengers, for this purpose hath caused certain articles, (namely 20. in number) containing in them matters of damages, molestations, violences, and iniuries committed and offered against the said Haster generall & his subiects, by our sayd soueraigne lord the king his subiects & liege people, to be exhibited, giuen by and deliuered vnto our lord the king aforesaid in his kingdome of England: it is concluded and agreed about the sayd 20. articles, by the aforesaid ambassadoys, commissioners, and procuratoys, as in the acts & pleas had and made befoze the sayd ambassadoys, commissioners and procuratoys, and in the recozds made and writtten of and about the examination of such articles, it is more at large contayned (vnto the which the sayd ambassadoys, commissioners, and messengers doe here in this place referre themselves) of the which articles also some are receiued by the commissioners aforesayd, and others are propoged vnto a certaine time vnder writtten, euen as in the foresayd registers it is more fully contayned and put downe in writting.

As touching certaine other articles also exhibited a newe vnto the sayd English ambassadoys, in the land of Prussia being 16 in number (whereof one is admitted, & the rest are propoged vntil a terme vnderwritten) the same course is to be taken and obserued, which was befoze appoynted and agreed vpon, about the articles deliuered and exhibited vnto our foresayd soueraigne lord the king, as is aforesayd.

Moreouer, as touching the articles exhibited by the English ambassadours in the name and behalfe of their sayd soueraigne lord the king of England, vnto the procuratours and commissioners of the foresayd lord the Haster generall (of the which some are declared already, and the declaration of the rest is propoged vntill a certayne terme vndernamed, euen as in the registers made of and vpon the examination of the sayd articles, it is more manifestly prouided) the same course is to be taken, which must be obserued about the articles of the sayd lord the Haster generall, exhibited, as well vnto the foresayd soueraigne prince in England, as vnto his ambassadoys in the land of Prussia, euen as about the sayd articles it is befoze concluded.

The complaints of the Liouonians

And whereas on the behalfe of the citizens and marchants of the cities of Rij and Dorp, and of other townes in the land of Liouonia, many and great complaints haue bene by way of articles exhibited and deliuered vnto the sayd English ambassadours in the land of Prussia, which for diuers causes, could not as then be ended: therefore it is concluded and agreed vpon betwene the ambassadours, and the commissioners aforesayd, that the saide citizens and marchants may in the towne of Dordract in Holland, vpon the first day of the moneth of May next ensuiing (at the which time and place, the continuation and propogation of all other articles not fully declared in the partes of Prussia, shall be put in vze) by themselves or their lawfull procuratoys, make their appearance, for the obtayning of a conuincient, iust, and reasonable reformation of all iniuries attempted against them, then, or at some other times within one whole yere next following, and not afterward, being effectually set downe and limited, at the place aforesaid, by the consent of the ambassadours and commissioners of either parte, all lawfull impediments ceasing.

Provided alwayes, that the value and price of all wares, goods, and marchandises, whereof the said citizens and marchants of Liouonia, in their articles receiued by the sayde English ambassadours, as is aforesayd, doe make mention, shall be iustly esteemed, prized, and approued, not by any of England, or of Prussia, or of Liouonia, but by some other indifferent marchants of good credite, valuing them at the true rate of marchants, which such like marchandise would haue haue amounted vnto, if, at the time when they were taken, they had bene to be solde at the town of Bruges in Flanders,

Forasmuch also, as diuers and sundry Prussians (who exhibited manifeſt Articles of complaints, being receiued by the ſaid English Ambaſſadours, at their abode in Prussia) made not their perſonall appearance, before the ſaide English Ambaſſadours, in the lande of Prussia afozeſaide: The prorogation aboue-mentioned was made vnto the firſt day of the moneth of May: and also it was agreed vpon by the ſaide Ambaſſadours, Procuratoꝝ, and Commiſſioners, that the ſaide parties which had not appeared before ſhall haue libertie graunted them, lawfully to make their appearance, vpon the firſt of May afozeſaide, at the towne of Dordrecht, either by themſelues oꝝ by their Procuratoꝝ, and also to bring with them the letters testimonial, and patents, sealed with the ſeale of the ſaide Lord the Maſter generall, (behauiing firſt of all receiued ſound and ſufficient information from the cities whereof the parties plaintife are citizens, of the damages and grieuances any way vniuſtly inflicted vpon them oꝝ any of them by the English) to the end that they may there by articles conueniently declare and proue, before the Ambaſſadours, Procuratoꝝ, meſſengers, and Commiſſioners of both parties, the rate and value of their ſaide goods: and that in ſo doing they may obtaine conuenient, iuſt, and reaſonable reſtitution, for all acts vniuſtly attempted againſt them, then, oꝝ at ſome other times effectually to bee ſet downe and limited at the ſoꝛelaid place by the conſent of the Ambaſſadoꝝ and Commiſſioners of both parts, euen as it was aboue promiſed vnto the marchants of Liouonia,

But if they of Prussia laſt aboue-mentioned, ſhall not vpon the firſt of May, and at the place appointed, for ſome cauſe, make their appearance, that then it ſhalbe lawfull for them, at anytime within one whole yeere next following, to repaire vnto the lord Chancellor of England, at the citie of London, and to inſinuate and declare vnto him their complaints before exhibited vnto the ſaide English Ambaſſadours in the land of Prussia, oꝝ which complaints ſhould haue bene deliuered at the ſoꝛelaid terme and place, oꝝ els, the which were not then and there fully finiſhed and diſpatched: and also by articles as is afozeſaide, to declare and proue the true worth and eſtimation of all damages and grieuances any wayes vniuſtly offered by the English vnto them oꝝ any of them: to the end that they may (as it is aboue mentioned) effectually receiue, and also ſpeedily and eaſily obtaine conuenient, iuſt, and reaſonable reſormation and ſatiſfaction, for al acts vniuſtly attempted againſt them, which are contained in the complaints not as yet fully declared and finiſhed.

Moreouer, it is appointed and agreed vpon betwene the ſoꝛelaid Ambaſſadours and Commiſſioners: that the ſoꝛenamed ſouereign Lord & the ſaid Lord the Maſter generall are to ſend and ſet forwarde their Ambaſſadours, meſſengers, and Commiſſioners, vpon the firſt of May vnto the place appointed, to treat, parle, agree, and conclude about thoſe affaires, which ſhal then and there happen to be treated of and handled among them.

Furthermore, betwene the often mentioned Ambaſſadours, Procuratoꝝ, and Commiſſioners, it is enacted and concluded: that vnto all and ſingular lawfull ſtatutes, ordinations, and prohibitions framed, made, and ordained, by the ſaide lord the Maſter generall, in his land of Prussia, oꝝ by his Proconſuls and Conſuls, and his gouernours of cities, townes, villages, and of other places in the land of Prussia, vnto the obſeruation whereof, alwell the ſubiectes of the ſaid Maſter generall, as ſoꝛeniers and ſtrangers, are tyed and bound: vnto the very ſame ſtatutes, ordinations, and prohibitions, al English marchants whatſoeuer reſorting vnto the land of Prussia, muſt be ſtrictly bounden and ſubiect.

Also it is ordained, that whatſoeuer ſale-clothes are already tranſported, oꝝ at any time hereafter to bee tranſported out of England into Prussia by the English marchants, and ſhall there be offered to bee ſolde, whether they be whole cloathes oꝝ halfe cloathes, they muſt containe both their endes,

Laſtly, that the matters aboue-mentioned ſhall not ſhort and boyde of their wiſhed effect; the treaty and conference about all and ſingular damages and grieuances (whereof there is not as yet done, but there muſt be, by the vertue of theſe preſents, perſormed, a reſormation and amendment) muſt be continued and prologed untill the firſt of May next enſuing: as by theſe preſents they are continued and prologed with the continuation of the dayes then immediately following, at the towne of Dordrecht afozeſaide: at the which time and place, oꝝ at other times and places, in the meane ſpace, as occaſion ſhall ſerue, by both parties to be limited and aſſigned, oꝝ elſe within one yeere after the ſaid firſt day of the moneth of May next enſuing bee expired: the hurt and damaged parties generally befoze-mentioned, ſhall haue perſormed vnto them a conuenient, iuſt, and reaſonable reſormation on both parties. Provided alwayes, if within the terme of the ſaide yeere, ſome conuenient, iuſt, and reaſonable reſormation bee not perſormed vnto the parties parties iniuried, and endamaged, which are generally above mentioned: that then, within three whole moneths after the foresaid yeere shall expired, the Prussians shall depart out of the realmes and dominions of the saide Soueraigne Lorde the king of England, together with their marchandize, and with other goods which they shall have gotten or bought, within the space of the foresaid three moneths: and that the Englishmen also are likewise in all respects bounden to avoid and (no lawfull impediment hindering them) to withdrawe themselves and to depart out of the territories and dominions of the saide Master generall, without all molestation, perturbation, and impediment whatsoever, none other intimation or admonition being necessarie in this regard.

Howbeit least that by the robberies and piracies of some insolent and peruerse people, matter should be ministred unto the said lord the Master generall, of swaruing from the faithfully obseruation of the foresaid agreements, or (which God forbid) any occasion bee given him of not observing them: it is also decreed by the often above mentioned Ambassadors and messengers, that if the goods and marchandize of any of the saide lord the Master generall his subiectes whatsoever shall be from henceforth vnjustly taken vpon the Sea, by any English Pirates, and shall be caried into the realme of England, and there receiued, that the Governours and keepers of portes, and of other places (with whatsoever names they be called) at the which portes and places such marchandises and goods shall chaunce to arriue, being onely informed of the saide goods and marchandises, by sole report, or (other proofes wanting) by probable suspition are bound to arrest and to keep them in safe custodie, fauourably to be restored vnto the owners thereof, whensoever they shall be lawfully demanded: which if they shall omit or deny to performe, from thenceforth the saide governours and keepers are bound to make vnto the parties endamaged, a recompense of their losses.

And for fault of iustice to be executed, by the said governours and keepers, our soueraign lord the king above named, after he shall conveniently be requested by the parties dammified, is bound within three moneths next ensuing (all lawfull impediments being excepted) to make correspond, iust, and reasonable satisfaction, vnto the saide parties endamaged. Otherwise, that it shall be right lawfull for the saide lord the Master generall, to arrest, and after the arrest to keepe in safe custodie the goods of the English marchants being in the land of Prussia, to the redigence satisfaction of such iniuries, as haue bene offered vnto his subiects, vntill his said subiects be iustly and reasonably contented.

Likewise also in all respects, the same iustice is to be done vnto the English by the said Lord the Master generall and his subiects in Prussia, euen as it hath bene enacted and decreed in the above writtten clause, beginning, Ceterum ne per &c. In English, Howbeit least that &c. for the said Master generall, and his subiects by the foresaid ambassadors of England, and the commissioners of the said lord the Master generall, that in like cases iustice ought to be administred on the behalfe of himselfe, and of his subiects in the realme of England.

And that all and singular the covenants above writtten, may in time to come, by the parties whom they concerne, firmly and inuiolably be obserued; the forenamed ambassadors, messengers, and commissioners, all and euery of them, for the full credite, probation, and testimonie of all the premisses, haue vnto these present Indentures, made for the same purpose, caused euery one of their seales with their owne hands to be put. One part of the which indentures remaineth in the custodie of the English ambassadors, and the other part in the hands of the commissioners of Prussia. Given at the castle of Marienburgh in Prussia, in the yeere of our Lorde 1405, vpon the 8. day of the moneth of October.

An agreement made betweene King Henrie the fourth and the common socerie of the Marchants of the Hans.

This Indenture made betweene the honourable Sir William Esturmy knight, and Iohn Kingdon clearke, procurators, messengers, and commissioners sufficiently deputed and authorized by the most mighty Prince, Lord Henry, by the grace of God king of England, & France, and lord of Ireland, for the perforamation of þ things vnder writtten, on the one part: & the hon. personages H. Henry Vredeland, R. Riman Salum chief notaries, Thederic Knesuolt secretary, S. Simó Clouesten chief notary, and Iohn Zotebotter citizen, being sufficiently made and ordained procurators and messengers, on the behalfe of the cities of Lubec, Bremen, Hamburg, Sund, and Griepswold, for the demanding & obtaining severally, of due reformation, and recompense at the hands of our saide souereigne lord the king, and of his messengers and commissioners aforesayde, for all iniuries, damages, grieuances, and manslaughteres, any wayes vniuſly done, and offered ſeueraſly by the liege people and ſubiectes of our ſoueraigne lord the king, vnto the common ſocietie of the marchants of the Hans, and vnto any of the Citizens, people and inhabitants of the cities aforeſaide whatſoeuer on the other part, Wiſneſſeth: That betweene all and euery of the ſaide Procuratozs, meſſengers, and Commiſſioners, by vertue of the authoritie committed vnto them, it hath bene and is appointed, concluded, and decreed: that the liege marchants and ſubiectes of our ſaid ſoueraigne lord the king, and the marchants of the common ſocietie of the Dutch Hans aforeſaide, from henceforth for one whole yeere and ſeuene moneths immediately next enſuing and following, ſhall be permitted and licenced friendly, freely, and ſecurely, to exercise mutual traffike, and like marchants to buy & ſell together, one of, and vnto another, euen as in times paſt, namely, in the yeere 1400. and before that time alſo, they haue bin accustomed to exercise mutual traffike and marchandize, and to buy and ſell.

Alſo the ſaide William and Iohn agreed and conſented, that they themſelues, or ſome other perhaps to be appointed in this behalfe by their ſaide lord the king in their ſtead, ſhall vpon the firſt day of the moneth of May next to come, with the continuation of the dayes following, at the towne of Dordraet in Holland, or vpon any other terme or termes, then perhaps to be limited, competently ſatiſſie; and perſonne conuenient recompence vnto the ſaide common ſocietie, citizens, people, and inhabitants of the cities aforeſaide, and alſo of other cities, townes, and villages of the Hans, of and for all iniuries, damages, grieuances, and downings, or manslaughteres done and committed, as they all eage, againſt them, deliuered and exhibited in written articles, vnto the aboue named William and Iohn, or els heereafter to be deliuered and exhibited, either by the ſame procuratozs or by ſome others, which ſhall perhaps be authorized in their ſtead, or by the meſſengers procuratozs and commiſſioners of other cities, townes, and places of the Hans, in equall and like maner and ſoyne, euen as at the ſaide terme limited, or then perhaps to be propoſed, there is appointed by the ſaid William and Iohn, reparation, reformation, and recompence vnto the inhabitants of Prussia, and Liuania, for the iniuries, damages, and grieuances vniuſly done and committed againſt them by the liege people and ſubiectes of the ſaide ſoueraigne lord the king, in the preſence of the mightie lord the Maſter general of Prussia, in his land of Prussia, as in certain letters indented, bearing date in the caſtle of Marienburgh in Prussia the eight day of the moneth of October, in the yeere of our lord 1405. and being made and written about the reparation, reformation, and recompence of ſuch like iniuries &c. (the tenour whereof ought here to be vnderſtood as if it were inſerted) it is moze maniſeſtly contained.

It was furthermore promiſed by the ſaid William and Iohn, that they ſhould not inforce nor compell the citizens, people, or inhabitants of the common ſociety of the Hans, or of the aboue named cities, or of any other cities of the Hans aforeſaid (hauing receiued ſufficient information of their dwelling and place of abode) to moze difficult or diſtinct proofes of their Articles of complaints already exhibited, and in the aforeſaide termes to come, to be exhibited, then vnto the inhabitants of the lands of Prussia and Liuania, according to the ſoyne of the Indentures aboue mentioned.

Moreouer the ſaide William and Iohn doe promiſe, that ſo ſoone as they ſhall come into the kingdome of England, and before the preſence of their king, they ſhall prouide, that all and ſingular the priuiledges granted vnto the marchants of the ſaide Hans by the renowned kings of England, and confirmed by the ſaid Soueraigne lord the king that now is, muſt, according to al their contents, be inuiolably obſerued by the ſaid ſoueraigne king and his ſubiectes: and alſo, that from henceforth nothing is vniuſly to be attempted, vpon any occaſion, pretenſe, or colour, by the ſaide Soueraigne Prince, and the inhabitants of the realme of England, to the preiudice of the ſaide priuiledges. They ſhall prouide alſo, that all things heretofore attempted and practiſed againſt the ſaide priuiledges, ſhall, by reaſonable amendement and iuſt reformation, vterly be aboliſhed.

But if after the date of theſe preſents (which God forſend) within the ſpace of the ſaid one yeere and ſeuene moneths preſcribed any damages, iniuries or grieuances, in ſhips, goods, or perſons, ſhould, either by the Engliſh and the inhabitants of England be vniuſly inflicted vpon the cities, and marchants of the cities, townes, and places of the Hans aforeſaid, or by any marchants or others of the cities or townes of the ſaide Hans, either vnto the Engliſh, or vnto any of the inhabitants of that Realme, vpon any ſained pretenſe whatſoeuer, all and ſingular the aforeſaid meſſengers, commiſſioners, ambalſadours, and procuratozs haue promiſed, that all ſuch damages, iniuries and moleſtations ſo inflicted by them who ſhall offer and commit them, muſt be reformed and amended, after the very ſame ſoyne and maner, that in the like caſe reformation, reparation and amends of iniuries, damages, and moleſtations committed by the Engliſh againſt them of

Prussia

Prussia is to be performed, according unto a certaine clause contained in the letters above mentioned, which beginneth: Ceterum ne per &c. In English: Howbeit least that &c. continuing unto that clause: Et ut præscripta omnia &c. In English: And that all the covenants above written &c.

It was also concluded betweene the foresaide messengers, commissioners, and procurators, and with one generall consent agreed vpon, that if from the first day of the month of May next to come, within one whole yeere following, some convenient, iust, and reasonable reformation be not performed unto the parties injured and dammished generally above mentioned, in regard of their damages, molestations, and iniuries: then, within thre moneths after the saide yeere be expired, the marchants of the Hans cities aforesaid are bound, without any molestation, perturbation, and impediment whatsoever (none other intimation or admonition being necessarie in this behalfe) to auoide (and if no lawfull impediment shall hinder them) to abstaine and depart from the Realmes and dominions of the said Soueraigne king of England, with their marchandise and other goods bought or gotten within the space of the saide thre moneths: and also the English likewise in all respects shall auoide, abstaine, and depart from the territories and dominions of the Hans cities aforesaid.

Also it was promised by the saide William and Iohn, that at the terme appointed, namely by the first of May next following, or at some other terme or termes then limited or to be limited, there must be made a due recompense, and a proportionall satisfaction, for all those persons of the land of Prussia, Liouonia, and of the cities, townes, and other places of the Hans, who haue vniuersally bene drowned, and slaine by the English: and that according to the tenour of a certain schedule written concerning a recompense to be had in regarde of the saide persons drowned and slaine, and presented unto them by Albertus Rode consul of the citie of Thoren, and by the foresaid procurators and messengers of the cities aforesaid, they must faithfully and effectually, to the utmost of their abilitie endeavour, for the obtaining of the saide recompense and amends. In witness whereof (these letters of Indenture remaining in the possession of the saide William and Iohn the messengers, procurators, & commissioners of England aforesaid, and left in their custody, by the above named procurators and messengers Henrie Rimarus, Thedericus, Simon, and Iohn Sorebortter, of their certaine knowledge and assurance) and for the full confirmation and testimonie of all the premises, the foresaid procurators and messengers haue put to their seales. Given in the towne of Dordrecht the 15. day of December in the yere of our Lord 1405.

William Esturmy knight, and Iohn Kingdon canon of Lincolne (being in this behalfe sufficiently authorized and deputed as Ambassadors, procurators, messengers and commissioners, by our said soueraigne lord the king, namely in regard of the molestations, iniuries and damages vniuersally done and committed against the liege people and subiectes of the foresaide most excellent Prince and lord, Lord Henry by the grace of God king of England & France, and Lord of Ireland, by the communalities of the cities of Wismer and Rostok vnderwritten, their common counsel being assembled for the same purpose, & authorized also, and as well closely as expressly maintained and ratified, by the whole companie of the common society of the marchants of the Dutch Hansdoe, in this present diet at the towne of Hage situate in the countrey of Holland, being appointed for the very same occasion, demand of you Syr Iohn de Aa knight, and Hermannus Meyer deputies for the cities of Wismer and Rostok, and sufficiently ordeined by authority requisite in this behalfe, to be the procurators and messengers of the said cities, that convenient, iust, and reasonable satisfaction and recompense may certainly and effectually be done unto the injured and endamaged parties, who are specified in the articles vnder written,

Moreover they tooke and imprisoned certaine English men, which were in the said ship, namely William Fubborne seruant vnto Iohn Diere, Thomas Merri seruant vnto Robert Wight, which Thomas paid for his ransom 20. nobles of English money, William Munde marchant of the towne aforesaide, which William, by reason of the extremity of that imprisonment, lost the sight of his eyes, and Thomas Cornwaile, marchant of the foresaide towne, which Thomas paid for his ransom twentie nobles.

Item, in the yeere of our Loyde 1394. certaine malefactozs of Wismer and Rostok, by- Yermouth.
on the coastes of Denmarke and Norway, beneath Seawe, and at Anold, tooke Thomas Adams and Iohn Walters marchants of Yermouth: and Robert Caumbrigge and Reginald Leman marchants of Norwich, in a certaine shippe of Elbing in Prussia (wherof one Clays Goldesmith was master) with diuers woollen clothes of the saide Thomas, Iohn, Robert, and Reginald, to the value of one thousande markes English, and carried the persons and Norwich.

Selaw in Norway.

Item, in the yeere of our Lozde 1405. certaine malefactorz of Wismer wickedly and vniustly tooke, in a certaine port of Norway called Selaw, a ship of Yarmouth (the owner whereof was William Oxney and the master Thomas Smith) laden with salt, cloch, and salmon, to the value of 40. pound, and doe as yet detain the said ship and goods in their possession, some of the Hans their confederates ayding and assisting them at the same time.

Cley.

Item, in the yeere of our Lozde 1395. one Godekin Mighel, Clays Scheld, Stertebeker, and other their accomplices of the Hans tooke vpon the sea a certain ship of one John Dulwer of Cley, called the Friday (whereof Laurence Tuk of Cley was master) and conueighed the said ship vnto Mawstrond in Norway, and the saide Master and mariners they robbed of diuers commodities, namely of artillery, furniture, and salt fishes being in the same ship, to the value of 500. nobles.

Cley.

Item, in the yeere of our Lozde 1395. Godekin Mighel, Clays Scheld, Stertebeker, and other their accomplices of the Hans, vnlawfully tooke vpon the sea a certaine ship of one William Bers of Cley called the Margaret (wherein Robert Robines was master) and conueyed the ship it self vnto Mawstrond in Norway, and there robbed the master and his partners of diuers commodities, namely of artillery, furniture, and salt fishes, to the value of 400. nobles, and one of the said masters mates they maliciously drowned.

Cley.

Item, in the yeere of our Lozde 1395. about the feast of the natiuite of S. Iohn Baptist, the foresaid named Godekin and Stertebeker, with others their accomplices of the Hans, vnlawfully took vpon the sea a certain ship of Nicholas Steyhard and Iohn Leris of Cley called the Nicholas (whereof Iohn Prest was master) and conueyed the said ship vnto Mawstrond, and there robbed the said master and his companie of diuers commodities, namely of furniture and salt fishes, being in the said ship, to the value of 320. nobles.

Cley.

Item, in the yeere of our Lozde 1395. about the feast aforesaid, the said Godekins and Stertebeker, & their companions of the Hans vniustly took vpon the sea a certaine ship of Thomas Peirs of Cley called the Isabel (whereof William Noie was master) and conueyed it vnto Mawstrond, and there robbed the said master and his company of diuers commodities, as namely of furniture, and salt fishes, being in the said ship, to the value of 406. nobles.

Cley.

Item, in the yeere next aboue mentioned, vpon the Saturday, about the foresaid feast, the foresaid named Godekins and Stertebeker, and other their accomplices of the Hans vnlawfully took vpon the sea, a certain ship of one Thomas Lyderpole of Cley, called the Helena, wherein Robert Alwey was master, & also wickedly and vniustly drowned in the bottom of the sea diuers commodities, as namely salt fishes, together with the ship it selfe.

Cley.

Item, in the yeere of our Lozde 1398. about the feast of S. Michael the archangel, the foresaid Godekin & Stertebeker, with other their confederats of the Hans, took at Langsoun in Norway a certain crayer of one Thomas Motte of Cley, called the Peter, (wherein Thomas Smith was master) & the foresaid crayer they wickedly and vniustly caried away, being worth 280. nobles.

Wiuerton.

Item, in the yeere of our Lozde 1395. about the feast of the natiuite of S. Iohn Baptist, the foresaid named Godekins and Stertebeker, and others of the Hans vniustly tooke a certain ship of Simon Durham, called the Dogger-ship, and the Peter of Wiuerton, laden with salt fishes (whereof Iohn Austen was master) vpon the coast of Denmarke. And they caried away the saide Dogger, with the furniture thereof, and the foresaid salt fishes, to the value of 170. pound. Moreover, the master, and 25. mariners in the same ship they maliciously slewe, and a certaine ladde of the saide

Dogger

Dogger they caried with them vnto Wismer.

Item, in the foresaid yeere, and about the feast aforesaid, the forenamed Godekins and Stertebeker, with other their complices, vniustly tooke vpon the sea a certaine ship of Thomas Lyderpole, and Iohn Coote of Wiueton: and the master and mariners which were in the saide shippe, they villanously slue, among whom they put to death one Simon Andrew, the godsomme, nephew, and seruant of the foresaid Simon Durham. Which ship, with the goods and furniture that were therein was worth 410. nobles.

Item, in the very same yeere, about the feast aforesaid, the forenamed Godekins and Stertebeker & other their complices wickedly spoiled a certaine ship of the foresaid Simon Durham called the Dogger, wherein Geruase Car was master, lying at an anker, while the companie were occupied about fishing, and likewise vniustly tooke away with them the salt fishes, and furniture of the said ship. Moreover, the master and his company that were in the said Dogger they beate and wounded, so that they venterly lost their fishing for that yeere, the master and his said companie being endamaged thereby, to the summe of 200. nobles.

Item, in the yeere of our Lord 1396, the foresaid Godekins and Stertebeker, and other their complices vniustly tooke vpon the sea a certain craier, called the Buss of Zeland, which one Iohn Ligate marchant, and seruant vnto the forenamed Simon Durham had laden in Prussia, on the behalfe of the said Simon, to saile for England, and spoiled the said craier, and also tooke and caried away with them the goods and marchandises of the said Simon, being in the foresaid ship, to the value of 66. pounds.

Item, in the yeere of our Lord 1397, certaine malefactorz of Wismer and Rostok, with certaine others of the Hans, tooke a craier of one Peter Cole of Zeland, called the Bussship, which Alan Barret the seruant and factor of the foresaid Simon Durham had laden with mottes, sparres, and other marchandize, for the behalfe of the said Simon, and vniustly tooke from thence the goods of the said Simon, to the value of 24. pounds, and caried the same away.

Item, in the yeere of our Lord 1394, certaine malefactorz of Wismer and others of the Hans vniustly tooke vpon the sea, and caried away with them a packe of woollen cloth of the foresaid Simon, worth 42. pounds, out of a certain craier of one Thomas Fowler of Lenne being laden and bound for Dantzick in Prussia.

Item, pitifully complaining the marchants of Lenne doe auouch, verifie, & affirme, that about the feast of S. George the martyr, in the yeere of our Lord 1394, sundry malefactorz and robbers of Wismer & Rostok, and others of the Hans, with a great multitude of ships, arriued at the towne of Norbern in Norway, and tooke the said town by strong assault, and also wickedly and vniustly took al the marchants of Lenne there residing with their goods & cattels, and burnt their houses and mansions in the same place, and put their persons vnto great ransoms: euen as by the letters of safeconduct deliuered vnto the said marchants it may more euidently appeare, to the great damage and impouerishment of the marchants of Lenne: namely, Inprimis they burnt there 21. houses belonging vnto the said marchants, to the value of 440. nobles. Item, they tooke from Edmund Belyetere, Thomas Hunt, Iohn Brandon, and from other marchants of Lenne, to the value of 1815. pounds.

Concerning this surprise Albertus Krantzius in the sixt book of his history of Norway, and the 8. Chapter writeth in maner following.

In the meane while Norway enioyed peace vnder the gouernment of a woman: vntil Albertus King of Suecia, who had now seuen yeeres continued in captiuitie vnder Queen Margaret, was to be set at libertie. Which, when the common souldiers of Rostok & Wismer, called the Vitalians perceived, who, whilest their king was holden captiue, in the right of the forenamed cities, for the behalfe of their lord the king being prince of Mekleburg by birth, undertooke and waged warre al the time of his captiuitie banding their forces together, they resolved, at their own costs & charges, but in the right of the said cities, to saile into the 3. kingdoms, and to take such spoiles as they could lay hold on. These common souldiers therfore, seeing an end of their tyrannical and violent dealing to approach, sailed into Norway, vnto the towne of Norbern, being a mart town for al the marchants of Germanie: who transporting fishes from thence, doe bring thither marchandises of all kinds, especially coyne, vnto the scarcitie wherof, vnlesse it be brought out of other countreys, that kingdome (as we haue said) is very much subiect. Departing out of their ships and going on shore, they set vpon the towne, and by fire and sword they easily compelled the inhabitants dwelling in weake wooden houses, to giue place. Thus these Vitalians entring and surprizing the towne conueyed such spoiles vnto their ships as them pleased, and hauing laden their ships with those booties, they returned home frolike vnto the ports of their own cities, without all respect, they robbed and rifled the goods, as wel of the Germanes, as of the Noruagians: and like lewde companions, wasting and making hanock of all things, proued themselues neuer the wealthier. For it is not the guile of such good felowes to stole by or to perserue ought. The citizens, at the first, seemed to be enriched: howbeit after ward, (no man misdoubting any such calamitie) goods ill gotten were worse spent. Thus saith Krantzius.

Lenne.

Item, pitifully complaining, the foresaide marchants auouch, verifie, and affirme, that vpon the 14. day after the feast of S. George, in the yeere of our Lord next aboute written, as 4. ships of Lenne, laden with cloth, wine, and other marchandises, were sailing vpon the maine sea, with all the goods and wares contained in them, for Prussia, sundry malefactorz of Wismer and Rostok, with others of the Hans, being in diuers ships, came vpon them, and by force of armes and strong hand tooke the said ships, with the goods and marchandises contained in them: and some of the people which were in the saide four ships, they slew, some they spoiled; and others they put vnto extreame ransomes. And carping away with them those four ships with the commodities and marchandise therin, they parted stakes therewith, as them listeth, to the great impouerishment & losse of the said marchants of Lenne, namely in cloth of William Sileiden, Tho. Waterden, Ioh. Brandon, Ioh. Welenhâ, & other marchants of Lenne, to the value of 3623.li.5.s.11.d.

Lenne.

Item, pitifully complaining the foresaid marchants doe affirme, that one Henry Lambolt and other his adherents, in the yeere of our Lord 1396. tooke vpon the maine sea betwene Norway and Scaw, one crayer laden with osmunds, and with diuers other marchandises, pertaining vnto Iohn Brandon of Lenne, to the summe and value of 443.li.4.s.2.d. Howeuer, they tooke from Iohn Lakingay 4. lastts and an halfe of osmunds, to the value of 220.lib.10.s.

Lenne.

Item, the foresaid marchants complaine, that certain malefactorz of Wismer, with other their complices of the Hans, in the yeere of our Lord 1396. tooke from Thomas Ploket of Lenne, out of a certaine ship sailing vpon the maine sea towards Sconeland (whereof Iames Snycop was master) cloth and other marchandise, to the summe and value of 13.lib.13.s.4.d.

Lenne.

Item, the aboue-named marchants complaine saying, that certaine malefactorz of Wismer, with others of the Hans society, in the yeere of our Lord 1397. wickedly and vniustly took out of a certaine ship of Dantzik (whereof Laurence van Russe was master) from Ralph Bedingham of Lenne, one fardel of cloth worth 52.li.7.s.6.d. Also, for the ransome of his seruant, 8.li.6.s.8.d. Item, they tooke from Thomas Earle diuers goods, to the value of 24.pounds.

Lenne.

Item, the foresaid marchants complaine, that certaine malefactorz of Wismer & Rostok, with others of the Hans, in the yeere of our Lord 1399. wickedly & vniustly tooke one crayer pertaining vnto Iohn Lakinglich of Lenne, laden with diuers goods and marchandise pertaining vnto sundry marchants of Lenne, namely from the forenamed Iohn one fardel of cloth, and one chest full of harnais, and other things, to the value of 90.lib. Item, they took out of the foresaid ship from Roger Hood, one fardel of cloth, and one chest with diuers goods, to the value of 58.lib. Item, from Iohn Pikeron, one fardell of cloth, and one chest with diuers goods, to the value of 440.lib. Item, from Andrew Purser one fardell of cloth, and one chest with diuers commodities therein, to the value of ten pounds.

Lenne.

Item, the aboue-named marchants complaine saying, that certaine malefactorz of Wismer & Rostok, and others of the Hans, namely, Godekin Mighel, Henrie van Hall de Stertebeker, with other of their confederates, in the yeere of our Lord 1399. wickedly and vniustly took from Iohn Priour of Lenne, out of the ship of Michael van Burgh, namely 160. nells of malsers, worth 100.lib.13.s.4.d. Item, 30. furrer rigges of Kaleber worth 13.s.4.d. a piece, the summe totall amounting to 20.li. Item, 20. furrer wombyss of Kalebre worth 11.s. Item, one girle of silver, and one dagger adorned with silver worth 30.s. Item, two coates, and one long iacket, and other goods, to the value of 30.s. Item, he paide for his ransome 4.lib.13.s.4.d.

Note the secret reasons of the Hans.

Vnto all and singular the articles aboue-written, the ambassadoz of England aforesaid do further adde, that the doers and authoiz of the damages, iniuries, and robberies set down in the articles aboue written, (of whom some are named in particular, and others in general) perfozmed and committed all those outrages, being hired thereunto at the expences and charges of the common societies of the cities aforesaid. And that the inhabitants of euery household in the foresaide cities (each man according to his ability) wittingly & purposely set forth one, two, or more men, for the very same expedition, wherein all and singular the foresaid trespasses were committed.

The foresaid English ambassadoz doe exhibite the articles aboue-written vnto the procuratoz of the cities of Wismer and Rostok aforesaid: leaue and libertie being alwayes reserved vnto the said ambassadoz, to enlarge, or to diminish, or to expound all, or euery, or any of the said Articles whatsoeuer, so often as it shall seeme expedient vnto them.

These

These be the grieuances and offences, whereat the marchants of the Hans of Almaine, comming vnto, and residing in the Realme of England, doe finde themselves aggriued, contrarie to the Articles and privileges of the Charter graunted vnto them by the worthy Progenitors of the king of England that now is, and also by the saide soueraigne Lord the King, ratified, and confirmed.

LMprimis, whereas the foresaide marchants haue a priuilege graunted vnto them by Charter, that they may, in cities, boroughs, and in other townes and villages throughout the whole realme of England, exercise traffique in grosse, as well with the natural inhabitants of the kingdome, as with strangers, and priuate persons: of late, those that are free denizens in the cities, boroughs, and villages within the foresaid kingdome, do hinder and restrain all others that be strangers, sojourners, and aliens, that they neither can, nor dare buy and sel with the marchants of the Hans aforesaid, to their great hinderance and losse.

Item, the foresaid marchants by vertue of their charter were wont to haue and to hold Innes and mansions, for the reposing of themselves and of their goods, wherefoeuer they pleased in any cities, boroughs, or villages, throughout the whole kingdome: howbeit of late the foresaide marchants are not suffered to take by their mansions, contrary to the tenour of their charter.

Item, the foresaid marchants are priuileged not to vndergoe any other burthens or impositions, but onely to pay certaine customs, as it doeth by their charter manifestly appeare. For withstanding at y^e same time when Simon de Moreden was mai^{or} of London, the foresaid marchants were constrained, in the ward of Doue-gate at London, to pay fifteenths, tallages, and other subsidies contrary to the liberties of their charter. Whereupon the saide marchants prosecuted the matter before the Councel of our soueraigne lord the king, insomuch that they were released from paying afterward any such tallages, fifteenths, and subsidies. Which marchants, a while after, of their owne accord and free will, gaue vnto the gild-hall of London an hundredth markes sterling, conditionally, that they of the citie aforesaide should not at any time after exact or demand of the said marchants, or of their successors, any tallages, fifteenths, or subsidies, contrary to the tenor of their charter, as by records in the foresaid gild-hall, it doth more plainly appeare. Howbeit of late the officers of our lord the king, in the foresaid ward of Doue-gate, constrained the marchants aforesaid to pay tallages, fifteenths, & other subsidies. And because the saide marchants murmured and refused to pay any such contributions, alleaging their priuileges, the foresaid officers arrested the goods of these said marchants (which are as yet detained vpon the arrest) notwithstanding that they were released before the councel of our soueraigne lord the king, & also that they gaue vnto the said gild-hall one hundredth marks to be released, as it is aforesaid: And also the foresaid marchants were constrained to pay 12 d. in the pound, and of late 6 d. and other subsidies, more then their ancient customes, to the great damage of those marchants.

Item, the foresaid marchants are priuileged as touching customs of wools by the bought within the realm of England, y^e they are not bound to pay, ouer & besides their ancient customs, but onely 11 d. more then the homeborn marchants of England were wont to pay. But now y^e foresaid marchants are compelled to pay for euery sack of wool (besides y^e ancient custom & the 40 d. aforesaid) a certain imposition called Pence for the town of Cales, namely for euery sack of wool 19 d. more then the marchants of England doe pay, to their great losse, & against the liberty of their charter.

The ancient customs of wools.

Pence for the towne of Cales.

Item, the foresaid marchants are priuileged by their charter, that concerning the quantity of their marchandize brought into the realme of England (in regard whereof they are bound to pay 3 d. for the worth of euery pound of silver) credit is to be giuen vnto them for the letters of their masters and of their companies, if they were able to shew them. And if so be they had no letters in this behalfe to shew, that then credite should bee giuen vnto themselves, and that their othe, or the othe of their attorney should be taken, without any other proof, as touching the value of their marchandize brought in, & that thereupon they should be bound to pay customs, namely the customs of 3 d. fully for that cause to be paid. But now the customers of our soueraigne lord the king put their goods to an higher rate then they ought or were wont to be: and hereupon they compell them to pay custome for their goods, at their pleasure, scanning about their freight and expences particularly disbursed in regard of the said goods and marchandize, to the great hinderance of the said marchants, and against the tenor of their charter.

Item, the foresaid marchants by way of pitifull complaint do alleage, that whereas the worthy progenitors of our Lord the king that now is, by vertue of the saide great charter, graunted libertie vnto them to pay the customs of certain clothes, namely of scarlet, and cloth died in grape, and of other clothes of assise, which were by them to be caried out of the realme of England, euey as by their forsaide Charter it doeth moze plainly appeare: and whereas our soueraigne lord the king that now is (ratifying and confirming the saide charter, and being willing that they shoulde haue moze especiall fauour shewed vnto them) granted vnto them by their Charter, that the said marchants shoulde be exempted and freed from all custome and imposition of small clothes, as in pierces and in narrow clothes which were not of assise, and in such other clothes of like qualite: yet of late the Customers of our Lord the King that now is, not allowing their saide speciall Charter so graunted vnto the marchants aforesaid, do compel them to pay for straight clothes and for pieces of clothes which are not of assise, (together with other demands particularly & scuerally made) as great custome as if the clothes were full out of assise. Moreover also of late, the customers of the smal or petty custome & of the subsidie doe demand of them custome for kersey-clothes equal vnto the custome of those clothes, that be of full assise, whereas the forsaide marchants were not wont to pay for those kersies by vertue of their Charter, but onely according to the worth of ech pound of siluer, as namely for other goods which are of golde weight: to the great hinderance of the forsaide parties, and against the manifest graunt of our soueraigne Lord the king, as it appeareth in the said speciall Charter.

Item, the said marchants alleage, that they are priuiledged by their Charter, if they pay custome and subsidy for their goods in the behalfe of our lord the king, at any port of England where those goods haue arriued, and after ward would transport the saide goods or any part of them vnto any other port within the realme aforesaid: that then they shoulde be quite releafed from paying of any other custome for the same goods, if they bring a warrant that they haue payde the saide custome, as is aforesaide. Of late it fortuned, that a certaine man of their societie named Nicholas Crosschaire, being a marchant of the lande of Prussia, immediatly after the concord was concluded betwene the English and the Prussians, brought vnto the towne of Sandwich a shippe laden with bow-staues and other marchandize, and there well and truely payde the custome of our lord the king, for all his wares: and selling there part of the same goods, he after ward transported parcel thereof in a small barke vnto London, there to be solde, and caried a warrant also with him, that he had at Sandwich paid the custome due vnto our lord the king: & yet (the said warrant notwithstanding) the customers of the petty custome & subsidy of London came & demanded custome of him at another time contrary to reason, & against the tenor of their charter: and the said Nicholas offered pledges vnto them, yea, euen ready money downe into their hands, vntil the question were discussed and determined, whether he shoulde pay new custome or no: but this they would not doe. Then the said Nicholas brought a briel from our lord the king, to get himselfe discharged from paying the said custome: and for all that, the forsaide customers would not as yet haue regard vnto him, but kept the said goods within shipboord, vpon the riuier of Thames, for the space of 15. dayes, vntil he had paid another custome, to the great losse of the said Nicholas, for that which he sold first at Sandwich to be deliuered at London for seuen nobles, he could not after ward haue for it aboue foure nobles, and yet so was it solde, by reason of the harme which his wares had taken by lying so long vpon the water, contrary to the tenor of their Charter.

Item, the said marchants do alleage, that another of their company called Peter Hertson bought at Briskow certain clothes, & laded the same in a ship, to be transported for Prussia, for the which he truely payde at Briskow, the customs & subsidies due vnto our soueraign lord the king: which ship with the forsaide goods arriuing at London: the customers of the petty-custome and of the subsidie there would not permit the said ship with the goods to passe vnto the parts aforesaid, vntil the said Peter had paid another custome for the same goods (the warrant, which he brought with him notwithstanding) to his great hinderance, and contrary to the tenor of their Charter.

Item, pitifully complaining the forsaide marchants alleage, that whereas euery marchant, bringing wares into the realm, was wont to haue a schedule wherein his name was written, for a specification & certificat of the quanticy of his goods in the said schedule to be found at the arriual of the ship, without paying therfore ought at all, of late the customers of the petty custome do compel the to pay for ech mans name written a peny, at y arriual of their goods out of euery ship wherein the said goods are found, what commodities & marchandize soeuer they be: whenas not withstanding, if there be a chest or any other smal matter, there shoulde not therfore be any custome due vnto our lord the king, nor any receiued vnto his Maiesties vse. In like maner do the customers of the subsidy deale. Whereas also the forsaide marchants were not wont to pay for a cocket for the conueyance & transportation of their goods out of the realme (albeit many names were written therein) moze then 4. d. of late the customers of the petty custome do compel them to pay for euery name contained in the same cocket, 4. d. and in like sort do the customers of the saide subsidy deale. Which contribution in a yere extendeth it self vnto a great summe, to the vnkknown prejudice of our lord the the king, more then any man could suppose (for the customers enjoy their fees and commodities from his Maiestie that they may doe him faithfull service) and likewise to the great damage of the said marchants.

Item, pitifully complain'ng the said marchants do alleage that they are constrained to pay for subsidy, sometime 12 d. and sometime 6 d. in the pound, contrary to the tenor of their charter: and yet notwithstanding when their merchandize cometh to the wharf, the customers prolong & delay the time 3. or 4. weeks before they will take custome for their goods, in the which space other marchants sel their goods, the customers not regarding whether the goods aforesaid take wet or no; to the great damage aswel of our lord the king, as of the said marchants: because, if they had quicke dispatch, they might pay custome vnto his Maiestie ofner then they doe.

Item, the said marchants doe farther alleage, that the customers of the petie custome, and of the subsidy in the port of London haue appointed among themselves certaine men to seale by the goods of the saide marchants, so soon as they are arrived at the port of safetie, vntill the said goods be customed. By meanes of the which sealing, the foresaide parties doe compell the marchants about-named, (vpon an vse and custome whereof themselves haue bene the authors) to paye a certaine summe of money, to the great hinderance of the sayde marchants, and contrarie to iustice and to their charter. Moreover, the saide customers haue ordained betwene themselves, that the saide marchants shall put or make by no clooth into fardels, to transport out of the realme, vntill certaine men appointed by them for the same purpose bee there present, to see what manner of clothes they bee, vnder paine of the forfeiture of the saide goods. Also of late, when the sayde marchants would haue made by such fardels, the foresayde parties assigned to be ouerscers refused to come, vntill they might haue for their comming some certaine summe of money, delaying and procrastinating from day to day, so long as themselves listed, to the great losse and vndoing of the foresaide marchants, and contrarie to their liberties: because the foresaide customers are bound by their office to doe this, without any contribution therefore to bee paide vnto them by the saide marchants: for that they doe enjoy from our soueraigne Lord the King their fees and commodities, to the ende that they may serue him and euery marchant iustly and faithfullly, without any contribution by them to be imposed anewe vpon the sayde marchants, of custome.

Item, the said marchants doe alleage, that the customers & bailiffs of the town of Southhampton do compell them to pay for euery last of herrings, pitch, & sope ashes brought thither by the 2. s. more then the kings custome: and for ech hundred of bo wstaues & boozds called Waghenscor, 2. d. for euery hundred of boozds called Richolt, 4. d. & for al other merchandize brought by the foresaid marchants vnto the same towne: which contributions they neuer paid at any time heretofore, being greatly to their hinderance, and contrary to the tenor of their Charter.

Item, the foresaid marchants do alleage, that one of their company, called Albert Redewish of Prussia, byring diuers goods & merchandizes vnto Newcastle vpon Tyne, & there paying the vsual custom of 3. d. in the pound for al his wares, the bailiffs of the saide towne, against all reason, exacted 7. pound sterling at his hands more then the custome: whereupon the foresaide marchant got a brieve from the kings maiesty, for the recovery of the said 7. li. according to equity & reason: howbeit, that at the comming of the said brieve the foresaid bailiffes would do nothing on his behalf, but would haue slaine their foresaid associate, contrary to their charter and priuiledges.

William Esturmy knight, & Iohn Kingdon canon of Lincolne, being by his most mighty prince & lord, L. Henry by Gods grace K. of England & France & lord of Ireland, sufficiently deputed and appointed to parle, treat, & agree wth the common society of the marchants of the Hans of Dutchlant or Almain, concerning & about the redressing & reformation of vniuersall attempts happening betwene our said soueraigne L. the king his liege people & subiects on the one part, & betwene the comon society aforesaid, the cities, towns, & particular persons thereof on the other part: do (for the behalf of our said soueraigne L. the king, with a mind & intention to haue al singular things underwritten to come to the knowledge of the said common society) intimate, declare, & make known vnto you (honorables) Henr. Westhoff citizen & deputy of the city of Lubec, Henry Fredelaw, Ioh. van Berk citizen of Colen, Mainard Buxtehude citizen, & deputy of the city of Hamburg, Simo Clawken clerk, sir Iohn de Aa knight deputie of the citie of Rostok, Herman Meyer deputie of the citie of Wismar, being, as the procurators, messengers, & commissioners of the foresaid cities, assembled together at the town of Hage in Holland, with the foresaid Will. & Iohn in regard of the foresaid redress & reformation: that, euen as our said soueraigne L. the king his meaning is not to disturb or hinder such priuiledges as haue bin heretofore granted & vouchsafed vnto the comon society of the marchants aforesaid, by the renowned kings of England, & the worthy progenitors of our L. the K. that now is, & by himself also vnder a certain form confirmed: euen so he is determined (without any preiudice of forren lawes) vpon iust, mature and sober deliberation, by his royall authoritie to withstand such priuiledges, as by reason of the abuse thereof, haue bene infinitely preiudiciall vnto himselfe and his subiects.

Inprimis the said ambassadours doe affirme as afoze, that whereas all and euery the Marchants of the said company, as often as they would, were, both in the Realme of England, and in other territories & dominions subiect vnto our soueraigne lord the king, admitted and suffered (according to the tenor of the forrenamed priuiledges granted vnto them) freely, friendly and securely to traffique and conuerse with any of his Maiesties liege people and subiects whatsoeuer, or with other people of whatsoeuer nation living in the realme of England, or in the dominions afozesaid: the said common society of marchants by their publike & deliberate common counsel did appoint & ordain, & no society in any cities, townes, or places, neither yet any particular man of any such society (there being no lawfull or reasonable cause why) shoulde in any wise admit any marchants of the realme of England resorting vnto their cities or other places for marchandise, to enjoy intercourse of traffike: but that the saide English marchants shoulde bee altogether excluded from all traffike and mutuell conuersation among them, by denouncing and inflicting grievous penalties of money as well vpon cities as other places, and vpon particular marchants also of the foresaid societie practising the contrary.

Item, that immediately after, the foresaid parties enacting and ordaining published their sayde statute and ordinance, in all kingdomes, prouinces, partes, cities, and townes, wherin any marchants of the said societie were conuersant.

Item, that after that publication, the statute and ordinance afozesaid by enery of the marchants of the forrenamed societie were inuiolably obserued.

Item, that the said statute and ordinance hath bene so rigorously put in execution, that whereas immediately after certaine English marchants with their ships, mariners, and marchandize bee- ing in a certaine part of one of the principall cities of the foresaide societie, utterly destitute of meate, drinke, and money, publickly offered to sell their wollen clothes of England, onely to provide themselves of necessary victuals: yet the marchants of the saide citie, stoutly persisting in their statute and ordinance afozesaid, straightly prohibited the buying of such clothes, vntillianly denying meate and drinke vnto the said English marchants.

Item, the foresaid societie decreed and ordained, that no marchant of the saide company shoulde in any place or countrey whatsoeuer, buy any woollen clothes of the realme or dominion of England (albeit offered by others and not by English men) or, hauing bought any, shoulde, after the terme prefixed, sell them, imposing grievous pecuniary mulcts, besides the forfeiture of the clothes so bought or sold, vpon them that would attempt the contrary.

Item, that after the said statute and ordinance, the foresaide societie decreed, that all marchants of the said companie, hauing among their wares and marchandize any woollen clothes made in England, shoulde either sell the saide clothes, or within a short space then limited shoulde, vnder penaltie of forfeiting the said clothes, utterly renounce the vse and commoditie thereof: Notwithstanding a grievous penaltie of money being imposed vpon the violaters of the same statute.

Item, that the statutes and ordinances afozesaid might with more speed and celerity be put in execution, the said authors and publishers thereof imagining, according to their desire, that by this meanes an utter extirpation and ouerthrow of English marchants might, yea & of necessity must ensue: vpon their serious & long premeditated deliberation, straightly commanded & inioyned, vnder pain of losing the benefit of all priuiledges, where soeuer, or by the princes of what lands, or the Magistrates of what Cities or townes soeuer vouchsafed vnto the said common societie, that not only the aldermen of that societie in all places throughout the realme of England, but also all other marchants of the said company, after the manner of marchants conuersing in the saide Realme, shoulde, without exception of persons, utterly abstain from all intercourse of traffike with the marchants of the realme afozesaid: yea, and that they shoulde depart out of the said kingdome within a very short space limited. For the dispatching of al which premises without delay, it was according to their commandement effectually provided.

Item, that the societie afozesaid hath approued diuers very vnrasonable statutes & ordinances, made & published by the marchants of the same societie residing in the kingdoms of Norway and Swedland, to the great preiudice of the kingdome of England, and the marchants thereof: and as yet both couertly and expresse do approue the same, vniuersally putting them in daily execution.

Item, whereas in the priuiledges & indulgences granted by y^e renowned princes sometimes kings of England, & worthily progenitors of our soueraigne lord the king & now is, vnto the societie afozesaid, it is prouided, y^e the said marchants shal not auow any man which is not of their company, nor shal not colour his goods and marchandize vnder their company: whereas also in the confirmation of the the sayd priuiledges made by our soueraigne lord that now is, it is maniteuly prouided, that the marchantes of the Hans towne, vnder the colour of their priuiledges in England, shall not vpon paine of the perpetuall frustration and reuocation of the foresayd priuiledges, receiue any stranger of any other towne in their liberties, by whom the kings custome may in any sort be withholden or diminished: & yet the contrary vnto al these prouisoies hath bin euery yere, for these 20. yeres or thereabout notoriouly practised and committed, as well iopnly by the generall counsell, and consociation of the foresayd societie, as also scruerally by the aduise and permission of diuers particular cities of the foresayd Hans company to the great diminution of his maiesties custome, the estimation whereof the foresayd ambassadoys are not able at this present fully to declare. But that all occasions of the last aboue mentioned diminution may bee prevented for the time to come, the sayd ambassadoys doe demand to haue from the foresayd societie a declaration in wryting, what and what manner of territories, cities, townes, villages or companies they be, for which the sayd societie challengeth and pretendeth, that they ought to enioy the priuiledges granted vnto their marchantes, as is aboue mentioned.

It shal manie of which be the Hans townes.

Moreover, it is required by the foresaid ambassadoys, if the societie aforesayd hath not decreed nor ordeyned the things aboue wrytten, that the names of the cities and places decreeing and ordeining such statutes & ordinances, may by the sayd common societie either now or at some other times and places conuenient for the same purpose, be expessed and set downe in wryting.

A letter of Henry the fourth king of England &c. vnto Frater Conradus de Iungingen the master generall of Prussia.

Henrie &c. to the most noble and mighty personage of sacred religion Fr: Conradus de Iungingen Master general of the order of the Dutch knights of S. Marie, our most deare friend, greeting, and continual perfection of amity.

When as your messengers and ambassadoys were of late personally present in Holland, and there expected the arrinal of our ambassadoys untill the first day of the moneth of Nouember last expired, that there might bee by way of friendly conference a remedie prouided in regard of certaine iniuries pretended to be offered, by both our subiects one against another, for the publique commoditie of both parts, we were determind to haue sent vnto Dordraet, at the foresaid daye, our welbeloued and faithfull knight William Sturmy, and our welbeloued clerke Iohn Kington, vpon our ambassage-affayres: hauing as yet in our desires, for a peaceable ending of the matter, (which our foresayd ambassadoys, by reason of the shortnes of time, or the finding out of some other remedie and happy conclusion of all and singular the foresaid attempts concerning the principall busines, could by no meanes at that instant attaine vnto) that vpon some other more conuenient day (to the end your ambassadoys might not returne home altogether frustrate of their expectation) there might be, after the wonted friendly maner, a conference & agreement with your foresayd ambassadoys, euen as by other letters of ours directed vnto your sayd ambassadoys the second day of the moneth of Nouember aforesayd wee haue deliuered our mind vnto them. But it fortunied not long before the departure of your ambassadoys into their owne countrey, that no sufficient shipping could be found wherein our sayd ambassadoys might haue secure and safe passage vnto Dordraet, or Middleburgh, neither was it thought that they should get any passage at all, till the ships at Middleborough were returned into our kingdome, by the force whereof they might be the more strongly wasted ouer. And so by reason of the departure of your ambassadoys, all matters remaine in suspence till such time as the sayd ambassadoys shall againe meete with ours to adde perfection vnto the busines as yet imperfect. Therefore (our friend vnfaignedly beloued) desiring from the botome of our heart that the integritie of loue, which hath from auncient times taken place betwene our & your subiects, may in time to come also be kept inuolable, we haue thought good once again to send one of our foresaid ambassadoys, namely William Esturmy knight to Dordraet, giuing him charge thither to make haste, and there to stay, till some of your messengers, at your commandement doe in time conuenient repaie vnto that place, there (by Gods assistance) to bring the matter vnto an happy conclusion. May it please you therefore of your vnfaigned friendship, without all inconuenience of delay, to returne, not vnto vs, but vnto our fornamed knight an answer in wryting, what your will and determination is. Neither let it seeme strange vnto you, that we haue not at this present sent our fornamed Iohn Kington clerke together with the sayd William: for the cause of his abode with vs is, that he may in the meane season employ his care and diligence about those matters which must be preparatiues for the final conclusion of the foresayd busines. Honorable sir, and most deare friend, we doe most heartily wish increase of prosperitie and ioy vnto your person. Given in our palace of Westminster the 14. day of Feb. in the peate of our Lord 1407.

To the right noble and valiant knight Sir William Sturmy sent at this present by the most souereigne King of England &c. as his ambassadour vnto Dordrecht, his most sincere friend,

Honorable sir, our most entier friend, wee receiued the royall letters of the most mightie prince and lord, our lord the king of England and France and lord of Ireland, sent vnto vs vnder the date of the 14. day of February (which we receiued at our castle of Marienburgh the 11. of April) containing, amongst other matters, that his Maesties purpose was once againe to sende one of his ambassadoys, namely your selfe our very sincere friend vnto Dordrecht, giuing you in charge that you would make haste thither & there stay, vntill some of our subiects might at our commandement, in conuenient time repaire vnto the same place, there (by Gods assistance) to bring our matters vnto a happy conclusion. And then he requested that wee should without delay write our determination vnto you, as the conclusion of the said letter importeth. Wherbeit (our most deare friend) the treaties & conferences about the redresse or reformation of vniuersall attempts committed by the subiects of our sayd lord the king & our subiects, one against another, are both on our behalfe, and on the behalfe of the common societie of the Hans marchants, hitherto had, made, and continued common. And so our commissioners vpon our full and absolute commandement, that, for the managings of these and of other affaires of the foresaid societie, many waies vrgent and difficult, vpon the feast of our Lords Ascension next to come, meet with the said societie at Lubec, there to giue notice what they haue determined to conclude in this present busines & in others for their owne behalfe. For we wil giue our ambassadours which are there to appeare, straightly in charge that according to the kings request aforesayd they doe without delay procure an answer to be written vnto your honour concerning the determination of the foresaid societie. Given at the place and vpon the day aboue named, in the yeare of our Lord 1407.

Fr. Wernherus de Tettingen, commander in Elbing, general vice-master and lieutenant in the roome of the Master generall of the Dutch knights of the Order of S. Marie &c. of late deceased.

The letters of Henry the 4. king of England &c. vnto Vlricus de Iungingen Master generall of Prussia, 1408. wherein he doth ratifie and accept the last agreement made at Hage in Holland,

Henry &c. vnto the honourable and religious personage Fr. Vlricus de Iungingen Master generall of the Dutch knights of S. Marie &c. our most deare friend, greeting and dayly increase of our accustomed amity and friendship. Wee doe by these presents giue your honour to vnderstand, that our faithfull & welbeloued William Esturmy knight, and Master Iohn Kington clerke, our ambassadoys and messengers sent of late on our behalfe, vnto the presence of your predecessor for the redressing of certaine grieuances and damages being contrary to iustice offered against vs and our liege subiects by the people & subiects of your predecessors, & against them also by our subiects as it is aforesayd, in friendly maner to be procured, of late returning out of the parts of Alemain made relation vnto vs and to our counsell, that hauing conferred with your forenamed predecessor about the foresayd affaires, the particulars following were at length concluded: namely first of all, that at a certaine day and place they should meete in Holland with his ambassadoys and messengers, to hold a friendly conference between them about the redressing and reformation of the grieuances and damages aforesayd: and that they should by the equall waighe of diligence examination ponder, & in the balance of iustice discusse & define al & singular the foresaid grieuances & damages inflicted on both parts, Wherbeit at length after sundry propogations then made & continued on this behalfe, our ambassadoys & messengers aforesaid vpon the 28. of August last past, assembling themselues for our part at the towne of Hage in Holland, the hon. & discrete personages Arnold Heker burgomaster of the towne of Danzick, & Iohn Grolowe, for the behalfe of your subiects of Prussia, and Tidman de Meule, & Iohn Epenscheid for the behalfe of Liuania, being assembled as messengers and commissioners about the redresse and reformation aforesayd, did then and there demaund in certaine articles, of our ambassadoys and messengers aboutnamed 25034. nobles & half a noble, for the grieuances & damages offered (as it was the said) to your subiects of Prussia, and 24082. nobles, 12. s. 8. d. in recompense of the damages offered vnto those

your subiects of Liuania. And when the substance of those articles about the grieuances & losses aforesayd was by the sayd ambassadours and messengers thoroughly examined and discusled, by their generall consent it was finally agreed, that your subiects, in consideration of all and singular the aforesayd grieuances and damages offered vnto them by our people, should within three yeares after the feast of Easter next ensuing, at three equall paymētts receiue from vs, namely they of Prussia, 8957. nobles, and they of Liuania 22496. nobles, six pence, halfe peny, farthing, and no more, so that we our selues thought good to condescend thereunto. Howbeit, forasmuch as certaine other articles of your subiects of Prussia, and also certaine articles in the behalfe of our subiects containing grieuous complaints in them, being propounded before the ambassadours & messengers aforesaid, for the attaining of reformation in regard of the damages & grieuances offered on both parts, could not as the, for the great obscurity of diuers of the sayd articles, and also for want of sufficient prooffe at the last meeting appointed and held by the aforesayd ambassadours at the towne of Hage in Holland, sufficiently to be examined, discusled, and defined, it was agreed vpon by the ambassadours and messengers of both partes, that from the 15. day of October then last expired vnto the feast of Easter now next ensuing, and from thenceforth within one whole yere immediately following, the plaintifes of both parts should thoroughly declare before our chancelour of England for the time being, the aforesayd obscurities concerning the substance of their articles, and that they should, for the obtaining of execution, and complement of iustice at our sayd chancelours hands, peremptorily minister necessary probations, vnder paine of perpetuall exclusion from the petition of those things which are containd in the articles aboue mentioned.

¶ Provided alwayes, that if at the last it shall be by lawfull proofes made manifest concerning the summes aboue written of any part or parcell thereof, that due satisfaction hath bene made to him or them vnto whom it was due, or that those goods of and for the which complaint hath bene made on the behalfe of your subiects haue pertained or doe appertaine vnto others, or any other iust, true, and reasonable cause may lawfully bee alleaged, why the payment of all the aforesayd summes or any of them ought not to be performed: that then so much only is to be cut off or deducted from the sayd summes as shall be found to be already payd or to pertaine vnto others, or else vpon some true, iust, and reasonable cause (as is aforesayd) not to be due. We therefore considering that the sayd friendly conference, and the final agreement ensuing thereupon are agreeable vnto reason and equitie, doe, for our part ratifie and willingly accept the very same conference and agreement. And forasmuch as it hath bene alwayes our desire, and is as yet our intention, that the league of amity and the integritie of loue, which hath of olde time bene obserued betweene our and your subiects, may in times to come perpetually remaine inuolable, and that your and our people may hereafter, not onely for the good of our common weale but also for the commodity and peace of both parts, according to their wonted maner, assemble themselves and enioy the faithfull and mutuall conuersation one of another: we will cause in our citie of London, with the summe of 8957. nobles satisfaction to bee made vnto the Prussians, and with the summe of 22496. nobles, six pence, halfe peny, farthing, recompense to be performed vnto the Liuanians, in regard of the damages and iniuries (which in very deepe proceeded not of our consent) by our subiects offered vnto them, as it is aforesayd, and within three yeares after the feast of Easter next ensuing the sayd summes of money to bee payd at three paymētts, and by three equall portions. Conditionally that vnto our subiects which be endamaged correspondent satisfaction be likewise on your part within the terme of the aforesayd three yeeres performed, with paying the summes of 766. nobles and of 4535. nobles, demanded on our behalfe, and also with the payment of such summes as within one yere immediately ensuing the feast of Easter aforesayd, shall be found by sufficient delarations and proofes to be made on the behalfe of our subiects (as is aforesayd) to be due. Euen as we in like maner will make satisfaction vnto your subiects within our citie aforesayd. Now as touching the request of your ambassadours and of the Liuanians, whereby we were required to procure some hole some remedy for the soules of certaine drowned persons, as conscience and religion seemeth to chalenge (in regard of whom we are moued with compassion, and do for their sakes heartily condole their mishaps) you are (our entier friend) of a certaintie to vnderstand, that after we shall be by your letters aduertized of the number, state, and condition of the sayd parties drowned, we will cause suffrages of prayers and diuers other hole some remedies profitable for the soules of the deceased and acceptable to God and men, religiously to be ordained and provided: vpon condition, that for the soules of our drowned countrey men there be the like remedie provided by you. The almighty grant vnto your selfe and vnto your whole Order, that you may prosperously triumph ouer the enemies of Christ his crosse. Given vnder our priue seale at our palace of Westminster the 26. of March, in the yere of our Lord 1408. and in the ninth yere of our reigne.

The letters of Fr: Ulricus Master of Prussia directed vnto the king of England, signifying that he is contented with the agreements concluded by his messengers at Hage.

To the most renowmed prince and mighty lord L Henrie king of England and France, and lord of Ireland, our most gracious lord.

Vnto your highnes pleasure at all assaies humbly recommending my voluntarie seruice &c. Most renoumed king, mighty prince, and gracious lord, we recei-ued of late with great reuerence as it becommeth vs, by our welbeloued Arnold de Dassel the bearer of of these presents, your Maiesties letters of late directed vnto vs, making mention amongst other matters of certaine appointments first made and concluded between the noble and worthy personages William Estur-my knight, Iohn Kington clerke, and William Brampton citizen of London your ambassa-dours and messengers on the one parte, and our honorable and religious brethren, namely Conradus Lichtensten great commander, Warnherus de Tetingen chiefe hospitalary & commander in Elbing, and Arnold de Hacken treasurer, being the procuratours and commissioners of Fra, Conradus de Iungingen our last predecessour of famous memory on the other parte, concerning the redressing, reformation, and amendement of vniust attempts committed on both sides, at our castle of Marienburgh, and also very lately at the towne of Hage in Holland, namely the twenty eight of the month August in the yeare immediately past, betweene your foresayde ambassadours William Esturmy knight, and Iohn Kington clerke, for your part, and our trusty and welbeloued commissioners and procuratours, namely Arnold Heche burgomaster of our citie of Danzick, and Iohn Crolow citizen of the same citie, for our parte. And for our moze perfect knowlege in this behalfe, our sayd commissioners made relation vnto vs and vnto our whole counsell, that associating vnto themselves our messengers of Liunia, namely, Tidman Myeul, and Iohn Epenheid, together with your foresaid ambassadours and messengers, they there finally appoynted and concluded, of and about the aboue mentioned summes of money due on both partes, of the which mention is made in your letters aforesayd.
With this speciall prouiso, that in like manner satisfaction be made in all points, both vnto other of our dammied subiects of Prussia, namely such whose goods of the true value thereof haue bene finally adiudged by the iudges or professors of our lawes, and vnto such who hauing brought their articles of complaints vnto the audience of the most dread and mighty prince and lord, our lord Rupertus king of the Romans alwayes most soueraigne, were in conclusion to haue the estimations of their goods to be adiudged by the sentence of the sayd lord, with the aduise of two of his counsellers, and also vnto other of our subiects who haue brought in sufficient prooffe of damages vniustly inflicted vpon them by your subiects, ouer and besides the premises. So that in like maner satisfaction be made vnto the common societie of the Hans marchants: and by the arbitrament set downe in the conferences had at Marienburgh, of the which it was aboue pprovided and enacted, on their behalfe, namely if they will rest contented with our subiects in the courses and maners then concluded. If not, we intend not at all to adhere vnto them in this behalfe. Afterward our messengers aforesayd, both they of Prussia and of Liunia demanded conuenient, iust, and speedy satisfaction, with the payment of all and singular the summes aboue mentioned, due vnto both parts (so farre forth as equity and reason would pced vnto, for the recompence of the parties iniuriéd and endamaged on both sides) to be made within one whole yere accompting from the feast of Easter now last expired vnto the very same feast next to come in the yere immediately following, & that in three seuerall termes of payment, by three portions of the said summes equally to be diuided, at the towne of Bruges in Flanders as being a place indifferent for all parties, in maner and forme as it was before at Marienburgh required and stood vpon: namely that reformation, reparation, and amendement of all vniust attempts committed on both parts ought to bee performed within one yere. Howbeit contrariwise your ambassadours aforesayd decreed that the sayd satisfaction should be performed vnto the parties iniuriéd of both parts within three yeeres, beginning to accompt from the feast of Easter last past. And when your ambas-sadours were not contented with the maner of satisfaction set downe by our men, nor our commissioners were willing in any sort to consent vnto that course which was thought conuenient by your ambassadours, the honorable messengers of the sea-townes of the Haas being there at that time present, made a motion that the foresayd satisfaction might be performed within two yeeres and an halfe, accompting from the feast of Easter last past, often before mentioned: yet vnder

a certaine protestation, namely it both parties should agree vnto that forme of satisfaction, and if they should thinke good finally and conclusively to yeeld their consent vnto it, Which kind of satisfaction also conceived by the messengers, your sayd ambassadours without giuing notice thereof vnto your royall Maiestie, refused finally to approue; being rather desirous to make a true & faithfull report of the sayd forme of satisfaction last about mentioned vnto your kingly highnesse, and that in such sort, that (as they hoped) effectually satisfaction and payment of all and singular the summes due and to bee due on both partes should more conueniently and speedily bee performed. Whereupon we might be put in good hope, that more speedy and conuenient appointments of termes; for the sayd satisfaction friendly on both parts to be performed in, would haue proceeded from your bountifull and gracious elementie. And in very deepe (most mighty prince) albeit it was neuer the meaning of our foresayd predecessor, so far forth as these matters concerned him, to protract and delay the execution of the sayd busines so many and such long distances of time, and that for diuers respects, both because restitution vnto the parties robbed consisted herein, and also because the sayd restitutions and satisfactions are to be made vnto poore people, widowes, orphans, and other miserable creatures, diuersly and miserably slaine and oppressed: notwithstanding we being moued with hearty & seruent zeale and speciall affection vnto your royall crowne of England, and hauing due regard and consideration of your most excellent Maiestie, vpon the aduise of our honourable brethren our counsellers, doe thankfully receiue, & by the tenour of these presents totally ratifie and approue such satisfactions of the foresayd summes howsoeuer due vnto our subiects both Prussians and Liuanians, in friendly sort to be performed at such times and seasons limited and prefixed by your highnes as are expessed in your maiesties letters, and also of other summes which within one yeare immediately ensuing after the feast of Easter last past, by sufficient proofes to be made on their part before your chancelour at your citie of London shall be found due vnto them. Conditionally that without inconuenience of delay and impediment they be performed as they ought to be, according to the premises. In like maner also we our selues within the termes of payment about mentioned will procure satisfaction to be without fauile performed vnto your subiects endamaged, with the summe of 766, nobles, being in regard of their losses, of the which they haue giuen by sufficient informations, due vnto them; and with other like summes also which are by sufficient proofes, within the yeare aforesayd, and in maner and forme prescribed to be exhibited before our treasures at our citie of Danzick. The almighty vouchsafe prosperously and long time to preserve your maiesties royal person. Given at our castle of Marienburgh the 27. of September, in the yeare of our Lord 1408.

Fr. Vlricus de Iungingen master generall of the order of the Dutch knights of S. Maries hospitall of Ierusalem.

The letters of king Henry the 4. sent vnto Fr. Vlricus master general of Prussia, wherein he doth absolutely approue the foresaid conference holden at Hage, and treateth about a perpetual league and amitie to be concluded betweene England and Prussia.

Henry by the grace of God king of England and France and lord of Ireland, vnto the noble & mighty personage of sacred religion Vlricus de Iungingen master generall of the order of the Dutch knights of S. Maries hospitall of Ierusalem, our entirely beloued friend, greeting and increase of vniuersal friendship. After diuers conferences had in sundry places beyond the seas, betwene the ambassadours and messengers of your late predecessor and of your selfe also, on the one parte, and betweene our speciall ambassadors and messengers on the other parte, concerning reformatiōs, reparations, & restitutions in certaine maner & forme to be performed vnto our subiects of both parts, in regard of manifold injuries practised against them both, and after that, in the last conference holden by the ambassadours of vs both at the towne of Hage in Holland, there was a motion made concerning a certaine forme of satisfaction, by way of final conclusion in that behalfe: but not being as then by our ambassadours condescended vnto, because they durst not proceede vnto the same conclusion without our priuite relation thereof at length being by them made before vs and our counsel: we returned vnto your honour an answer in writing by our letters vnder our priuite seale, of our full purpose and intention (vnto the which letters we doe at this present referre our selues, as if they were here againe exprestly written) what we thought good to haue done in this behalfe: so that we also might by your friendly letters be certainly informed of your will and expresse consent, being likewise conformable vnto your foresayd intention. Nowe whereas since that time we haue of late receiued the certaintie

Motion for a

of the matter by your letters wrytten vnto vs from your castle of Marienburgh, bearing date the 27. of September last past, conceyning in effect amongst other matters, that you being moued with a scrupulous zeale and speciall affection (as you wryte) vnto the royall crowne of our realme, and hauing due regard and consideration of our royall maiestie, vpon the aduise of your honourable brethren your counsellors, doe with a thankfull mynd accept, and by the tenour of the said letters of yours totally appoyne the concord of a certaine satisfaction to be performed with the payment of certaine summes of money howsoever due vnto your subiects as well of Prussia as of Liouonia, expressed in our former letters, within the termes prefixed by our consent and limited in our said letters, and also of other summes which within one whole yeare immediately following the feast of Easter last past, by sufficient proofes on their part to bee made before our chancelour at our citie of London, shall be found due vnto them: conditionally, that without inconuenience of delay and impediments, the premises be performed as they ought to be. And that your selfe also will without fayle, vpon the termes appoynted for the said payments, procure satisfaction to be made accordingly vnto our endamaged subiects with the summes due vnto them by reason of their losses, wherof they haue sufficient information. Wherefore in regard of those your friendly letters, and your courteous answer returned by them vnto vs, as is aforesaid, wee doe feelde vnto you right vnfained thanks. But because it will vndoubtedly be most acceptable and pleasing both vnto vs and vnto our people, and vnto you and your subiects, that the zeale and seruencie of loue which hath from ancient times growen and increased betwene our progenitours for them and their subiects, and your predecessors and their subiects, and which by the insolencie of of certayne lewde persons, without any consent of the principall lords, hath often bene violated betwene vs and you and mutually betwene the subiects of vs both, may be put in perpetuall byre and obtaine full strength in time to come, sithens herupon (by Gods assistance) it is to be hoped, that vnspokeable commodity and quiet will redound vnto both parts: may it seeme good vnto your discretion, as it seemeth expedient vnto vs, that some messengers of yours sufficiently authoized to parle, agree, and conclude with our deputy, about the mutuall contraction of a perpetuall league and confirmation of friendship, may with all conuenient speede be sent vnto our presence. At whose arriual, not onely in this busines so profitable and behoouefull, but also in certaine other affaires concerning the former treaties and conclusions, they may, yea and of necessity must greatly auayle. Wherefore (our entirely beloued friend) euen as vpon confidence of the premises we haue thought good to grant vnto the marchants and subiects of our realme full authoizy to resort vnto your dominions, so we doe in like maner graunt vnto your marchants and subiects free licence and liberty with their marchandises and goods securely to come into our realmes and dominions, there to stay, and at their pleasures thence to returne home. Moreover, if Arnold Dassel, who last of all presented your foresayd letters vnto vs, shall thinke good in the meane season to make his abode here in our dominions (as in very deepe it is expedient) he may both by serious consideration and deliberate consulting with our commissioners more conueniently and prosperously finde out wayes and meanes, for the more speedy expedition of all the premises. Fare ye well in Christ. Given vnder our priuie seale at our palace of Westminster, the seuenth of March, in the yere of our lord 1408, according to the computation of the Church of England, and in the tenth yere of our reigne.

A new concord concluded between king Henry the 4. and Vlricus de Iungingen Master generall of Prussia, in the yere of our Lord 1409.

IN this indenture of letters indented be it euidently knowen (for the perpetuall memory of the matter) vnto all faithfull Christians, that the noble & honourable personages Richard Merlowe Mayor and citizen of London, Master Iohn Kington clerke, and William Askham citizen and Alderman of the same citie, the commissioners of the most soueraigne prince and lord, L. Henrie by the grace of God king of England and France, and lord of Ireland, and Tidericus de Longenthorpe knight, Lefardus de Hereford burgomaster of Elbing, and Iohn Crolowe citizen of the citie of Dantzik, the procurators, commissioners, deputies and messengers of the right noble and religious personage Fr. Vlricus de Iungingen Master general of the order of the Dutch knights of S. Maries hospital of Ierusalem, hauing in the names of the sayd king and Master by vertue of the power on both parts committed vnto them, sufficient authoizy, haue appointed and with one consent agreed vpon all and singular the things vnderwriten.

Impressed for the conseruation of mutuall loue and wonted amitie, and for the tranquillitie of sweete amiable peace, it is decreed and ordained, that all and singular the liege people & subiects of the Realme of England and the Marchants of the territories & dominions of the said Realme and all other persons of what state or condition soeuer, shall and may safely and securely, as well by land as by water enter into the parts of Prussia, and there mutuall conuerse, and freely after the manner of Marchants exercise traffique as well with the Prussians as with others, of what nation or qualitie soeuer, there also make their abode, and thence vnto their owne homes and dwelling places retorne, and depart vnto any place whither and so often as they shall thinke good, as well by land as by water, with their goods, marchandize, and wares whatsoeuer; faithfully paying in the meane time all rights & customes due in regard of their said wares and marchandize.
Reserued alwaies vnto the said Master and his successours all right and remedie ordained, granted, and vouchsafed in certaine obligations by our Lord the king, whereof mention shall be made in the articles following.

Item it is ordained, that all and singular the subiects of the said Master generall and of his 2 order, of what state and condition soeuer, shall and may, as well by water as by land enter into the kingdom of England and into the territories and dominions thereof, and there mutuall conuerse, and freely after the manner of Marchants exercise traffique as well with all English people as with others of what nation or qualitie soeuer, and there also make their abode; and thence retorne vnto their owne habitations and dwelling places, and to depart whither they will and as oft as they shall thinke good, as well by land as by water, with their goods, marchandize and wares whatsoeuer: truly paying in the meane time all rights and customes due in regard of their said wares and Marchandize. Reserued alwaies vnto the said Soueraigne king, his heires and successours, all rights and remedies ordained and graunted vnto them in certaine obligations, by the commissioners and procuratores of the said Master generall aboue-named, and in the name of the said Master generall.

Item it is with one consent agreed vpon, promised, and graunted that for all and singular damages, grieuances, and robberies howsoeuer done and committed before the date of these presents against the foresaid Soueraigne Prince and his subiects whatsoeuer, and all others which at the time of the grieuances, damages, and robberies aforesaid, were, or at this present are the said Soueraigne king his subiects; there are due to be payed vnto the said king or his successours by the said Master generall or his successours, in full satisfaction and recompence of the damages, grieuances, and robberies aboue-writen, certaine summes of English money: euen as in the letters obligatorie made by the said Master generall his procuratores, and messengers aboue-named in this behalfe, and sealed with their seales, and deliuered vnto the foresaid procuratores and commissioners of our said Lord the king it is expessed moze at large.

Item it is couenanted, graunted, and promised, that no subiect of the said Master generall or of his successours, by reason or occasion of the damages, grieuances, and robberies aforesaid, shall, by the said Soueraigne king or his successours, or by their authoritie or commandement, or by any other person whatsoeuer who in regard of the foresaid losses, grieuances and robberies hath bene molested and dammified, or at the procurement or instant suite of any, be attached, arrested, imprisoned, or detained; nor that the goods of the said Master generall, or of his successours, or of any of them, shall be laid hold on, arrested, or detained.

Item it is couenanted and ordained, that if any of the liege people and subiects of the sayde
Master generall or of his successours shall, contrary to the forme of the concord and graunt next aboue-writen, chance to be molested or endamaged: that then the foresaid Soueraigne Lord the King and his successours the kings of England are bound to make full satisfaction for all such losses as the subiects of the said Master generall or of his successours or any of them shall for that cause haue vniustly sustained, vnto the parties endamaged. Which thing, if the foresaid Soueraigne Prince, or his successours in the Realme of England, being conueniently requested by the letters of the said Master generall or of his successours, shall refuse to doe, that then after the terme of six moneths immediately following the said deniall or refusal, it shall be right lawfull for the Master generall that now is and for any of his successours in time to come (having first made conuenient prooff that the foresaid request was by him or them exhibited) to arrest so many goods of the foresaid king his subiects found in the land of Prussia, as may suffice for the reasonable satisfaction and recompense of any person or persons whatsoeuer vniustly molested in this behalfe; and also to detain the said goods vnder arrestes, vntill conuigine satisfaction and amends be made vnto the party or parties molested.

Item by the commissioners and procuratores often aboue-named it is couenanted, promised,
6
and graunted, that for all and singular the damages, molestations, and robberies by the foresayde

soueraigne king his liege people & subiects howsoever before the date of these presents committed and offered against the said Master general or against any of his subiects whether Prussians or Liuvonians, and against all others who at the time of the damages, grievances & robberies aforesaid were, or at this present are the subiects of the Master generall aforesaid (except notwithstanding certaine damages & grievances hereafter to be mentioned, whereof also some pzooulers shalbe had in the articles following, which damages were before þ date of these presents by þ said soueraigne king his liege people and subiects inflicted vpon certaine subiects of the fozesaid generall Master, especially them of Prussia which hereafter shalbe named) there are certaine summes of money due to be payed vnto the said Master general or vnto his successors by the said soueraigne pzince or his successors for the full satisfaction of the fozesaid damages, molestations and robberies inflicted vpon the Prussians and Liuvonians, and the others aboue mentioned, euen as in the letters obligatorie of the said soueraigne Lord the king made in this behalfe, being giuen and deliuered vnto the said Master general his procuratours and messengers, it is declared moze at large.

7 Item, it is couenanted, graunted and promised, that none of the liege people or subiects of the fozesaid soueraigne pzince or of his heires shall, by reason or occasion of the damages, grievances, and robberies aforesaid, by the sayd Master general or his successors or by their authoritie and commandement, or by any other who in respect of the said damages, grievances and robberies aboue mentioned, hath bene molested or dammified, or by any of their procurements or instant suites, shalbe attached, arrested, imprisoned or detained; nor that any goods of the subiects of the said soueraigne king or his heires or any of them, shall bee attached, arrested, or detained. Reserued alwayes vnto the fozenamed Master general and his subiects all right and remedie any way requisite or competent vnto them by meanes of the obligations aforesaid,

8 Item it is couenanted and agreed that if any of the liege people or subiects of the sayde soueraigne pzince or of his heires and successors shall (contrary to the forme of concord and graunt next aboue-written) chaunce to bee molested or endamaged; that then the saide Master general and his successors, for all losses and hinderances which the liege people and subiects the fozesayde soueraigne pzince or of his heires or successors, shall by that meanes haue vniustly sustained, are bound to make full satisfaction vnto the partie endamaged. Which if the Master general aforesaid or his successors being conueniently requested by the letters of the sayde soueraigne pzince or of his heires, shall refuse to doe; that then, after the space of sixe moneths next ensuing the time of the fozesayde request, it may bee right lawfull for the fozenamed soueraigne pzince that now is, or that then for that time shall be (conuenient pzoofe being first brought, that the fozesayd request had conueniently bene exhibited) to arrest so many goods of the sayde Master general his subiects founde in the Realme of England, as may suffice for the reasonable satisfaction and amends of any person or persons vniustly molested in this behalfe; and also to detaine the sayde goods vnder safe custodie, vntill condigne satisfaction and amends be made vnto the partie or parties aggrieved.

9 Item it is couenanted, that besides the summes due vnto the sayde Master general and his successors in the behalfe of his subiects both of Prussia and of Liuvonia (whereof mention is made in the former Articles) there are due to bee payed vnto the sayde Master general and his successors, for sundry other damages, grievances, and robberies against himselfe and diuers other of his subiects of Prussia, namely Mathewe Ludekenfson, Arnold Aschen, Henri Culeman, Iohn Vnkeltop, Iohn Halewater, Egghard Scoffe of Dantzik, and Nicolas Wolmerstene of Elbing, done and committed by the sayde soueraigne king his liege people and subiects vnder-written, euen before the date of these presents, for the full satisfaction of the sayde damages, grievances and robberies, certaine summes of nobles hereafter following. Namely Inprimis by Tueburie, and Terry of Hull, 82. nobles, which are due vnto þ fozesaid Mathew Ludekinfson. Item by Nicholas Scot of Caleis the sonne of Tuebury, and Hilg of Hull, 256. nobles, which are due vnto the fozesayd Arnold de Aschen. Item by the inhabitants of Scardeburgh, Blakeney, and Crowmer (who had one Iohn Iolly of Blakeney for their capitaine) 156. nobles, which are due vnto Henrie Culeman aforesayd. Item by the inhabitants of Bayon (Whose Capitaine was one Pideuille) 125. nobles which are due vnto the said Iohn Vnkeltop. Item by the inhabitants of Plymmouth and Dertmouth (whose Capitaines were Henry Pay, and William Gadeling) 600. nobles which are due vnto the fozesayde Iohn Halewater, in respect of his goods by them violently taken away. Item 334. nobles to be payed by the selfe same parties, being due vnto the sayde Iohn Halewater by reason that they detained his ship from him thre moneths and moze, which ship was of the burthen of thre hundredth tonnes of wine, and had in it all the fozesayde time fixe and fourtie seruants maintained at the expences of the sayde Iohn Halewater, Item that Sir

William

William de Erbingham knight, who was Vice-admirall for the sea; must bee summoned to alleage a reasonable cause (for that the sayd Sir William with his seruants expelled the said Iohn Halewater out of his ship for the space of fiftene dayes together, and tooke of the goods and victuals of the said Iohn to the summe of 114. nobles) why he ought not to pay the said summe of 114. nobles vnto Iohn Halewater aforesaid: which if hee shall not bee willing nor able to alleage before the first of April next ensuing, that then by the kings authoritie hee must be compelled to pay vnto the foresaid Iohn the said 114 nobles. Item by the inhabitants of Caleis (whose captaines were Michael Scot, Bishop, and William Horneby) 1900. nobles, which are due vnto the foresayde Eggard Scoff, because the saide soueraigne king hath giuen them in charge by the said Michael Scot and the rest concerning the payment of the summe aforesaid. Item by Iohn Bilis neere vnto Crowmer, 68. nobles, which are due vnto Nicholas Wolmersten of Elbing. Which summes of nobles must by the kings authoritie bee leuied at the hands of his subiects aboue-mentioned, betweene the time that nowe is and the feast of the Purification of the blessed virgine which shall fall in the yeere of our Lord 1411. effectually to bee deliuered and payed vnto the sayd Master generall or his lawfull procurator, or vnto his successours or their lawfull procurators, at the Citie of London, vpon the feast aforesaid.

Item it is couenanted that besides the summes specified in the foresayde letters obligatorie made in the behalfe of the said soueraigne prince, there are due to be paid vnto one Iohn Marion of Werlingham lately deceased being in his life-time the liege subiect of the foresaid soueraigne prince 200. nobles of English money in regard of certaine iniuries and robberies done and committed before the date of these presents against the foresayde Iohn, by one Eghard Scoff subiect vnto the said Master generall, for the full satisfaction of the saide damages and robberies to bee made vnto the said deceased Iohn, his wife, children, heires or executors by the said Egghard, his heires, or by the administrators of his goods at the time and place aboue-mentioned.

Item it is couenanted, confirmed, and promised, that for all the iniuries and robberies done and committed against one Iohn Dordewant of Elbing, being in his life time subiect vnto the sayd Master generall, by the liege people and subiects of the said soueraigne king the inhabitants of Scardeburgh before the date of these presents; for the full recompense of all such iniuries and robberies, there must bee payed vnto one Iohn Gruk of Dantzik eight hundred nobles of English money, vpon the feast of Easter next following in the Citie of London by them of Scardeburgh being guiltie and culpable in this behalfe; who are by definitive sentence condemned vnto the said Iohn in the summe of 800. nobles by reason of the iniuries and robberies aforesaid. Except the lawfull expenses in this behalfe layed out: they are also taxed in due time for the issue. And therefore the foresayde condemned parties (whose names are in the sentence against them pronounced in this behalfe, moze expressly contained) must in the meane season by the kings authoritie be compelled and constrained really and actually to obey the foresaid sentence, namely by deliuering and paying vnto Iohn Gruk the summe of 800. nobles at the time and place aboue mentioned, with reasonable expences, wherein also the said parties stand condemned, their lawfull taxation being reserved.

Item it is couenanted and granted, that the heires of Lord Henrie de Percy the yonger after they shall come vnto lawfull age, and shall haue attained vnto the possessions and goods of their inheritance, must be compelled by the kings authoritie (iustice going before) to make satisfaction vnto the great procurator of Marienburgh with the summe of 838. nobles in lieu of certaine corne and graine which the foresaid Lord Henrie, in the yeere 1403, bought and receiued of the said great procurator, for the vse of the castle of Zuberwik. In testimonie and confirmation of all the which promises, the said Tedericus, Lefardus, and Iohn Crolow, of their certaine knowledges haue put their seales vnto these present letters indented, in the presence of the aboue-named Richard Merlow, Iohn Kington, and William Askam, commissioners for the behalfe of England. Giuen at the Citie of London in England the fourth day of December, in the yeere of our Lord 1409.

[Nota:

A Charter of King Henry the fourth graunted in the fift yeere of his reigne to the English Marchants-resident in the parties of Prussia, Denmarke, Norwáy, Sweden and Germanie for the chusing of Gouvernours among themselves.

HENRY by the grace of God king of England and of France, and Lord of Ireland: to all to whom these present letters shall come, sendeth greeting. Know ye, that whereas, according as we are informed, through want of good and discrete rule and gouernement, sundry damages, strifes, oppressions, and wrongs oftentimes heretofore haue bene moued and committed among the Marchants of our kingdome of England remaining in the parties of Prussia, Denmarke, Norway, the Hans Steeds, and Sweden, and greater hereafter, which God forbid, are feared to be like to fall out, vnesse we put to our helping hands for the procuring of better gouernement to be maintained among the said Marchants: wee heartily desiring to preuent the perills and dangers which are like to fall out in this case, and that the sayde Marchants and others which shall traualle out of our said Realme into the partes aforesaid may iustly and faithfully be ruled and intreated, we will and graunt by the tenour of these presents to the said Marchants, that they may freely and without danger assemble and meete together as often and whensoever they please in some conuenient and honest place where they shall thinke good, and that they may choose among themselves certaine sufficient and fit persons for their gouernours in those parts at their good liking. And furthermore we giue and graunt to the said Gouvernours which are in such sort to be chosen by the aforesaid Marchants, as much as in vs lieth, speciall power and authoritie to rule and gouerne all and singular the English Marchants which hereafter shall come or repayre to the parts aforesaid by themselves or their sufficient Deputies, and to minister vnto them and euery of them in their causes and quarrels whatsoeuer, which are sprung by or shall hereafter fall out among them in the parts aforesaid full and speedie iustice, and to reforme all manner of questions, contentious discords, and debates moued or to be moued betwene the English Marchants remaining in those parts, and to seeke reformation, to redresse, appease, and compound the same. And further to redresse, restore, repayre and satisfie all transgressions, damages, mispitions, outrages, violences, and iniuries done or to be done by the aforesaid English Marchants against the Marchants of those parts: And to require, demanda and receiue the like restitution, reparations, satisfactions and amends of the Marchants of those parts or of their deputies. And by the common consent of the aforesaid English Marchants to make and establish statutes, ordinances, and customes, as shall seeme expedient in that behalfe for the better gouernement of the state of the said English Marchants: and to punish with reason according to the quantitie of their fault in that behalfe all and singular the English Marchants which shall withstand, resist or disobey the aforesaid gouernours so to be chosen or their deputies, or any of them; or any of the aforesaid statutes, ordinances, or customes. Moreover we doe ratifie, confirme, and approoue, and as ratified, confirmed, and approoued, wee command firmly and inuincibly there to be obserued all iust, and reasonable statutes, ordinances, and customes which shalbe made and established by the said gouernours, so to be chosen, in forme aforesaid, and also all iust and reasonable ordinances made & established by the late gouernours of the aforesaid English Marchants with the common consent of the sayd Marchants for this their gouernement in the parts aforesaid, according to the priuileges and authorities now granted vnto them by the Master of Prussia, or other Lords of the partes aforesaid, or which shall be made and established by the aforesaid gouernours now as is mentioned to be chosen according to the aforesaid priuileges heretofore graunted, or other priuileges hereafter to bee granted to the sayde English Marchants by the aforesaid Master and lords of the Countrey. And furthermore by the tenor of these presents wee straitly command all and singular the aforesaid English Marchants, that they attend, aduise, obey and assist, as it becommeth them, the sayde gouernours so to bee chosen, and their deputies in all and singular the premisses, and other things, which any way may concerne in this behalfe their rule and gouernement. Given in our Palace at Westminster vnder the testimonie of our great Seale the first day of June in the fift yeere of our reigne.

A note touching the mighty ships of King Henry the fift, mentioned hereafter in the treatie of keeping the Sea, taken out of a Chronicle in the Trinitie Church of Winchester.

Eodem Anno quo victoria potius est uidelicet Anno Domini 1415. & regni sui Annotertio, post bellum de Agencourt, conducti a Francis venerunt cum multis Naubus recuperaturi Harfietum. Sed Rex Anglia misit fratrem suum Iohannem Ducem Bedfordie & An-

A branch of a Statute made in the eight yeere of Henry the sixt, for the trade to Norway, Sweueland, Denmarke, and Fynmarke.

Item because that the kings most deare Uncle, the king of Denmarke, Norway & Sweueland, as the same our soueraigne Lord the king of his intimation hath vnderstood, considering the manifold & great losses, perils, hurts and damage which haue late happened as well to him and his, as to other foraines and strangers, and also friends and speciall subiects of our said soueraigne Lord the king of his Realme of England, by y going in, entering & passage of such forain & strange persons into his realme of Norway & other dominions, streits, territories, iurisdiccions & places subdued and subiect to him, specially into his Isles of Fynmarke, and elsewhere, as well in their persons as their things and goods: for eschewing of such losses, perils, hurts & damages, and that such like (which God forbid) should not hereafter happen: our said soueraigne Lord the king hath ordeined and statutes, that all and singular strangers, as well Englishmen and others willing to apply by Ship and come into his Realme of Norway and other dominions, streits, territories, iurisdiccions, Isles & places aforesaid with their ships, to the intent to get or haue fish or any other Marchandises, or goods, shall apply and come to his Towne of Northberne, where the said king of Denmarke hath specially ordeined and stablished his staple for the concourses of strangers and specially of Englishmen, to the exercise of such Marchandises: granting to the said Englishmen that they shall there inioy in and by all things the same fauour, priuileges and prerogatiues which they of the Hans did enioy. Therefore our said soueraigne Lord the king willing the loue, affection and amities to be firmly obserued, which betwixt his said Uncle and his noble progenitors of good memory, their Realmes, lands, dominions, streits, territories, iurisdiccions and their said places, and the same our soueraigne Lord the king & his noble progenitors of famous memory, his great men, subiects, Realmes, lands & dominions hath bene of old times hitherto continued, nor nothing by our said soueraigne Lord the king or his people to be attempted or done w hereby such amities by reason of any dissensions, enimities or discords might be broken: by the aduise of the Lords spirituall & temporall & of the commons of his said Realme of England, assembled in this present Parliament, hath ordeined, prohibiting that none of his liege people nor subiects of his Realme of England by audacitie of their follie presume to enter the Realmes, lands, dominions, streits, territories, iurisdiccions & places of the said king of Denmarke against y ordinance, prohibition & interdiction of y same his Uncle aboue remembred, & in contempt of the same, vpon paine of forfeiture of all their moueable goods & imprisonment of their persons at the kings will.

Another branch of a statute made in the tenth yeere of the reigne of Henry the sixt concerning the state of the English Marchants in the dominions of the king of Denmarke.

Item because that our soueraigne Lord the king at the grievous complaint to him made in this Parliament by the commons of his realme of England being in this Parliament is informed, that many of his faithfull liege people be greatly impouerished, vndone, & in point to be destroyed by the king of Denmarke & his lieges, which be of the amitie of the king our soueraigne Lord, because that they do daily take of his said faithfull subiects their goods, so that they haue taken of marchants of York and Kingdon vpon Vnl goods & marchandises to the value of v. M. li. within a yeere, and of other lieges & marchants of y Realme of England goods & cattels to the valour of xx. M. li. wherof they haue no remedie of the said king of Denmarke, nor of none other, forasmuch as none of them cometh within the Realme of England, nor nothing haue in the same Realme of England, & that y goods be taken out of the same Realme: The king willing to prouide remedy for his said liege people, hath ordeined & established, that if y goods of any of y said his lieges be or shall be taken by the said king of Denmarke or any of his said lieges, the keeper of the priuie seale for y time being, shall haue power to make to y partie grieved letters of request vnder the priuie seale, wout any other purluke to be made to any for restitution to be had of y goods so taken & to be taken.

taken. And if restitution be not made by such letters, the king our soueraigne lord by the aduise of his counsell that prouide to the partie grieved his counaible remedie, according as y^e case requirreth,

Here beginneth the Prologue of the proceſſe of the Libel of English policie, exhorting all England to keepe the ſea, and namely the narrowe ſea: ſhewing what profite commeth thereof, and alſo what worſhip and ſaluation to England, and to all English-men.

Incipit liber de

THe true proceſſe of English policie
Of utterward to keepe this regne in
Of our England, that no man may deny,
Per ſay of ſooth but it is one of the beſt,
Is this, that who ſeeth South, North, Eaſt and Weſt, Cheriſh Marchandife, keepe the admiraltie;
That we bee Maſters of the narrowe ſee.

For Sigifmond the great Emperour,
Which yet reigneth, when he was in this land
With king Henry the fiſt, Prince of honour,
Were much glory, as him thought, he found,
A mightie land which had take in hand
To werre in France, and make mortallitie,
And euer well kept round about the ſee.
And to the king thus hee ſayd: My brother,
(When hee perceiued two Townes Saleis and Douer)
Of all your Townes to chuſe of one and other,
To keepe the ſea and ſoone to come ouer:
To werre outwards and your regne to recouer:
Keepe theſe two Townes ſure, and your Maiestie
As your tweyne eyne: ſo keepe the narrowe ſee.

For if this ſea bee kept in time of werre,
Who can heere paſſe without danger and woe?
Who may eſcape, who may miſchiefe diſſerre?
That Marchandie may for by bee agoe?
For needs hem muſt take trewes euery foe:
Flanders and Spaine, and other, truſt to mee,
Or ellis hindred all for this Narrow ſee.

Therefore I caſt mee by a little writing
To ſhewe at eye this concluſion,
For conſcience and for mine acquiting
Against God and ageyne abuſion,
And towarde, and to our enemies confulion,
For foure things our Noble ſheweth to me,
King, Ship, and Swerd, and power of the ſee.

Where ben our ſhips, where ben our ſwerds become?
Our enemies bed for the ſhip ſet a ſheepe.
Alas our rule halteth, it is benome.
Who dare well ſay that ſhip ſhould take keepe?
I will aſſay, though mine heart ginne to weepe,
To doe this werke, if wee will euer thee,
For very ſhame to keepe about the ſee.

Shall any Prince, what ſo be his name,
Which hath Nobles moch leche ours,
Bee Lord of ſee: and Flemings to our blame,
Stop vs, take vs, and ſo make ſade the flowers
Of English ſtate, and diſſeigne our honours?
For towarde alas it ſhould ſo bee.
Therefore I ginne to write nowe of the ſee,

Of the commodities of Spaine and of Flanders. The first Chapter.

Figges, Raisins,
Wine Bastard, Dates,
Licoris, Ciuill Oyle, Grapnes,
White Pastill
Soye, Warr,
Iron, Wadimolle, Gotesfell, Kidfell, Saffron, Quickefiluer.

Knowe well all men that profits in certaine
Commodities called comming out of Spaine
And Marchandie, who so will weete what it is,
Bene Figs, Raisins, wine Bastard, and Dates,
And Licoris, Siuill oyle, and graine,
White Pastill Soye, and Ware is not wayne.
Pyon, Wooll, Wadimolle, Gotesfell, Kidfell also:
For Ioynt-makers full needefull bene they tweyn:
Saffron, Quickefiluer, which owne Spaine Marchandy,
Is into Flanders shipped full craftily,
Unto Bruges as to her staple saye:
The Hauen of Schuse hit Hauen for her repayre
Which is cleped Swyn tho shippes giding:
Where many vessels and saye are abiding.
But these Marchandes with their shippes great,
And such chaffare as they bye and get
By the weyes must nede take on hand
By the coasts to passe of our England,
Betwixt Douer and Calais, this is no doubt.
Who can well els such matter bring about:

And when these sayd Marchants discharged bee
Of Marchandie in Flanders nere the see,
Then they bee charged againe with Marchandy,
That to Flanders bougeth full richly.
Fine cloth of Ypre that named is better than ours,
Cloth of Curtrike, fine cloth of all colours,
Such Fustian, and also Linen cloth.
But Flemings, if yee bee not wroth,
The great substance of your cloth at the full Yee wot ye make it of our English wooll.

Flemish cloth made of English Wooll.

Then may it not linke in mannis wayne,
But that it must this Marchandy of Spaine
Both out and in by our costes passe:
Yee that sayd nay in witte was like an asse.
Wee should haue peace with the grounds tweyne
Thus if this see were kept, I dare well sayne.
For Spaine and Flanders is as eche other brother,
And nether may well liue without other:
They may not liuen to maintaine their degrees,
Without our English commodities:

The necessarie consumption of Spaine and Flanders.

Wolle and Tynne: for the wolles of England
Susteineth the Commons Flemings I vnderstand.
Then if England would her wolles restraine
From Flanders, this followeth in certaine,
Flanders of nede must with vs haue peace,
Or els shee is destroyed without leas.
Also if Flanders thus destroyed bee:
Some Marchandy of Spaine will neuer ythee:
For destroyed it is, and as in cheesse
The wolles of Spaine it commeth not to preece,
But if it be colled and minged well
Amongst the English wolles the greter delle.
For Spanish wooll in Flaunders dyed is,
And euer hath bee, that men haue minde of this:

And

And yet Wooll is one of the chiefe Harchandy
 That longeth to Spaine : who so willespie,
 It is of little value, trust vnto mee,
 With English wooll but if it mended bee.
 Thus if the sea be kept, than herken hether,
 If these two lands comen not together :
 So that the Fleete of Flanders passe nought
 That in the narrowe see it be not brought Into the Rochelle to fetch the tunole wine,
 Her into Byronuse Bay for salt so fine,
 What is then Spaine? What is Flanders also?
 As who sayd, nought, the thurst is agoe
 For the little land of Flanders is
 But a staple to other lands ywis:
 And all that groweth in Flanders graine and seede
 May not a Honeth finde hem meate and bzeed.
 What hath then Flanders, bee Flemings lieffe of loth,
 But a little Hader and Flemish Clothe:
 By Drapering of our wooll in substance
 Liuen her commons, this is her gouernance,
 Without wich they may not liue at ease.
 Thus must hem sterue, or with vs must haue peace.

Of the commodities of Portugal.

The second Chapter.

The Harchandy also of Portugal
 By diuers lands turne into sale.

Portugalers with vs haue trouch in hand :
 Whose Harchandy commeth much into England.
 They ben our friends, with their commodities,
 And wee English passen into their countrees.
 Her land hath wine, Oley, Ware, and Graine, Figges, Keylins, Hony and Corboweyne:
 Dates, and Salt, Hides, and such Harchandy:
 And if they would to Flanders passe for by,
 They should not bee suffred ones her twyes,
 For supporting of our cruell enemies,
 That is to say Flemings with her gyle:
 For changeable they are in little while.
 Then I conclude by reasons many moe,
 If we suffred neither friend nor foe,
 What so enemies, and so supporting Passe for by vs intime of werring,
 Seth our friends will not ben in cause
 Of our hindzing, if reason teade this clause:
 Then nedde from Flanders peace bee to vs sought,
 And other lands should seeke peace, dout nought:
 For Flanders is Staple, as men tell mee,
 To all nations of Christianitie.

Wine, Oley,
 Ware, Graine,
 Figges, Keylins, Hony, Corbe-weyne, Dates,
 Salt, Hides.

Note well

The commodities of pety Britaine, with her Rouers on the sea. The third Chapter.

Furthermoze to write I am faine
 Somewhat speaking of the little Britayne.
 Commoditie thereof there, is and was,

Salt,

The Britons great Rowers and Thieues.

Salt, and wine, crell cloth and canuas,
And the land of Flaunders sicklerly
Is the staple of their Marchandy.
Which Marchandie may not passe away
But by the coast of England, this is no nay.
And of this Britaine, who so trueeth Louis,
Are the greatest rowers and the greatest theuvs;
That haue bene in the sea many one peerer:
That our Marchants haue bought full dere.
For they haue tooke notable goods of ours;
On this side see, these false pelours Called of Saincte Malo, and ellis where:
Which to their Duke none obeysance will bere:
Which such colours wee haue bee hindred soze.
And sayned peace is called no werre herefoze.
Thus they haue bene in diuers coasts many Of our England, moze then rehearse can ge:
In Dorsethe coastes, and other places about,
And robbed and byent and slauie by many a rowter:
And they haue also ransomed Towne by Towne:
That into the regnes of both haue run her sowne:
Which hath bin ruth vnto this Realme and shame:
They that the sea should keepe are much to blame.
For Britayne is of easie reputation;
And Saincte Malo turneth hem to reprobation.

A storie of Edward the third his ordinance for Britayne.

Historia ostendens quam ordinationem Rex Edwardus tertius fecit contra depredatores marinos Britanniae minoris, ad debellandum eos & subiugandum Britannos minores.

HERE bring I in a storie to mee lent,
That a good Squire in time of Parliament
Tooke vnto mee well witten in a scrowe:
That I haue commond both with high and lowe,
Of which all men accorden into one,
That it was done not many peeres agone.
But when noble King Edward the thrid Reigned in grace, right thus it betyd.
For hee had a maner gelosie
To his Marchants and loued them hartly.
He felde the weyes to rule well the see,
Whereby Marchants might haue prosperitee.
That for Harlew Houndflew did he maken;
And great werre that time were undertaken,
betwixt the King and the Duke of Britayne:
At last to fall to peace both were they sayne:
Upon the wich made with conuencion
Our Marchants made hem readie towne Toward Britayne to loade their Marchandie, Warning hem friends they went soorth boldly:
But soone anon our Marchants were ytake,
And wee spode neuer the better for truce sake.
They lost her good, her nauy and spending:
But their complaint came vnto the king.
Then went he woth, and to the Duke he sent;
And complained that such harme was hent;
By conuencion and peace made so refused:
Which Duke sent againe, and him excused,
Rehearsing that the mount of Saincte Michael,

And

And Samēt Malo would neuer a dell
Be subiect vnto his gouernance,
Nor be vnder his obeyſance:
And ſo they did withouten him that deede.
But when the king anon had taken heede:
Hee in his herte ſet a iudgement,
Without calling of any Parliament, Oꝛ greate tarry to take long aduiſe
To foꝛtiſie anon he did deuife
Of Engliſh Townes thre, that is to ſay, Dertmouth, Plymouth, the thirde it is Fowey:
And gaue him helpe and notable puiſance
With inſiſtence ſet them in gouernance
Upon petty Bretayne foꝛ to werre.
Thoſe good ſea men would no moze diſſerre,
But bete hem home and made they might not rowte,
Tooke priſoners, and made them foꝛ to lowte.
And eſte the Duke, an enſample wiſe,
Wrote to the king as he firſt did deuife,
Him excuſing: But our men wood
With great power paſſed ouer the ſhoode
And werred ſoothly into the Dukes londe,
And had ny deſtroyed free and bond.
But than the Duke knewe that the townes thre
Should haue loſt all his natie Countrie,
He vndertooke by ſuretie true not falſe,
Foꝛ mount Michael and Saincte Malo als,
And other parties of the litle Brytaine,
Which to obey, as ſayd was, were not ſayne.
The Duke hymſelfe foꝛ all did vndertake:
With all his herte a full peace did hee make:
So that in all the life time of the king,
Marchants had peace withouten werring:

Statutum Regis
Edwardi tertij pro Lombardis.

He made a ſtatute foꝛ Lombards in this land,
That they ſhould in noe wiſe take on hande
Here to inhabite, here to chardege and diſchardege
But foꝛtie dayes, no moze time had they large.
This good king by witte of ſuch appeiſſe
Kept his Marchants and the ſea from miſchiefe.

Of the commodities of Scotland and draping of her wolles in Flanders. The fourth Chapter.

Mozouer of Scotland the commodities
Are Felles, Hides, and of Wooll the Fleefe.
And all theſe muſt paſſe by vs away
Into Flanders by England, ſooth to ſay.
And all her woolle was draped foꝛ to ſell
In the Townes of Poperinge and of Bell;
Which my Lord of Gloceſter with ire
Foꝛ her falſhed ſet vpon a fire.
And yet they of Bell and Poperinge
Could neuer drape her wooll foꝛ any thing,
But if they had Engliſh wooll withall.
Our goodly wooll which is ſo generall
Needefull to them in Spaine and Scotland als,
And other coſtes, this ſentence is not falſe:
Vee worthy Marchants I doe it vpon you,

Anno Domini 1436. Hen. 6. 14.

I haue

I haue this learned ye wot well where and howe:
 Ye wotte the Seaple of that Marchandie,
 Of this Scotland is Flaunders sekerly.
 And the Scots bene charged knowen at the eye,
 Out of Flanders with little Heretrie,
 And great plentie of Haberdaughters Ware,
 And halfe her shippes with cart wheelles bare,
 And with Barrowes are laden as in substance:
 Thus most rude ware are in her cheulance.
 So they may not forbeare this Flemish land,
 Therefore if wee would manly take in hand,
 To keepe this Sea from Flanders and from Spaine,
 And from Scotland, like as from petty Britaine,
 Wee should right soone haue peace for all her bottis,
 For they must needes passe by our English colts.

Of the commodities of Pruce, and High Dutch men, and Easterlings. The fifth Chapitle.

NOwe goe forth to the commodities,
 That cometh from Pruce in two maner degrees.
 For two maner people haue such vse,
 That is to say, High Dutch men of Pruse,
 And Esterlings, which might not be forborne,
 Out of Flanders, but it were verely lozne.
 For they bzing in the substance of the Beere,
 That they drinken feele too good chye, not dere.
 Pee haue heard that two Flemings togider
 Will undertake or they goe any whither,
 Or they rise once to drinke a Ferkin full,
 Of good Beerekin: sofoze they hall and pull.
 Under the board they pissen as they sit:
 This cometh of couenant of a woerthie wit.
 Withouth Caleis in their Butter they cakked
 When they fled home, and when they lesiure lacked
 To holde their siege, they went like as a Doe:
 Well was that Fleming that might truiste, and goe.
 For feare they turned backe and hyed fast,
 By Lord of Gloucester made hem so agast
 With his comming, and soughed hem in her land,
 And bzent and slowe as he had take on hand:
 So that our enemies durst not bide, nor stire,
 They fled to me we, they durst no more appeare,
 Rebuked soze for euer so shamefully,
 Unto her better euerlasting villanie.

Nowe Beere and Bakon bene fro Pruse ybrought
 Into Flanders, as loued and farre yplought;
 Diamond, Copper, Bow-staves, Steele, and Ware,
 Pelereware and grey Pitch, Terre; Board, and stere:
 And Colleyne threed, Fustian and Canuas, Card, Bokeram: of olde time thus it was.
 But the Flemings among these things dere,
 In common louen best Bakon and Beere.
 Also Pruse men maken her aduenture
 Of Plate of siluer of wedges good and sure
 In great plentie which they bzing and bye,
 Out of the lands of Beame and Hungarie:
 Which is increase full great vnto their land,
 And they bene laden, I vnderstand,

Pitch, Tarre, Board, steele,
 Collein threed, Fustian, Can-uas, Cardes, Bokeram,
 Silver-plate,
 Wedges of Siluer and Pettall.

With wollen cloth all maner of colours
By dyers crafterd full diuers, that ben ours.
And they aduenture full greatly vnto the Bay,
For salt that is needefull withouten nay.
Thus if they would not our friends bee,
We might lightly stoppe hem in the see:
They should not passe our streemes withouten leue,
It would not be, but if we should hem greue.

Of the commodities of the Genuoys and her great Caracks. Chap. 6.

The Genuois comen in sundry wises
Into this land with diuers marchandises
In great Caracks, arrayed withouten lacke
With cloth of gold, silke, and pepper blacke
They bring with them, and of scrood great plentie, Wool Dyle, Moad ashen, by vessel in the see,
Cotton, Rochalum, and good gold of Genne.
And then be charged with wolles againe I wenne,
And wollen cloth of ours of colours all.
And they aduenture, as ofte it doth befall,
Into Flanders with such things as they bye,
That is their chefe staple secretly:
And if they would be our full enemies,
They should not passe our streemes with merchandise.

The comodities and nicetees of the Venetians and Florentines, with their Gallies. Chap. 7.

The great Gallies of Venice and Florence
Be well laden with things of complacence,
All spicery and of grossers ware:
With swete wines all maner of chaffare,
Apes, and Japes, and marmosets capled,
Risses and triffles that little haue auayled:
And things with which they fetely blere our eye:
With things not induring that we bye.
For much of this chaffare that is wastable
Might be forborne for dere and deceivable.
And that I wene as for infirmities
In our England are such commodities
Withouten helpe of any other lond
Which by witte and practise both yfound:
That all humors might be voyded sure,
Which that we gleber with our English cure:
That we should haue no neede of Scamonie,
Turbit, enforbe, coirect Diagreddie,
Rubarbe, Sene, and yet they ben so needefull,
But I know things al so speedefull,
That growen here, as thole things sayd.
Let of this matter no man be dismayde;
But that a man may voyde infirmitie
Without degres set fro beyond the sea.
And yet they should except be any thing
It were but sugre, trust to my saying:
He that trusteth not to my saying and sentence,
Let him better search experience,
In this matter I will not ferther prease,
Who so not beleueth, let him leaue and cease.

Thus these galeys for this licking ware,
 And eating ware, bare hence our best chaffare:
 Cloth, woll, and tinne, which as I sayd before,
 Out of this lond worst might be forborne,
 For ech other land of necessitie
 Haue great neede to buy some of them thre:
 And we receiue of hem into this coste
 Ware and chaffare that lightly wil be losse,
 And would Iesus, that our Lordis wolb
 Consider this well both yong and old:
 Namely old that haue experience,
 That might the yong exhorte to prudence;
 What harme, what hurt, and what hinderance
 Is done to vs, vnto our great grienance,
 Of such lands, and of such nations:
 As experite men know by probations,
 By writings as discovered our counsailes,
 And false colour alwaies the countertailles
 Of our enemies: that doth vs hindering Vnto our goods, our Relme, and to the king:
 As wise men haue shewed well at eye;
 And all this is couloured by marchandise.

An example of deceit.

ALso they bere the gold out of this land,
 And sucke the thysse away out of our hand:
 As the Waspe souketh honie fro the bee,
 So miniseth our commoditee.
 Now wol ye here how they in Cotteswold
 Were wont to borrow of they shold be sold
 Her woll good as for yere and yere.
 Of cloth and etane they did in like manere:
 And in her galties ship this marchandise:
 Then soone at Venice of them men woll it bye,
 Then utterne there the chaffare by the peise,
 And lightly als there they make her reise.
 And when the goods beene at Venice sold,
 Then to carie her change they this money haue,
 They will it profer, their subtiltie to saue,
 To English marchants to yewe it out by exchange
 To be payed againe they make not strange,
 At the receiuing and sight of a letter,
 Here in England, seeming for the better,
 by foure pence lesse in the noble round:
 That is twelue pence in the golden pound.
 And if we wol haue of payment
 A full moneth, than must him needes assent
 To eight pence losse, that is shillings twaine
 In the English pound; as eft soone againe,
 For two moneths twelue pence must be pay.
 In the English pound what is that to say,
 But shillings thre: So that in pound sell
 For hurt and harme hard is with hem to dwell.
 And when English marchants haue content
 This exchange in England of assent,
 That these sayd Venecians haue in woone
 And florentines to bere her gold soone
 Duer the see into Flanders againe:
 And thus they liue in Flanders, sooth to saine,
 And in London with such cheuisance,
 That men call vsury, to our losse and hinderance.

Another

Another example of deceite.

Now lesſen well how they made vs a baleys
 When they boꝛrowed at the town of Calcis
 As they were wont, their woll ſhat was hem lent,
 For yere and yere they ſhould make payment.
 And ſometime als two yere and two yeare,
 This was ſayze || loue : but yet will ye heare,
 How they to Bruges would her woll carie,
 And for hem take payment withouten tarie,
 And ſell it ſatt for ready money in hand,
 For fifty pounds of money of loſſe they wold not wond
 In a thouſand pound, and liue thereby Till the day of payment eaſily,
 Come againe in exchange : making
 Full like uſury, as men make undertaking.
 Than when this payment of a thouſand pound
 Was well content, they ſhould haue chaſſare ſound
 If they wold fro the Staple full,
 Receiue againe three thouſand pound in woll.
 In Cortewold alſo they ride about;
 And all England, and buy withouten doubt
 That them liſt with freedom and franchise,
 Hoꝛe then we Engliſh may gotten many wiſe.
 But would God that without longer delayes
 Theſe galees were unfraught in forty dayes,
 And in forty dayes charged againe,
 And that they might be put to certaine
 To goe to oſte, as we there with hem doe.
 It were expedient that they did right ſoe,
 As we doe there. If the king wold it :
 Ah what worſhip wold fall to Engliſh wit:
 What proſite alſo to our marchandie
 Which wold of nede be cheriſhed hertilie:
 For I wold witte, why now our nauie ſayleth,
 When manie a foe vs at our dooze aſſayleth.
 Now in theſe dayes, that if there come a nede,
 What nauie ſhould we haue it is to drede.
 In Denmarke were full noble conquerours
 In time paſt, full worſthy warriours :
 Which when they had their marchants deſtroyed,
 To pouerty they fell, thus were they noyed:
 And ſo they ſtand at miſchiefe at this day.
 This learned I late well wꝛiton, this no nay.
 Therefore beware, I can no better will,
 If grace it woll, of other mennis perill.
 For if marchants were cheriſhed to her ſpeede,
 We were not likely to ſayle in any neede,
 If they be rich, then in proſperitee
 Shalbe our loude, lords, and commontee,
 And in worſhip. Now thinke I on the ſonne
 Of marchandy Richard of Whicingdon;
 That looſt ſterre, and chiefe choſen flour :
 What hath by hint our England of honour,
 And what proſite hath bin of his riches,
 And yet laſterly dayly in worthines:

About marchants, that set him one of the best :
I can no moze, but God haue him in rest.

Now the principal matter.

What reason is it that we should goe to oſſe
In their countries, & in this English coſſe
They ſhould not ſo: but haue moze liberty
Then we our ſelues now alſo moite I thee,
I would to gifts men ſhould take no heede
That letteth our thing publicke ſoꝝ to ſpeede,
Foꝝ this we ſee well euery day at eye,
Gifts and feſts ſlopen our policie,
Now ſee that fooles ben either they oꝝ wee:
But euer we haue the woꝛſe in this countree.
Therefore let hem vnto oſſe go here,
Oꝝ be we free with hem in like manere
In their countrees: and if it will not bee,
Compell them vnto oſſe, and yee ſhall ſee
Moch auantage, and moch profite ariſe,
Moch moze then I can write in any wiſe.

Of our charge and diſcharge at her marts.

Conceiue wel here, that Engliſhmen at marts
Be diſcharged, foꝝ all her craſtes and artes,
In Brabant of her marchandy
In fourteene dayes, and ageine haſtily
In the ſame dayes fourteene acharged eſt,
And if they bide lenger all is bereft,
Anon they ſhould ſoꝛſeit her goods all,
Oꝝ marchandy: it ſhould no better fall.
And we to marts in Brabant charged beene
With Engliſh cloth full good and fayze to ſeene:
We ben againe charged with mercerie,
Haburdaſher ware, and with groſſerie:
To which marts, that Engliſh men call fayzes,
Ech nation oft maketh her repayzes:
Engliſh, and French, Lombards, Gennoyes,
Catalones, theſe they take her wayes:
Scots, Spaniards, Irithmen there abides,
With great plenty byning of ſale hides,
And I here ſay that we in Brabant bye,
Flanders and Zeland moze of marchandy
In common uſe then done all other nations:
This haue I heard of marchants relations:
And if the Engliſh ben not in the marts
They ben feeble, and as nought bene her parts.
Foꝝ they byen moze, and fro purſe put out
Moze marchandie then all the other rowte, Kept then the ſee, ſhippes ſhould not bying ne fetch,
And then the carreys wold not thidre ſtretch:
And ſo thoſe marts wold full euill thee,
If we manly kept about the ſee.

Of the commodities of Brabant and Zeland and Henauld and marchandy carried by land to the marts. Cap. 8.

YET marchandy of Brabant and Zeland
The Wade and Woad, that dyers take on hand

Garlike, Onions, saltfish, To open with, Garlike and Onions,
And saltfish als for husband and commons,
But they of Holland at Caleis byen our selles,
And wolles our, that Englishmen hem selles.
And the chaffare that Englishmen doe byen
In the marts, that noe man may denien,
Is not made in Brabant that cuntree:
It commeth from out of Henauld, not by see,
But al by land, by carts, and from France,
Bourgoyne, Colein, Cameret in substance,
Therefore at marts if there be a restraint,
Then seyne plainly that list no fables paynt,
If Englishmen be withdrawen away,
Is great rebuke and losse to her affray:
As though we sent into the land of France
Ten thousand people, men of good puissance,
To werre vnto her hindring multifarie,
So ben our English marchants necessarie.
If it be thus assay, and we shall witten
Of men experthe, by whom I haue this written.
For sayd is that this carted marchandye
Draweth in value as much verily,
As all the goods that come in shippes thider,
Which Englishmen bye most and bying it hither.
For her marts ben felow, shame to say,
But Englishmen thider oze the her way.

What our marchants bye in that colte more then all oier.

A conclusion of this depending of keeping of the sea.

Than I conclude, if neuer so much by land
Were by cartes brought vnto their hand,
If well the sea were kept in gouernance
They should by sea haue no deliuerance,
We should hem stop, and we should hem destroy,
As prisoners we should hem bying to annoy.
And so we should of our cruell enemies
Make our friends for feare of marchandies,
If they were not suffered for to passe
Into Flanders. But we be frayle as glasse
And also byittle, not thought neuer abiding;
But when grace shineth soone are we sliding;
We will it not receiue in any wise:
That maken lust, enuie, and couetise:
Expone me this; and yee shall sooth it find,
Here it away, and keepe it in your mind.
Then shuld worship vnto our Noble bee
In feate and forme to lord and Gaicstie:
Like as the seale the greatest of this land
On the one side hath, as I vnderstand,
A prince riding with his sword ydraw,
In the other side sitting, soch it is in law,
Betokening good rule and punishing
In very deede of England by the king.
And it is so, God blessed mought he bee.
So in like wise I would were on the see
By the Noble, that swerre should haue power,
And the ships on the sea about vs here.
What needeth a garland which is made of Iuie Shewe a tauerne winelesse, also thynue I:

Of Hankin
hons.

If men were wise, the Frenchmen and Fleming Should bere no state in sea by werring.
Then Hankin Lyons shuld not be so bold
To stoppe wine, and shippes for to hold Unto our shame. He had be beten thence.
Alas, alas, why did we this offence,
Fully to spend the old English fames;
And the profits of England, and their names:
Why is this power called of couetise;
With false colours cast befozn our eyes:
That if good men called werriours
Would take in hand for the commons succours,
To purge the sea vnto our great auayle,
And winne hem goods, and haue by the sayle,
And on our enemies their liues to impart,
So that they might their prizes well depart e,
As reason wold, iustice and equitie;

Lombards are cause enough to hurt this land, although there were none other cause.

Falle colouring of goods
by Lombards.

Alas for buibes & gift of good, feasts & other means, that stoppen our police.
This is the very state of our time.

To make this land haue lordship of the sea.
Then shall Lombards and other fained friends Take her chalenges by colour false offends,
And say their chaffare in the shippes is,
And challenge al. Looke if this be amisse.
For thus may al that men haue bought to soze,
Ben soone excused, and saued by false colour.
Beware pee men that bere the great in hand
That they destroy the policie of this land,
By gifte and good, and the fine golden clothis,
And silke, and other: say pee not this soth is:
But if we had very experience
That they take neede with priuie violence,
Carpets, and things of price and pleasance,
Whereby stopped should be good gouernance:
And if it were as pee say to mee,
Than wold I say, alas cupiditie,
That they that haue her liues put in drede,
Shalbe soone out of winning, all for meed,
And lose her costes, and brought to ponerty,
That they shall neuer haue lust to goe to sea.

An exhortation to make an ordinance against colour of maintainers and excusers of folkes goods.

It is a mar-uelous thing that so great a sickness and hurt of þ land may haue no remedie of so many as take hesities wile men of gouernance.

For this colour that must be sayd alofte
And be declared of the great full ofte,
That our seamen wol by many wise
Spoile our friends in sterde of our enemies:
For which colour and Lombards maintenance,
The king it needes to make an ordinance
With his Counsaile that may not sayle, I trowe,
That friends should from enemies be knowe,
Our enemies taken and our friends spared:
The remedie of hem must be declared,
Thus may the sea be kept in no sell,
For if ought be spoken, wot pee well,
We haue the strokes, and enemies haue the winning:
But maintainers are parteners of the sinning,
We liue in lust and bide in couetise:
This is our rule to maintaine marchandise,
And policie that wee haue on the sea.
And, but God helpe, it will no other bee.

Of the commodities of Ireland, and policie and keeping thereof, and conquering of wild Irish: with an incident of Wales. Chap. 9.

I Cast to speake of Ireland but a litle:
Commodities of it I will euntle,
Hides, and fish, Salmon, Hake, Herringe,
Irish wool, and linen cloth, faldinge,
And martens goode ben her marchandie,
Hertes Hides, and other of * Uenerie.
Skinnes of Otter, Squirell and Irish hare,
Of sheepe, lambe, and Fore, is her chaffare,
Felles of Kidde, and Conies great plentie.
So that if Ireland helpe vs to keepe the sea,
Because the King cleped is Rex Angliæ,
And is Dominus also Hybernix,
Dlo possessed by Progenitours:
The Irish men haue cause like to ours
Our land and hers together to defend,
That no enemy should hurt ne offend,
Ireland ne vs: but as one commontie
Should helpe well to keepe about the sea:
For they haue hauens great, and goodly bayes,
Sure, wyde and deepe, of good allayes,
At Waterford, and coles many one.
And as men sayne in England be there none
Better hauens, ships in to ride,
No more sure for enemies to abide.
Why speake I thus so much of Ireland:
For all so much as I can vnderstand,
It is fertile for things that there doe growe
And multiplien, loke who lust to knowe,
So large, so good, and so commodious,
That to declare is strange and maruailous.
For of siluer and golde there is the doze,
Among the wilde Irish though they be poore.
For they are rude and can thereon no skill:
So that if we had their peace and good will
To myne and fine, and metal for to pure,
In wilde Irish might we finde the cure,
As in London faich a Juellere,
Which brought from thence golde doze to vs here,
Whereof was fyned mettall good and clene,
As they touch, no better could be seene.
Nowe here beware and heartily take intent,
As pee will answer at last iudgement,
That for slought and for rache hede
Pee remember with all your might to hede
To keepe Ireland that it be not lost.
For it is a betecasse and a post,
Under England, and Wales another:
God forbid, but ech were others brother,
Of one ligeance due vnto the king.
But I haue pierie in good faich of this thing
That I shall say with auisement:
I am aserde that Ireland will be hent:
It must away, it wol bee lost from vs,
But if thou helpe, thou Iesu gracious,
And giue vs grace al slought to leue beside.

* Hunting.

Opnes of siluer and gold in Ireland.

For much thing in my herte is hide,
 Which in another treatise I caste to write
 Made al onely for that soile and sire,
 Of fertile Ireland, wich might not be forborne,
 But if England were nigh as goode as gone.
 God forbide that a wild Irish wirlinge
 Should be chosen for to bee their kinge,
 After her conqueste for our last puillance,
 And hinder vs by other lands alliance.
 These men seyn, wich felin not, ne douten,
 That wild Irish so much of ground haue gotten There vpon vs, as likenesse may be Like as England to Grece is two or thre
 Of this our land is made comparable:
 So wild Irish haue wonne on vs vnable
 Yet to defend, and of none power,
 That our ground is there a litle corner,
 To all Ireland in true comparison.
 It needeth no more this matter to erpon,
 Which if it bee lost, as Christ Iesu forbiden,
 Farewel Wales, then England commeth to dyen,
 For alliance of Scotland and of Spaine,
 And other moe, as the pety Bretaine,
 And so haue enemies enuiron round about,
 I beseech God, that some prayers deuout
 Butt let the said apparance probable
 Thus disposed without feyned fable.
 But all onely for perill that I see
 Thus imminent, it's likely for to bee.
 And well I wotte, that from hence to Rome,
 And, as men say, in all Christendome,
 Is no ground ne land to Ireland like,
 So large, so good, so plenteous, so riche,
 That to this worde Dominus doe long.
 Then mee semeth that right were and no wrong,
 To get the lande: and it were piteous
 To vs to lese this high name Dominus.
 And all this worde Dominus of name
 Shuld haue the ground chepant wilde and tame,
 That name and people to gode might accorde
 At the ground subiect to the Lord.
 And that it is possible to bee subiect,
 Unto the king wel shal it bee detect,
 In the litle booke that I of spake,
 I trowe reson al this wol undertake.
 And I knowe wel howe it stante,
 Alas fortune be ginnereth so to scant,
 Of ellis grace, that deade is gouernance.
 For so minisheth parties of our puillance,
 In that land that wee lese euery yere,
 More ground and more, as well as yee may here.
 I herd a man speake to mee full late,
 Which was a lord of full great estate;
 Than expence of one yere done in France
 Cleered on men well willed of puillance
 This said ground of Ireland to conquire.
 And yet because England might not forbere
 These said expences gadged in one yere,
 But in thre yeres or foure gadged up here,

This is now to be greatly feared.

This lord was the Earle of Ormond that told to me this matter, that he would vnder-take it, in pain of losse of al his liueshood.
 But this proffer could not be admitted,
 Ergo malè.

Might winne Ireland to a finall conqueste,
 In one sole yeere to set vs all at reste.
 And how soone wolde this be paid ageyne:
 Which were it worth perely, if wee not feyne:
 I wol declare, who so luste to looke,
 I trowe full plainly in my litle booke.
 But couetise, and singularitie
 Of owne profite, enuie, crueltie,
 Hath doon vs harme, and doe vs euer y day,
 And musters made that shame is to say:
 Our money spent al to litle auaille,
 And our enemies so greatly doone pruaile,
 That what harme may fall and ouerthwert
 I may vnneth write more for soe of herte.

An exhortation to the keeping of Wales.

BEware of Wales, Christ Iesu mutt vs keepe,
 That it make not our childers childe to weepe,
 He vs also, so if it goe his way,
 By vnwarenes: sech that many a day
 Men haue bee fcrde of her rebellion,
 By great tokens and ostentation:
 Seche the meanes with a discrete auise,
 And helpe that they ruely not arise
 For to rebell, that Christ it forbide.
 Looke wel aboute, for God wote yee haue neede, Unfainingly, vnfeyning and vnfeynt,
 That conscience for thought you not atteynt:
 Kepe well that ground, for harne that may ben vled,
 Or afoze God mutte yee ben accused.

Of the commodious Stockfish of Island, and keeping of the Sea, namely the Narrow sea, with an incident of the keeping of Caleis. Chap. 10.

The trade of Bristowe to Island.

OF Island to write is litle nede,
 Saue of Stock-fish: Yet forsooth in deed
 Out of Bristowe, and costes many one,
 Men haue practised by nedle and by stone
 Thider wardes within a litle while,
 Within twelue yere, and without perill
 Gon and come, as men were wont of old
 Of Scarborough vnto the costes cold.
 And now so fele shippes this yeere there ware,
 That moch losse for vnfreight they bare:
 Island might not make hem to bee fraught Vnto the Hawys: thus much harne they caught.
 Then here I ende of the commoditees
 For which neede is well to kepe the seas:
 Este and Weste, South and North they bee,
 And chiefly kepe the sharpe narrow see,
 Betweene Douer and Caleis: and as thus
 That foes passe none without good will of vs:
 And they abide our danger in the length,
 What for our costis and Caleis in our strength.

An exhortation for the sure keeping of Caleis.

AND for the loue of God, and of his blisse Cherish yee Caleis better then it is.

The son of Sigmund the Emperour that Caleis was English.

See well thereto, and heare the grete complaint
That true men tellen, that woll no lies paint,
And as yee know that wixing cometh from thence;
Doe not to England for slought so great offence,
But that redressed it bee for any thing:
Lesse a song of sorrow that wee sing.
For litle wenith the foole who so might chese
What harme it were good Caleis for to lese:
What wo it were for all this English ground,
Which wel conceived the Emperour Sigismound,
That of all iopes made it one of the moste,
That Caleis was subiect vnto English coste,
Whom thought it was a iewel most of all,
And so the same in Latine did it call.
And if yee wol more of Caleis heare and knowe,
I cast to write within a litle scrowe,
Like as I haue done before by and by
In other partis of our policie.
Loke how hard it was at the first to get;
And by my counsell lightly doe not it let.
For if wee lese it with shame of face
Wilfully, it is for lacke of grace.
Howe was Harflew cried vpon, and Rone,
That they were likely for thought to be gone;
Howe was it warned and cried on in England,
I make record with this pen in my hand.
It was warned plainly in Normandie,
And in England, and I thereon did crie.
The world was defrauded, it betyde right so,
Farewell * Harflew: lewoly it was a go,
Howe ware Caleis, I can say no better:
My soule discharge I by this present letter,

After the Chapitles of commodities of diuers lands, sheweth the conclusion of keeping of the sea enuirom, by a storie of King Edgar, and two incidents of King Edward the third, and King Henrie the fifth. Chap. II.

NOwe see we well then that this round see
To our Noble by parisornitee
Under the ship shewed there the sayle,
And our king with royal apparayle,
With sword drawn bright and extant
For to chastise enemies violent;
Should be lord of the sea about,
To keepe enemies from within and without;
To behold through Christianitee
Pastor and lord enuirom of the see:
All liuing men such a prince to deede,
Of such a a regne to bee aferd in deede.
Thus proue I well that it was thus of old;
Which by a * Chronicle anon shalbe told,
Right curious: but I will interpret
It into English, as I did it gete:
Of king Edgar: A most marueilous
Prince liuing, wittie, and cheualerous:
So good that none of his predecessours
Was to him like in prudence and honours,

* Dicit Chronica,

sis, Carolus Francis, Romulus vero Romanis.

Hee was fortunate and more gracious
 Then other before, and more glorious:
 He was beneath no man in holines:
 Hee passed all in vertuous sweetnes.
 Of English kings was none so commendable:
 To English men no lesse memorable,
 Then Cyrus was to Perse by puissance,
 And as great Charles was to them of France,
 And as to the Romanes was great Romulus,
 So was to England this worthy Edgarus,
 I may not write more of his worthines
 For lacke of time, ne of his holines:
 But to my matter I him exemplifie,
 Of conditions twyne and of his policie:
 Within his land was one, this is no doubt,
 And another in the see without;
 That in time of Winter and of werre;
 When boystrous windes put see men into fere;
 Within his land about by all prouinces
 Hee passed through, perceiving his princes,
 Lords, and others of the commontee,
 Who was oppresseur, and who to pouertee
 Was drawen and brought, and who was clene in life,
 And was by mischiefe and by strife
 With ouer leding and extortion:
 And good and badde of eche condition
 Hee aspiend: and his ministers als,
 Who did trought, and which of hem was fals:
 Howe the right and lawes of the land
 Were execute, and who durst take in hand
 To disobey his statutes and decrees,
 If they were well kept in all countrees:
 Of these he made subtle inuestigation
 Of his owne espie, and other mens relation.
 Among other was his great busines,
 Well to ben ware, that great men of riches,
 And men of might in citie nor in towne
 Should to the poore doe non oppression.
 Thus was hee wont in this Winter tide
 On such enforchise busily to abide.
 This was his labour for the publike thing,
 Thus was hee occupied: a passing holy King.
 Howe to purpose, in the Sommer faire
 Of lusty season, when clered was the aire,
 He had redie shippes made before
 Great and huge, not fewe but many a floze:
 Full thre thousand and sixe hundred also Stately inough on our sea to goe.
 The Chroniclers say, these shippes were full boyseous;
 Such things long to kings victorious.
 In Sommer tide would hee haue in wonne
 And in custome to be ful redie soone,
 With multitude of men of good array
 And instruments of werre of best alloy.
 Who could hem well in any wise descriue:
 It were not light for any man aline.
 Thus he and his would enter shippes great Habilliments hauing and the flecte
 Of See werres, that ioyfull was to see

 Thus occupied for eschewin of vice.
 This knew the king that policie espied;
 Winter and Sommer he was thus occupied.
 Thus conclude I by authoritee
 Of Chronike, that enuiron the see

That worthy king I leue, Edgar by name,
 And all the Chronike of his worthy fame:
 Suffe onely this I may not passe away,
 A worde of mightie strenght till that I say,
 That graunted him God such worship here,
 For his merites, hee was without pere,
 That sometime at his great festiuittee
 Kings, and Erles of many a countree,
 And princes sele were there present,
 And many Lords came thider by assent,
 To his worship: but in a certaine day
 Hee had shippes to bee reuie of aray:
 For to visite Saint Iohns Church hee list
 Rowing vnto the good holie Baptist,
 Hee assigned to Erles, Lords, and knights
 Many ships right goodly to sights:
 And for himselfe and eight kings moo
 Subiect to him hee made kepe one of thoo,
 A good shippe, and entrede into it
 With eight kings, and downe did they sit;
 And eche of them an oze tooke in hand,
 At oze hailes, as I vnderstand,
 And he himselfe at the shippe behinde
 As Heris man it became of kinde.
 Such another rowing I dare well say,
 Was not seene of Princes many a day.
 Lo than how hee in waters got the price,
 In lande, in see, that I may not suffice.
 To tell, O right, O magnanimitee,
 That king Edgar had vpon the see.

An incident of the Lord of the sea King Ed- ward the third.

OF king Edward I passe and his prowes
 On lande, on sea yee knowe his worthines:
 The siege of Caleis, yee know well all the matter
 Round about by land, and by the water,
 Howe it lasted not peeres many agoe,
 After the battell of Creeye was ydoe:

Caleis was perded to y^e English 1347.

Howe

Howe it was closed enuiron about,
 Olde men sawe it, which liuen, this is no doubt.
 Old Knights say that the Duke of Burgoyne,
 Late rebuked for all his golden coyne;
 Of ship on see made no besieging there,
 For want of shippes that durst not come for feare.
 It was nothing besieged by the see:
 Thus call they it no siege for honestee.
 Gones assailed, but assault was there none,
 No siege, but fuge: well was he that might be gone.
 This maner carping haue knights ferre in age,
 Expert throughe age of this maner language.
 But king Edward made a siege royall,
 And wanne the towne: and in especiall
 The sea was kept, and thereof he was Lord.
 Thus made he Nobles copied of recozd;
 In whose time was no nauie on the see
 That might withstand his maiestie.
 Battell of Scuse yee may rede euery day,
 Howe it was done I leue and goe my way:
 It was so late done that yee it knowe,
 In comparison within a litle thowwe:
 For which to God giue we honour and glorie;
 For Lord of see the king was with victorie.

King Edward

 lish ships, and siege Calais.

The battell of Scuse by sea.

Another incident of keeping of the see, in the time of the marueilous werriour and victorious Prince, King Henrie the fifth, and of his great shippes,

And if I should conclude all by the King
 Henrie the fift, what was his purposing,
 When at Vampton he made the great drmons;
 Which passed other great ships of all the commons;
 The Trinitie, the Grace de Dieu, the holy Ghost,
 And other moe, which as now hee lost.
 What hope ye was the kings great intent
 Of thoo shippes, and what in minde hee meant?
 It was not ellis, but that hee cast to bee
 Lord round about enuiron of the see.
 And when Harlew had her siege about,
 There came caracks horrible great and stout
 In the narrow see willing to abite,
 To stoppe vs there with multitude of pride.
 By Lord of Bedford came on and had the cure,
 Destroyed they were by that discomfure.
 This was after the king Harlew had wonne,
 When our enemies to siege had begonue;
 That all was slaine or take, by true relation,
 To his worshippe, and of his English nation.
 There was present the kings chamberlaine
 At both battrailes; which knoweth this in certaine;
 He can it tell otherwise then I:
 Aske him, and witte; I passe forth hastily.
 What had this king of his magnificence,
 Of great courage, of wisdom, and prudence;
 Promise, for witte, audacitee,
 Of fortitude, iustice, and agilitie,
 Discretion, subtilie auisednesse,

The great ships of Henry the fift, made at Vampton.

 Liche to Edgar, and the saide Edward,
 As much of both liche hem as in regard.
 Where was on line a man moze victorious,
 And in so short time prince so marueilous:
 By land and sea, so well he him acquitte,
 To speake of him I stony in my witte.
 Thus here I leane the king with his noblesse,
 Henry the first, with whom all my processe
 Of this true booke of pure policie
 Of sea keeping, entending victorie
 I leane endly: for about in the see
 No Prince was of better strenuite,
 And if he had to this time liued here,
 He had bene Prince named withouten pere:
 His great ships shoulde haue ben put in preise,
 Unto the ende that he ment of in cheese.
 For doubt it not but that he would haue bee
 Lord and master about the round see:
 And kept it sure to stoppe our enemies hence,
 And wonne vs good, and wisely brought it thence:
 That no passage shoulde be without danger,
 And his licence on see to moue and sterre.

The Trinitie, the Grace de Dieu,
 the holy Ghost.

Of vnitie, shewing of our keeping of the see:
 with an endly or finall processe of peace by autho-ritie. Chap. 12.

Now than for loue of Christ, and of his ioy,
 Bring it England out of trouble and noy:
 Take heart and witte, and set a gouernance,
 Set many wits withouten variance,
 To one accord and vnanimitie.
 Put to good will for to keepe the see,
 Fit it for worship and profite also,
 And to rebuke of eche euill willed foe.
 Thus shall worship and riches to vs long.
 Than to the Noble shall we doe no wrong,
 To beare that coyne in figure and in deede,
 To our courage, and to our enemies deede:
 For which they must dresse hem to peace in haste,
 Or ellis their thurst to standen, and to waste.
 As this processe hath proued by and by
 All by reason and expert policie;
 And by stories which proued well this parte:
 Or ellis I will my life put in ieoparte,
 But many londs would seche her peace for nede,
 The see wel kept: it must bee soo for deede.
 Thus must Flanders for nede haue vnitee
 And peace with vs: it will non other bee,
 Within short while: and ambassadours
 Would bene here soone to treace for their succours.
 This vnitee is to God pleaseance:
 And peace after the werres variance.
 The ende of battaile is peace likerly,
 And power causeth peace finally.
 Kept than the sea about in spectall,

Which of England is the towne wall,
 Asthough England were likened to a citie,
 And the wall enuiron were the see.
 Kepe then the sea that is the wall of England:
 And than is England kept by Goddes hande;
 That as for anything that is without,
 England were at ease withouten doubt.
 And thus should euery lond one with another Entercommon, as brother with his brother,
 And liue togither werrelesse in vnitie,
 Without rancour in very charitie,
 In rest and peace, to Christs gre at pleasure,
 Without strife, debate and variance,
 Which peace men should enterche with businesse,
 And knit it soddely holding in holinesse,
 The Apostle seith, if ye list to see,
 See yee busie for to keepe vnitie
 Of the spirit in the bond of peace.
 Which is nedefull to all withouten lese.
 The Prophet biddeth vs peace for to enquire
 To pursue it, this is holy desire.
 Our Lord Iesu saith, Blessed motte they bee
 That maken peace; that is tranquillitee.
 For peace makers, as Marthew whiteth aright,
 Should be called the sonnes of God almight.
 God giue vs grace, the weyes for to keepe
 Of his precepts, and slugly not to sleepe
 In shame of same: that our verry soe
 Might be to vs conuers, and turned so.
 For in the Prouerbs is a text to this purpose
 Plaine inough without any glose:
 When mens weyes please vnto our Lord,
 It shall conuert and bring to accord
 Hims enemies vnto peace verray,
 In vnitie, to liue to Goddis pay,
 With vnitie, peace, rest and charitie.
 Hee that was here cladde in humanitie,
 That came from heauen, and steyd vp with our nature,
 Or hee ascended, he paue to vs cure,
 And left with vs peace, ageyne strife and debate,
 Hote giue vs peace, so well irradicate
 Here in this world: that after all this felle
 Wee may haue peace in the land of behest,
 Jerusalem, which of peace is the sight,
 With his brightnes of eternall light,
 There glorified in rest with his tuition,
 The Deitie to see with full fruition:
 Hee second person in diuinenesse is,
 Who vs assume, and bring vs to the blis. Amen.

Explicit libellus de Politia conseruatiua maris.

A large Charter granted by K. Edward the 4 in the second yere of his reigne, to the marchants of England resident especially in the Netherlands for their chusing of a master and gouernor among themselves, which gouernment was first appointed vnto one William Obray : with expresse mention, what authoritie he should haue.

Edward by the grace of God king of France, & of England, & lord of Ireland, to al those which shal see or heare these letters, sendeth greeting, & good wil. Know ye, that wher as we haue vnderstood, as well by the report of our louing and faithfull Counsellors, as by the common complaint and report of all men, that many vexations, griefs, debates, discords, annoyances, dissensions, & damages, haue heretofore bene done, moued, committed, and happened, and do daily fall out and happen among the common marchants & mariners, our subiects of our realmes of France & England, & our lordships of Ireland and Wales, & of other our dominions, seigneuries, and territories, because that good discretion and authoritie hath not bin obserued among our saide subiects, which abide, frequent, conuerse, remain, inhabit, & passe, aswel by sea as by land, into y parts of Brabant, Flanders, Henault, Holland, Zeland, and ditters other countreys & seigneuries belonging aswell to the high and mighty prince, our most deere and louing cousin y Duke of Burgoine, of Brabant, earle of Flanders, &c. as being in the obedience & dominion of other lords, which are in friendship, alliance, & good wil with vs: and that it is to be doubted that throught the saide inconuenience and occasion, many discommodities may ensue & fall out in time to come (which God forbid) vnles we should prouide conuenient remedie in this behalfe for our subiects aforesaid: wherefore we desiring most effectually and heartily to auoide the mischiefe of the saide inconueniences & to prouide conuenient remedie for the same, to the end that the said common marchants and mariners and others our subiects of our said realms & dominions, which at this present & hereafter shal haunt and frequent y said countreys, may be iustly & lawfully ruled, gouerned, and intreated by right & equity in the countreys aforesaid, and that equity, reason, & iustice may be ministred vnto them and eue-ry of them, accordyng as the cases shal require, we being wel assured and hauing full confidence, in the discretion, faithfulness, wisdom, experience, & good diligence of our most deare & welbeloued subiect Will. Obray our seruant, & in regard of the good, faithfull, and acceptable seruices, which he hath done vs in our realm & among our subiects in times past, & hoping that he wil do also hereafter, we haue made, ordained, constituted, committed, and established, and by the tenour of these presents, of our special grace, full power, & authority royall, we ordaine, appoint, commit, and establish, (ouring our pleasure) to be gouernor, iudge, warden of iustice, and the appurtenances & appendances therof, which we haue or may haue ouer our said common subiects the marchants tra-uailling hereafter as wel by sea as by land, and abiding in the said countreys of Brabant, Flanders, Henault, Holland, Zeland, and other countreys beyond the sea, as is aforesaid, together with the wages, rights, profits, and emoluments heretofore accustomed, & as the said Will. Obray at other times hath had and receiued of our said subiects, when he had, vsed, and exercised the said office of gouernor, & also with other such rights and profits, as hereafter shal moze plainly be declared. And furthermore for our parts we haue given him, and by these presents do giue him, as much as in vs lieth, during our pleasure, full power, authority, and special commandement, to gouerne, rule, and cause to be gouerned and ruled with good iustice by himselfe, or by his sufficient licutenants or deputies, all and euery our foresaid subiects the common marchants & mariners comming, remain-ning, frequenting, passing, & repairing from henceforth into the said countreys of Brabant, Flanders,

deers, Henault, Holland, Zeland, and other countreyes beyond the sea, as it is said, and to keep and cause to be kept, to exercise and maintain, for vs and in our place, the said office of gouernour, and to doe all such things which a faithfull gouernour ought to do, and to take knowledge and administration of the causes of the said common marchants and mariners, our subiects, and of euery of them, and of their causes and quarels moued, or hereafter to be moued in the countreis aforesaid, or within the limits & borders thereof, and to doe them full & speedy iustice. And to refozme, cause refozation, gouerne, appeale, and pacifie all contentions, discords, questions, or debates between those our said subiects moued, or to moued: and to right, redresse, repaire, restoze, and amend all transgressions, domages, enterpises, outrages, violences and iniuries committed, or to be committed: and like wise to require, to aske, demand, and receiue, restitution, reparations, restorations, and amends of our said subiects the common marchants & mariners, or of their factozs in the countreis aforesaid. And that, whensoever and as often as it shall please the said gouernour or his deputies, they may in some conuenient and honest place within the said countreis make or cause to be made, somon, and hold in our name iurisdiction, courts, and assemblies: and in our said name take administration and knowledge of causes, as it is aforesaid, and to hold and keepe pleas, for and in our behalfe, and to make agreements, mediatours, and vmpires, to iudge, to make decrees, and to minister iustice, to ordaine, appoint, censure, and constrain our saide subiects to swear and take all kind of oathes, which order of iustice and custome require and assoozbe, and to enioy our authoritie, and to vse, execute and accomplish, by way of equitie and iustice, and to doe, or cause to be done all execution and exercise of law and iustice; and to ordaine, appoint, & establish five sergeants or vnder, to doe the executions & arrests of our said court, by the commandement of the said gouernour or of his deputies, or at the request of the partie or otherwise, according as the case shall require by their aduise, and to discharge and displace the said sergeants, as shall seeme good vnto him, as often and whensoever as it shall please him, and change them, and appoint and set others in their roomes, and to require returne and answer of the court, whensoever need shall be, of all causes, quarels, and busineses in regard of the said office belonging vnto vs and to our said subiects the common marchants and mariners at all times, and as often as the case shall permit and require: and generally and specially to doe as much for vs and in our stead; in the cases before mentioned, and which hereafter shalbe declared, as we could doe or cause to be done, could say or require, if we were there present in our owne person. Whereouer wee will, and by the tenour of these presents wee giue and graunt vnto the saide gouernour, and to our saide subiects the common marchants and mariners, that as oft and whensoever it please them, they may meet and assemble in some honest and conuenient place, and by the consent of the saide gouernour to choose and appoynt among them at their pleasure, freely and without danger, certaine sufficient and fit persons to the number of twelve or vnder, which we wil haue to be named Justicers, vnto the which Justicers so elected by the saide gouernour and our saide subiects, as it is said, and to euery of them, we giue and graunt speciall power and authoritie to sitte and asside in court, with the said gouernour or his lieutenants, for their aide and assistance, and to heare the griefs, complaints, and demands of our said subiects their suites, pleas, and the state of their causes and quarels whatsoever moued or to be moued vnto the ende of their cause, and at the request of the saide gouernour, his lieutenants, or any of them, to say, propound, and plainly to expresse and declare their opinions, according to right and conscience, byon the causes brought before them and by the parties uttered and declared, and well, lawfully, and faithfully to counsell and aduise the saide gouernour or his lieutenants, to order and censure, iudge and determine, and ende the same iustly and equally, according as the case shall permit and require. And furthermore we wil, that all iust and reasonable statutes, lawes, ordinances, decrees, and constitutions made and established, or to be made and established, in the countreys aforesaid, by the consent of the said gouernour, and of the saide Justicers, shalbe corrected, amended, and made, as they shall see to be expedient in this behalfe, for the better gouernment of the estate of the common marchants and mariners our saide subiects, and shalbe held as ratified, firme, acceptable and approued; and from henceforth we accept, admit, allow and approue them for ratified and confirmed, there to be firmly and inuolably obserued, kept and obeyed. And also, of our farther fauour and grace wee wil and we grant, that by the consent of our said gouernour, our said subiects the common marchants and mariners may make and set downe in the said countreis, by their common consent, as often as they shall thinke good for their better gouernment and estate, such iust and reasonable lawes, statutes, ordinances, decrees, constitutions, and customes, as they shal thinke expedient in this behalfe: which we comand to be kept as ratified, confirmed, allowed, & approued, available, and established. Wherein alwaies, that they do not nor seeke any thing preiudicial to this present power and authoritie giuen and graunted by vs to the saide gouernour, in any poynt or article herein compised, by any meanes or way whatsoeuer: in which case if they shoulde doe any thing, or ought shoulde happen, we wil that it shal take no place, force, bigour, strength, nor vertue: neither that it shalbe of any effect, but it shalbe abolished, disanulled, and vterly frustrate; and as abolished, disanulled, and vterly frustrated, from this time forward, wee holde and take it, and will hereafter hold and take the same. And so to doe, and put in execution in our name, we haue and doe giue full and absolute power, & speciall authoritie to our said seruant William O Bray, & to his said lieutenants. And likewise, to the end that y^e course of marchandise may be kept in good estate, and that by order of iustice a firme and constant rule may be set downe among those our said subiects and marchants, we haue ordained and do ordaine, haue consented & doe consent, and by these presents haue giuen & do giue full power & especiall authoritie to our said seruant Will. O Bray gouernour aforesaid, that at al time and times when he shal thinke good, he may ordaine, elect, chuse, and appoint, in the countreis aforesaid, such ministers, officers, and seruitours as hereafter shalbe named, and such others as he shal thinke necessary, and to discharge them, and to change them, & set others in their roomes, at his good will and pleasure, vnto such a number as he shall thinke good and reasonable for the time being to be employed: as namely correctors or byokers as many as he shal thinke good, to make and to witnes the bargaines which are made or to be made, betweene our said subiects and others with whom they shal haue to do or to deale in the foresaid countreis: and also as many alnagers to alner and measure al kinds of marchandises which they shal buy or sel by the yard: and also as many weighers to weigh the marchandise which shalbe sold or bought by weight: and also so many foldes to fold their clothes, and so many packers to pack their packs, and to make their fardels, maunds, and baskets, and other things needefull for the defence & preservation of their marchandize. Al which ministers, officers, and seruitours, so chosen, elected, charged, admitted, and established by the saide gouernour, as is saide, may take their wages for their paines & attendances vpon the said marchants, according to the custome of the said countreis, and as they haue bene accustomed to take of the said marchants before these presents by vs giuen and graunted. And here vpon we haue giuen and doe giue expresse charge and commandement by vs and in our names to all our said subiects common marchants and martners, and to euery of them which shall frequent, come, remaine, passe, repaire, or inhabite within the countreis aforesaid, that they shall not make contract or bargaine, sell or buy, nor shall not cause any contract or bargaine to be made, nor in the said countreis sell or buy any maner of wares, goods, or marchandises, secretly nor openly, by way of fraude, barat, or deceite whatsoeuer, with any person or persons, of what estate, countrey, or condition soeuer they be, without he hath some of the said byokers at the bargain making, to present, report, and to testifie the said contracts or bargains before the said gouernour or others, if need require, and strife or contention should grow therof betweene them: nor to packe or cause to be packed any goods or marchandises belonging vnto them, in packs, bales, or fardels, coffers, chests, maunds, byfats, or rowles, without hauing some deputy present therat: nor to take or cause to be taken or set on worke in the said countreis, any other byokers, alnagers, weighers, folders, or packers, then the aforesaid so chosen, admitted, established, and ordained by the saide gouernour, & hereto authorized in our name, as it is said, vnder paine of falling into, and incurring of our displeasure, and of forfeiture, and confiscation of all such goods, wares, and marchandises, which shalbe found to haue passed by other hands or order, then that or those which are before mentioned: the fourth part of which forfeitures and confiscations shall be employed to the repairing and maintenance of two chappels founded to the honour of Saint Thomas of Canterburie by our saide subiects, in the townes of Bruges in Flanders, and of Middleborough in Zealand; the other fourth part to vs, & our vse; the third fourth part to our said cousin of Burgundie, or the natural Lord of the countrey wherein the saide goods shall be found; and the fourth fourth part to him or them, which shall discouer, detect, or finde out the saide fraude. And also that none of our said subiects shall unlade or cause to be unladen, vnder any colour nor other wise, nor vnpacke, in the countreis abovesaide, no kind of wares, goods, nor marchandises whatsoeuer, which they shall bring or cause to bee brought into the countreys aforesaide, comming out of our countreys, dominions, or obeplance, without first and beforehand they make the gouernour or his deputies acquainted with their arriual, and craue leaue, and deliuer, shewe, and declare their cockets, that it may duly appeare, that the saide goods and marchandises haue truly and lawfully payde vnto vs our rightes and customes, and not to vnpacke them but in the presence of the saide gouernour, his lieutenants or deputies, vpon paine of forfeiture, and confiscation of the saide goods, in maner and forme before declared in the foresaide article. And if it bee found by the visitation of the saide gouernour, his lieutenants or deputies, that any goods, wares, or marchandises whatsoeuer be arriued and discharged in the countreis aforesaid, belonging to our saide subiectes, not lawfully customed and acquited towarde vs of our righte and custome, for which they cannot nor are not able to make any due prooſe of our letters of coquet, as is mentioned, or if they finde any other fraud: we will, we ordaine, and we grant, that the ſayd gouernour, his lieutenants or deputies may ſeize vpon the ſayd goods on our behalf, and may conſiſcate and forfeit the ſame, diſtributing the ſame into foure parts in maner aforeſayd. And alſo we will, that euerie one of the ſayd packes, ſardels, baſkets, maunds, cofers, tunnes, bales, routes, and other furnitures and gear, wherein the ſayd marchandises ſhalbe packed, to be ſent out of the ſaid countreys, ſhall not be laden vpon ſhips, carts, nor horſes, to come into our dominion, without being firſt ſealed with a ſeale ordained by vs and giuen by the ſayd gouernour, vpon paine to be forfeited, applyed, and conſiſcated to vs and into our hand, if they be found unſigned and not ſealed with the ſeale. And for euerie piece of marchandise which ſhall be ſealed with the ſayd ſeale, they ſhall pay to the ſayd ſealer two pence of groſſe money of Flanders, which ſhall goe to the proſite of the ſayd gouernour. And forasmuch as according to right and conſcience, we ought not to vſe the labour, trauels, nor ſeruite of any man, without waging, paying, and fully contenting him according to reaſon and equity, eſpecially when we doe appoint any perſon or perſons to doe or cauſe to be done ſo great trauels, labours, buſines, and executions, as theſe which are contayned in this preſent charter, alſwell for the benefit and proſit of vs and our ſelues, as for the hoſelome, perfect, & good gouernment of our ſayd ſubiectes: we by the good aduiſe and deliberation of the ſayd lordes of our priuie counſell, haue granted and giuen, and as beſore, doe grant and giue, of our ſayd grace, to the ſayd William O Bray our ſayd ſeruant and gouernour aboue named, during our pleaſure, for part of his wages and fee of the ſayd office, one pennie of our money of England of the value of a liuer of groſſe money of Flanders, vpon al and ſingular the goods, wares and marchandises of our ſayd ſubiectes frequenting the ſayd countreys, to be leuyed, gathered, receiued, and payed vnto the ſayd William O Bray or to his deputies, vpon the ſayd wares and marchandises belonging vnto our ſayd ſayd ſubiectes buying and ſelling, or which they ſhall cauſe to ſell, buy, put away, trucke or exchange in the countreys aboueſaid, alſwell of the goods and marchandises which they ſhall bring or cauſe to be brought into the ſayd countreys, as of all other goods which they ſhall lade and carie, or cauſe to be caried and conueyed out of thoſe countreys into our dominion or elſewhere into any other part whatſoeuer. And to cauſe the ſame to be gathered, receiued, leauied and payed, we haue giuen, and by theſe preſents doe giue full power and ſpeciall authoritie vnto the ſayd William O Bray, and to his lieutenants and deputies aforeſayd, to leaue, gather, and cauſe to be leauied and receiued the ſayd money, in forme and maner aboue mentioned, to his proſite and vſe, during our pleaſure: and to enioy and vſe the ſame as his proper goods, without any contradiſtion, conſtraining and arreſting if neede bee, as well on land, as on the water, our ſayd ſubiectes, their ſayd goods, and euery of them, by way of law and iuſtice, and to cauſe them to yeelde and pay the ſayd money, vpon the ſayd goods and marchandises, as is aforeſayd. For ſuch is our pleaſure, and ſo will we haue it done without contradiction or impeachment to him and his, during our pleaſure. And alſo we will that the ſayd William O Bray, ouer and aboue that which is ſayd, ſhall take, gather, and receiue of our ſayd ſubiectes from henceforth yearely, during our pleaſure, all ſuch and like wages and proſits, as he had and receiued of our ſayd ſubiectes, in the yeare 1458, when hee held and exerciſed the ſaid office of gouernour, without diminuiſhing or rebating any thing thereof, notwithstanding this preſent augmentation made, increaſed, and done vnto him, of our grace and fauour: and that hee ſhall gather, take, and receiue the ſame in ſuch forme and manner, as the other money aboue mentioned is to be gathered. And to the ende that the ſayd William O Bray may haue and take poſſeſſion, ſeaſon, and entrance of the ſaid office of gouernour in our name we haue and doe place him, by the deliuey of theſe preſents, in poſſeſſion, ſeaſon, and entrance of the ſaid office, and of the rights, proſits, ſtipends, wages, and monies aforeſayd, to begin to exerciſe the ſayd office of gouernour in our name, the firſt day of May next enſuing after the date of theſe preſents, for the ſayd William O Bray to hold and exerciſe, practiſe and vſe the ſame, during our pleaſure, with the ſayd wages, monies, rights, and proſits aboue mentioned, without any contradiction or impeachment. And all and ſingular our ſubiectes the common marchants and mariners, which ſhall be contrary, rebellious, and diſobedient to the ſaid gouernour ſo ordained by vs, to his ſaid lieutenants, to the ſayd iuſtices ſo choſen, or to any of them, or to any of the ſtatures, lawes, decrees, ſentences, ordinances, and cuſtomes, offices, gifts, and grants aboueſayd, let them grieuouſly be puniſhed by the ſayd gouernour or his lieutenants, in this behalfe, according to the quantity of their offences, and the exigencie of the caſes. We doe ſommon, commaund, ſtraily and expreſſly enioine by theſe preſents all and euery our ſaide ſubiectes, that vnto the ſayd gouernour ſo by vs ordained, to his lieutenants, attornies, or deputies, and alſo to the ſaid iuſtices, officers, and miniſters, in all and euery the things aforeſaid, and others any waie concerning in this behalfe our ſaid ordinances, their gouernment and rule, the circumſtances and dependances thereon

that they giue their attendance, counsaile, comfort, obedience, and aide, diligently without fault or difficulty, surely, safely, fully and peaceably: without doing, inferring, or inflicting, or suffering to be done, inferred, or inflicted to them or any of them in body or goods, any disturbance or impeachment, in any maner whatsoever: but rather if any thing bee done vnto them contrary and to the preiudice of these presents, they shall remoue and cause the same to be remoued, and that which shall be hindered they shall set at free deliuerance, vpon payne to fall into and to incurre our high displeasure. For such is our pleasure and so will wee haue it, notwithstanding anie letters fallably crept in, obtained, or to be obtained contrary hereunto. And you our subiects, the common marchants and mariners, so behaue your selues, that you may receiue commendation of vs for your good obedience, knowing that such as shall be found doing or to haue done the contrary, we will see them so punished without redemption, that they shall bee an example to all rebellious persons. We pray and most instantly require in the ayde of equitie, all others our friends, allies, and well-willers, as well princes and potentates, as their iudicers, officers, lieutenants, deputies, commissaries, and subiects, and euery of them, in regard of equitie; that they would vouchsafe, and that it would please them to giue, doe, and lend comfort, ayde, assistance, and prisons if neede require, to our sayd gouernour, his lieutenants, commissaries, deputies, iudicers, and others our officers and ministers aforesayd: and herein wee pray them on our behalfe, and in our owne name. And it may please them herein to doe so much, that we may haue occasion to thanke them, and to accompt our selues beholding for the same: and as they would that we should do for them in the like matter, or in a greater: which we will willingly doe, if we be required thereunto by them. In witness whereof we haue caused these our letters to bee made patents. Witness our selues at Westminster, the sixteenth of April, in the second yere our rigne.

A declaration of the Indies and lands discovered, and subdued vnto the Emperour, and the king of Portingal: And also of other partes of the Indies and rich countries to be discovered, which the worshipfull M. Robert Thorne merchant of London (who dwelt long in the citie of Siuil in Spaine) exhorted king Henric the eight to take in hand.

MOST EXCELLENT PRINCE,

Experience proueth that naturally all princes bee desirous to extend and enlarge their dominions and kingdomes. Wherefore it is not to be marueiled, to see them euery day procure the same, not regarding any cost, perill, and labour, that may thereby chance, but rather it is to be maruelled, if there be any prince content to liue quiet with his owne dominions. For surely the people would thinke he lacketh the noble courage and spirit of all other.

The world knoweth that the desires of Princes haue bene so seruent to obtaine their purpose, that they haue aduentured and proued things to mans coniecture impossible, the which they haue made possible, and also things difficult haue made facill: and thus to obtaine their purpose, haue in maner turned vp and downe the whole world so many times, that the people inhabiting in the farthest region of the Occident haue pursued with great distress, labours and perils, to penetrate and enter into the farthest regions of the Orient: and in likewise those people of the said parts of the Orient haue had no lesse labour and desire to enter and penetrate into the farthest land of the Occident, and so following their purchase haue not ceased untill they could passe no farther by reason of the great seas.

This naturall inclination is cause, that scarcely it may be said, there is any kingdome stable, nor king quiet, but that his owne imagination, or other princes his neighbours doe trouble him. God and nature hath provided to your Grace, and to your gracious progenitors, this Realme of England, and set it in so fruitfull a place, and within such limites, that it should seeme to be a place quiet and aparted from all the foresayd desire. One speciall cause is, for that it is compassed with the Sea: by reason thereof it seemes, this notwithstanding, their desires and noble courages haue bene most commonly like vnto others: and with marueilous great labours, costes and perils, they haue traueiled and passed the Seas, making warre, not onely with Kings and dominions nigh neighbours, but also with them of farre countries, and so haue woonne and conquered many rich and fayre dominions, and amplified this your Graces Realme with great victorie and glozy. And also now of late your Grace hauing like courage and desire, and not without iust cause, to enlarge this your kingdome, and demaund your limits and tribute of the French king, which at that present he restrained, your Grace in person passed with a great power into France, putting your Graces person to great paine and labour, and without doubt victoriously you had conquered the sayd Realme of France, as ye began, if your aduersary had not reconciled himselfe, and knowledged your Graces right and title: and so promised truly to pay the tribute then due, & fulfill your request in all things; and also desired your Grace for peace, the which of your clemencie you could not refuse.

Now I considering this your noble courage and desire; and also perceiuing that your Grace may at your pleasure, to your greater glory, by a godly meane, with little cost, perill, or labour to your Grace or any of your subiects, amplifie and enrich this your sayd Realme, I know it is my bounden duety to manifest this secret vnto your Grace, which hitherto, as I suppose, hath bene hid: which is, that with a small number of ships there may bee discovered diuers New lands and kingdomes, in the which without doubt your Grace shall winne perpetuall glory, and your subiectes infinite profite. To which places there is left one way to discover, which is into the North: for that of the foure partes of the worlde, it seemeth thre parts are discovered by other Princes. For out of Spaine they haue discovered all the Indies and Seas Occidentall, and out of Portugal all the Indies and Seas Orientall: so that by this part of the Orient & Occident, they haue compassed the world. For the one of them departing toward the Orient, and the other toward the Occident, met againe in the course or way of the middest of the day, and so then was discovered a great part of the same Seas and coastes by the Spanyards. So that now rest to be discovered the sayd North partes, the which it seemeth to mee, is onely your charge and duety. Because the situation of this your Realme is thereunto nearest and aptest of all other: and also for that you haue already taken it in hand. And in mine opinion it will not seeme well to leaue so great and profitable an enterpryse, seeing it may so easily and with so little cost, labour, and danger, be followed and obtayned: though heretofore your Grace hath made thereof a prooue, & found not the commodity thereby as you trusted, at this time it shall be no impediment. For there may be now prouided remedies for things, then lacked, and the inconueniences and lets removed, that then were cause that your Graces desire tooke no full effect, which is, the courses to be changed, & followed the foresaid new courses. And concerning the mariners, shippes, and prouision, an order may be deuised and taken meete and conuenient, much better then hitherto. By reason whereof, and by Gods grace, no doubt your purpose shall take effect. Surely the cost herein will be nothing, in comparison to the great profit. The labour is much lesse, yea nothing at all, where so great honour and glory is hoped for: and considering well the courses, truly the danger & way is shorter to vs, then to Spaine or Portugal, as by euident reasons appereth.

And now to declare something of the commodity and vtilitie of this Nauigation and discouerie: it is very clere and certaine, that the Seas that commonly men say, without great danger, difficulty and perill, yea rather it is impossible to passe, that those same Seas be nauigable and without anie such danger, but that shippes may passe and haue in them perpetuall clerenesse of the day without any darkenesse of the night: which thing is a great commodity for the nauigantes, to see at all times round about them, as well the safeguards as dangers, and how great difference it is betweene the commodity and perils of other which leese the most part of every foure and twentie houres the said light, and goe in darkenesse groping their way, I thinke there is none so ignorant but perceiue this more plainly, then it can be exprest. Yea what a vantage shal your Graces subiects haue also by this light to discover the strange lands, countries, and coastes: For if they that be discovered, to saile by them in darkenesse is with great danger, much more then the coastes not discovered be dangerous to trauell by night or in darkenesse. Yet these dangers or darkenesse hath not letted the Spanyards and Portugals and other, to discover many vnknown Realmes to their great perill. Which considered (and that your Graces subiects may haue the same light) it will seeme your Graces subiects to be without actiuitie or courage, in leauing to doe this glorious and noble enterpryse. For they being past this litle way which they named so dangerous, (which may be two or thre leagues before they come to the Pole, and as much more after they passe the Pole) it is clere, that from thence forth the seas and landes are as temperate as in these partes, and that then it may be at the will and pleasure of the mariners, to choose whether they will saile by the coastes, that be colde, temperate or hote. For they being past the Pole, it is plaine, they may decline to what part they list.

If they will goe toward the Orient, they shall inioy the regions of all the Tartarians that extend toward the midday, and from thence they may goe and proceede to the land of the Chinas, and from thence to the land of Cachao Orientall, which is of all the maine land most Orientall that can be reckoned from our habitation. And if from thence they doe continue their nauigation, following the coastes that retorne toward the Occident, they shall fall in with Malaca, and so with all the Indies which we call Orientall, and following the way, may returne hither by the Cape of Buona Speranza: and thus they shall compasse the whole worlde. And if they will take their course after they be past the Pole, toward the Occident, they shall goe in the backe side of the new found land, which of late was discovered by your Graces subiects, untill they come to the backe side and South Seas of the Indies Occidentall. And so continuing their voyage they may returne through the streight of Magellan to this countrey, and so they compasse also the world by that way: and if they goe this third way, and after they be past the Pole, goe right toward the Pole Antartike, and then decline toward the lands and Islands situated between the Tropikes, and under the Equinoctiall, without doubt they shall finde there the richest landes and Islands of the world of golde, precious stones, balmes, spices, and other things that we here esteeme most: which come out of strange countreies, and may returne the same way.

By this it appeareth, your Grace hath not onely a great advantage of the riches, but also your subiects shall not traueil halfe of the way that other doe, which goe round about as aforesayd.

The booke made by the right worshipful M. Robert Thorne in the yeere 1527. in Siuill, to Doctour Ley, Lord ambassadour for king

Henry the eight, to Charles the Emperour, being an information of the parts of the world, discovered by him and the king of Portingall: and also of the way to the Moluccaes by the North.

Right noble and reuerend in cr. I haue receiued your letters, and haue procured and sent to know of your seruant, who your Lordship wrote, should be sicke in Merchena. I cannot there or els where heare of him, without he be returned to you, or gone to S. Lucar, and thipt. I cannot iudge but that of some contagious sicknesse hee died, so that the owner of the house for defaming his house would bury him secretly, and not be knowen of it. For such things haue often times happened in this countrey.

Also to write vnto your Lordshippe of the new trade of Spicery of the Emperour, there is no doubt but that the Islands are fertile of Cloues, Nutmegs, Race, and Cinnamon: and that the said Islands, with other there about, abound with golde, Rubies, Diamonds, Balasses, Granates, Iacincts, and other stones & pearles, as all other lands, that are vnder and neere the Equinoctiall. For we see, where nature giueth any thing, she is no niggard. For as with vs and other, that are aparted from the said Equinoctiall, our mettals be Lead, Tinne, and Iron, so theirs be Gold, Silver, and Copper. And as our fruites and graines be Apples, Pears, and Corne, so theirs be Dates, Nutmegs, Pepper, Cloues, and other Spices. And as we haue Icar, Amber, Cristall, Iasper, and other like stones, so haue they Rubies, Diamonds, Balasses, Sapphyres, Iacincts, and other like. And though some say that of such precious mettals, graines, or kind of spices, and precious stones, the abundance and quantity is nothing so great, as our mettals, fruites or stones aboue rehearsed: yet if it be well considered, how the quantitie of the earth vnder the Equinoctiall to both the Tropicall lines, (in which space is found the sayd Golde, spices and precious stones) is as much in quantity, as almost all the earth from the Tropikes to both the Poles; it cannot be denied but there is more quantity of the sayd mettals, fruites, spices, and precious stones, then there is of the other mettals and other things befoze rehearsed. And I see that the preciousnes of these things is measured after the distance that is between vs, and the things that we haue appete vnto. For in this nauigation of the Spicerie was discovered, that these Islands nothing set by golde, but set more by a knife and a nayle of Iron, then by his quantitie of Golde: and with reason, as the thing more necessary for mans seruice, And I doubt not but to them should be as precious our cozne and seedes, if they might haue them, as to vs their spices: & likewise the pieces of glasse that here we haue counterfeited are as precious to them, as to vs their stones: which by experience is seene daylie by them that haue trade thither. This of the riches of those countreies is sufficient.

letters.*

Touching that your Lordship wrote, whether it may be profitable to the Emperour or no: it may be without doubt of great profite: if, as the king of Portingall doth, he would become a merchant, and prouide shippes and their lading, and trade thither alone, and defend the trade of these Islands for himselfe. But other greater businesse withholdeth him from this. But still, as now it is begunne to be occupied, it would come to much. For the shippes comming in safetie, there would thither many euery yere, of which to the Emperour is due of all the wares and iewels that come from thence the fift part for his custome cleare without any cost. And besides this hee pur-

ceeth in euery nott a certaine quantitie of money, of which hee employeth of the gaine pound and pounds like as other aduenturers doe. In a flecte of three shippes and a Carauel that went from this citie armed by the marchants of it, which departed in Aprill last past, I and my patience haue one thousand foure hundred duckets that we employed in the sayd flecte, principally for that two English men, friends of mine, which are somewhat learned in Cosmographie, should goe in the same shippes, to bring me certaine relation of the situation of the countrey, and to be expert in the nauigation of those seas, and there to haue informations of many other things, and aduise that I desire to knowe especially. Seeing in these quarters are shippes, and mariners of that countrey, and cardes by which they saile, though much unlike ours, that they should procure to haue the said cardes, and learne how they understand them, and especially to know what nauigation they haue for those Islands Northwards, and Northeastward.

This was the flecte wherein Cabot discouered the river of Plate, 1526.

For if from the sayd Islands the sea did extend, without interposition of land, to passe from the North point to the Northeast poynt one thousand seuen hundred or one thousand eight hundred leagues, they should come to the New found Islands that we discouered, and so we should be nearer to the sayd Spicerie by almost two thousand leagues then the Emperour, or the king of Portingal are. And to aduise your Lordship whether of these Spiceries of the king of Portingal or the Emperours is neerer, and also of the titles that either of them hath, and howe our New found lands are parted from it, (for that by writing without some demonstration, it were hard to giue any declaration of it) I haue caused that your Lordship shall receiue here with a little Mappe or Card of the world: the which, I feare me, shall put your Lordship to moze labour to vnderstand, then me to make it, onely for that it is made in so litle roome that it cannot be but obscurely set out, that is desired to be seene in it, and also for that I am in this science litle expert: Yet to remedy in part this difficulty, it is necessary to declare to your Lordship my intenc, with which I trust you shall perceiue in this Card part of your desire, if, for that I cannot expresse mine intenc, with my declaration I doe not make it moze obscure.

Note.

The New found Islands discouered by the English.

A Mappe of the world.

First, your Lordship knoweth that the Cosmographers haue diuided the earth by 360 degrees in latitude, and as many in longitude, vnder the which is comprehended all the roundnes of the earth: the latitude being diuided into foure quarters, ninetie degrees amount to euery quarter, which they measure by the altitude of the Poles, that is the North and South starres, being from the line Equinoctiall: all they come right vnder the North starre the said ninetie degrees: and as much from the sayd line Equinoctiall to the South starre be other ninety degrees. And as much moze is also from either of the sayd starres agayne to the Equinoctiall. Which imagined to be round, is soon perceiued thus, 360 degrees of latitude to be consumed in the said foure quarters of ninetie degrees a quarter: so that this latitude is the measure of the worlde from North to South, and from South to North, And the longitude, in which are also counted other 360, is counted from West to East, or from East to West, as in the Card is set.

The sayd latitude your Lordship may see marked and diuided in the ende of this Card on the left hand: so that if you would know in what degrees of latitude any region or coast standeth, take a compasse, and set the one foot of the same in the Equinoctial line right against the said region, & apply the other foote of the compasse to the said region or coast, & then set the sayd compasse at the end of the Card, where the degrees are diuided. And the one foote of the compasse standing in the line Equinoctiall, the other will shew in the scale the degrees of altitude or latitude that the said region is in. Also the longitude of the world I haue set out in the nether part of the Card, containing also 360 degrees: which begin to be counted after Ptoleme and other Cosmographers from an headland called Capo Verde, which is ouer against a little crosse made in the part Decidental, where the diuision of the degrees beginneth, and endeth in the same Capo Verde.

To knowe the latitudes.

Now to know in what longitude any land is, your Lordship must take a ruler or a compasse, and set the one foot of the compasse vpon the land or coast whose longitude you would know, and extend the other foot of the compasse to the next part of one of the transuerfall lines in the Oriental or Occidental part: which done, set the one foot of the compasse in the said transuerfall line at the end of the nether scale, the scale of longitude, and the other foot shew with the degree of longitude that the region is in. And your Lordship must vnderstand that this Card, though litle, containeth the vniuersall whole world betwixt two collateral lines, the one in the Occidental part descendeth perpendicular vpon the 175 degree, & the other in the Oriental on the 170 degree, whose distance measureth the scale of longitude. And that which is without the two said transuerfall lines, is onely to shew how the Oriental part is ioined with the Occident, and Occident with the Orient. For that that is set without the line in the Oriental part, is the same that is set within the other line in the Occidental part: and that that is set without the line in the Occidental part, is the same that is set within the line in the Oriental part, to shew that though this figure of the world

To knowe the longitudes.

world in plaine of flatte seemeth to haue an end, yet one imagining that this sayd Card were set vpon a round thing, where the endes should touch by the lines, it would plainly appeare howe the Orient part ioyneth with the Occident, as there without the lines it is described and figured.

And for moze declaration of the said Card, your Lordship shall vnderstand, that beginning on the part Occidental within the line, the first land that is set out, is the maine land and Islands of the Indies of the Emperour. Which maine land of coast goeth Northward, and finisheth in the land that we found, which is called here Terra de Labrador. So that it appeareth the sayd land that we found, and the Indies to be all one maine land.

The sayd coast from the sayd Indies Southward, as by the Card your Lordshippe may see, commeth to a certaine straight Sea, called Estrecho de todos Santos: by which straight Sea the Spaniards goe to the Spiceries, as I shall declare moze at large: the which straight Sea is right against three hundred fiftene degrees of longitude, and is of latitude or altitude from the Equinoctiall three and fifty degrees. The first land from the sayd beginning of the Card toward the Orient are certaine Islands of the Canaries, and Islands of Capo verde. But the first maine land next to the line Equinoctiall is the sayd Capo verde, and from thence Northward by the straight of this Sea of Italic. And so followeth Spayne, France, Flanders, Almaine, Denmarke, and Norway, which is the highest parte toward the North. And ouer against Flanders are our Islands of England and Ireland. Of the landes and coastes within the streights I haue set out onely the Regions, diuiding them by lines of their limits, by which plainly I thinke your Lordship may see, in what situation euerie region is, and of what highnesse, and with what regions it is ioyned. I doe thinke few are left out of all Europe. In the parts of Asia and Affrica I could not so wel make the sayd diuisions: for that they be not so wel knownen, nor need not so much. This I write because in the said Card be made the said lines & strikes, that your Lordship should vnderstand wherefore they doe serue. Also returning to the foresaid Capo verde, the coast goeth Southward to a Cape called Capo de buona speranza: which is right ouer against the 60. & 65. degree of longitude. And by this Cape go the Portugals to their Spicerie. For from this Cape toward the Orient, is the land of Calicut, as your Lordship may see in the habland ouer against the 130. degree. From the sayd Cape of Buona speranza the coast returneth toward the line Equinoctiall, and passing forth, entereth the red sea, & returning out, entereth again into the gulf of Persia, and returneth toward the Equinoctiall line, till that it commeth to the headland called Calicut aforesayd, and from thence the coast making a gulf, where is the riuer of Ganges, returneth toward the line to a headland called Malaca, where is the principall Spicerie: & from this Cape returneth and maketh a great gulf, and after the coast goeth right toward the Orient, and ouer against this last gulf and coast be many Islands, which be Islands of the Spiceries of the Emperour. Upon which the Portugals and he be at variance.

The sayd coast goeth toward the Orient, and endeth right against the 155. degrees, and after returneth toward the Occident Northward: which coast not yet plainly knownen, I may ioine to the New found lande found by vs, that I spake of before. So that I finish with this briefe declaration of the Card aforesayd. Well I know I should also haue declared how the coasts within the straight of the Sea of Italic runne. It is playne that passing the streights on the North side of that Sea after the coast of Granada, and with that which pertaines to Spaine, is the coast of that which France hath in Italic. And then followeth in one piece all Italic, which land hath an arme of the Sea, with a gulf which is called Mare Adriaticum. And in the bottom of this gulf is the cite of Venice. And on the other part of the sayd gulf is Sclauonia, and next Grecia, then the streits of Constantinople, and then the sea called Euxinus, which is within the sayd streights: and coming out of the sayd streights, followeth Turcia maior (though now on both sides it is called Turcia.) And so the coast runneth Southward to Syria, and ouer against the sayd Turcia are the Islands of Rhodes, Candie, and Cyprus. And ouer against Italic are the Islands of Sicilia and Sardinia. And ouer against Spaine is Maiorca and Minorca. In the ende of the gulf of Syria is Iudea. And from thence returneth the coast toward the Occident, till it commeth to the streights where we began, which all is the coast of Affrike and Barbarie. Also your Lordship shall vnderstand that the coastes of the Sea throughout all the world, I haue coloured with yellow, for that it may appeare that all that is within the line coloured yellow, is to be imagined to be maine land or Islands: and all without the line so coloured to bee Sea: whereby it is easie and light to know it. Albeit in this little roome any other description would rather haue made it obscure then cleere. And the sayd coastes of the Sea are all set iustly after the maner and forme as they lie, as the nauigation approueth them throughout all the Card, saue onely the coastes and Isles of the Spicerie of the Emperour which is from ouer against the 160. to the 215. degrees of longitude. For these coastes and situations of the Islands, euery of the Cosmographers and pilots pilots of Portingall & Spayne do set after their purpose. The Spaniards moze towards the Orient, because they should appeare to appertain to the Emperour: & the Portingalls moze toward the Decident, for that they should fall within their iurisdiction. So that the pilots and navigants thither, which in such cases should declare the truth, by their industrie do set them falsly every one to fauour his prince. And for this cause can be no certaine situation of that coast and Ilands, till this difference betwixt them be verified. Now to come to the purpose of your Lordships demaund touching the difference between the Emperour and the king of Portingall, to vnderstand it better, I must declare the beginning of this discouerie. Though peradventure your Lordship may say that in that I haue writtten ought of purpose, I fall in the prouerbe, A gemino ouo bellum: But your Lordship commanded me to be large, and I take licence to be prolixious, and shalbe peradventure tedious, but your Lordship knoweth that Nihil ignorantia verbosius.

Now called

Note.

Doctor Leys
demaund.

In the yeere 1484 the king of Portingall minded to arme certaine Caruels to discouer this Spicerie. Then forasmuch as he feared that being discouered, every other prince woulde sende and trade thither, so that the cost and perill of discouering should be his, and the profite common: wherefore first hee gaue knowledge of this his minde to all princes Christened, saying that hee would seeke amongst the infidels newe possessions of regions, and therefore would make a certaine armie: and that if any of them would helpe in the cost of the sayd armie, he should enioy his part of the profite or honour that should come of it. And as then this discouering was holden for a strange thing and vncertaine. Some they say, that all the Princes of Christendome answered, that they would be no part of such an armie, nor yet of the profite that might come of it. After the which he gaue knowledge to the Pope of his purpose, and of the answer of all the Princes, desiring him that seeing that none would helpe in the costes, that he would iudge all that should be found and discouered to be of his iurisdiction, and command that none other princes should intermeddle therewith. The Pope sayd not as Christ saith, Quis me constituit iudicem inter vos? He did not refuse, but making himselfe as Lord and Iudge of all, not onely granted that all that should be discouered from Orient to Decident, should be the kings of Portingall, but also, that vpon great censures no other Prince should discouer but he. And if they did, all to bee the kings of Portingall. So he armed a flecte, and in the yeere 1497 were discouered the Ilands of Calicut, from whence is brought all the spice he hath.

The Pope reprehended.

After this in the yeere 1492 the king of Spaine willing to discouer lands toward the Decident without making any such diligence, or taking licence of the king of Portingall, armed certaine Caruels, and then discouered this India Occidentall, especially two Ilands of the sayd India, that in this Card I set forth, naming the one la Dominica, and the other Cuba, and brought certaine golde from thence. Of the which when the king of Portingall had knowledge, he sent to the king of Spaine, requiring him to giue him the sayd Ilands. For that by the sentence of the Pope all that should be discouered was his, and that hee should not proceede further in the discouerie without his licence. And at the same time it seemeth that out of Castile into Portingall had gone for feare of burning infinite number of Iewes that were expelled out of Spaine, for that they would not turne to be Christians, and carried with them infinite number of golde and silver. So that it seemeth that the king of Spaine answered, that it was reason that the king of Portingall asked, and that to be obedient to that which the Pope had decreed, he would giue him the sayd Ilands of the Indies. Nowe for as much as it was decreed betwixt the sayde kings, that none should receiue the others subjects fugitiues, nor their goods, therefore the king of Portingall should pay and returne to the king of Spaine a million of golde or moze, that the Iewes had carped out of Spaine to Portingall, & that in so doing he would giue these Ilands, and desist from any moze discouering. And not fulfilling this, he would not onely not giue these Ilands, but procure to discouer moze where him thought best. It seemeth that the king of Portingall would not, or could not with his case pay this money. And so not paying, that he could not let the king of Spaine to discouer: so that he enterprised not toward the Orient where he had begun & found the Spicerie. And consented to the king of Spaine, that touching this discouering they should diuide the worlde betwene them two. And that all that should be discouered from Cape Verde, where this Card beginneth to be counted in the degrees of longitude, to 180 of the sayd scale of longitude, which is halfe the worlde toward the Orient, & finisheth in this Card right ouer against a litle crosse made at the said 180 degrees, to be the king of Portingalls. And all the land from the said Crosse toward the Decident, vntill it ioyneth with the other Crosse in the Orient, which containeth the other hundred and eightie degrees, that is the other halfe of the worlde, to be the king of Spaines. So that from the land ouer against the said hundred & eighty degrees vntill it finish in the three hundred and sixtie on both the ends of the Card, is the iurisdiction of the king of Spaine. So after this maner they diuided the worlde betwene them.

The longitudes hard to be found out.

Now for that these Islands of Spicery fall neere the terme and limites betweene these princes (for as by the sayd Card you may see they begin from one hundred and sixtie degrees of longitude, and ende in 215) it seemeth all that falleth from 160 to 180 degrees, should be of Portingal: and all the rest of Spaine. And for that their Cosmographers and Pilots coulde not agree in the situation of the sayde Islandes (for the Portingals set them all within their 180 degrees, and the Spaniards set them all without:) and for that in measuring, all the Cosmographers of both partes, or what other that euer haue bene cannot giue certaine order to measure the longitude of the worlde, as they doe of the latitude: for that there is no starre fixed from East to West, as are the starres of the Poles from North to South, but all moueth with the mouing diuine: no maner can bee founde howe certainly it may bee measured, but by coniectures, as the Nauigants haue esteemed the way they haue gone. But it is manifest that Spaine had the situation of all the lands from Cape Verde, toward the Orient of Portingals to their 180 degrees. And in all their Cardes they neuer hitherto set the saide Islands within their limitation of the sayd 180 degrees, (though they knewe very well of the Islands,) till now that the Spaniards discovered them. And it is knowne that the king of Portingal had trade to these Islands afore, but would neuer suffer Portingal to go thither from Calicut: for so much as he knew that it fell out of his dominion: least by going thither there might come some knowledge of those other Islands of the king of Spaine, but bought the cloues of Marchants of that countrey, that brought them to Calicut, much dearer then they would haue cost, if he had sent for them, thinking after this manner it would abide alwayes secret. And now that it is discovered he findes and keeps the Spaniards from the trade all that he can.

Also it should seeme that when this foresaid consent of the diuision of the worlde was agreed of betweene them, the king of Portingal had already discovered certaine Islandes that lie ouer against Cape Verde, and also certaine part of the maine land of India toward the South, from whence he sette Brasil, and called it the land of Brasil. So for that all should come in his terme and limites, hee tooke three hundred and seuentie leagues beyond Cape Verde: and after this, his 180 degrees, being his part of the worlde, should begin in the Carde right ouer against the 340 degrees, where I haue made a little compasse with a crosse, and should finish at the 160 degree, where also I haue made another little mark. And after this computation without any controuersie, the Islands of the Spicery fall out of the Portingals domination. So that now the Spaniards say to the Portingals, that if they would beginne their 180 degrees from the sayde Cape Verde, to the intent they should extende more toward the Orient, and so to touch those Islandes of the Spicerie of the Emperour, which is all that is betweene the two crosses made in this Card, that then the Islands of Cape Verde and the lande of Brasil that the Portingals nowe obtaine, is out of the sayd limitation, and that they are of the Emperours. Or if their 180 degrees they count from the 370 leagues beyond the said Cape Verde, to include in it the said Islands and lands of Brasil, then plainly appeareth the said 180 degrees should finish long before they come to these Islands of the Spicerie of the Emperour: As by this Carde your Lordship may see. For their limites should begin at the 340 degrees of this Carde, and ende at the 160 degrees, where I haue made two little markes of the compasse with crosses in them.

So that plainly it should appeare by reason, that the Portingals should leaue these Islands of Cape Verde and land of Brasil, if they would haue part of the Spicerie of the Emperours: or els holding these, they haue no part there. To this the Portingals say, that they will beginne their 180 degrees from the selfe same Cape Verde: for that it may extende so much more toward the Orient, and touch these Islandes of the Emperours: and would winne these Islandes of Cape Verde and land of Brasil neuertheless, as a thing that they possessed before the consent of this limitation was made.

So none can verely tell which hath the best reason, They be not yet agreed, Quare sub Iudice lis est.

But without doubt (by all coniectures of reason) the sayd Islands fall all without the limitation of Portingal, and pertaine to Spaine, as it appeareth by the most part of all the Cardes made by the Portingals, saue those which they haue falsified of late purposely.

But now touching that your Lordship wrote, whether that which we discovered toucheth any thing the foresaid coastes: once it appeareth plainly, that the Newefound land that we discovered, is all a maine land with the Indies Occidentall, from whence the Emperour hath all the gold and pearles: and to continueth of coast more then 5000 leagues of length, as by this Carde appeareth. For from the said New lands it proceedeth toward the Occident to the Indies, and from the Indies returneth toward the Orient, and after turneth Southward by till it come to the Straits of Todos Santos, which I reckon to be more then 5000 leagues,

New found land discovered by the Englishmen.

So that to the Indians it should seeme that we haue some title, at least that for our discovering we might trade thither as other doe. But all this is nothing neere the Spicerie. Note.

Now then if from the sayd New found lands the Sea be nauigable, there is no doubt, but sayling Northward and passing the Pole, descending to the Equinoctiall line, we shall hit these Islands, and it should be a much shorter way, then either the Spaniards or the Portugals haue. For we be distant from the Pole but thirty and nine degrees, and from the Pole to the Equinoctiall be ninctie, the which added together, bee an hundred twenty and nine degrees, leagues 2489, and miles 7440: Where we should find these Islands. And the Nauigation of the Spaniards to the Spicerie is, as by this Carde you may see, from Spaine to the Isles of Canarie, and from these Isles they runne ouer the line Equinoctiall Southward to the Cape of the maine land of the Indians, called the Cape of Saint Augustine, and from this Cape Southwards to the straites of Todos Santos, in the which nauigation to the said straites is 1700. or 1800 leagues; and from these Straites being past them, they returne towarde the line Equinoctiall to the Islands of Spicerie, which are distant from the said Straites 4200, or 4300. leagues. To saile by the Pole.

The nauigation of the Portugals to the said Islands is departing from Portingal Southward towarde the Cape Verde, and from thence to another Cape passing the line Equinoctiall called Capo de bona speranza, and from Portingal to the Cape is 1800 leagues, and from this Cape to the Islands of Spicerie of the Emperour is 2500. leagues. Or the straites of Magelane.

So that this nauigation amounteth all to 4300. leagues. So that (as afore is sayd,) if between our New found lands or Norway, or Island, the seas toward the North be nauigable, we should goe to these Islands a shorter way by more then 2000. leagues.

And though we went not to the sayd Islands, for that they are the Emperours or kings of Portingal, we should by the way and comming once to the line Equinoctiall, finde landes no lesse riche of golde and Spicerie, as all other landes are vnder the sayd line Equinoctiall: and also should, if we may passe vnder the North, enioy the nauigation of all Tartarie. Which should be no lesse profitable to our commodities of cloth, then these Spiceries to the Emperour, and king of Portingal. Note

But it is a generall opinion of all Cosinographers, that passing the seventh climate, the sea is all ice, and the colde so much that none can suffer it. And hitherto they had all the like opinion, that vnder the line Equinoctiall for much heate the land was uninhabitable. Benefite to England.

Yet since (by experience is proued) no land so much habitable nor more temperate. And to conclude, I thinke the same should be found vnder the North, if it were experimented. For as all iudge, Nihil fit vacuum in rerum natura: So I iudge, there is no land uninhabitable, nor Sea in- nauigable. If I should write the reason that presenteth this vnto me, I should be too prolix, and it seemeth not requisite for this present matter. God knoweth that though by it I should haue no great interest, yet I haue had and still haue no litle mind of this businelle: So that if I had facultie to my will, it should be the first thing that I would vnderstand; euen to attempt, if our Seas Northward be nauigable to the Pole, or no. I reason, that as some sickenneses are hereditarious, and come from the father to the sonne, so this inclination or desire of this discouerie I inherited of my father, which with another marchant of Brisow named Hugh Eliot, were the discouersers of the New found lands, of the which there is no doubt, (as nowe plainely appeareth) if the mariners would then haue bene ruled, and followed their Pilots minde, the lands of the West Indies (from whence all the gold cometh) had bene ours. For all is one coast, as by the Carde appeareth, and is afore sayd. Objection.

Also in this Carde by the coastes where you see C. your Lordship shall vnderstand it is set for Cape or headland, where I. for Island, where P. for Port, where R. for Riuer. Also in all this little Carde I thinke nothing be erred touching the situation of the land, save onely in these Islands of Spicerie: which, for that (as afore is sayd) euery one setteth them after his minde, there can be no certification how they stand. I doe not denie, that there lacke many things, that a consummate Carde should haue, or that a right good demonstration desireth. For there should be expressed all the mountaines and Riuers that are principall of name in the earth, with the names of Portes of the sea, the names of all principall cities, which all I might haue set, but not in this Carde, for the litle space would not consent. Answer.

Your Lordship may see that setting onely the names almost of euery Region, and yet not of all, the roome is occupied. Many Islands are also left out, for the said lack of roome, the names almost of all Portes put to silence, with the roses of the windes or points of the compasse: For that this is not for Pilots to saile by, but a summary declaration of that which your Lordship commanded. And if by this your Lordship cannot wel perceiue the meaning of this Card, of the which I would A true opinio.

not maruaille, by reason of the rude composition of it, will it please your Lordship to aduise mee to make a bigger and a better Mappe, or els that I may cause one to be made. For I know my selfe in this and all other nothing perfect, but Licet semper discens, nunquam ramen ad perfectam scientiam perueniens. Also I know, to set the forme Sphericall of the world in Plano after the true rule of Cosmographie, it would haue bene made other wise then this is: howbeit the demonstration should not haue bene so plaine.

And also these degrees of longitude, that I set in the lower part of this card, should haue bin set along by the line Equinoctiall, & so then must be imagined. For the degrees of longitude neere either of the poles are nothing equall in bignesse to them in the Equinoctiall. But these are set so, for that setting them along the Equinoctiall, it would haue made obscure a great part of the map. Many other curiosities may be required, which for the nonce I did not set downe, as well for that the intent I had principally was to satisfie your doubt touching the Spicerie, as for that I lack leasure and time. I trust your Lordship correcting that which is erred, will accept my good will, which is to doe any thing that I may in your Lordships seruice. But from henceforth I knowe your Lordship will rather commaund me to keepe silence, then to be large, when you shall be wearied with the reading of this discourse. Iesus prosper your estate and health.

Your Lordships
Robert Thorne 1527.

ALso this Carde and that which I write touching the varianee betweene the Emperour and the king of Portingall, is not to be shewed or communicated there with many of that court. For though there is nothing in it prejudiciall to the Emperour, yet it may be a cause of paine to the maker: as well for that none may make these Cardes, but certaine appointed and allowed for masters, as for that peradventure it would not sound well to them, that a stranger should know or discouer their secrettes: and would appeare worst of all, if they vnderstand that I write touching the short way to the Spicerie by our Seas. Though peradventure of troth it is not to be looked to, as a thing that by all opinions is impossible, and I thinke neuer will come to effect: and therefore neither here nor else where is it to be spoken of. For to moue it amongst wise men, it should bee had in derision. And therefore to none I would haue written nor spoken of such things, but to your Lordship, to whom boldly I commit in this all my foolish fantasie as to my self. But if it please God that into England I may come with your Lordship, I will shew some coniectures of reason, though against the generall opinion of Cosmographers, by which shall appeare this that I say not to lacke some foundation. And till that time I beseeche your Lordship let it be put to silence: and in the meane season it may please God to send our two Englishmen, that are gone to the Spicerie, which may also giuing moze plaine declaration of that which in this case might be desired.

Also I knowe I needed not to haue bene so polixe in the declaration of this Carde to your Lordship, if the sayd Carde had bene very well made after the rules of Cosmographie. For your Lordship would soone vnderstand it better then I, or any other that could haue made it: and so it should appeare that I shewed Delphinū natare. But for that I haue made it after my rude manner, it is necessary that I be the declarer or glosor of mine own worke, or els your Lordship should haue had much labour to vnderstand it, which now with it also cannot be excused, it is so grossely done. But I knew you looked for no curious things of mee, and therefore I trust your Lordship will accept this, and hold me for excused. In other mens letters that they write they craue pardon that at this present they write no larger: but I must finish, asking pardon that at this present I write so largely. Iesus preserve your Lordship with augmentation of dignities.

Your seruant Robert Thorne, 1527.

A briefe Treatise of the great Duke of Moscovia his genealogie, being taken out of the Moscouites manuscript Chronicles written by a Polacke.

It hath almost euer bene the custome of nations, in searching out the infantie and first beginnings of their estate, to ascribe the same vnto such authoꝝ as liued among men in great honour and endued mankind with some one or other excellent benefite. Nowe, this inbred desire of all nations to blaze and set forth their owne petigree hath so much preuayled with the greater part, that leauing the vndoubted trueth, they haue betaken themselves vnto meere fables and fictions. Wea and the Chronicles of many nations written in diuers and sundrie ages doe testifie the same. Euen so the Grecians boasted that they were either Autochthones, that is earth-bredde, or els lineally descended from the Gods. And the Romans affirme that Mars was father vnto their first founder Romulus. Right well therefore and iudicially sayth Titus Liuius: Neither meane I to auouch (quoth he) ne to disabie or confute those thinges which befoze the building and foundation of the Citie haue bene repoꝝted, being moze adozned and fraught with Poeticall fables then with incorrupt and sacred monuments of trueth: antiquitie is to be pardoned in this behalfe, namely in ioyning together matters historickall and poeticall, to make the beginnings of cities to seeme the moze honourable. For such antiquity it selfe is accounted such a notable argument of true nobility, euen priuate men in all ages haue contented thereabout. Wherefoze citizens of Rome being desirous to make demonstration of their Gentrie, vse to haue their auncestours armes painted along the walles of their houses: in which regarde they were so puffed vp, that oftentimes they would arrogantly disdain those men, which by their owne vertue had attained vnto honour. In like sorte Poets, when the originall of their worthies and haue champions was either vnterly vnknownen or somewhat obscure, would ofte referre it vnto their Gods themselves. So in these our dayes (to lette passe others) the Turkish Emperour with greet presumption boasteth himselfe to bee descended of the Troian blood. Likewise the great duke of Moscouie, to make himselfe and his predecessours seeme the moze souereigne, deriueth the beginnings of his parentage from the Romane Emperours, yea euen from Augustus Cesar. Albeit therefore no man is so soude as to accept of this repoꝝt for trueth, yet will wee briefly set downe what the Moscouites haue written in their Chronicles as touching this matter.

Augustus (beleue it who listeth) had certaine brethren or kinsfolkes which were appointed gouernours ouer diuers prouinces. Amongst the rest one Prussus (of whome Prussia was named) had his place of gouernment assigned vnto him vpon the shore of the eastern or Baltick sea, and vpon the famous riuer of Wixel. This mans graund children or nephewes of the fourth generation were Rurek, Sinaus, and Truuor, who likewise inhabited in the very same places. Whereas therefore at the very same time the Russians or the Moscouites without any ciuill regiment possessed large and spacious territories towards the north, the foresayd thre brethren, vpon the perswasion of one Gostomilus the chiefe citizen of Nouogrod, in the yeare since the woꝝldes creation (accoꝝding to the computation of the Greekes) 6370, which was in the yeare of our Loyd 572, were sent for, to beare rule. And so ioyning their kinsman Olechus vnto them, and diuiding these huge countreys among themselves, they laboured to reduce the barbarous and sauage people vnto a ciuill kinde of life.

Russis became ciuill in y^e yere of our Loyd 572.

Sinaus and Truuor decreasing without issue, Rurek succeeded and lefte a sonne behinde him named Igor; who not being of sufficient peres to beare rule, was committed vnto the protection of his kinsman Olechus. The sayde Igor begate of Olha daughter vnto a citizen of Plesco (who, after her husbande was slaine by his enemies, taking her iourney to Constantinople, was there baptized by the name of Helena) a sonne called Stosslaus, who fought many battels with the neighbour countreys. Howbeit at length Stosslaus was slayne by his foe, who making a drinking cup of his skull, engraued therupon in golden letters this sentence: Seeking after other mens, he lost his owne. He left behind him three sonnes, namely Teropolchus, Olega, and Vulodimir. The which Vulodimir hauing slaine his two brethren, became sole gouernour of Russia, or (as the Moscouites call it) Rosseia, his owne selfe. This man beginning at length to loath and mislike the ethnik religion, and the multitude of false gods, applied his minde vnto the religion of Christ, and hauing taken to wife Anna sister vnto Basilus and Constantinus Emperours of Constantinople, was together with his whole nation, in the yeare of Christ 988, baptized, and embraced the Christian religion, with the rites and ceremonies of the Greeke Church, and his name being changed, he was called Basilus.

Howbeit Zonaras reporteth that before the time of Vulodimir, Basilus Emperour of Constantinople sent a bishop vnto the Russians, by whose meanes they were conuerted vnto the Christian faith. He reporteth moreover that they would not be perswaded vntill they might see a miracle: whereupon the said bishop hauing made his prayers vnto almighty God, threw the booke of the Euangelists into the fire, which remained there vntoconsumed. And that by this miracle they were moued to giue credite vnto the doctrine of Christ, and to conforme themselves therunto.

The sonnes of Vulodimir were Vuiseslaus, Isoslaus, Iaroslaus, Suatopolchus, Borissus, Glebus, Stoslaus, Vulzeuolodus, Scanislaus, Sudislaus, and Podius who died in his childehood. Amongst the residue all Russia was diuided by their father, who not being contented with their portions, but inuading each other, were most of them slaine by their mutuall contentions. Borissus and Glebus in regard of their holy conuersation were registered for Saints, whose feasts are euery yeere celebrated with great solemnitie vpon the twelfth of November.

At length Iaroslaus only got the Soueraigne authoritie into his owne hands, and left behind him foure sonnes, Vulodimir, Isoslaus, Weceslaus, and Vulzeuolodus.

Kiow.

The foresaid Vulodimir sonne of Iaroslaus kept his residence at the ancient citie of Kiow standing vpon the riuer of Boristhenes, and after diuers conflicts with his kinsmen, hauing subdued all the prouinces vnto himselfe, was called Monomachos, that is, the onely champion. This man (for I thinke it not amiss to report those things which their owne Manuscript Chronicles make mention of) waged warre against Constantine the Emperour of Constantinople, and when he had wasted & ouerrun Thracia, being returned home with great and rich spoiles, and making preparation for new wars, Constantine sent Neophytus the Metropolitane of Ephesus and two Bishops, with the gouernour of Antiochia, and Eustaphius the Abbat of Ierusalem, to present rich and magnificent gifts vnto him; as namely, part of the crosse of our Sauour Christ, a crowne of gold, a drinking cup curiously made of Sardonyx stone, a cloake set all ouer with precious stones, and a golden chaine; commanded them to salute him by the name of Czar (which name, as it may be proued by many arguments, signifieth a king, and not an Emperour) and concluded a most inuiolable league of amity and friendship with him.

The foresaid Vulodimir begate Vulzeuolodus the second. This Vulzeuolodus lefte eight sonnes behind him, Miscislaus, Isoslaus, Stoslaus, Teropolchus, Weceslaus, Romanus, Georgius, and Andrew. The sonnes of George were Rosseus, Andrew, Basilus, and Demetrius.

Demetrius begate George, who in the yere 1237, was slaine by one Bathy a Tartarian duke, which Bathy wasted Moscouia, and subdued the same vnto himselfe. Since which time the Russians were tributary to the Tartars, and were gouerned by such dukes as they pleased to set ouer them. Howbeit the Tartars so greatly abused that authoritie, that when they sent their ambassadours vnto the prince of Moscouie, he was constrained to goe forth and meete with them, and (as Herbotus Fulstinus in his Polonian historie reporteth) to offer them a bason full of mares milk, and if they had spilt any whit thereof vpon their horses maines, to lick it off with his tounge, and hauing conducted them into his princely court, to stand bareheaded before them while they sate downe, and with all reuerence to giue eare and attendance vnto them. But by what meanes they shooke off at the length this poake of seruitude, I will forthwith declare.

About the same time almost all Polonia, and the dukedome of Silesia were ouerrun by the Tartars with fire and sword. Who hauing burnt Pressa the chiefe citie of Silesia, & being come before the citie of Legnitz, they fought there a most cruel and bloody field, wherein was slaine duke Henric himselfe being sonne vnto the most holy and deuout lady Hedvice, with many others, whose monuments and graues be as yet extant in sundry places, and with an infinite multitude of common souldiers, insomuch that the Tartars filled nine great sackes with the eares of them which they had slaine. The Tartars to the end they might obtaine the victorie, presented vnto the view of our souldiers the portrature of a mans head placed by arte magique vpon a banner, wherein the letter X. was painted, which being shaken and moued by and done beached forth a most loathsome stretch, & strooke such a terrour into the hearts of our men, that being as it were astonied with the snaky visage of Medusa, they were utterly daunted and dismayed.

From

From thence Bachy and his company with the same bloodthirstie intent marched into Hungarie, and had almost slaine king Bela the fourth, who together with his sonne escaping by flight did scarcely ridde themselves out of the enemies hand. And when the whole world almost was exceedingly terrified at the cruell invasions of this most barbarous nation, at length Pope Innocentius the fourth sending ambassadours vnto Bachy obtained peace for five yeeres: but to forsake his heathenish superstitions and to become a Christian, hee would by no means bee perswaded. For he was by the instigation of the Saracens infected with deuillish opinions of Mahomer, as being more agreeable vnto his barbarous rudenes, which euen vnto this day the Tartars do maintain, like as the prophane Turkes also.

These ambassadours were Iohan. de Plano Carpini & Friar Benedicte a Polonian.

This Bachy had a sonne called Tamerlan, whome the Moscouires call Temirkutla, who likewise, as it is recorded in histories, attained vnto great renoume. For he caried about with him in a cage Baiazet the Turkish Emperour being fettered in golden chaines, and made him a laughing stocke vnto all men.

Let vs now retorne vnto the Russians. George being slaine, Iaroslau his brother succeeded in his roome, and left behinde him three sonnes, Theodorus, Alexander and Andreas, Daniel the sonne of Alexander first established his royall seate in the citie of Mosco, and magnificently building the castle which before time had bene obscure, he tooke vpon him the title of the great Duke of Russia. He had five sonnes, namely, George, Alexander, Borislus, Ophonias, and Iohn. This Iohn succeeded his father, and because he continually caried a scrippe about with him to bestow almes, he was surnamed Kaleca, which word signifieth a scrippe. His sonnes were, Simeon, Iohn, and Andrew. He gaue vnto his sonne Simeon the prouinces of Vlodimiria and Moscouia: which Simeon deceasing without issue his brother Iohn succeeded, who begate a sonne called Demetrius. This Demetrius had seuen sonnes, namely, Daniel, Basilus, George, Andrew, Peter, Iohn, & Constantine. Basilus reigned after his fathers death. This man dishonouring his sonne which was called after his owne name, because he suspected his mother of adulterie, at his death surrendered his Dukedome vnto his brother George, who kept his nephewe a long time in prison. Howbeit at his death, though himselfe had two sonnes namely Andrew and Demetrius, yet being stricken perhaps with remorse of conscience, he bestowed the Dukedome vpon his nephewe Basilus. Against whom his two cousins bearing a grudge waged warre, and at length hauing taken him by a wily stratageme they put out his eyes. Notwithstanding the Boiarsens (for so the Moscouires call their nobles) continued their duetifull allegiance vnto this their blinde Duke, whom for his blindness they called Cziemnox, that is to say, darke or darkened. He left a sonne behinde him called Iuan Vasilowich who brought the Russian common wealth, being before his time but obscure, vnto great excellencie and renoume. Who that he might the better get all the supertowicity into his owne hands put to death so many sonnes and nephewes of the former Dukes as he could lay hold on, and began to take vpon him the title of the great Duke of Vlodimiria, Moscouia, and Nouogardia, and to call himselfe the Monarch or Czar of all Russia. He brought vnder his subiection two principall cities, namely Plesco being the only walled citie in all Moscouie, and Mouogrod, both of them being in regard of traffike most riche and flourishing cities, and hauing bin subiect vnto the Lithuanians for the space of 50. yeeres before. The treasure of Nouogrod was so exceeding, that the great Duke is reported to haue carried home from thence 300. carts laden with gold and siluer.

The citie of Mosco first made the seate of the great Duke.

Iuan Vasilowich,

The name of the Moscouires first aduanced.

He also was the first man that waged warre against the Polonians and the Liunionians: against Polonia he pretended a quarrell, alleging that his daughter Helena (whome hee had married vnto Alexander the great Duke of Lithuania, which was after ward king of Polonia) was euil instructed, and was withdrawn from the Greekish religion vnto the ceremonies of the Church of Rome. But against the Liunionians for none other cause, but onely for an incredible desire of enlarging his dominions. Howbeit what impulsive causes of little or no moment happened in the mean season, we will in another place more plainly declare. Notwithstanding he was very often and in diuers battels vanquished by Plettebergius the great master of the Dutch knights: but it is not to the purpose to stand any longer vpon this discourse.

He was married first vnto Marie the Duke of Tyuersky his daughter, and of her hee begate Iohn, vnto whom in his life time hee surrendered his Dukedome, and married him vnto the daughter of Srephan the Palatine of Moldauia: which Iohn, after he had begotten his sonne Demetrius, deceased before his father.

Afterward Iuan Vasilowich aforesaide married a wife called Sophia being daughter vnto Thomas Palæologus, which is reported to haue had her dowry out of the Popes treasury, because the Moscouite had promised to conforme himselfe vnto the Romish Church. This Sophia being a woman of a princely and aspiring minde, and often complaining that she was married vnto the Tartars vassal, at length by her instant intreatie and continual perswasions, and by a notable stratagem she cast off that slavish yoke very much unbecoming so mighty a prince. For whereas the Tartarian Duke had his procuratours and agents in the Holstovites court, who dwelt in their owne houses built within the very castle of Mosco, and were eye witnesses of all affaires which were there perfozmed: Sophia said she was admonished from heauen to builde a Temple in the selfe same place where the Tartars house stood, and to consecrate it unto Saint Nicholas; Being therfore deliuered of a sonne she invited the Tartarian Duke vnto the solempne baptizing of him, and being come, she requested him to giue her his house, and obtained it at his hands. Which house being razed and those Tartarian espials being excluded, the Tartars at length were quite bereaued and utterly dispossessed of their authoritie which they had exercised ouer the Ruffians for many yerres, and could neuer yet recouer it; albeit they haue giuen sundry attempts. Of his wife Sophia he begate five children, namely, a daughter called Helena, & five sonnes, that is to say, Gabriel, Demetrius, George, Simeon, and Andrew.

The yoke of
the Tartars
shaken off.

The Duke dome of right appertayned vnto Demetrius the sonne of Iohn, which was the sonne of Vasilowich by his first marriage. Howbeit Sophia preuailed so with her husband, that neglecting his graund-child Demetrius, hee bestowed his Duke dome vpon Gabriel his sonne.

Andrew the younger had a sonne called Vlodimir, of whom Mary was bozne, which in the yeere of Christ 1573. was married vnto Magnus the Duke of Holst.

Basilius.

Gabriel hauing obtained the great duke dome of Russia, changed his name calling himselfe Basilius, and applied his minde to the atchieng of high and great enterprises. For hee reduced a great part of the duke dome of Moscouie, which Vitoldus the great Duke of Lithuania helde in possession, vnder his owne iurisdiction, and tooke vpon the riuier of Boristhenes (which the Ruffians call Neiper) many cities and especially Smolensco, in the yeere of our Lord 1514. Hauing diuorced his first wife, hee begate of Helena daughter vnto Duke Glinkie, Iuan Vasilowich, which now this present 1580. reigneth as great Duke. Hee was bozne in the yeere of our Lord 1528. the 25. of August, five houres after the rising of the sonne. The great duke dome of Russia fell vnto the said Iuan Vasilowich in the fifth yeere of his age, hauing his vncle George for his great protector: being 25. yeeres of age, and being of a strong body and of a couragious mind he subdued the Tartars of Cazan and Astracan vpon the riuier of Volgha, carrying their Dukes and chieftaines into captiuitie.

Iuan Vasilowich.

But by what wayes and meanes (after the league which by the intercession of the most sacred Roman Emperour, continued from the yeere 1503. for the space of fifty yeeres, was expired) hauing renewed warres against Liouonia, hee brought that most flourishing prouince into extreme miserie, vsing for the same purpose a new pretence, and alleadging that it belonged vnto him by right of inheritance, I tremble to recount: and it requireth a large historie, which perhaps in time and place conuenient some more learned then my selfe will take vpon them to adgesse.

He is exceedingly addicted vnto piety and deuotion, and doth oftentimes obserue very strict fastings and abstinence with his monks: and whereas the Ruffes in doing reuerence & adoration vnto God doe beate their foreheads against the ground, this Iuan Vasilowich with performing of the same ceremonie causeth his forehead to be full of boines and swellings, and sometimes to be black and blew, and very often to bleed. He is much delighted with building of Churches & spareth no cost for that purpose. Whether therfore by nature, or (which hee pretendeth to be the cause) by reason of his subjects malice & treacherie, he be so addicted vnto all rigour and cruelty, I dare not determine, especially sithens he hath not an illiberal or mishapen countenance, as Attila is reported to haue had. Of his first wife which was sister vnto Mikra Romanowich, heeing now great steward of his household, he begate two sonnes, namely Iuan and Theodore. And albeit he was five times married, yet had he not one childe more.

Theodore.

Whereas this Iuan Vasilowich vpon certaine friuolous reasons calleth himselfe the naturall lord of Liouonia, I thought it not amisse to adde an Epistle herewnto, which was written by a certaine honourable man concerning the same matter.

S. All wee which inhabite this prouince with all seemely reuerence and submission of mind, do offer most humble thanks vnto the Emperors most sacred and peerelesse maiesty our most gracious lord, in that according to his fatherly affection which he beareth towards all Christendome, and for the good & commoditie of this our distressed and afflicted countrey, which these many yerres hath bin in stead of a bulwark against the inuasion of barbarous nations, he hath sent his ambassadors vnto the great duke of Moscouia, In regard of which his fatherly loue and great benefite vouchsafed on vs, wee are ready when occasion shall serue, to aduenture our liues and goods: praying in the meane season vnto Almighty God, who is the onely establisher and confounder of of common wealths, to bring this excellent worke, the foundation whereof is already laide vnto a prosperous conclusion. But as touching the title which the Moscouite maketh to this prouince; to say the very truth, we greatly wondered and were astonished at the declaration thereof. For it is most apparant, not onely out of all ancient and credible histories, but euen from the experience and state of these regions, that the said title and allegations are fabulous and fained. For out of all auncient monuments, by what names soeuer they bee called (whereof there are diuers extant among vs) it cannot be proued by any mention, nor yet by any likelihood or coniecture, that those things which the Moscouite affirmeth concerning the people which were gouernors of these regions in times past, and concerning the right and title of his ancestoꝝ vnto this prouince, are grounded vpon truth.

For it is not vnknownen by what meanes this prouince, partly through the industry of marchants, and partly by the benefite of nauigation, was first discouered: neither is it vnknewen howe the inhabitants thereof beeing wholly addicted vnto heathenish superstitions and idolatrie, were by the croised knights (who drew other knights professing the same order in Prussia to aide and accompanie them in this their enterprize) and that with great labour and difficultie, conuerted vnto the Christian faith: when as at the same time the Liunionians had no knowledge at all of the iurisdiction, religion, maners, or language of Moscouie: who had not onely no conuersation nor dealings with the Moscouites, but were estranged also from all other nations whatsoeuer: for leading a miserable, poore, barbarous, and heathenish life, in sauage maner among wilde beastes, and in the desert and solitary woods, they were vnterly ignorant of God and destitute of ciuil magistrates. Howbeit this kind of gouernment was peculiar vnto them, namely that all of one familie and societie vsed a kinde of reuerence vnto their elders moze then to any other, whom also, that their authoritie might be the greater, they called by the name of kings, and (albeit one of their families consisted of a 100. persons) they obeyed them in al respects, and after their rude and barbarous maner did them loyal seruice. At the very same time the Moscouites had receiued the religion, and the Ecclesiasticall ceremonies of the Greeke and Catterne Church, which religion they published and dispersed throughout all prouinces subiect to their dominion, vsing their owne proper letters and characters for the same purpose. Of all which things the Liunionians which very barbarously inhabited a lande beeing enuironed with Russia, Lithuania, Samogitia, Prussia, and the Baltic sea, neuer heard any report at all. It is moreouer to be noted that neuer at any time heretofore either within the earth, or in other places of Liunia, there haue bene found any monuments at all of the antiquitie or letters of the Russes: which verily must needs haue come to passe, if the Moscouites, Russes, or any other nations which vse the foresaid particulars, had bozne rule and authority ouer the Liunionians: yea there had beene left some remainder and token, either of their religion and diuine worship, or of their lawes and customes, or at the least of their maners, language, and letters. This indeede we can in no wise deny, that euen in Liunia it selfe, there haue bin in times past and at this present are many and diuers languages spoken by the people. Howbeit no one language of them all hath any affinity either with the Moscouian tongue, or with the tongues of any other nations. But whereas the Moscouite pretendeth that there hath bin vsually payde a pension or tribute vnto himselfe and his predecessors out of the whole prouince, it is as incredible as the former.

About the beginning of this tragicall warre, the Moscouite, to cloke his tyranny and ambition vnder some faire pretense, amongst other of his demands, made mention also of a tribute which should be due vnto him out of the bishop of Dorpat his iurisdiction, whereof notwithstanding hee could neither bring any iust account, nor affirm any certainty: howbeit there is no man liuing to be found which either can tell of his owne remembrance, or from the relation of others, that any such tribute was euer paid vnto the Moscouite. What time therefore he referred al this negotiation vnto the master of the Liunionian order, and commanded him to get what knowledge hee could thereof from the men of Dorpat, & vsed the tribute, saying if it were worth but one haire, that he would not remit it: at length it was found recorde in the ancient Chronicles of Dorpat, that beyond the memory of man, when the territoꝝ of Plesco contained nothing but woods and Forrests for wilde beastes, that the peasants of the liberty of Dorpat called Neuhus, by the consent of the Russian borderers, enioyed Bee-hiues in the said woods, and paid euery yee in lieu thereof vnto the Russian gouernours, five shillings of Liunionian coine. But so soone as the Russians had felled the woods and had built townes and villages in their place, the saide pension ceased together with the trees which were cut downe. Wherefore the saide five shillings were neuer since that time either demanded by the Russes or paid by the Liunionians. These things which I knew concerning the causes of the Liunionian warres I thought good to signifie vnto you. Giuen the 22. of May, in the yee of our Lord 1576.

The continu-dices of traffike and of nauigation.

Ordinances, instructions, and aduertisements of and for the direction of the intended voyage for Cathay, compiled, made, and deliuered by the right worshipfull M. Sebastian Cabota Esquier, gouernour of the mysterie and companie of the Marchants aduenturers for the discoverie of Regions, Dominions, Islands and places vnknownen, the 9. day of May, in the yere of our Lord God 1553. and in the 7. yeere of the reigne of our most dread soueraigne Lord Edward the 6. by the grace of God, king of England, Fraunce and Ireland, defender of the faith, and of the Church of England and Ireland, in earth supream head,

If it the Captaine general, with the pilot maior, the masters, marchants & other officers, to be so knit and ascorbed in unitie, loue, conformitie, and obedience in euery degree in all liues, that no dissention, variance, or contention may rise or spring betwixt them and the mariners of this companie, to the damage or hindrance of the voyage: for that dissention (by many experiences) hath ouerthrowne many notable intended and likely enterprises and exploits.

2 Item, for as much as euery person hath giuen an othe to be true, faithfull, and loyal subiects, and leage men to the kings most excellent Maiestie, his heires and successors, and for the obseruation of all lawes & statutes, made for the preservation of his most excellent Maiestie, & his crowne Imperiall of his realmes of England and Ireland, and to serue his grace, the Realme, and this present voyage truly, and not to gine vp, intermit, or leaue off the said voyage and enterprise vntill it shalbe accomplished, so farre forth as possibilitie and life of man may serue or extend: Therefore it behoueth euery person in his degree, as well for conscience, as for dueties sake to remember his said charge, and the accomplishment thereof.

3 Item, where furthermore euery mariner or passenger in his ship, hath giuen like othe to bee obedient to the Captaine general, and to euery Captaine and master in his ship, for the obseruation of these present orders contained in this booke, and all other which hereafter shalbe made by the 12. counsaillers in this present booke named, or the most part of them, for the better conduction, and preservation of the fleet, and atchieuing of the voyage, and to be prompt, ready and obedient in all acts and feates of honesty, reason, and dutie to be ministered, shewed & executed, in advancement and preferment of the voyage and exploit: therefore it is convenient that this present booke shall once euery weeke (by the discretion of the Captaine) be read to the said companie, to the intent that euery man may the better remember his othe, conscience, dutie and charge.

4 Item, euery person by vertue of his othe, to doe effectually & with good wil, as farre forth as him shall complice) all, and euery such act and acts, deede and deeds, as shalbe to him or them from time to time comanded, committed and enioyned (during the voyage) by the Captaine general, with the assent of the Counsell and assistants, as well in and during the whole Nauigation and voyage, as also in discouering and landing, as cases and occasions shall require.

5 Item, all courses in Nauigation to be set and kept, by the aduice of the Captaine, Pilot maior, masters, & masters mates, with the assents of the counsaillers and the most number of them, and in voyces vniiformely agreeing in one to preuaile, and take place, so that the Captaine general, shall in all counsailes and assemblies haue a double voyce.

6 Item, that the fleet shal keep together, and not separate themselves asunder, as much as by winde & weather may be done or permitted, & that the Captaines, Pilots & masters shall speedily come aboard the Admiral, when and as often as he shall seeme to haue iust cause to assemble them for counsaile or consultation to be had concerning the affaires of the fleet and voyage.

7 Item, that the marchants, and other skilful persons in writing, shal daily write, describe, and put in memorie the Nauigation of euery day and night, with the points, and obseruation of the lands, tides, elements, altitude of the sunne, course of the moon and starres, and the same so noted by the order of the Master and pilot of euery ship to be put in writing, the captaine general assembling the masters together once euery weeke (if winde and weather shal serue) to conferre all the obseruations, and notes of the said ships, to the intent it may appeare wherein the notes do agree, and wherein they dissent, and vpon good debatement, deliberation, and conclusion determined, to put the same into a common leger, to remain of record for the companie: the like order to be kept in proportioning of the Cardes, Astrolabes, and other instruments prepared for the voyage, at the charge of the companie.

8 Item, that all enterprises and exploits of discouering or landing to search Isles, regions, and such like, to be searched, attempted, and enterprised by good deliberation, and common assent, determined aduisedly. And that in all enterprises, notable ambassages, suites, requests, or presentment of giftes, or presents to Princes, to be done and executed by the captaine general in person, person, or by such other, as he by common assent shall appoint or assigne to doe or cause to be done in the same.

9 Item, the steward and cooke of every ship, and their associates, to giue and render to the captaine and other head officers of their shipp weekly (or oftner, if it shall seeme requisite, a lust or plaine and perfect account of expenses of the victuals, as well flesh, fish, bisket, meate, or bread, as also of beere, wine, oyle, or vinegar, and all other kinde of victualling vnder their charge, and they, and euery of them so to order and dispende the same, that no waste or vnprofitable expence be made otherwise then reason and necessitie shall command.

10 Item, when any inferiour or meane officer of what degree or condition he shall be, shall be triued vntreue, remisse, negligent, or vnprofitable in or about his office in the voyage, or not to vse him selfe in his charge accordingly, then euery such officer to be punished or remoued at the discretion of the captaine and assistants, or the most part of them, and the person so remoued not to be reputed, accepted, or taken from the time of his remouie, any more for an officer, but to remaine in such condition and place, as hee shall be assigned vnto, and none of the companie, to resist such chastisement or worthe punishment, as shall be ministred vnto him moderatly, according to the fault or desert of his offence, after the lawes and common customes of the seas, in such cases heretofore vsed and obserued.

11 Item, if any Mariner or officer inferiour shall be found by his labour not meete nor worthe the place that he is presently shipped for, such person may bee vnshipped and put on lande at any place within the kings Maiesties realme & dominion, and one other person more able and worthy to be put in his place, at the discretion of the captaine and masters, & order to be taken that the partie dismissed shall be allowed proportionably the value of that he shall haue deserued to the time of his dismissal or discharge, & he to giue order with sureties, pawn, or other assurance, to repay the ouerplus of that he shall haue receiued, which he shall not haue deserued, & such wages to be made with the partie newly placed as shall be thought reasonable, and he to haue the furniture of al such necessities as were prepared for the partie dismissed, according to right and conscience.

12 Item, that no blaspheming of God, or detestable swearing be vsed in any ship, nor communication of ribaldrie, filthy tales, or vngodly talke to be suffered in the company of any ship, neither dicing, carding, tabling, nor other diuellsish games to be frequented, whereby ensueth not onely povertie to the players, but also strife, variance, brawling, fighting, and oftentimes murder to the better destruction of the parties, and prouoking of Gods most iust wrath, and swoorde of vengeance. These and all such like pestilences, and contagions of vices, and sinnes to bee eschewed, and the offenders once manifested, and not reforming, to bee punished at the discretion of the captaine and master, as appertaineth.

13 Item, that morning and euening prayer, with other common seruices appointed by the kings Maiestie, and lawes of this Realme to be read and saide in euery ship daily by the minister in the Admirall, and the marchant or some other person learned in other ships, and the Bible or paraphrases to be read deuoutly and Chriftianly to Gods honour, and for his grace to be obtained, and had by humble and heartie praise of the Admirants accordingly.

14 Item, that euery officer is to be charged by Inuentorie with the particulars of his charge, and to render a perfect account of the disspaying of the same together with modest & temperate disspending of powder, shot, and vse of all kinde of artillery, which is not to be misused, but diligently to be persecuted for the necessary defence of the flecte and voyage, together with due keeping of all instruments of your Nauigation, and other requisites.

15 Item, no liquour to be spilt on the balast, nor filthines to be left within boord: the cook room, and all other places to be kept cleane for the better health of the companie, the groomes & pages to bee brought by according to the laudable order and vse of the Sea, as well in learning of Nauigation, as in exercising of that which to them appertaineth.

16 Item, the lueries in apparel giuen to the mariners be to be kept by the marchants, and not to be woone, but by the order of the captaine, when he shall see cause to muster or shewe them in good aray, for the auancement and honour of the voyage, and the lueries to bee redeliuered to the keeping of the marchants, vntill it shall be thought conuenient for euery person to haue the full vse of his garment.

17 Item, when any mariner or any other passenger shall haue neede of any necessarie furniture of apparell for his body, and conseruation of his health, the same shall bee deliuered him by the Marchant, at the assignement of the captaine and Master of that shipp, wherein such needie person shall be, at such reasonable price as the same cost, without any gaine to be exacted by the marchants, the value thereof to be entered by the marchant in his booke, and the same to be discounted off the parties wages, that so shall receiue, and weare the same.

18 Item the sicke, diseased, weake, and visited person within boord, to be tended, relieved, comforted, and holpen in the time of his infirmities, and euery manner of person, without respect, to beare anothers burdeu, and no man to refuse such labour as shall be put to him, for the moſt benefit, and publike wealch of the voyage, and enterpryse, to be atchieued exactly.

19 Item if any person ſhal fortune to die, or miscary in the voyage, ſuch apparell, and other goods, as he ſhall haue at the time of his death, is to be kept by the order of the captaine and Maſter of the ſhippe, and an inuentorie to be made of it, and conſerued to the uſe of his wiſe, and children, or otherwiſe according to his mind, and wil, and the day of his death to be entered in the Marchants and Stewards bookes: to the intent it may be knowne what wages he ſhall haue deſerued to his death, and what ſhall reſt due to him.

20 Item, that the Marchants appointed for this preſent voyage, ſhall not make any ſhew or ſale of any kind of marchandizes, or open their commodities to any ſozrein princes, or any of their ſubiectes, without the conſent, priuie, or agreement of the Captaines, the cape Marchants and the aſſiſtants, or ſoure of them, whereof the captaine generall, the Pilot Maioz, and cape marchant to be three, and euery of the partie marchants to ſhewe his reckoning, to the cape marchant, when they, or any of them ſhall be required: and no commutation or trucke to be made by any of the partie marchants, without the aſſent aboueſaid: and all wares, and commodities trucked, bought or giuen to the companie, by way of marchandize, trucke, or any other reſpect, to be booked by the marchants, and to be wel ordeed, packed, and conſerued in one maſſe entirely, and not to be broken or altered, vntill the ſhippes ſhall returne to the right diſcharges, and inuentorie of al goods, wares, and marchandizes ſo trucked, bought, or otherwiſe diſpended, to be preſented to the Gouvernoz, Conſuls, and Aſſiſtants in London, in good order, to the intent the Kings Maieſtie may be truly answered of that which to his grace by his grant of incorporation is limited, according to our moſt bound dueties, and the whole companie alſo to haue that which by right vnto them appertainerth, and no embezelmēt ſhall be uſed, but the truth of the whole voyage to be opened, to the common wealch and benefite of the whole companie, and myſterie, as appertainerth, without guile, fraude, or male engine.

21 Item, no particular perſon, to hinder or prejudice the common ſtocke of the company, in ſale or preferment of his own proper wares, and things, and no particular eniergent or purchaſe to be employed to any ſeueral proſite, vntill the common ſtocke of the companie ſhall be furniſhed, and no perſon to hinder the common benefite in ſuch purchaſes or contingents, as ſhal fortune to any one of them, by his owne proper policie, industrie, or chance, nor no contention to riſe in that behalfe, by any occaſion of icwel, ſtone, pearles, precious mettals, or other things of the region, where it ſhall chance the ſame to riſe, or to be found, bought, trucked, permutted, or giuen: but euery perſon to be bounden in ſuch caſe, and vpon ſuch occaſion, by order, and direction, as the generall captaine, and the Councell ſhall eſtabliſh and determine, to whole order and diſcretion the ſame is left: for that of things vncertaine, no certaine rules may or can be giuen.

22 Item not to diſcloſe to any nation the ſtate of our religion, but to paſſe it ouer in ſilence, without any declaration of it, ſeeming to beare with ſuch lawes, and rites, as the place hath, where you ſhall arrive.

23 Item for as much as our people, and ſhippes may appeare vnto them ſtrange and wondrous, and theirs alſo to ours: it is to be conſidered, how they may be vſed, learning much of their natures and diſpoſitions, by ſome one ſuch perſon, as you may firſt either allure, or take to be brought aboard your ſhips, and there to learne as you may, without violence or force, and no woman to be temptid, or intreated to incontinencie, or diſhoneſtie.

24 Item the perſon ſo taken, to be well entertained, vſed, and apparelled, to be ſet on land, to the intent that he or ſhe may allure other to draw nigh to ſhewe the commodities: and if the perſon taken may be made drunke with your beere, or wine, you ſhal know the ſecrets of his heart.

25 Item our people may not paſſe further into a lande, then that they may be able to recouer their pinneſſes, or ſhips, & not to credit the faire words of the ſtrange people, which be many times tried ſubtile, and falſe, nor to be drawn into perill of loſſe, for the deſire of golde, ſiluer, or riches, and eſteeme your owne commodities aboue al other, and in countenance ſhew not much to deſire the ſozrein commodities: neuertheleſſe take them as for friendſhip, or by way of permutation.

26 Item euery nation and region is to be conſidered aduſedly, & not to prouoke them by any diſdaine, laughing, contempt, or ſuch like, but to vſe them with prudent circumſpection, with al gentlenes, and curteſie, and not to tary long in one place, vntill you ſhall haue attained the moſt worthy place ſo may be found, in ſuch ſort, as you may returne to victuals ſufficient, proſperouſly.

27 Item the names of the people of euery Iſland, are to be taken in writing, with the commodities, and incommunities of the ſame, their natures, qualities, and diſpoſitions, the ſite of the ſame, same, and what things they are most desirous of, & what commodities they wil most willingly depart with, & what mettals they haue in hils, mount aines, streames, or riuers, in, or vnder the earth.

28 Item if people shal appeare gathering of stones, gold, mettall, or other like, on the sand, your pinnelles may drawe nigh, marking what things they gather, vsing or playing vpon the drumme, or such other instruments, as may allure them to harkening, to fantasie, or desire to see, and heare your instruments and voyces, but keepe you out of danger, and shewe to them no poynt or signe of rigour and hostilitie.

29 Item if you shall be inuited into any Lords or Rulers house, to dinner, or other parlance, goe in such order of strength, that you may be stronger then they, and be warie of woods and am-bushes, and that your weapons be not out of your possessions.

30 Item if you shall see them weare Lyons or Beares skinner, hauing long bowes, and ar-rowes, be not afraid of that sight: for such be woꝛne oftentimes more to feare strangers, then for any other cause.

31 Item there are people that can swimme in the sea, hauens, & riuers, naked, hauing bowes and shafts, coueting to drawe nigh your ships, which if they shal finde not wel watched, or warded, they wil assault, desirous of the bodies of men, which they couet for meate: if you resist them, they dine, and so will flee, and therefore diligent watch is to be kept both day & night, in some Islands.

32 Item if occasion shal serue, that you may giue aduertisements of your proceedings in such things as may correspond to the expectation of the company, and likelihood of successe in the voyage, passing such dangers of the seas, perils of ice, intollerable coldes, and other impediments, which by sundry authozs & wꝛiters, haue ministred matter of suspition in some heads, that this voyage could not succede for the extremitie of the Noꝛth pole, lacke of passage, & such like, which haue caused wauering minds, and doubtful heads, not onely to withdrawe themselves from the aduventure of this voyage, but also disswaded others from the same, the certaintie wherof, when you shall haue tried by experience, (most certaine Master of all woꝛldly knowledge) then for declaration of the truth, which you shall haue experied, you may by common assent of counsell, sende either by land, or other waies, such two or one person, to bring the same by credite, as you shal think may passe in safetie: which sending is not to be done, but vpon vrgent causes, in likely successe of the voyage, in finding of passage, in towardlines of beneficiall traffike, or such other like, whereby the company being aduertised of your estates and proceedings, may further prouide, forsee, and determine that which may seeme most good and beneficiall for the publike wealth of the same:
either prouiding before hand such things, as shall bee requisite for the continuance of the voyage, or else otherwise to dispose as occasion shall serue: in which things your wise domes and discretions are to be vsed, and shewed, and the contents of this capitule, by you much to be pondered, for that you be not ignorant, how many persons, as well the kings Maiestie, the Lords of his honorable Counsell, this whole companie, as also your wiues, children, kinsfolkes, allies, friends and familiars, be replenished in their hearts with ardent desire to learne and know your estates, conditions, and wellfares, and in what likelihood you be in, to obtain this notable enterprise, which is hoped no lesse to succed to you, then the Orient or Occident Indias haue to the high benefite of the Emperour, and kings of Portingal, whose subiects industries, and traualles by sea, haue enriched them, by those lands and Islands, which were to all Cosmographers, and other wꝛiters both vn-knowne, and also by apparances of reason voide of experience thought and reputed inhabitable for extremities of heates, and colds, and yet indeed tried most rich, peopled, temperate, and so commodious, as all Europe hath not the like.

Reason voide of experience.

33 Item no conspiracies, parttakings, factions, false tales, vntrue repozes, which be the very seedes, and fruits of contention, discord, & confusion, by euill tongues to be suffered, but the same, & all other vngodlines to be chastened charitably with brotherly loue, and alwaies obedience to be vsed and practised by al persons in their degrees, not only for duetie and conscience sake towards God, vnder whose mercifull hand nauigants aboue all other creatures naturall be most nigh, and vicine, but also for prudent and woꝛldly pollicie, and publike weale, considering and alwaies hauing present in your mindes that you be all one most royall kings subiects, and naturals, with daily remembrance of the great importance of the voyage, the honour, glorie, praise, and benefite that depend of, and vpon the same, toward the common wealth of this noble Realme, the aduancement of you the trauallers therein, your wiues, and children, and so to endeouour your selues as that you may satisfie the expectation of them, who at their great costs, charges, and expences, haue so furnished you in good sort, and plentie of all necessities, as the like was neuer in any realme scene, vsed, or knowne requisite and needfull for such an exploit, which is most likely to be achie-ued, and brought to good effect, if euery person in his vocation shall endeouour himselfe according to his charge, and most bounden duetie: praying the liuing God, to giue you his grace, to accomplish

plish your charge to his glorie, whose merciful hand shal prosper your voyage, and preserve you from all dangers.

In witness whereof I Sebastian Gabota, Gouvernour aforesaide, to these present ordinances, haue subscribed my name, and put my seale, the day and yeere aboue written.

Exemplar Epistolæ seu literarum Missiuarum, quas illustrissimus Princeps Eduardus eius nominis Sextus, Angliæ, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ Rex, misit ad Principes Septentrionalem, ac Orientalem mundi plagam inhabitantes iuxta mare glaciale, nec non Indiam Orientalem; Anno Domini 1553 Regni sui anno septimo, & ultimo.

Eduardus sextus, Angliæ, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ Rex, &c. Omnibus Regibus & principibus ac dominis, & cunctis Iudicibus terræ, & Ducibus eius, quibuscunque est excellens aliqua dignitas in ea, cunctis in locis quæ sunt sub vniuerso cælo: Pax, tranquillitas, & honor vobis, terris, & regionibus vestris quæ imperio vestro subiacent, cuiq; vestrum quemadmodum conuenit ei. Propterea quod indidit Deus Opt. Max. hominibus præ cunctis alijs viuentibus, cor & desiderium tale, vt appetat quisque cum alijs societatem inire, amare, & vicissim amari, beneficijs afficere, & mutua accipere beneficia studeat, idem cuique pro facultate sua hoc desiderium in omnibus quidem hominibus beneficijs fouere & conseruare conuenit, in illis autem maximè, qui hoc desiderio adducti, à remotis etiam regionibus ad eos veniunt. Quo enim longius iter eius rei gratia ingressi sunt, eò ardentius in eis hoc desiderium fuisse declararunt. Insuper etiam ad hoc, nos patrum maiorumq; nostrorum exempla inuitant, qui semper humanissimè susceperunt & benignissimè tractauerunt illos, qui tum à locis propinquis, tum à remotis, eos amicè adibant, eorum se protectioni commendantes, Quod si omnibus id præstare æquum est, certè mercatoribus imprimis præstari debet, qui per vniuersum orbem discurrunt, mare circumlustrantes & aridam, vt res bonas & viles, quæ Dei beneficio in regione eorum inueniuntur, ad remotissimas regiones & regna adferant, atque inde vicissim referant, quod suæ regioni vtile ibi repeterint: vt & populi ad quos eunt, non destituantur commodis quæ non profert illis terra eorum, & ipsi sint participes rerum quibus illi abundant, Nam Deus cæli & terræ, humano generi maximè consulens, noluit vt omnia in quauis regione inuenirentur, quò regio ope alterius regionis indigeret, & gens ab alia gente commodum aliquod expectaret, ac ita stabiliiretur amicitia inter omnes, singuliq; omnibus benefacere quærent. Hoc itaque in eundæ ac stabiliendæ amicitia: desiderio moti viri quidam regni nostri, iter in remotas maritimas regiones instituerunt, vt inter nostros & illos populos, viam mercibus inferendis & efferendis aperirent, nosq; rogauerunt vt id illis concederemus. Qui petitioni illorum annuentes, concessimus viro honorabili & forti, Hugoni Wilibeco, & alijs qui cum eo sunt seruis nostris fidis & charis, vt pro sua voluntate, in regiones eis priùs incognitas eant, quæsituri ea quibus nos caremus, & adducant illis ex nostris terris id quo illi carent. Atque ita illis & nobis commodum inde accedat, sitq; amicitia perpetua, & fœdus indissolubile inter illos & nos, dum permittent illi nos accipere de rebus, quibus superabundant in reg-nis suis, & nos concedemus illis ex regnis nostris res, quibus destituuntur. Rogamus itaque vos Reges & Principes, & omnes quibus aliqua est potestas in terra, vt viris istis nostris, transitum permittatis per regiones vestras. Non enim tangent quicquam ex rebus vestris inuitis vobis. Cogitate quoddam homines & ipsi sunt. Et si qua re caruerint, oramus pro vestra beneficentia, eam vos illis tribuatis, accipientes vicissim ab eis quod poterunt rependere vobis. Ita vos gerite erga eos, quemadmodum cuperetur vt nos, & subditi nostri, nos gereremus erga seruos vestros, si quando transierint per regiones nostras. Atque promittimus vobis per Deum omnium quæ cælo, terra & mari continentur, per quæ vitam nostram, & tranquillitatem regnorum nostrorum, nos pari benignitate seruos vestros accepturos, si ad regna nostra aliquando venerint. Atque à nobis & subditis nostris, ac si nati fuissent in regnis nostris ita benigne tractabuntur, vt rependamus vobis benignitatem, quam nostris exhibueritis. Postquam vos Reges, Principes, & c. rogauimus, vt humanitate & beneficentia omni prosequamini seruos nostros nobis charos, oramus omnipotentem Deum nostrum, vt vobis diurnam vitam largiatur, & pacem quæ nullam habeat finem. Scriptum Londini, quæ ciuitas est primaria regni nostri, Anno 5515, à creato mundo, mense Iar, 14, die mensis, anno septimo regni nostri,

The copie of the letters misliue, which the right noble Prince Edward the sixth sent to the Kings, Princes, and other Potentates, in habiting the Northeast partes of the worlde, toward the mighty Empire of Carhay, at such time as Sir Hugh Willoughby knight, and Richard Chancelor, with their company, attempted their voyage thither in the yeere of Christ 1553. and the seuenith and last yeere of his raigne.

Edward the sixt, by the grace of God, King of England, France, and Ireland, et. To all Kings, Princes, Rulers, Judges, and Gouernours of the earth, and all other hauing any excellent dignitie on the same, in all places vnder the v-niuersall heauen: peace, tranquillitie, and honour be vnto you, and your lands and regions, which are vnder your dominions, and to euery of you, as is conuenient.

Forasmuch as the great and Almighty God hath giuen vnto mankind, aboue all other liuing creatures, such an heart and desire, that euery man desireth to ioine friendship with other, to loue, and be loued, also to giue and receiue mutuall benefices: it is therefore the duty of all men, according to their power, to maintaine and increase this desire in euery man, with well deserving to all men, and especially to shew this good affection to such, as being moued with this desire, come vnto them from farre countreies. For how much the longer voyage they haue attempted for this intent, so much the more doe they thereby declare that this desire hath bene ardent in them. Furthermoze also, the examples of our fathers and predecessors doe inuite vs herunto, forasmuch as they haue euer gently and louingly intreated such as of friendly mind came to them, as well from Countreies neare hand, as farre remote, commending themselves to their protection. And if it be right and equity to shew such humanitie toward all men, doubtlesse the same ought chiefly to be shewed to marchants, who wandring about the world, search both the land and the sea, to carry such good and profitable things, as are found in their Countreies, to remote regions and kingdomes, and againe to bring from the same, such things as they find there commodious for their owne Countreies: both as well that the people, to whom they goe, may not be destitute of such commodities as their Countreies bring not forth to them, as that also they may be partakers of such things, whereof they abound. For the God of heauen and earth greatly prouiding for mankind, would not that all things should be found in one region, to the ende that one should haue neede of another, that by this meanes friendship might be established among all men, and euery one seeke to gratifie all. For the establishing and furtherance of which vniuersall amitie, certaine men of our Realme, mooued heereunto by the said desire, haue instituted and taken vpon them a voyage by sea into farre Countreies, to the intent that betweene our people and them, a way may be opened to bring in, and carry out marchandi-zes, desiring vs to further their enterprise. Who assenting to their petition, haue licensed the right valiant and worthy Sir Hugh Willoughby, knight, and other our trusty and faithfull seruants, which are with him, according to their desire, to goe to countreies to them heretofore vnknown, as well to seeke such things as we lacke, as also to carry vnto them from our regions, such things as they lacke. So that hereby not onely commoditie may ensue both to them and vs, but also an indissoluble and perpetuall league of friendship be established betweene vs both, while they permit

must vs to take of their things, such whereof they haue abundance in their regions, and we againe grant them such things of ours, whereof they are destitute. We therfore desire you kings & princes, and al other, to whom there is any power on the earth, to permit vnto these our seruants free passage by your regions and dominions: for they shall not touch any thing of yours vntwilling vnto you. Consider you that they also are men. If therfore they shall stand in neede of any thing, we desire you of all humanitie, and for the nobilitie which is in you, to ayde and helpe them with such things as they lacke, receiuing againe of them such things as they shall bee able to giue you in recompense. Shew your selues so towards them, as you would that we and our subiects should shewe our selues towards your seruants, if at any time they shall passe by our regions.

Thus doing, we promise you by the God of all things that are contained in heauen, earth, and the Sea, and by the life and tranquillitie of our kingdomes, that we will with like humanitie accept your seruants, if at any time they shall come to our kingdomes, where they shall as friendly and gently bee entertained, as if they were borne in our Dominions, that wee may hereby recompence the fauour and benignitie which you haue shewed to our men. Thus after we haue desired you Kings and princes, &c. with all humanity and fauour, to entertaine our welbeloued seruants, we will pray our Almighty God, to graunt you long life, and peace, which neuer shall haue ende. The Iuramentum, or othe, ministred to the Captaine.

You shall sweare to be a faithfull, true, and loyal subject in all points, and duties, that to a subiect appertaineth, to our soueraigne Lord the kings Maieste, his heires, and successors: and that you shall wel and truly to the uttermost of your capacitie, wit, & knowledge, serue this present voiage, committed to your charge, and not to giue vp, nor sooner intermit the same, until you shall haue atchieued the same, so farre forth, as you may without danger of your life, and losse of the fleet: you shall giue good, true, and faithful counsell to the said societie, and to such as shall haue the charge with or vnder you, and not to disclose the secrets, or priuities of the same to any person by any maner of meane, to the preiudice, hurt, or damage of it. You shall minister iustice to all men vnder your charge, without respect of person, or any affection, that might moue you to decline from the true ministration of iustice. And further, you shall obserue, and cause to be obserued, as much as in you lieth, all and singular rules, articles, prouisions hitherto made, or heereafter to be made for the preservation or safeconduct of the fleet and voyage, and benefit of the company. You shall not permit nor suffer the stocke or goods of the company to be wasted, imbezeld, or consumed, but shall conserue the same whole and entire, without diminishment, untill you shall haue deliuered, deliuered, or cause to be deliuered the same, to the vse of the companie. And finally you shal vse your selfe in all points, sozts, and conditions, as to a faithfull captaine, and brother of this companie shall belong and appertaine: So helpe you God, &c.

The othe ministred to the Maister of the ship, &c.

Thou shalt sweare by the holy contents in that booke, that you according and to the vtermost of your knowledge, and good vnderstanding in mariners science and craft, shall in your vocation doe your best to conduct the good shippe called the M. &c. whereof you now are Maister vnder God, both vnto and from the portes of your discouerie, and so vse your indeuour and faithfull diligence, in charging, discharging, lading againe, and roomaging of the same shippe, as may be most for the benefite and pposite of this right woorthypfull fellowship: and you shall not priuately bargein, buy, sell, exchange, barter, or distribute any goods, wares, merchandize, or things whatsoeuer (necessary tackles and victuals for the shippe onely excepted) to or for your owne lucre, gaine or profit; neither to nor for the priuate lucre, gaine, or profit of any other person or persons whatsoeuer. And further, If you shall know any boatswaine, mariner, or any other person or persons whatsoeuer, to buy, sell, barter, trucke, or exchange any goods, wares, merchandizes, or things for priuate account, reckoning, or behalfe, you shall doe your best to withstand and let the same: and if you cannot commodiously so doe, that then before the discharge of such goods bought for priuat account, you shal giue knowledge therof to the cape marchant of this said fellowship for the time being. And you shal not receiue nor take, nor suffer to be receiued or taken into your said ship during this voyage any maner person or persons whatsoeuer, going or returning, but onely those mariners which without fraud or guile shall be hired to be of your company, and to serue in mariners craft and science onely: So helpe you God, &c.

These foresaid shippes being fully furnished with their pinnelles and boates, well appointed with al maner of artillerie, and other things necessary for their defence with al the men aforesaid, departed from Ratcliffe, and valed vnto Detford, the 10. day of May, 1553.

The 11. day about two of the clocke, we departed from Detford, passing by Greenwich, saluting the kings Maiesty then being there, shooting off our ordinaunce, & so valed vnto Blackwall, and there remained until the 17. day, and that day in the morning we went from Blackwall, and came to Woolwich by nine of the clocke, and there remained one tide, and so the same night vnto Heyzeth.

The 18. day from Heyzeth vnto Grauesend, and there remained until the twentieth day: that day being Saterday, from Grauesend vnto Tilberie Hope, remaining there untill the two and twentieth day.

The 22. day from Tilberie Hope to Hollie haen.

The 23. day from Hollie Haen, till we came against Lee, and there remained that night, by reason that the winde was contrary to vs.

The 24. day the winde being in the Southwest in the morning, we sailed along the coast ouer the Spitz, vntill we came against S. Osyth, about five of the clocke at night, and there came to anker, and abode there all that night.

The 25. day about tenne of the clocke we departed from S. Osyth, and so sailed forward vnto the Rase, and there abode that night for winde and tide.

The 26. day at five of the clock in the morning, we weped our anker, and sailed ouer the Rase, the winde being at the Southwest, vntill wee came to Drwell wandes, and there came to an anker, and abode there untill the 28. day.

The same day being Trinitie Sunday about 7. of the clocke before noone we weped our ankers, and sailed til we came athwart Wallfurlye, and there came to an anker.

The 29. day from thence to Holmehead, where we stayed that day, where we consulted which way, and what courses were best to be holden for the discouerie of our voyage, and there agreed.

The 30. day of May at five of the clocke in the morning wee set saile, and came against Portsmouth about thre leagues into the sea, riding there at anker all that night.

The last of May into the Sea five leagues Northeast, and there taried that night, where the winde blew very sore.

The first of June the winde being at North contrary to vs, wee came backe againe to Drwell, and remained there untill the 15. day, taryng for the winde, for all this time the winde was contrary to our purpose.

May.

June.

The

The 15 day being at Orwel in the latitude of 52 degrees, in the morning wee weped our ankers, and went forth into the wands about two miles from the towne, and lay there that night.

The 16 day at eight of the clocke we set forward, and sayled vntill we came athwart Alburrough, and there stayed that night.

The 17 day about five of the clocke before noone we went backe vnto Orfordnesse, and there remained vntill the 19 day.

The 19 day at eight of the clocke in the morning we went backe to Orwel, and abode there three dayes tarying for the winde.

The 23 day of Iune the wind being faire in the Southwest we hailed into the seas to Orford-nesse, and from thence into the seas ten leagues North-east: then being past the lands, we changed our course five leagues North-north-east: about midnight we changed our course againe, and went due North, continuing in the same vnto the 27 day.

The 27 day about seven of the clocke North-north-west 42 leagues to the ende to fall with Shotland: then the wind beared to the West, so that we could lie but North and by West, continuing in the same course 40 leagues, whereby we could not fetch Shotland: then we sayled North 16 leagues by estimation, after that North and by West, & North-north-west, then Southeast, with diuers other courses, trauesing and tracing the seas, by reason of sundry and manifolde contrary windes, vntill the 14 day of Iuly: and then the sunne entering into Leo, we discouered land Eastward of vs, vnto the which we sayled that night as much as we might: and after wee went on shoie with our Pinnele, & found little houses to the number of 30, where we knew that it was inhabited, but the people were fled away, as we indged, for feare of vs.

Iulij.

The land was all full of little Ilands, and that innumerable, which were called (as we learned afterwards) Egeland and Halgeland, which lieth from Orfordnesse North and by East, being in the latitude of 66 degrees. The distance betweene Orfordnesse and Egeland 250 leagues.
Then we sailed from thence 12 leagues North-west, and found many other Ilandes, and there came to anker the 19 day, and manned our Pinnele, and went on shoie to the Ilands, and found people mowing and making of hay, which came to the shoie and welcomed vs. In which place were an innumerable sort of Ilands, which were called the Isles of Rost, being vnder the dominion of the king of Denmarke: which place was in latitude 66 degrees, and 30 minutes. The winde being contrary, we remayned there three dayes, & there was an innumerable sort of fowles of diuers kindes, of which we tooke very many.

In this land dwelt other as it seemeth.

Rost Ilands.

The 22 day the winde comming fayre, we departed from Rost, sailing North-north-east, keeping the sea vntill the 27 day, and then we dyed neere vnto the land, which was still East of vs:
then went forth our Pinnele to seeke harbours, & found many good harbours, of the which we entred into one with our shippes, which was called Stanfew, and the land being Ilands, were called Lewfoot, or Lofoot, which were plentifully inhabited, and very gentle people, being also vnder the king of Denmarke: but we could not learne how farre it was from the maine land: and we remained there vntill the 30 day, being in latitude 68 degrees, and from the foresaid Rost about 30 leagues North-north-east.

Stanfew harbor.

Lofoot.

The 30 day of Iuly about noone we weped our ank-ers, and went into the Seas, and sayled along these Ilands North-north-east, keeping the land still in sight vntill the second day of August: then hailing in close aboord the land, to the entent to knowe what land it was, there came a skiffe of the Island aboord of vs, of whom we asked many questions, who shewed vnto vs, that the Island was called Seynam, which is the latitude of seventy degrees, and from Stanfew thirtie leagues, being also vnder the king of Denmarke, and that there was no merchandise there, but onely dyed fish, and craine oyle. Then we being purposed to goe vnto Finmarke, inquired of him, if we might haue a pilot to bring vs vnto Finmarke, & he said, that if we could beare in, we should haue a good harbour, and on the next day a pilot to bring vs to Finmarke, vnto the warehouse, which is the strongest holde in Finmarke, and most resorted to by report. But when wee would haue entred into an harbour, the land being very high on euery side, there came such flaxes of winde and terrible whirlewindes, that we were not able to beare in, but by violence were constrained to take the sea agayne, our Pinnele being vnshipt: we sailed North and by East, the wind increasing so foze that we were not able to beare any saile, but tooke them in, and lay a dyist, to the end to let the storme ouer passe. And that night by violence of winde, and thickenesse of mists, we were not able to keepe together within sight, and then about midnight we lost our pinnele, which was a discomfort vnto vs. Assoone as it was day, and the fogge ouerpass, we looked about, and at the last we descried one of our shippes to Leeward of vs: then we spied an hullocke of our foresaile, and bare roome with her, which was the Confidence, but the Edward we could not see.
Then the stau something abating, we and the Confidence hoyle by our sailes the fourth day, sailing Northeast and by North, to the end to fall with the Wardhouse, as we did consule to doe before, in case we should part company. Thus running Northeast and by North, and Northeast fiftie leagues, then we sounded, and had 160 fadomes, whereby we thought to be farre from land, and perceiued that the land lay not as the Globe made mention. Wherefore we changed our course the next day, and sailed Southeast and by South eight and forty leagues, thinking thereby to find the Wardhouse.

The eight day much winde rising at the Westnorthwest, we not knowing how the coast lay, strook our sailes, and lay a drift, where we sounded and found 160 fadomes as afoze.

The ninth day, the wind bearing to the South Southeast, we sailed Northeast 25 leagues.

The tenth day we sounded, and could get no ground, neither yet could see any land, wherat we wondered: then the wind comming at the Northeast, we ran Southeast about 48 leagues.

The 11 day, the wind being at South, we sounded, and found 40 fadoms, and faire land.

The 12 day the winde being at South and by East, we lay with our saile East, and East and by North 30 leagues.

The 14 day early in the morning we descried land, which land we bare with all, hoisting out our boat to discover what land it might be: but the boat could not come to land the water was so shoale, where was very much ice also, but there was no similitude of habitation, and this land lyeth from Seynam East and by North 160 leagues, being in latitude 72 degrees. Then we plyed to the Northward the 15, 16 and 17 day.

The 18 day, the winde comming at the Northeast, and the Confidence being troubled with bilge water, and stocked, we thought it good to seeke harbour for her redress: then we bare roome the 18 day Southsoutheast, about 70 leagues.

The 21 day we sounded, and found 10 fadome, after that we sounded againe, and found but 7 fadome, so shoalder and shoalder water, and yet could see no land, where we maruelled greatly: to auoid this danger, we bare roome into the sea all that night Northwest and by West.

The next day we sounded, and had 20 fadoms, then shayed our course, and ran West Southwest untill the 23 day: then we descried Low land, vnto which we bare as nigh as we could, and it appeared vnto vs uninhabitable. Then wee plyed Westward along by that land, which lyeth West Southwest, and East Northeast, and much winde blowing at the West, we haled into the sea North and by East 30 leagues. Then the winde comming about at the Northeast, we sailed West Northwest: after that, the winde bearing to the Northwest, we lay with our sailes West southwest, about 14 leagues, and then descried land, and bare in with it, being the 28 day, finding shoale water, and bare in till we came to 3 fadome, then perceiuing it to be shoale water, and also seeing drie lands, we haled out againe Northeast along that land until we came to the point thereof. That land turning to the Westwarde, we ran along 16 leagues Northwest: then comming into a faire bay, we went on land with our boat, which place was uninhabited, but yet it appeared vnto vs that the people had bin there, by crosses, and other signes: from thence we went all along the coast Westward.

September.

The fourth day of September we lost sight of land, by reason of contrary winds, and the eight day we descried land againe. Within two dayes after we lost the sight of it: then running West and by South about 30 leagues, we gat the sight of land againe, and bare in with it until night: then perceiuing it to be a lee shore, we gat vs into the sea, to the end to haue sea roome.

The 12 of September we haled to shoarward againe, hauing then indifferent winde and weather: then being nere vnto the shoare, and the tide almost spent, wee came to an anker in 30 fadoms water.

The 13 day we came along the coast, which lay Northwest and by West, and Southeast and by East.

The 14 day we came to an anker within two leagues of the shoare, hauing 60 fadoms.

There we went a shore with our boat, & found two or thre good harboroughs, the land being rocky, and high, but as for people could we see none. The 15 day we ran still along the coast until the 17 day: then the winde being contrary vnto vs, we thought it best to returne vnto the harbor which we had found before, and so we bare roome with the same, howbeit we could not accomplish our desire that day. The next day being the 18 of September, we entered into the hauen, and there came to an anker at 6 fadoms. This hauen runneth into the maine, about two leagues, and is in breadth halfe a league, wherein were very many seale fishes, & other great fishes, and vpon the maine we saw beares, great deere, foxes, with diuers strange beasts, as guloines, and such other which were to vs vnknown, and also wonderfull. Thus remaining in this hauen the space of a weeke, seeing the yeare farre spent, & also very euill weather, as frost, snow, and haile, as though it had bene the deepe of winter, we thought best to winter there. Wherefore we sent out three men

Southsouthwest, to search if they could find people, who went three dayes iourney, but could finde none: after that, we sent other three Westward foure daies iourney, which also returned without finding any people. Then sent we three men Southeast three dayes iourney, who in like sorte returned without finding of people, or any similitude of habitation.

Here endeth Sir Hugh Willoughbie his note, which was written with his owne hand.

These two notes following were written vpon the outside of this Pamphlet, or Booke.

- 1 The proceedings of Sir Hugh Willoughbie after he was separated from the Edward Bonaventure.
- 2 Our shippe being at an anker in the harbour called Sterfier in the Island Lofdote.

The riuer of hauen wherein Sir Hugh Willoughbie with the companie of his two ships perished for cold, is called Arzina in Lapland, neere vnto Kegor. But it appeareth by a Will found in the ship that Sir Hugh Willoughbie and most of the company were alieue in January 1554.

The booke of the great and mighty Emperor of Russia, and Duke of Moscouia, and of the dominions orders and commodities thereunto belonging: drawn by Richard Chancelour.

Inasmuch as it is meete and necessary for all those that minde to take in hande the trauell into farre or strange countreys, to endeouour themselves not onely to vnderstande the orders, commodities, and fruitfullnesse thereof, but also to applie them to the setting forth of the same, whereby it may incourage others to the like trauaile: therefore haue I nowe thought good to make a brieue rehearsall of the orders of this my trauaile in Russia and Moscouia, and other countreys thereunto adioynning; because it was my chaunce to fall with the North partes of Russia before I came towards Moscouia, I will partly declare my knowledgce therein. Russia is very plentifull both of land and people, and also welthy for such commodities as they haue. They be very great fishers for Salmones and small Coddes: they haue much oyle which wee call treine oyle, the most whereof is made by a riuer called Duina. They make it in other places, but not so much as there. They haue also a great trade in seething of saite water. To the North parte of that countrey are the places where they haue their Fures, as Sables, martens, greesse Beuers, Foxes white, blacke, and redde, Hinkes, Ermines, Minier, and Varts. There are also a fishes teeth, which fish is called a Hoyle. The takers thereof dwell in a place called Postefora, which bring them vpon Vartes to Lampas to sell, and from Lampas carie them to a place called Colmogro, where the hie market is holden on Saint Nicholas day. To the West of Colmogro there is a place called Gratanoue, in our language Nouogorode, where much fine Flare and Pempe groweth, and also much ware and honie. The Dutch marchants haue a Staplehouse there. There is also great stoe of hides, and at a place called Plesco: and thereabout is great stoe of Flare, Pempe, Ware, Honie; and that towne is from Colmogro 120 miles.

Duyna

Note.

There is a place called Vologda; the commodities whereof are Tallowe, Ware, and Flare: but not so great plenty as is in Gratanoue. From Vologda to Colmogro there runneth a riuer called Duyna, and from thence it falleth into the sea. Colmogro serueth Gratanoue, Vologda and the Mosco with all the countrey thereabout with saite and saltfish. From Vologda to Ierasslaue is two hundred miles: which towne is very great. The commodities thereof are hides, and tallowe, and coyne in great plenty, and some Ware, but not so plentifull as in other places.

The Mosco is from Ierasslaue two hundred miles. The countrey betwixt them is very wel replenished with small Villages, which are so well filled with people, that it is wonder to see them: the ground is well stoez with coyne which they carie to the citie of Mosco in such abundance that it is wonder to see it. You shall meete in a morning feuen or eight hundred sleds comming or going thither, that carrie coyne, and some carie fish. You shall haue some that carie come to the Mosco, and some that fetch coyne from thence, that at the least dwell a thousand miles off: and all their cariage is on sleds. Those which come so farre dwell in the North partes of the Dukes dominions, where the cold will suffer no coyne to grow, it is so extreme.

extreme. They bring thither fishes, furrres, and beastes skiuues. In those partes they haue but small stoze of cattell.

The Mosco it selfe is great: I take the whole towne to bee greater then London with the suburbs: but it is very rude, and standeth without aliozber. Their houses are all of timber very dangerous for fire. There is a faire Castle, the walles whereof are of brycke, and very high: they say they are eightene foote thicke, but I doe not beleene it, it doth not so seeme, notwithstanding I doe not certainly know it: for no stranger may come to viewe it. The one side is ditched, and on the other side runneth a riuer called Moscu which runneth into Tartarie and so into the sea called Mare Caspium: and on the North side there is a baste towne, the which hath also a brycke wall about it, and so it ioyneth with the Castle wall. The Emperour lieth in the castle, wherein are nine sayre Churches; and therein are religious men. Also there is a Petropolitane with diuers Bishops. I wil not stande in description of their buildinges nor of the strength thereof because we haue better in all points in England. They be well furnished with ordinaunce of all sortes.

The Emperours or Dukes house neither in building nor in the outward shew, nor yet within the house is so sumptuous as I haue seene. It is very lowe built in right square, much like the olde building of England, with small windowes, and so in other poynts.

Now to declare my comming befoze his Maiestie: After I had remained twelue daies, the Secretary which hath the hearing of strangers did send for me, aduertising me that the Dukes pleasure was to haue me to come befoze his Ma. with the kings my masters letters: whereof I was right glad, and so I gaue mine attendance. And when the Duke was in his place appointed, the interpreter came for me into the vtter chamber, where sate one hundred or more gentlemen, all in cloth of golde very sumptuous, and from thence I came into the Counsaile chamber, where sate the Duke himselfe with his nobles, which were a faire company: they sate round about the chamber on high, yet so that he himselfe sate much higher then any of his nobles in a chaire gilt, and in a long garment of beaen golde, with an imperial crowne vpon his head, and a staffe of Cristall and golde in his right hand, and his other hand halfe leaning on his chaire. The Chancelour stoode vp with the Secretary befoze the Duke. After my dutie done and my letter deliuered, he bade me welcome, & enquired of me the health of the King my master, and I answered that he was in good health at my departure from his court, and that my trust was that he was now in the same. Upon the which he bade me to dinner. The Chancelour presented my present vnto his Grace bareheaded (for befoze they were all couered) and when his Grace had receiued my letter, I was required to depart: for I had charge not to speake to the Duke, but when he spake to me. So I departed vnto the Secretaries chamber, where I remayned two houres, and then I was sent for againe vnto another palace which is called the golden palace, but I saw no cause why it should be so called; for I haue seene many fayer then it in all poynts: and so I came into the hall, which was small and not great as is the Kings Maiesties of England, and the table was couered with a tablecloth; and the Marshall sate at the ende of the table with a little white rod in his hand, which boorde was full of vessel of golde: and on the other side of the hall did stand a faire cupboorde of plate. From thence I came into the dining chamber, where the Duke himselfe sate at his table without cloth of estate, in a gowne of siluer, with a crowne imperiall vpon his head, he sate in a chaire somewhat hie: There sate none neare him by a great way. There were long tables set round about the chamber, which were full set with such as the Duke had at dinner: they were all in white. Also the places where the tables stoode were higher by two steppes then the rest of the house. In the middelt of the chamber stoode a table of cupboord to set place on; which stoode full of cuppes of golde: and amongst all the rest there stoode foure maruellous great pottes of erubences as they call them, of golde and siluer: I thinke they were a good yarde and a halfe hie. By the cupboorde stoode two gentlemen with napkins on their shoulders, and in their handes each of them had a cuppe of gold set with pearles and pzeious stones, which were the Dukes owne drinking cups: when he was disposed, he drunke them off at a draught. And for his seruice at meate it came in without order, yet it was very rich seruice: for all were serued in gold, not onely he himselfe, but also all the rest of vs, and it was very massie: the cups also were of golde and very massie. The number that dined there that day was two hundred persons, and all were serued in golden vessel. The gentlemen that waited were all in cloth of gold, and they serued him with their caps on their heads. Befoze the seruice came in, the Duke sent to euery man a great shiuer of bread, and the beaver called the party so sent to by his name aloude, and sayd, Iohn Basiluich Emperour of Russia and great Duke of Moscouia doth reward thee with bread: then must all men stand by, and doe at all times when those wordes are spoken, And then last of all he giueth the Marshall bread bread, whereof he eateth before the Dukes Grace, and so doth reuerence and departeth. Then cometh the Dukes seruice of the Swannes all in pieces, and euery one in a seuerall dish: the which the Duke sendeth as he did the bread, and the bearer saythe the same wordes as he sayd before. And as I sayd before, the seruice of his meate is in no order, but cometh in dish by dish: and then after that the Duke sendeth drinke, with the like saying as before is tolde. Also before dinner hee changed his crowne, and in dinner time two crownes; so that I saw three seuerall crownes vpon his head in one day. And thus when his seruice was all come in hee gaue to euery one of his gentlemen waiters meate with his owne hand, & so likewise drinke. His intent thereby is, as I haue heard, that euery man shall know perfectly his seruants. Thus when dinner is done hee calleth his nobles before him name by name, that it is wonder to heare howe he could name them, hauing so many as he hath. Thus when dinner was done I departed to my lodging, which was an hower within night. I will leaue this, and speake no more of him nor his household: but I will somewhat declare of his land and people, with their nature and power in the wars. This Duke is Lord and Emperour of many countreys, & his power is marvellous great. For he is able to bring into the field two or three hundred thousand men: he neuer goeth into the field himselfe with vnder two hundred thousand men: And when he goeth himselfe he furnissheth his borders all with men of warre, which are no small number. He leaueth on the borders of Liesland fortie thousand men, and vpon the borders of Letto 60 thousand men, and towarde the Magayan Tartars thirtie thousand, which is wonder to heare of: yet doeth hee neuer take to his warres neither husbandman nor marchant. All his men are horsemen: he useth no footmen, but such as goe with the ordinance and labourers, which are thirtie thousand. The horsemen are all archers, with such bowes as the Turkes haue, and they ride shor as doe the Turkes. Their armour is a coate of plate, with a skull on their heads. Some of their coates are couered with veluet or cloth of gold: their desire is to be sumptuous in the field, and especially the nobles and gentlemen: as I haue heard their trimming is very costly, and partly I haue seene it, or else I would scarcely haue beleued it: but the Duke himselfe is richly attired aboue all measure: his pavilion is couered either with cloth of gold or silver, and so set with stones that it is wonderfull to see it. I haue seene the Kings Pauesies of England and the French Kings pavilions, which are sayze, yet not like vnto his. And when they bee sent into farre or strange countreys, or that strangers come to them, they be very gorgeous. This the Duke himselfe goeth but meane in apparell: and when he goeth betwixt one place and another hee is but reasonably apparellled ouer other times. In the while that I was in Mosco the Duke sent two ambassadours to the King of Poland, which had at the last fife hundred horses; their sumptuousnes was aboue measure, not onely in themselves, but also in their horses, as veluet, cloth of golde, and cloth of silver set with pearles and not scant. What shall I farther say: I neuer heard of nor saw men so sumptuous: but it is no dayly guise, for when they haue not occasion, as I sayd before, all their doing is but meane. And now to the effect of their warres: They are men without al order in the field. If or they rume hurling on heapes, and for the most part they neuer giue battell to their enemies: but that which they doe, they doe it all by felch. But I beleue they be such men for hard liuing as are not vnder the sun: for no cold wil hurt them. Dea and though they lie in the field two moneths, at such time as it shall freeze more then a yard thicke, the common souldier hath neither rent nor any thing else ouer his head: the most defence they haue against the wether is a felte, which is set against the winde and weather, and when Snowe cometh hee doth cast it off, and maketh him a fire, and laieth him down thereby. Thus doe the most of all his men, except they bee gentlemen which haue other prouision of their owne. Their lying in the fiede is not so strange as is their hardnes: for euery man must carie & make prouision for himselfe & his horse for a moneth or two, which is very wonderfull. For he himselfe shal liue vpon water & otemeale mingled together cold, and drinke water thereto: his horse shal eat green wood, & such like baggage, & shal stand open in the cold field without couert, & yet wil he labour & serue him right wel. I pray you amongst all our boasting warriors how many should we find to endure the field with the but one moneth. I know no such region about vs that beareth that name for man & beast. Now what might be made of these men if they were trained & broken to order and knowledge of ciuill wars: If this Prince had within his countreys such men as could make the to vnderstand þ things aforesaid, I do beleue that 2 of the best or greatest princes in Christendome were not wel able to match with him, considering the greatnes of his power & the hardnes of his people & strait liuing both of people and horse, and the small charges which his warres stand him in: for he giueth no wages, except to strangers. They haue a perely stipend & not much. As for his own countrey men euery one serueth of his owne proper coses and charges, sauing that he giueth to his Harcubussiers certaine allowance for powder & shot: or else no man in all his countrey hath one pennie wages. But if any man hath done very good service he giueth him a ferme or a piece of lande; for the which hee is bound at all times to bee readie with so many men as the Duke shall appoynt: who considereth in his mind what that lande or ferme is well able to finde: and so many shall he bee bound to furnish at all and euery such time as warres are holden in any of the Dukes dominions. For there is no man of liuing, but hee is bound likewise, whether the Duke call for either souldier or labourer, to furnish them with all such necessities as to them belong.

Also, if any gentleman or man of liuing do die without issue male, immediately after his death the Duke entereth his land, notwithstanding he haue neuer so many daughters, and peradventure giueth it forthwith to another man, except a small portion that he spareth to marrie the daughters with all. Also if there be a rich man, a fermour, or man of liuing, which is stricken in age or by chance is maimed, and be not able to doe the Duke service, some other gentleman that is not able to liue and moze able to doe service, will come to the Duke and complayne, saying, your Grace hath such an one, which is vnmeet to doe service to your Highnes, who hath great abundance of welth, and likewise your Grace hath many gentlemen which are poore and lacke liuing, and we that lacke are well able to doe good service, your Grace might doe well to looke vpon him, and make him to helpe those that want. Immediately the Duke sendeth forth to inquire of his wealth: and if it be so proued, he shall be called before the Duke, and it shall bee sayd vnto him, friend, you haue too much liuing, and are vnseruiceable to your prince, lesse will serue you, and the rest will serue other men that are moze able to serue. whereupon immediately his liuing shall be taken away from him, sauing a little to find himselfe and his wife on, and he may not once repine thereat: but for answer he will say, that he hath nothing, but it is Gods and the Dukes Graces, and cannot say, as we the common people in England say, if wee haue anything; that it is Gods and our owne. Then may say, that these men are in wonderfull great awe, and obedience, that thus one must giue and grant his goods which he hath bene scraping and scratching for all his life to be at his Princes pleasure and commandement. Oh that our sturdie rebels were had in the like subiection to knowe their duety towards their Princes. They may not say as some snudges in England say, I would find the Queene a man to serue in my place, or make his friends carrie at home if money haue the vpper hand. No, no, it is not so in this countrey: for hee shall make humble sute to serue the Duke. And whom he sendeth most to the warres he thinketh he is most in his fauour: and yet as I before haue sayd, hee giueth no wages. If they knewe their strength no man were able to make match with them: nor they that dwel neere them should haue any rest of them. But I thinke it is not Gods will: For I may compare them to a young horse that knoweth not his strength, whome a little childe ruleth and guideth with a bzible, for all his great strength: for if hee did, neither childe nor man could rule him. Their warres are holden against the Crimme Tartarians and the Magaians.

I will stand no longer in the rehearfall of their power and warres. For it were too tedious to the reader. But I will in part declare their lawes, and punishments, and the execution of iustice. And first I will begin with the commons of the countrey, which the gentlemen haue rule on: And that is, that euery gentleman hath rule and iustice vpon his owne tenants. And if it so fall out that two gentlemen seruaunts or tenants doe disagree, the two gentlemen examine the matter, and haue the parties before them, and soe giue the sentence. And yet cannot they make the ende betwixt them of the controuersie, but either of the gentlemen must bring his seruant or tenant before the high iudge or iustice of that countrey, and there present them, and declare the matter and case. The plaintife sayth, I require the law; which is graunted: then commeth an officer and arresteth the party defendand, and vseth him contrarie to the lawes of England. For when they attach any man they beate him about the legges, vntill such time as he findeth suetie to answer the matter: And if not, his handes and necke are bound together, and he is led about the towne and beaten about the legges, with other extreme punishments till he come to his answer: And the Iustice demaundeth if it be for debt, and sayth: Dwell thou this man any such debt? He will perhaps say nay. Then sayth the Iudge: art thou able to denie it? Let vs heare how? By othe sayth the defendand. Then he commandeth to leaue beating him till further trial be had.

Their order in one point is commendable. They haue no man of Lawe to pleade their causes in any court: but euery man pleadeth his owne cause, and giueth bill and answer in writing: contrarie to the order in England. The complaint is in maner of a supplication, & made to the Dukes Grace, and deliuered him into his owne hand, requiring to haue iustice as in his complaint is alleaged.

The duke giueth sentence himseife vpon all matters in the Law. Which is very comendable, that such a Prince will take paines to see ministration of iustice. Yet notwithstanding it is wonderfully abused: and thereby the Duke is much deceived. But if it fall out that the officers be espied in cloaking the truth, they haue most condigne punishment. And if the plaintife can nothing proue, then the defendant must take his oth vpon the crucifixe whether he bee in the right or no. Then is demanded if the plaintife be any thing able further to make proufe: if hee bee not; then sometimes he will say, I am able to prouue it by my body and hands, or by my champions body, so requiring the Campe. After the other hath his othe, it is graunted aswell to the one as to the other. So when they goe to the field, they sweare vpon the Crucifixe, that they bee both in the right, and that the one shall make the other to confesse the truth befoze they depart footth of the field: and so they goe both to the battell armed with such weapons as they vse in that countrey: they fight all on foote, & seldome the parties themselues do fight, except they be Gentlemen. for they stand much vpon their reputation, for they will not fight, but with such as are come of as good an house as themselues. So that if either partie require the combate, it is granted vnto them, and no champion is to serue in their roome: wherein is no deceit: but otherwise by champions there is. For although they take great othes vpon them to doe the battell truely, yet is the contrary often seene: because the common champions haue none other liuing. And assoone as the one party hath gotten the victorie, hee demandeth the debt, and the other is carried to prison, and there is shamefully vsed till he take order. There is also another order in the lawe, that the plaintife may sweare in some causes of debt. And if the partie defendant be pooze, he shalbe set vnder the Crucifixe, and the partie plaintife must sweare ouer his head, and when hee hath taken his othe, the Duke taketh the partie defendant home to his house, and vseth him as his bond-man, and putteth him to labour, or letteth him for hie to any such as neede him, vntill such time as his friends make prouision for his redemption: or else hee remaineth in bondage all the dayes of his life. Againe there are many that will sell themselues to Gentlemen or Marchants to bee their bond-men, to haue during their life meate, drinke and cloth, and at their conuining to haue a piece of mony. yea and some will sell their wiues and children to bee batwdes and drudges to the byer. Also they haue a Lawe for Fellons and pickers contrary to the Lawes of England. For by their law they can hang no man for his first offence; but may keepe him long in prison, and oftentimes beate him with whips and other punishment: and there he shall remaine vntill his friends be able to bayle him. If he be a picker of a cut-purse, as there be very many, the second time he is taken, he hath a piece of his Nose cut off, and is burned in the forehead, and kept in prison till hee finde sureties for his good behauiour. And if he be taken the third time, he is hanged. And at the first time he is extremely punished and not released, except hee haue very good friends, or that some Gentleman require to haue him to the warres: And in so doing, he shall enter into great bonds for him: by which meanes the countrey is brought into good quietnesse. But they be naturally giuen to great deceit, except extreme beating did bryble them. They be naturally giuen to hard liuing aswell in fare as in lodging. I heard a Russian say, that is was a great deale merrier liuing in prison then footth, but for the great beating. For they haue meate and drinke without any labour, and get the charitie of well disposed people: But being at libertie they get nothing. The pooze is very innumerable, and liue most miserably: for I haue seene them eate the pickle of Herring and other stinking fish: nor the fish cannot be so stinking nor rotten, but they will eate it and praise it to be moze wholesome then other fish or fresh meate. In mine opinion there be no such people vnder the sunne for their hardnesse of liuing. Well, I will leaue them in this poynt, and will in part declare their Religion. They doe obserue the lawe of the Greekes with such excess of superstition, as the like hath not bene heard of. They haue no grauen images in their Churches, but all painted, to the intent they will not breake the commandement: but to their painted images they vse such idolatrie, that the like was neuer heard of in England. They will neither worship nor honour any image that is made forth of their owne countrey. For their owne images (say they) haue pictures to declare what they be, and howe they be of God, and so be not ours: They say, Looke how the Painter or Caruer hath made them, so we doe worship them, and they worship none befoze they be Christened. They say we be but halfe Christians: because we obserue not part of the olde law with the Turks. Therefore they call themselues moze holy then vs. They haue none other learning but their mother tongue, nor will suffer no other in their countrey among them. All their seruice in Churches is in their mother tongue. They haue the olde and newe Testament, which are daily read among them: and yet their superstition is no lesse. For when the Priests doe reade, they haue such tricks in their reading, that no man can vnderstand them, nor no man giueth eare to them. For all the while the Priest readeth, the people sit downe and one talke with another. But when the Priest is at seruice no man sitteth, but gagle and ducke like so many Geese. And as for their prayers they haue but little skill, but vse to say As bodi pomele: As much to say, Lord haue mercy vpon me. For the tenth man within the land cannot say the Pater noster. And as for the Creebe, no man may be so bolde as to meddle therewith but in the Church: for they say it shoulde not bee spoken of, but in the Churches. Speake to them of the Comandements, and they wil say they were giuen to Moses in the law, which Christ hath nowe abrogated by his precious death and passion: therefore, (say they) we obserue little or none thereof. And I doe beleue them. For if they were examined of their Lawe and Commaundements together, they shoulde agree but in fewe poynts. They haue the Sacrament of the Lords Supper in both kindes, and moze ceremonies then wee haue. They present them in a dish in both kindes together, and carrie them rounde about the Church vpon the Priestes head, and so doe minister at all such times as any shall require. They bee great offerers of Candles, and sometimes of money, which wee call in England, Soule penie, with moze ceremonies then I am able to declare. They haue foure Lents in the yeere, whereof our Lent is the greatest. Look as we doe begin on the Wednesday, so they doe on the Sunday before: And the weeke before that they call The Butter weeke: And in that weeke they eate nothing but Butter and milke. Howbeit I beleue there bee in no other countrey the like people for drunkenness. The next Lent is called Saint Peters Lent, and beginneth alwayes the Sunday next after Trinitie Sunday, and endeth on Saint Peters euen. If they shoulde breake that fast, their beleefe is, that they shoulde not come in at heauen gates. And when any of them die, they haue a testimoniall with them in the Coffin, that when the soule cometh to heauen gates it may deliuer the same to Saint Peter, which declareth that the partie is a true and holy Rusian. The third Lent beginneth fifteene dayes before the later Lady day, and endeth on our Lady Euen. The fourth Lent beginneth on Saint Martins day, and endeth on Christmas Euen: which Lent is fasted for Saint Philip, Saint Peter, Saint Nicholas, and Saint Clement. For they foure be the principall and greatest Saints in that countrey. In these Lents they eate neither Butter, Egges, Milke, nor Cheese; but they are very straitely kept with Fish, Cabbages, and Rootes. And out of their Lents, they obserue truely the Wednesdayes and Fridayes throughout the yeere: and on the Saturday they doe eate flesh. Furthermoze they haue a great number of Religious men: which are blacke Monks, and they eate no flesh throughout the yeere, but fish, milke and Butter. By their order they shoulde eate no fresh-fish, and in their Lents they eate nothing but Coleworsts, Cabbages, salt Cowcumbers, with other rootes, as Radish and such like. Their drinke is like our peny Ale, and is called Quass. They haue seruice daily in their Churches; and vse to goe to seruice two houres before day, and that is ended by day light. At nine of the clocke they goe to Masse: that ended, to dinner: and after that to seruice againe: and then to supper. You shall vnderstand that at euery dinner and supper they haue declared the exposition of the Gospel that day: but howe they wrest and twine the Scripture and that together by report it is wonderfull. As for whozedome and drunkenness there be none such liuing: and for extortion, they be the most abhominable vnder the sunne. Nowe iudge of their holiness. They haue twise as much land as the Duke himselfe hath: but yet hee is reasonable euen with them, as thus: When they take hybes of any of the poore and simple, he hath it by an order. When the Abbot of any of their houses dieth, then the Duke hath all his goods moueable and vnmoueable: so that the successour buyeth all at the Dukes hands: and by this meane they be the best Farmers the Duke hath. Thus with their Religion I make an ende, trusting hereafter to know it better.

To the right worshipfull and my singular good Vncle, Master Christopher Frothingham, giue these.

Sir, Reade and correct;
For great is the defect.

The Testimonie of M. Richard Eden in his Decades, concerning the Booke following.

And whereas (saith he) I haue before made mention howe Moscouie was in our time discovered by Richard Chancellor in his voyage toward Cathay, by the direction and information of M. Sebastian Cabora, who long before had this secret in his minde: I shall not neede here to describe that voyage, forasmuch as the same is largely and faithfully written in the Latine tongue, by that learned yong man Clement Adams, schoolemaster to the Queenes henchmen, as he receiued it at the mouth of the said Richard Chancellor.

The newe

The newe Nauigation and discouerie of the kingdome of Moscouia, by the Northeast, in the yeere 1553: Enterprised by Sir Hugh Willoughbie knight, and performed by Richard Chancellor Pilot maior of the voyage: Written in Latine by Clement Adams.

What time our Marchants perceined the commodities and wares of England to bee in small request with the countreys and people about vs, and neere vnto vs, and that those Marchandizes which strangers in the time and memorie of our auncesters did earnestly seeke and desire, were now neglected, and the price thereof abated, although by vs carried to their owne portes, and all forreine Marchandises in great accompt, and their prizes wonderfully raised: certaine graue Citizens of London, and men of great wisdom, and careful for the good of their Countrey, began to thinke with themselves, howe this mischiefe might bee remedied. Neither was a remedie (as it then appeared) wanting to their desires, for the attoyding of so great an in-conuenience: for seeing that the wealth of the Spaniards and Portingales, by the discouerie and search of newe trades and Countreys was maruellously increased, supposing the same to be a course and meane for them also to obtaine the like, they thereupon resalued vpon a newe and strange Nauigation. And whereas at the same time one Sebastian Cabota, a man in those dayes very renowned, happened to bee in London, they began first of all to deale and consult diligently with him, and after much speech and conference together, it was at last concluded that three shippes should bee prepared and furnished out, for the search and discouerie of the Northern part of the world, to open a way and passage to our men for traualle to newe and unknown kingdomes.

Upon what occasions, and by whom this voyage was first out, and of the discouerie of Moscouie by the North.

3. Shippes furnished for the discouerie.

And whereas many things seemed necessary to bee regarded in this so hard and difficult a matter, they first make choyse of certaine graue and wise persons in manner of a Senate, or companie, which should lay their heads together, and giue their iudgements, and prouide things requisite and profitable for all occasions: by this companie it was thought expedient, that a certaine summe of money should publicquely bee collected to serue for the furnishing of so many shippes. And lest any priuate man should bee too much opprelled and charged, a course was taken, that euery man willing to be of the societie, should disburse the portion of twentie and five pounds a piece: so that in short time by this meane the summe of fife thousand pounds being gathered, the three shippes were bought, the most part whereof they prouided to be newly built and trimmed. But in this action, I wote not whether I may more admire the care of the Marchants, or the diligence of the Shippwrights: for the Marchants, they get very strong and well seasoned planks for the building, the Shippwrights, they with daily traualle, and their greatest skill doe fittethem for the dispatch of the shippes: they calke them, pitch them, and among the rest, they make one most stanch and firme, by an excellent and ingenious inuention. For they had heard that in certaine parts of the Ocean, a kinde of wormes is bredde, which many times pearceh and eateth through the strongest oake that is: and therefore that the Mariners, and the rest to bee employed in this voyage might bee free and safe from this danger, they couer a piece of the keele of the shippe with thinne sheetes of leade: and hauing thus built the ships, and furnished them with armour and artillerie, then followed a second care no lesse troublesome and necessarie then the former, namely, the prouision of victuals, which was to be made according to the time and length of the voyage. And whereas they also determined to haue the East part of the world layled vnto, and yet that the sea towards the same was not open, except they kept the Northern tract, whereas yet it was doubtfull whether there were any passage yea or no, they resolved to victuall the ships for eightene moneths, which they did for this reason. For our men being to passe that huge and colde part of the world, they wisely foreseeing it, allowe them fife moneths victuall to saile to the place, so much more to remaine there if the extremitie of the winter hindered their returne, and so much more also for the time of their comming home.

Prouision of victuals for 18. moneths.

Nowe this prouision being made and caried aboard, with armour and munition of all sorts, sufficient Captaines and gouernours of so great an enterprise were as yet wanting: to which office and place, although many men, (and some boyde of experience) offered themselves, yet one Sir Hugh Willoughbie a most valiant Gentleman, and well bozne, very earnestly requested to haue that care and charge committed vnto him: of whom before all others, both by reason of his goodly personage (for he was of a tall stature) as also for his singular skill in the seruices of warre, the company of the Marchants made greatest accompt: so that at the last they concluded and made choyse of him for the Generall of this voyage, and appoynted to him the Ad-

Choyse of Captaines and Priors.
Sir Hugh Willoughbie.

mirall, with authoritie and commaund ouer all the rest. And for the gouernement of other ships although diuers men seemed willing, and made offers of themselves therunto, yet by a common consent one Richard Chancellor, a man of great estimation for many good partes of wit in him, was elected, in whom alone great hope for the performance of this businesse rested. This man was brought by by one master Henry Sidney, a noble yong Gentleman and very much beloued of King Edward, who at this time comming to the place where the Marchants were gathered together, beganne a very eloquent speech of Oracion, and spake to them after this maner following.

After Henry Sidney his Oracion.

My very worshipfull friends, I cannot but greatly commend your present godly and vertuous intention, in the serious enterprising (for the singular loue you beare to your Countrey) a matter, which (I hope) will prooue profitable for this nation, and honourable to this our land. Which intention of yours wee also of the Nobilitie are ready to our power to helpe and further: neither doe wee holde any thing so deare and precious vnto vs, which wee will not willingly forgoe, and lay out in so commendable a cause. But principally I reioyce in my selfe, that I haue nourished and maintained that witte, which is like by some meanes and in some measure, to profite and seeke you in this worthy action. But yet I would not haue you ignorant of this one thing, that I doe now part with Chancellor, not because I make little reckoning of the man, or that his maintenance is burdenous and chargeable vnto mee, but that you might conceiue and vnderstand my good will and promptitude for the furtherance of this businesse, and that the authoritie and estimation which hee deserueth may be giuen him. You know the man by report, I by experience, you by wordes, I by deedes, you by speech and companie, but I by the daily triall of his life haue a full and perfect knowledge of him. And you are also to remember, into howe many perils for your sakes, and his countreys loue, he is now to runne: whereof it is requisite that wee be not vnmindefull, if it please God to send him good successe. Wee commit a little money to the chaunce and hazard of Fortune: He commits his life (a thing to a man of all things most deare) to the raging Sea, and the vncertainties of many dangers. Wee shall here liue and rest at home quietly with our friends, and acquaintance: but hee in the meane time labouring to keepe the ignorant and brutish Mariners in good order and obedience, with howe many cares shall hee trouble and bere himselfe: with how many troubles shall hee breake himselfe: and howe many disquietings shall hee be forced to sustaine: Wee shall keepe our owne costes and countrey: Hee shall seeke strange and vknown kingdomes. Hee shall commit his safetie to barbarous and cruell people, and shall hazard his life amongst the monstrous and terrible beastes of the Sea. Wherefore in respect of the greatnesse of the dangers, and the excellencie of his charge, you are to fauour and loue the man thus departing from vs: and if it fall so happily out that hee returne againe, it is your part and duetie also, liberally to reward him.

After that this noble yong Gentleman had deliuered this or some suchlike speech, much more eloquently then I can possible report it, the companie then present beganne one to looke vpon another, one to question and conferre with another: and some (to whom the vertue and sufficiency of the man was known) began secretly to reioyce with themselves, and to conceiue a speciall hope, that the man would prooue in time very rare and excellent, and that his vertues already appearing and shining to the world would growe to the great honour and aduancement of this kingdome.

After all this, the companie growing to some silence, it seemed good to them that were of greatest grauity amongst them, to inquire, search and seeke what might be learned & known, concerning the Easterly part or tract of the world. For which cause two Tartarians, which were then of the kings Stable, were sent for, & an interpreter was gotten to be present, by whom they were demaunded touching their Countrey and the maners of their nation. But they were able to answer nothing to the purpose: being in deede more acquainted (as one there merrily and openly said) to cosse portres, then to learne the states and dispositions of people. But after much adoe and many things passed about this matter, they grewe at last to this issue, to set downe and appoynt a time for the departure of the shippes: because diuers were of opinion, that a great part of the best time of the yere was already spent, and if the delay grewe longer, the way would be stoppt and hard by the force of the Ice, and the colde climate: and therefore it was thought best by the opinion of them all, that by the twentieth day of May, the Captaines and Mariners should take shipping, and depart from Radcliffe vpon the ebbe, if it pleased God. They hauing saluted their acquaintance, one his wife, another his children, another his kinsfolkes, and another his friends deerer then his kinsfolkes, were present and ready at the day appoynted: and hauing waped ancre, they departed with the turning of the water, and sailing easily, came first to Greenwich. The greater shippes are towed downe with boates, and oars, and the mariners bring all apparell in Watchet or skie coloured cloth, rowed aaine, and made way with diligence. And being come neere to Greenwich, (where the Court then lay) presently vpon the newes thereof, the Courtiers came running out, and the common people flockt together, standing very thicke vpon the shoare: the priuie Counsel, they lookt out at the windowes of the Court, and the rest ranne vp to the toppes of the towers: the shippes hereupon discharge their Ordnance, and shoot off their pieces after the maner of warre, and of the sea, insonmuch that the tops of the hilles sounded therewith, the valleys and the waters gaue an Echo, and the Mariners, they shouted in such sort, that the skie rang againe with the noyle thereof. One stood in the poope of the ship, and by his gesture bids farewell to his friends in the best maner hee could. Another walkes vpon the hatches, another climbs the shrouds, another stands vpon the maine pare, and another in the top of the shippe. To be short, it was a very triumph (after a sort) in all respects to the beholders. But (alas) the good King Edward (in respect of whom principally all this was prepared) hee onely by reason of his sicknesse was absent from this shewe, and not long after the departure of these ships, the lamentable and most sorrowfull accident of his death followed.

But to proceede in the matter.

The shippes going downe with the tyde came at last to Woolwich, where they stayed and cast ancre, with purpose to depart therehence againe, as soone as the turning of the water, and a better winde should drawe them to set saile. After this they departed and came to Harwich, in which porte they stayed long, not without great losse and consuming of time: yet at the last with a good winde they hopped vp saile, and committed themselues to the sea, giuing their last adieu to their native Countrey, which they knewe not whether they should euer returne to see againe or not. Many of them looked oftentimes backe, and could not reframe from teares, considering into what hazards they were to fall, and what vncertainties of the sea they were to make triall of.

Amongst the rest, Richard Chancellor the Captaine of the Edward Bonauenture, was not a little grieued with the feare of wanting virtuales, part whereof was found to be corrupt and putrified at Harwich, and the hoggesheads of wine also leaked, and were not stanch: his naturall and fatherly affection also somewhat troubled him, for he left behinde him his two little sonnes; which were in the case of Orphanes if he speede not well: the estate also of his companie mooued him to care, being in the former respects after a sort vnhappie, and were to abide with himselfe euery good or badde accident: but in the meane time while his minde was thus tormented with the multiplicitie of sorowes and cares, after many dayes sayling, they keened land as farre off, whereunto the Pilots directed the ships: and being come to it, they land, and finde it to be Rost Island, where they stayed certaine dayes, and afterwards set saile againe, and proceeding towards the North, they espied certaine other Islands, which were called the Crosse of Islands. From which places when they were a litle departed, Sir Hugh Willoughby the General, a man of good foresight and prouidence in all his actions, erected and set out his flagge, by which hee called together the chiefe men of the other shippes, that by the helpe and assistance of their counsels, the order of the gouernement, and conduction of the shippes in the whole voyage might bee the better: who being come together accordingly, they conclude and agree, that if any great tempest should arise at any time, and happen to disperse and scatter them, euery shippe should indevour his best to goe to Wardhouse, a haven or castell of some name in the kingdome of Norway, and that they that arrived there first in safetie should stay and expect the comming of the rest.

The very same day in the afternoone, about foure of the clocke, so great a tempest suddenly arose, and the Seas were so outrageous, that the ships could not keepe their intended course, but some were perforce driuen one way, and some another way, to their great perill and hazard: The generall with his lowdest voyce cried out to Richard Chancellor, and earnestly requested him not to goe farre from him: but hee neither would nor could keepe companie with him, if he sailed still so fast: for the Admirall was of better saile then his shippe. But the said Admirall (I knowe not by what meanes) bearing all his sailes, was caried away with so great force and swiftnesse, that not long after hee was quite out of sight, and the third ship also with the same storme and like rage was dispersed and lost vs.

The shippe boate of the Admirall (striking against the shippe,) was overwhelmed in the sight and viewe of the Partners of the Bonauenture: and as for them that are already returned and arrived, they know nothing of the rest of the ships what was become of them.

But if it be so, that any miserable mishap haue overtaken them, If the rage and furie of the

They returne the next yeere not knowing what was become of the other 2. ships.

Sea haue deuoured those good men, or if as yet they liue, and wander by and downe in strange Countreys, I must needs say they were men worthy of better fortune, and if they be liuing, let vs with them safetie and a good returne: but if the crueltie of death hath taken holde of them, God send them a Christian graue and Sepulchre.

Nowe Richard Chancellor with his shippe and company being thus left alone, and become very peniue, heauie, and sorrowfull, by this dispersion of the flecte, hee (according to the order before taken,) shapeth his course for Wardhouse in Norway, there to expect and abide the arrivall of the rest of the shippes. And being come thither, and hauing stayed there the space of 7. dayes, and looked in vaine for their comming, hee determined at length to proceede alone in the purposed voyage. And as hee was preparing himselfe to depart, it happened that hee fell in company and speech with certaine Scottisshmen: who hauing vnderstanding of his intention, and wishing well to his actions, beganne earnestly to dissuade him from the further prosecution of the discouerie, by amplifying the dangers which hee was to fall into, and omitted no reason that might serue to that purpose. But hee holding nothing so ignominious and reprochfull, as inconstancie and leuitie of minde, and perswading himselfe that a man of valour coulde not commit a more dishonourable part then for feare of danger to auoyde and shunne great attempts, was nothing at all changed or discouraged with the speeches and words of the Scots, remaining stedfast and immutable in his first resolution: determining either to bring that to passe which was intended, or els to die the death.

And as for them which were with Master Chancellor in his shippe, although they had great cause of discomfort by the losse of their companie (whom the foresaid tempest had separated from them,) and were not a little troubled with cogitations and perturbations of minde, in respect of their doubtfull course: yet notwithstanding, they were of such consent and agreement of minde with Master Chancellor, that they were resolute, and prepared under his direction and gouernment, to make pprooe and triall of all aduentures, without all feare or mistrust of future dangers. Which constancie of minde in all the companie did exceedingly increase their Captaines carefulnesse: for hee being swallowed by with like good will and loue towards them, feared lest through any error of his, the safetie of the companie should be endangered. To conclude, when they sawe their desire and hope of the arrivall of the rest of the shippes to be euery day more and more frustrated, they prouided to sea againe, and Master Chancellor held on his course towards that unknowen part of the world, and sailed so farre, that hee came at last to the place where hee found no night at all, but a continuall light and brightnesse of the Sunne shining clearely vpon the huge and mightie Sea. And hauing the benefite of this perpetuall light for certaine dayes, at the length it pleased God to bring them into a certaine great Bay, which was of one hundred miles or thereabout ouer. Whereinto they entred, and somewhat farre within it cast ancre, and looking euery way about them, it happened that they espied a farre off a certaine fisher boate, which Master Chancellor, accompanied with a fewe of his men, went towards to common with the fishermen that were in it, and to knowe of them what Countrey it was, and what people, and of what manner of liuing they were: but they being amazed with the strange greatnesse of his shippe, (for in those partes before that time they had neuer seene the like) beganne presently to auoyde and to flee: but hee still following them at last ouertooke them, and being come to them, they (being in great feare, as men halfe dead) prostrated themselves before him, offering to kisse his feete: but hee (according to his great and singular courtesie,) looked pleasantly vpon them, comforting them by signes and gestures, refusing those dueties and reuerences of theirs, and taking them by in all louing sort from the ground. And it is strange to consider howe much fauour after wards in that place, this humanitie of his did purchase to himselfe. For they being dismissed spread by and by a report abroad of the arrivall of a strange nation, of a singular gentlenesse and courtesie: whereupon the common people came together offering to these newe-come ghests victuals freely, and not refusing to traffique with them, except they had bene bound by a certaine religious vse and custome, not to buy any forreine commodities, without the knowledge and consent of the king.

By this time our men had learned that this Countrey was called Russia, or Moscouie, and that Iuan Vasiluich (which was at that time their Kings name) ruled and gouerned farre and wide in those places. And the barbarous Russes asked likewise of our men whence they were, and what they came for: whereunto answere was made, that they were Englishmen sent into those coastes, from the most excellent King Edward the sixt, hauing from him in commendement certaine things to deliuer to their King, and seeking nothing els but his amitie and friendship, and traffique with his people, where by they doubted not, but that great commerce and profit would grow to the subjects of both kingdomes.

The discouerie of Russia.

The Barbarians heard these things very gladly, and promised their aide and furtherance to acquaint their king out of hand with so honest and a reasonable request.

In the meane time Passer Chancellor intreated victuals for his money of the gouernour of that place (who together with others came aboard him) and required hostages of them likewise for the more assurance of safetie to himselfe and his company. To whom the Gouernours answered, that they knewe not in that case the will of their king, but yet were willing in such things as they might lawfully doe, to pleasure him: which was as then to afford him the benefit of victuals.

Nowe while these things were a doing, they secretly sent a messenger vnto the Emperour, to certifie him of the arrivall of a strange nation, and withall to knowe his pleasure concerning them. Which message was very welcome vnto him, insomuch that voluntarily hee invited them to come to his Court. But if by reason of the tediousnesse of so long a iourney, they thought it not best so to doe, then hee granted libertie to his subiects to bargain, and to traffique with them: and further promised, that if it would please them to come to him, hee himselfe would beare the whole charges of post horses. In the meane time the gouernours of the place deferred the matter from day to day, pretending diuers excuses, and saying one while that the consent of all the gouernours, and another while, that the great and waightie affaires of the kingdome compelled them to differ their answer: and this they did of purpose, so long to protract the time, vntill the messenger (sent before to the king) did returne with relation of his will and pleasure.

But Passer Chancellor, (seeing himselfe held in this suspense with long and vaine expectation, and thinking that of intention to delude him, they possted the matter off so often,) was very instant with them to performe their promise: Which if they would not doe, hee tolde them that hee would depart and proceede in his voyage. So that the Moscouites (although as yet they knew not the minde of their king) yet fearing the departure in deede of our men who had such wares and commodities as they greatly desired, they at last resolved to furnish our people with all things necessarie, and to conduct them by land to the presence of their king. And so Passer Chancellor beganne his iourney, which was very long and most troublesome, wherein hee had the vse of certaine sleds, which in that Countrey are very common, for they are carried themselves vpon sleds, and all their carriages are in the same sort, the people almost not knowing any other maner of carriage, the cause wherof is the exceeding hardnesse of the ground congealed in the winter time by the force of the colde, which in those places is very extreme and horrible, whereof hereafter we will say something.

But nowe they hauing passed the greater part of their iourney, mette at last with the Sledde-man (of whom I spake before) sent to the king secretly from the Iustices or gouernours, who by some ill happe had lost his way, and had gone to the Sea side, which is neere to the Countrey of the Tartars, thinking there to haue found our ship. But hauing long erred and wandered out of his way, at the last in his direct returne, hee met (as hee was coming) our Captaine on the way. To whom hee by and by deliuered the Emperours letters, which were written to him with all courtesie and in the most louing maner that could be: wherein expresse cominandement was giuen, that post horses should bee gotten for him and the rest of his company without any money. Which thing was of all the Russes in the rest of their iourney so willingly done, that they began to quarrell, yea, and to fight also in striving and contending which of them should put their post horses to the sledde: so that after much adoe and great paines taken in this long and wearie iourney, (for they had trauielled very neere fiftene hundred miles) Passer Chancellor came at last to Mosco the chiefe citie of the kingdome, and the seate of the king: of which citie, and of the Emperour himselfe, and of the principall cities of Moscouie, wee will speake immediately more at large in this discourse.

Of Moscouie, which is also called Russia.

Moscouie, which hath the name also of Russia the white, is a very large and spacious Countrey, euery way bounded with diuers nations. Towards the South and the East, it is compassed with Tartaria: the Northen side of it stretcheth to the Scythian Ocean: vpon the West part border the Lappians, a rude and sauage nation, liuing in woods, whose language is not knownen to any other people: next vnto these, more towards the South, is Swecia, then Finlandia, then Liuania, and last of all Lithuania. This Countrey of Moscouie, hath also very many and great riuers in it, and is marish ground in many places: and as for the riuers, the greatest

and

and most famous amongst all the rest, is that, which the Russes in their owne tongue call Volga, but others know it by the name of Rha. Next unto it in fame is Tanais, which they call Don, and the third Boristhenes which at this day they call Neper. Two of these, to wit, Rha, and Boristhenes issuing both out of one fountaine, runne very farre through the land: Rha receiuing many other pleasant riuers into it, & running from the very head or spring of it towards the East, after many crooked turnings and windings, dischargeth it selfe, and all the other waters and riuers that fall into it by diuers passages into the Caspian Sea. Tanais springing from a fountaine of great name in those partes, and growing great neere to his head, spreads it selfe at length very largely, and makes a great lake: and then growing narrowe againe, doth so runne for certaine miles, vntill it fall into another lake, which they call Iuan: and therchence fetching a very crooked course, comes very neere to the riuer Volga: but disdaining as it were the company of any other riuer, doth there turne it selfe againe from Volga, and runnes toward the South, and falls at last into the Lake of Mæotis. Boristhenes, which comes from the same head that Rha doth, (as wee sayde before) carrieth both it selfe, and other waters that are neere vnto it, towards the South, not refusing the mixture of other small riuers: and running by many great and large Countreys falls at last into Pontus Euxinus. Besides these riuers, are also in Moscouie certaine lakes, and pooles, the lakes breed fish by the celestiall influence: and amongst them all, the chiefeest and most principall is called Bealozera, which is very famous by reason of a very strong towre built in it, wherein the kings of Moscouie reserue and repose their treasure in all time of warre and danger.

The mightie lake of Beal-ozera.

Touching the Riphean mountaines, whereupon the snow lieth continually, and where hence in times past it was thought that Tanais the riuer did spring, and that the rest of the wonders of nature, which the Grecians fained and inuented of olde, were there to be seene: our men which lately came from thence, neither sawe them, nor yet haue brought home any perfect relation of them, although they remained there for the space of thre moneths, and had gotten in that time some intelligence of the language of Moscouie. The whole Countrey is plaine and champion, and few hills in it: and towards the North it hath very large & spacious woods, wherein is great store of Firre trees, a wood very necessarie, and fit for the building of houses: there are also wilde beastes bred in those woods, as Buffes, Beares, and blacke Mollues, and another kinde of beast vnknewen to vs, but called by them Rossomakka: and the nature of the same is very rare and wonderfull: for when it is great with yong, and ready to bring forth, it seeketh out some narrow place betweene two stakes, and so going through them, presseth it selfe, and by that meanes is eased of her burden, which other wise could not be done. They hunt their buffes for the most part a horsebacke, but their Beares a foot, with wooden forkes. The north parts of the Countrey are reported to be so cold, that the very ice or water which distilleth out of the moist wood which they lay vpon the fire is presently congealed and frozen: the diuersitie growing suddenly to be so great, that in one and the selfe same firebrand, a man shall see both fire and ice. When the winter doth once begin there it doth still more & more increase by a perpetuities of cold: neither doth that colde slake, vntill the force of the Sunne beames doth dissolve the cold, and make glad the earth, returning to it againe. Our mariners which we left in the ship in the meane time to keepe it, in their going by onely from their cabbins to the hatches, had their breath oftentimes so suddenly taken away, that they closenes fell downe as men very neere dead, so great is the sharpenesse of that colde climate: but as for the South parts of the Countrey, they are somewhat more temperate.

Of Mosco the chiefe Citie of the kingdome, and of the Emperour thereof.

It remaineth that a larger discourse be made of Mosco, the principall Citie of that Countrey, and of the Prince also, as before we haue promised. The Empire and gouernment of the king is very large, and his wealth at this time exceeding great. And because the citie of Mosco is the chiefeest of al the rest, it seemeth of it selfe to challenge the first place in this discourse. Our men say, that in bignesse it is as great as the Citie of London, with the suburbs thereof. There are many and great buildings in it, but for beautie and fairenesse, nothing comparable to ours. There are many Townes and Villages also, but built out of order, and with no handsomnesse: their streetes and wayes are not paved with stone as ours are: the walles of their houses are of wood: the roofes for the most part are couered with shingle boozes. There is hard by the Citie a very faire Castle, strong, and furnished with artillerie, whereunto the Citie is ioyned directly towards

towards the North, with a bricke wall: the walles also of the Castle are built with bricke, and are in breadth or thicknesse eightene foote. This Castle hath on the one side a drie ditch, on the other side the riuer Moscua, whereby it is made almost incerpugnable. The same Moscua treading towards the East doth admit into it the companie of the riuer Occa.

In the Castle aforesaide, there are in number nine Churches, or Chappels, not altogether vrbansome, which are vsed and kept by certaine religious men, ouer whom there is after a sort, a Patriarke, or Gouvernour, and with him other reuerend Fathers, all which for the greater part, dwell within the Castle. As for the kings Court and Palace, it is not of the neatest, onely in forme it is foure square, and of lowe building, much surpassed and excelled by the beautie and elegancie of the houses of the kings of England. The windows are very narrowly built, and some of them by glasse, some other by lettices admit the light: and whereas the Palaces of our Princes are decked, and adorne with hangings of cloth of gold, there is none such there: they build and sojorne to all their wals benches, and that not onely in the Court of the Emperour, but in all private mens houses.

Nowe after that they had remained about twelue dayes in the Citie, there was then a Messenger sent vnto them, to bring them to the Kings house: and they being after a sort wearied with their long stay, were very ready, and willing so to doe: and being entred within the gates of the Court, there sae a very honorable companie of Courtiers, to the number of one hundred, all apparelled in cloth of golde, downe to their ankles: and there-hence being conducted into the chamber of presence, our men beganne to wonder at the Maiestie of the Emperour: his seate was a loft, in a very royall throne, hauing on his head a Diademe, or Crowne of golde, apparelled with a robe all of Goldsmiths worke, and in his hand hee held a Scepter garnished, and beset with precious stones: and besides all other notes and apparances of honour, there was a Maiestie in his countenance proportionable with the excellencie of his estate: on the one side of him stood his chiefe Secretarie, on the other side, the great Commander of Silence, both of them arrayed also in cloth of gold: and then there sae the Councel of one hundred and fiftie in number, all in like sort arrayed, and of great state. This so honorable an assemblie, so great a Maiestie of the Emperour, and of the place might very well haue amazed our men, and haue dasht them out of countenance: but notwithstanding Master Chanceler being there withall nothing dismayed saluted, and did his dutie to the Emperour, after the maner of England, and withall, deliuered vnto him the letters of our king, Edward the first. The Emperour hauing taken, & read the letters, began a litle to question with them, and to aske them of the welfare of our king: whereunto our men answered him directly, & in few words: hereupon our men presented some thing to the Emperour, by the chiefe Secretarie, which at the deliuey of it, put of his hat, being before all the time couered: and so the Emperour hauing inuited them to dinner, dismissed them from his presence: and going into the chamber of him that was Master of the Requests to the Emperour, & hauing stayed there the space of two howres, at the last, the Messenger cometh, and calleth them to dinner: they goe, and being conducted into the golden Court, (for so they call it, although not very faire) they finde the Emperour sitting vpon an high and stately seate, apparelled with a robe of siluer, and with another Diademe on his head: our men being placed ouer against him, sit downe: in the middes of the roome stood a mightie Cupboord vpon a square foote, whereupon stood also a round boord, in manner of a Diamond, boade beneath, and towards the toppe narrowe, and euery steppe rose by more narrowe then another. Upon this Cupboorde was placed the Emperours plate, which was so much, that the very Cupboord it selfe was scant able to sustaine the waight of it: the better part of all the vessels, and goblets, was made of very fine gold: and amongst the rest, there were foure pots of very large bignesse, which did adorne the rest of the plate in great measure: for they were so high, that they thought them at the least fise foote long. There were also vpon this Cupboord certaine siluer caskes, not much differing from the quantitie of our Spyrkins, wherein was reserued the Emperours drinke: on each side of the Hall stood foure Tables, each of them layde and couered with very cleane table clothes, whereunto the company ascended by thre steps or degrees: all which were filled with the assemblie present: the ghests were all apparelled with linnen without, and with rich skinnes within, and so did notably set out this royall feast. The Emperour, when hee takes any bread or knife in his hand, doth first of all crosse himselfe vpon his forehead: they that are in speciall fauour with the Emperour sit vpon the same bench with him, but somewhat farre from him: and before the comming in of the meate, the Emperour himselfe, according to an ancient custome of the kings of Moscouy, doth first bestow a peece of bread vpon euery one of his ghests, with a loud pronounciation of his title, and honour, in this manner: The great Duke of Moscouie, and chiefe Emperour of Russia, Iohn Basiluwich (& then the officer nameth the ghest)

doth

doth giue thee bread. Whereupon al the ghefts rise vp, and by & by sit downe againe. This done, the Gentleman Usher of the Hall comes in, with a notable company of seruants, carrying the dishes, and hauing done his reuerence to the Emperour, puts a yong Swanne in a golden platter vpon the table, and immediatly takes it thence againe, deliuering it to the Caruer, and seuen other of his fellowes, to be cut vp: which being perfourmed, the meate is then distributed to the ghefts, with the like pompe, and ceremonies. In the meane time, the Gentleman Usher receiues his bread, and tasteth to the Emperour, and afterward, hauing done his reuerence, he departeth. Touching the rest of the dishes, because they were brought in out of order, our men can repute no certaintie: but this is true, that all the furniture of dishes, and drinking vessels, which were then for the vse of a hundred ghefts, was all of pure golde, and the tables were so laden with vessels of gold, that there was no roome for some to stand vpon them.

We may not forget, that there were 140. seruitors arrayed in cloth of gold, that in the dinner time, changed thise their habit and apparrell, which seruitors are in like sort serued with bread from the Emperour, as the rest of the ghefts. Last of all, dinner being ended, and candles brought in, (for by this time night was come) the Emperour calleth all his ghefts and Noble men by their names, in such sort, that it seemes miraculous, that a Prince, otherwise occupied in great matters of estate, should so well remember so many and sundry particular names. The Russes tolde our men, that the reason thereof, as also of the bestowing of bread in that maner, was to the ende that the Emperour might keepe the knowledge of his owne household: and withal, that such as are vnder his displeasure, might by this meanes be known.

Of the discipline of warre among the Russes.

Whensoever the iniures of their neighbours doe call the King forth to battell, hee neuer armeth a lesse number against the enemye, then 300. thousand soldiers, 100. thousand whereof hee carrieth out into the field with him, and leaueth the rest in garison in some fit places, for the better safetie of his Empire. He presseth no husbandman, nor Marchant: for the Countrey is so populous, that these being left at home, the youth of the Realme is sufficient for all his wars. As many as goe out to warfare doe prouide all things of their owne cost: they fight not on foote, but altogether on horsebacke: their armour is a coate of maile, & a helmet: the coate of maile wout is gilded, or els adozned with silke, although it pertaine to a common soldier: they haue a great pride in shewing their wealth: they vse bowes, and arrowes, as the Turks do: they carry lances also into the field. They ride with a short stirrop, after the maner of the Turks: They are a kinde of people most sparing in diet, and most patient in extremitie of cold, aboue all others. For when the ground is couered with snowe, and is growen terrible and hard with the frost, this Russe hangs by his mantle, or souldiers coate, against that part from whence the winde and Snowe driues, and so making a little fire, lieth downe with his backe towards the weather: this mantle of his serues him for his bed, wall, house and all: his drinke is colde water of the river, mingled with oatemeale, and this is all his good chere, and he thinketh himselfe well, and daintily fedde therewith, and so lieth downe by his fire, and vpon the hard ground, resteth as it were his wearie sides thus daintily stuffed: the hard ground is his feather bed, & some blocke or stone his pillow: and as for his horse, he is as it were a chamberfellow with his master, faring both alike. How iustly may this barbarous, and rude Russe condemne the daintinesse and nicenesse of our Captaines, who liuing in a soile & aire much more temperate, yet commonly vse furred boots, and clokes: But this much of the furniture of their common souldiers. But those that are of higher degrees come into the field a little better prouided. As for the furniture of the Emperour himselfe, it is then aboue all other times, most notable. The coverings of his tent for the most part, are all of gold, adozned with stones of great price, and with the curious workemanship of plumassiers. As often as they are to skirmish with the enemye, they goe forth without any order at all: they make no wings, nor militarie diuisions of their men, as we doe, but lying for the most part, in ambush, doe suddenly set vpon the enemye. Their horses can well abstaine two whole daies from any meate. They feede vpon the barks of trees, and the most tender branches, in all the time of warre. And this scant and miserable maner of liuing, both the horse and his Master can well endure, sometimes for the space of two moneths, lustie, and in good state of body. If any man behaue himselfe valiantly in the fild, to the contentation of the Emperour, he bestoweth vpon him in recompense of his seruice, some farme, or so much ground as he and his may liue vpon, which notwithstanding after his death, returneth againe to the Emperour, if he die without a male issue. For although his daughters be neuer so many, yet no part of that inheritance comes to them, except peraduenture the Emperour of his goodnesse, giue some portion of the land amongst amongst them, to bestowe them withall. As for the man, whose euer he be, that is in this sort rewarded by the Emperours liberalitie, hee is bound in a great summe, to maintaine so many soldiers for the warre, when need shall require, as that land, in the opinion of the Emperour, is able to maintaine. And all those, to whom any land falls by inheritance, are in no better condition: for if they die without any male issue, all their lands fall into the hands of the Emperour. And moreover, if there be any rich man amongst them, who in his owne person is unfit for the warres, and yet hath such wealth, that thereby many Noble men and warriors might be maintained, if any of the Courtiers present his name to the Emperour, the unhappy man is by and by sent for, and in that instant, deprived of all his riches, which with great paines and trauell all his life time he had gotten together: except perhaps some small portion thereof be left him, to maintaine his wife, children and familie. But all this is done of all the people so willingly at the Emperours commandement, that a man would thinke, they rather make restitution of other mens goods, then giue that which is their owne to other men. Nowe the Emperour hauing taken these goods into his hands, bestoweth them among his Courtiers, according to their desert: and the oftener that a man is sent to the warres, the more fauour he thinketh is bozne to him by the Emperour, although he goe vpon his owne charge, as I said before. So great is the obedience of all men generally to their Prince.

Of the Ambassadors of the Emperour of Moscouie.

THe Moscouite, with no lesse pompe, and magnificence, then that which we haue spoken of, sends his Ambassadors to forren Princes, in the affaires of estate. For while our men were abiding in the Citie of Mosco, there were two Ambassadors sent to the King of Poland, accompanied with 500. notable horses, and the greater part of the men were arrayed in cloth of gold, and of silke, and the worst apparell was of garments of blewe colour, to speake nothing of the trappings of the horses, which were adorned with gold and silver, and very curiously embroidered: they had also with them one hundred white and faire spare horses, to vse them at such times, as any wearinesse came vpon them. But now the time requireth me to speake brieely of other Cities of the Moscouies, and of the wares and commodities that the Countrey yeildeth.

Nouogorode.

NExt vnto Mosco, the Citie of Nouogorode is reputed the chiefe of Russia: for although it be in Daieslie inferior to it, yet in greatnesse it goeth beyond it. It is the chiefe and greatest Parte Towne of all Moscouie: and albeit the Emperours seate is not there, but at Mosco, yet the commodiousnesse of the riuer, falling into that gulfe, which is called Sinus Finnicus, whereby it is well frequented by Marchants, makes it more famous then Mosco it selfe. This towne excels all the rest in the commodities of fure and hempe: it yeeldes also hides, honie, and waxe. The Flemings there sometimes had a house of Marchandize, but by reason that they vsed the like ill dealing there, which they did with vs, they lost their priuileges, a restitution whereof they earnestly sued for at the time that our men were there. But those Flemings hearing of the arrivall of our men in those parts, wrote their letters to the Emperour against them, accusing them for pirates and rouers, wishing him to detaine, and imprison them. Which things when they were knowne of our men, they conceived feare, that they should neuer haue returned home. But the Emperour believing rather the Kings letters, which our men brought, then the lying and false suggestions of the Flemings, vsed no ill intreatie towards them.

The manner of the Flemings against our men.

Yeraslaue.

Yeraslaue also is a Towne of some good fame, for the commodities of hides, tallow, and cozne, which it yeeldes in great abundance. Cakes of waxe are there also to bee solde, although other places haue greater store: this Yeraslaue is distant from Mosco, about two hundred miles: and betwixt them are many populous villages. Their fields yeeld such store of cozne, that in carrying it towards Mosco, sometimes in a forenoone, a man shall see seven hundred or eight hundred sleds, going and coming, laden with cozne and salt fish: the people come a thousand miles to Mosco, to buy that cozne, and then carry it away vpon sleds: and these are those people that dwell in the North parts, where the colde is so terrible, that no cozne both growe there, or if it spring up, it neuer comes to ripenesse. The commodities that they bring with them, are salt fish, skinner, and hides.

Vologda.

Vologda.

Vologda being from Mosco, 550. miles yeeldes the commodities of Hemp and Flaxe also : although the greatest store of Flaxe is solde at Nouogrode.

Plesco.

The Towne of Plesco, is frequented of Marchants for the good store of Honie and Ware that it yeeldeth.

Colmagro.

The North parts of Russia yeelde very rare and precious skinnes : and amongst the rest, those principally, which we call Sables, woyn about the neckes of our Noble women and Ladies: it hath also Martins skinnes, white, blacke, and red Foxe skinnes, skinnes of Hares, and Ermys, and others, which they call and terme barbarously, as Beuers, Minres, and Minuers. The sea adioyning, breedes a certaine beast, which they call the Mors, which seeketh his foode vpon the rockes, clining vp with the helpe of his teeth. The Russes vse to take them, for the great vertue that is in their teeth, whereof they make as great accompt, as we doe of the Elephants tooth. These commodities they cary vpon Deeres backs to the towne of Lampas : and from thence to Colmagro, and there in the winter time, are kept great faires for the sale of them. This Citie of Colmagro, serues all the Countrey about it with salt, and salt fish. The Russians also of the North parts, send thither oyle, which they call traine, which they make in a riuer called || Vna, although it be also made else-where : and here they vse to boile the water of the sea, wherof they make very great store of salt.

|| Dvina.

Of controuerfies in Lawe, and how they are ended.

Having hitherto spoken so much of the chiefest Cities of Russia, as the matter required : it remaineth that we speake somewhat of the lawes, that the Moscouits doe vse, as farre forth as the same are come to our knowledge. If any controuerfie arise among them, they first make their Landlords Judges in the matter, and if they cannot end it, then they preferre it to the Magistrate. The plaintiff craueth of the said Magistrate, that he may haue leaue to enter law against his aduersarie : and hauing obtained it, the officer fetcheth the defendant, and beateth him on the legges, till he lying forth a suretie for him : but if he be not of such credite, as to procure a surety, then are his hands by an officer tied to his necke, and he is beaten all the way, till he come before the Judge. The Judge then asketh him (as for example in the matter of debt) whether he oweth any thing to the plaintife. If he denies it, then saith the Judge, How canst thou deny it : the defendant answereth, By an othe : thereupon the officer is commaunded to cease from beating of him, untill the matter be further tried. They haue no Lawyers, but every man is his owne Aduocate, and both the complaint of the accuser, and the answer of the defendant, are in manner of petition, deliuered to the Emperour, intreacing iustice at his hands. The Emperour himselfe heareth every great controuerfie, and vpon the hearing of it, giueth iudgement, and that with great equitie, which I take to be a thing worthy of speciall commendation, in the Palace of a Prince. But although he doe this with a good purpose of mind, yet the corrupt Magistrates do wonderfully peruert the same : but if the Emperour take them in any fault, he doeth punish them most severely. Now at the last, when each partie hath defended his cause with his best reasons, the Judge demandeth of the accuser, whether he hath any more to say for himselfe : he answereth, that he will trie the matter in fight by his Champion, or else increateth, that in fight betwixt themselves the matter may be ended : which being graunted, they both fight it out : or if both of them, or either of them seeme unfit for that kinde of triall, then they haue publike Champions to be hired, which liue by ending of quarrels. These Champions are armed with yron ares, and speares, and fight on foote, and he whose Champion is ouercome, is by and by taken, and imprisoned, and terribly handled, untill he agree with his aduersarie. But if either of them be of any good calling, and degree, and doe challenge one another to fight, the Judge granteth it : in which case they may not vse publike Champions. And he that is of any good birth, doth contemne the other, if he be basely borne, and will not fight with him. If a poore man happen to grow in debt, his Creditor takes him, & maketh him pay the debt, in working either to himselfe, or to some other man, whose wages he taketh vp. And there are some among them, that vse willingly to make themselves, their wiues, and chil-

open, bondslaves vnto rich men, to haue a little money at the first into their hands, and so for euer after content themselves with meate and drinke: so little accompt doe they make of libertie.

Of punishments vpon theeues.

If any man be taken vpon committing of theft, he is imprisoned, and often beaten, but not hanged for the first offence, as the manner is with vs: and this they call the lawe of mercie. He that offendeth the second time hath his nose cut off, and is burnt in the forehead with a hot yron. The third time, he is hanged. There are many cutpurses among them, and if the rigour of the Prince did not cut them off, they could not be auoyded.

Of their religion.

They maintaine the opinions of the Greeke Church: they suffer no grauen images of saints in their Churches, but their pictures painted in tables they haue in great abundance, which they do adore and offer vnto, and burne waxe candles before them, and cast holy water vpon them, without oyer honour. They say that our images which are set vp in Churches, and carued, haue no diuinitie in them. In their priuate houses they haue images for their household saints, and for the most part, they are put in the darkest place of the house: hee that comes into his neighbours house doth first salute his saints, although he see them not. If any foorme or stoole stand in his way, hee oftentimes beatech his browe vpon the same, and often ducking downe with his head, and body, worshippeth the chiefe Image. The habite, and attire of the Priests, and of the Lay men, doth nothing at all differ: as for marriage, it is forbidden to no man: onely this is receiued and helo amongst them for a rule, and custome, that if a Priests wife doe die, he may not marry againe, nor take a second wife: and therefore they of secular Priests, as they call them, are made Monkes, to whom then chastitie for euer is commanded. Their diuine seruice is all done and said in their owne language, that euery man may vnderstand it: they receiue the Lords Supper with leauened bread, and after the consecration, they carry it about the Church in a saucer, and prohibite no man from receiuing and taking of it, that is willing so to doe. They vse both the Olde and the Newe Testament; and read both in their owne language, but so confusedly, that they themselves that doe reade, vnderstand not what themselves doe say: and while any part of either Testament is read, there is libertie giuen by custome to yarrle, talke, and make a noyse: but in the time of the rest of the seruice they vse very great silence and reuerence, and behaue themselves very modestly, and in good sort. As touching the Lords prayer, the tenth man amongst them knowes it not: and for the articles of our faith, and the ten commandments, no man, or at the least very fewe of them doe either know them or can say them: their opinion is, that such secrete and holy things as they are should not rashly and imprudently be communicated with the common people. They holde for a Sacrame amongst them, that the olde Lawe, and the commandments also are abolished by the death and blood of Christ: all studies and letters of humanitie they utterly refuse: concerning the Latine, Greeke, and Hebrew tongues, they are altogether ignorant in them.

Euery yeere they celebrate foure seuerall fastes, which they call according to the names of the Saints: the first beginnes with them, at the time that our Lent beginnes. The second is called amongst them the fast of S. Peter. The third is taken from the day of the Virgine Marie. And the fourth and last begins vpon S. Philips day. But as we begin our Lent vpon Wednesday, so they begin theirs vpon the Sunday. Vpon the Saturday they eate flesh: whensoever any of those fasting fastes doe drawe nere, looke what weeke doth immediatly goe before them, the same weeke they liue altogether vpon white meates, and in their common language they call those weekes, the fast of Butter.

In the time of their fasts, the neighbours euery where goe from one to another, and visite one another, and kisse one another with kisses of peace, in token of their mutuall loue and Christian concord: and then also they doe nize often then at any other time goe to the holy Communion. When seuen dayes are past, from the beginning of the fast, then they doe often either goe to their Churches, or keepe themselves at home, and vse often prayer: and for that seuen night they eate nothing but hearbes: but after that seuen nights fast is once past, then they returne to their old intemperancie of drinking, for they are notable tospots. As for the keeping of their fasting dayes, they doe it very strictly, neither doe they eate any thing besides hearbes, and salt fish, as long as those fasting dayes doe endure: but vpon euery Wednesday and Friday, in euery weeke throughout the yeere, they fast,

There are very many Monasteries of the order of S. Benedict, amongst them, to which many great livings, for their maintenance, doe belong: for the Friars and the Monks doe at the least possesse the third part of the livings, throughout the whole Moscouite Empire. To those Monks that are of this order, there is amongst them a perpetuall prohibition, that they may eat no flesh: and therefore their meate is onely salt fish, milke, and butter: neither is it permitted them by the lawes, and customes of their religion, to eat any fresh fish at all: and at those foure fasting times, whereof we spake before, they eat no fish at all: onely they live with hearbes, and cucumbers, which they doe continually for that purpose cause and take order to grow and spring, for their use and diet.

Note.

As for their drinke, it is very weake, and small. For the discharge of their office, they do every day say service, and that early in the mornings before day: and they doe in such sort, and with such observation begin their service, that they will be sure to make an end of it, before day: and about nine of the clocke in the morning they celebrate the Communion. When they have so done, they goe to dinner, and after dinner they goe againe to service, and the like also after supper: and in the meane time while they are at dinner there is some exposition or interpretation of the Gospel used.

Whensoever any Abbot of any monasterie dieth, the Emperour taketh all his household stuffe, beastes, flockes of sheepe, golde, silver, and all that he hath: or els hee that is to succede him in his place and dignitie doth redeeme all those things, and buyeth them of the Emperour for money.

Their churches are built of timber, and the towers of their churches for the most part are covered with shingle boozes. At the doozes of their churches, they usually build some entrance or porch as we doe, and in their churchyardes they erect a certaine house of wood, wherein they set by their bells, wherein sometimes they have but one, in some two, and in some also three.

There is one use and custome amongst them, which is strange and rare, but yet it is very ridiculous, and that is this: when any man dyeth amongst them, they take the dead body and put it in a coffine or chest, and in the hand of the corpes they put a litle scroule, & in the same there are these wordes written, that the same man died a Russe of Russes, having received the faith, and died in the same. This writing or letter they say they send to S. Peter, who receiuing it (as they affirme) reades it, and by and by admits him into heauen, and that his glory and place is higher and greater then the glory of the Christians of the Latine church, reputing themselves to be followers of a more sincere faith and religion then they: they hold opinion that we are but halfe Christians, and themselves onely to be the true and perfect church: these are the foolish and chibbily dotages of such ignorant Barbarians.

Of the Moscouites that are Idolaters, dwelling neere to Tartaria.

Aurea vetula, or Zclotibaba.

There is a certaine part of Moscouie bordering vpon the countreys of the Tartars, wherein those Moscouites that dwell are very great idolaters: they haue one famous idole amongst them, which they call the Golden old wife: & they haue a custome that whensoever any plague or any calamitie doth afflict the countrey, as hunger, warre, or such like, then they goe to consult with their idole, which they do after this manner: they fall down prostrate before the idole, & pray vnto it, & put in the presence of the same, a cymbal: & about the same certaine persons stand, which are chosen amongst them by lot: vpon their cymball they place a silver tode, and sound the cymball, and to whomsoever of those lotted persons that tode goeth, he is taken, and by and by slaine: and immediately, I know not by what illusions of the deuill, or idole, he is againe restored to life, & then doth reueale and deliuer the causes of the present calamitie. And by this meanes knowing how to pacifie the idole, they are deliuered from the imminent danger.

Of the forme of their priuate houses, and of the apparell of the people.

The common houses of the countrey are euery where built of beames of Firre tree: the tower beames doe so receiue the round holownesse of the vppermost, that by the meanes of the building thereupon, they resist, and expell all winds that blow, and where the timber is ioined together, there they stop the chinks with mosse. The forme & fashion of their houses in all places is foure square, with streit and narrow windowes, whereby with a transparent casement made or couered with skinne like to parchment, they receiue the light. The roofes of their houses are made of boozes couered without with y bark of orees: within their houses they haue benches or grieues hard by their wals, which commonly they sleepe vpon, for the common people knowe not the vse of beds: they haue stoues wherein in the morning they make a fire, and the same fire doth either moderately warme, or make very hote the whole house.

The apparell of the people for the most part is made of wooll, their caps are picked like vnto a rike or diamond, broad beneath, and sharpe vpward. In the maner of making whereof, there is a signe and representation of nobilitie: for the loftier or higher their caps are, the greater is their birth supposed to be, and the greater reuerence is giuen them by the common people.

The Conclusion to Queene Marie.

These are the things most excellent Queene, which your Subjects newly returned from Russia haue brought home concerning the state of that countrey: wherefore if your maiestie shall be fauourable, and grant a continuance of the trauell, there is no doubt but that the honour and renowne of your name will be spread amongst those nations, whereunto three onely noble personages from the verie creation haue had access, to whom no man hath bene comparable.

The copie of the Duke of Moscouie and Emperour of Russia his letters, sent to King Edward the sixt, by the hands of Richard Chancelour.

We Almighty power of God, and the incomprehensible holy Trinitie, rightfull Christian belife, &c. We great Duke Iuan Vasiluich, by the grace of God great lord and Emperour of all Russia, great Duke of Volodemer, Mosco, and Nouograd, King of Kazan, King of Astracan, lord of Plesko, and great duke of Smolensko, of Twerria, Ioughoria, Pernia, Vadska, Bulghoria, and others, lord and great duke of Nouograd in the Low countrey, of Chernigo, Rezan, Polotskoy, Rostoue, Yaruslaueley, Bealozera, Liefland, Oudoria, Obdoria, and Condenfa, Commander of all Siberia, and of the North parts, and lord of many other countries, greeting. Before all, right great and worthy of honour Edward King of England &c. according to our most hearty and good zeale, with good intent and friendly desire, & according to our holy Christian faith, & great gouernance, & being in the light of great vnderstanding, our answer by this our honourable writing vnto your kingly gouernance, at the request of your faithfull seruant Richard Chancelour, with his company, as they shall let you wisely know, is this. In the strength of the twentieth yere of our gouernance, be it knownen, that at our sea coastes arrived a shippe, with one Richard, and his companie, and sayd, that hee was desirous to come into our dominions, and according to his request, hath seene our Maiestie, and || our eyes: and hath declared vnto vs your Maiesties desire, as that we should grant vnto your subjects, to goe and come, and in our dominions, and among our subjects, to frequent free Parts, with all sortes of marchandizes, and vpon the same to haue wares for their returne. And they haue also deliuered vs your letters, which declare the same request. And hereupon we haue giuen order, that wheresoener your faithful seruant Hugh Willoughbie land or touch in our dominions, to be wel entertained, who as yet is not arrived, as your seruant Richard can declare.

Iuan Vasiluich, that is to say, John the sonne of Basilus.

That is, come into our presence.

And we with Christian belife and faithfulness, and according to your honourable request, and my honourable commandement will not leaue it vndone: and are furthermore willing that you send vnto vs your ships and vessels, when and as often as they may haue passage, with good assurance on our part to see them harmlesse. And if you send one of your maiesties counsell to treat with vs whereby your countrey marchants may with all kinds of wares, and where they will make their market in our dominions, they shall haue their free Parte with all free liberties throughe my whole dominions with all kinde of wares to come and goe at their pleasure, without any let, damage or impediment, according to this our letter, our word and our seale which we haue commanded to be vnder sealed. Written in our dominion, in our citie and our palace in the citie of Mosco, in the yere 7060, the second moneth of February.

This letter was written in the Moscouian tongue, in letters much like to the Greeke letters, very faire written in paper, with a broad seale hanging at the same, sealed in paper vpon warr. This seale was much like y^e broad seale of England, hauing on the one side the image of a man on horseback in complete harnesse fighting with a dragon. Under this letter was another paper written in the Dutch tongue, which was the interpretation of the other written in the Moscouian letters. These letters were sent the next yere after the date of king Edwards letters, 1554.

The coines, weights and measures vsed in Russia, written by John Hassé, in the yere, 1554.

Inasmuch as it is most necessary for al marchantes which seeke to haue traffique in any strange regions, first to acquaint theselues with the coines of those lands with which they do intend to toyne in traffique, and how they are called from the valuation of the highest piece to the lowest, and in what sort they make their payments, as also what their common weightes and measures be: for these causes I haue thought good to write some thing thereof according to mine owne knowledge and experience, to the end that the marchantes of that new aduenure may the better understand how the wealth of that new frequented trade will arise.

No coines of gold in Russia, but all of silver

First, it is to be noted that the Emperour of Russia hath no other coines then silver in all his land, which goeth for payment amongst merchants, yet notwithstanding there is a coine of copper, which serueth for the reliefe of the poore in Mosco, & no where els, and that is but only for quasse, water and fruit, as nuts, apples, and such other like. The name of which money is called Pole or Poles, of which Poles there goe to the least of the silver coines, 18. But I will not stand byou this, because it is no currant money among merchants.

Of silver coines there be thre sortes of pieces: the least is a Polodenga, the second a Denga, the third, Nowgro, which is as much to say in English as halfpennie, penie, and twopence, and for other valued money then this, there is none: there are oftentimes there coines of gold, but they come out of forein countreys, whereof there is no ordinat valuation, but they passe according to the agreement of merchants.

Their order in summing of money is this: as we say in England, halfpennie, penie, shilling and pound, so say they Polodenga, Denga, Altine and Rubble: There goeth two Polodengas to a Denga, six Dengas to an Altine, and 23 Altines, and two Dengas to a Rubble.

The weightes in Russia,

Concerning the weightes of Russia they are these: There are two sortes of pounds in vse amongst them, the one great, & other small: the great pound is iust two small pounds: they call the great weight by the name of Beasemar, and the small they call the Skalla weight: with this small weight they weigh their silver coines, of the which the Emperour hath commanded to put to euery small pound three Rubbles of silver, and with the same weight they weigh all Grocerie wares, and almost al other wares which come into the land, except those which they weigh by the Pode, as hops salt, iron, lead, tinne & battrie with diuers others, notwithstanding they vse to weigh battrie more often by the small weight then by the great.

Whensoever you find the prices of your wares rated by the Pode, consider that to be the great weight, and the pound to be the small. Also they diuide the small pound into 48 parts, and they call the eight and fortieth part a Slotnike, by the which Slotnike the retailers sell their wares out of their shops, as Goldsmiths, Grocers, Silkesellers and such other like as we doe vse to retails by the ounce: and as once for their great weight which they call the Beasemar, they sel by pode, or shippond. The pode doth containe of the great weight, 40 pounds, and of the small 80: there goe 10. podes to a shippond.

Yet you must consider that their great weight is not full with ours: for I take not their great pound to be full 13 ounces, but about 12 I thinke it be. But for your iust prooffe, weigh 6 Rubbles of Russia money with our pound weight, and then shal you see what it lacketh: for 6 Rubbles of Russia is by the Emperours standerd, the great pound: so that I thinke it the next way to know the iust waight, as well of the great pound as of the small.

The weight of Wardhouse.

There is another weight needfull to be knowne, which is the weight of Wardhouse, for so much as they weigh all their drie fish by weight, which weight is the Beasemar, as they of Russia doe vse, notwithstanding there is another sorte in it: the names of those weightes are these: the marke pound, the great pound, the weie, and the shippond. The marke pound is to be understood as our pound, and their great pound is 24 of their marke pound: the weie is 3 great pound, and 8 weie is a shippond.

The Russian measures.

Now concerning their measures. As they haue two sortes of weightes, so they haue also two sortes of measures: wherewith they measure cloth both linnen and wollen: they call the one an Archshine, and the other a Locut: the Archshine I take to bee as much as the Flanders ell, and their Locut halfe an English yard: with their Archshine they may mete all such sortes of clothes as come into the land, and with the Locut all such cloth both linnen and wollen, as they make themselves. And whereas we vse to giue yard and inch, or yard and handfull, they do giue nothing but bare measure,

They haue also a measure wherewith they doe mete their cozne, which they cal a Setforth, and the halfe of that an Oline: this Setforth I take take to bee three bushels of London measure. And as for their drinke measure, they call it a Spanne, which is much like a bucket, and of that I neuer saw any true rate, but that some was greater then other some. And as for the measures of Wardhouse wherewith they mete their cloth, there is no difference between that and the measure of Danske, which is halfe an English ell.

The measure of Wardhouse in cloth, is the measure of Danske.

Concerning the tolles & customs of Russia, it was reported to me in Moscouia, that the Turkes and Armenians pay the tenth penie custome of all the wares they bring into the Emperors land; and aboue that they pay for all such goods as they weigh at the Emperours beame, two pence of the Rubble, which p buyer or seller must make report to of the Master of the beame: they also pay a certaine hoyle toll, which is in diuers places of his Realme foure pence of a hoyle.

The Turkes and Armenians pay custome.

The Emperours beame.

The Dutch nation are free of this: notwithstanding for certaine offenders, they had lost their priuiledges which they haue recovered this Summer to their great charge. It was reported to me by a Justice of that countrey, that they paid for it thirtie thousand Rubbles, and also that Rye, Dorpre and Reuel haue yielded themselves vnder the gouernment of the Emperour of Russia: whether this was a bragge of the Russes or not, I know not, but thus he sayd, and in deed whiles we were there, there came a great Ambassadour out of Liefland, for the assurance of their priuiledges.

The Dutch nation lost their priuiledges, & renued them with a great summe.

To speake somewhat of the commodities of this countrey, it is to be vnderstood, that there is a certaine place foure score miles from the Sea called Colmogro: to which place there resort all the forces of Wares that are in the North parts, as Oyles, Salt, Stockfish, Salmon, Fethers and Furrer: their Salt they make of saltwater by the sea side: their Oyles they make of Seales, whereof they haue great store which is brought out of the Bay where our shippes came in: they make it in the Spring of the yeere, and bring it to Colmogro to sell, and the merchants there carie it to Nouogrode, and so sell it to the Dutch nation. Their Stockfish and Salmon cometh from a place called Malluins, not farre from Wardhouse: their Salmon and their Salt they carrie to Mosco, and their oyle fische they carrie to Nouogrode, and sell it there to the Lieflanders.

The commodities of Russia.

The Furrer and Fethers which come to Colmogro, as Sables, Beauers, Pinks, Armine, Lettis, Graies, Wooluerings, and white fiores, with Deere skinnes, they are brought thither, by the men of Penninge, Lampas, and Powstetzer, which fetch them from the Samoedes that are counted sauage people: and the merchants that bring these Furrer doe vse to trucke with the merchants of Colmogro for Cloth, Tinne, Battie, & such other like, and the merchants of Colmogro carie them to Nouogrode, Vologda, or Mosco, & sell them there. The Fethers which come from Penning they doe little esteeme.

If our merchants do desire to know the meetest place of Russia for the standing house, in mine opinion I take it to be Vologda, which is a great towne standing in the heart of Russia, with many great and good towne about it. There is great plentie of cozne, victuals, and of all such wares as are raised in Russland, but specially, flaxe, hempe, tallow and bacon: there is also great store of ware, but it cometh from the Mosko.

The towne of Vologda is meetest for our marchants, because it lieth amongst all the best towne of Russia, and there is no towne in Russia but trades with it: also the water is a great commoditie to it. If they plant themselves in Mosco or Nouogrode, their charge will be great and wonderfull, but not so in Vologda: for all things will there be had better cheape by the one half. And for their vent, I know no place so meet. It is likely that some will thinke p Mosko to be the meetest by the reason of the court, but by that reason I take it to be woofle: for the charge there would be so great by crauers and expences, that the moitie of the profite would bee wholly consumed, which in the other place will bee saued. And yet notwithstanding our marchants may bee there in the Winter to serue the Emperour and his court. The Emperour is a great marchant himselfe of ware and sables, which with good foresight may bee procured to their hands: as for other commodities there are litle or none in Moscouia, besides those aboue rehearsed: if there bee other, it is brought thither by the Turkes, who will be daintie to buy our clothes considering the charges of cartage ouer land.

Vologda and the State thereof.

The Emperour of Moscouie is a marchant himselfe.

Our marchants may doe well to prouide for the Russes such wares as the Dutch nation doeth serue them of, as Flanders and Holland clothes, which I beleue, they shal serue better and with lesse charge then they of Rye or Dorpre, or Reuel: for it is no smal aduenture to bring their clothes out of Flanders to either of these places, and their charge not litle to cary them ouer lande to Nouogrode, which is from Rye nine hundred Russian milles.

This Nouogrode is a place wel furnished with flaxe, Ware, Hides, tallow and many other things: the best flaxe in Russia is brought thither and there sold by the hundred bundles, which is done also at Vologda, and they that bring the flaxe to Nouogrode, dwell as neere Vologda, as Nouogrode, and when they heare of the viterance which they may haue with our nation, they will as willingly come to them as goe to other.

Two sorts of flaxe.

They haue in Russia two sorts of flaxe, the one is called great flaxe, and the other small: that which they call great flaxe is better by foure rubbles in 100. bundles then the small: It is much longer then the other, and cleaner without wood: and whereas of the small flaxe there goe 27. or 28 bundles to a shippound, there goeth not of the greater sort about 22. or 24 at the most. There are many other trifles in Russia, as sope, mats, &c. but I thinke there will bee no great account made of them.

The letters of king Philip and Queene Marie to Juan Vasiluich the Emperour of Russia written the first of April 1555 and in the second voyage.

Philip and Marie by the grace of God, King and Queene of England, France, Naples, Ierusalem, and Ireland, defenders of the faith, Princes of Spaine and Sicilie, Archdukes of Austrich, Dukes of Burgundie, Millaine, and Brabant, Countiees of Haspurge, Flanders, and Tiroll: To the right High, right High-tie, and right excellent Prince, garnished with all giftes of nature, by Gods grace John Vasiluich Emperour of all Russia, great Duke of Volodemer, Mosco, and Nouogrod, King of Cazan, King of Astracan, Lord of Plesco, and great Duke of Smolensko, of Tueria, Ioughoria, Permia, Vadska, Bulghoria, and others, Lorde and great Duke of Nouogrod of the lowe Countrey, of Chernigo, Rezan, Polotskay, Rostoue, Yeraslaue, Bealozera, Liefland, Oudoria, Obdoria, and Condenfa, Commandet of all Siberia, and of the North partes, and lord of many other countreys, greeting. Whereas by the consent and licence of our most deare and entirely beloued late brother, King Edward the sixt, whose soule God pardon, sundrie of our subiects marchants of the citie of London within this our realme of England did at their owne proper costs and aduenture furnish thre shippes to discouer, serch, and find lands, Islands, regions, and territories before this aduenture not knowne, ne commonly haunted and frequented by seas, The one of the which thre shippes, named the Edward Bonaventure, (whereof our right welbeloued Richard Chancelour was then gouernour and great Captaine) chanced by the grace of God, and the good conduct of the sayd Chancelour to arrive and winter in the North part of your Empire of Russia, Forasmuch as we be credibly informed by the report of our trustie and welbeloued subiect, that your Maiestie did not onely call him and certaine of his company to your imperiall ptesence and speech, entertayned and banqueted them with all humanitie and gentlenes: but also being thereunto requested partly by the letters of our said brother, & partly by request of the sayd Richard Chancelour, haue by your letters patents vnder your scale among other things granted: That all such marchants as shall come forth of anye of our realms of England or Ireland with al maner of wares, if they wil tranel or occupie within your dominions, The same marchants with their marchandises in al your lordship may freely, & at their libertie traualle out and in without hinderance or any maner of losse: And of your farther ample goodnesse haue promised that our ambassadours, if we send any, shall with free good will passe to and from you without any hinderance or losse, with such mesage as shall come vnto you, and to returne the same to our kingdomes well answered, as by the same your letters, written in your lordly Palace and Castle of Mosco in the yeere 7063 the moneth of februarye moze at large appeareth. Like as wee cannot but much commend your princely fauour and goodnesse, and in like manner thanke you for the abundant grace, extended to the sayd Richard Chancelour, and others our subiects marchants: Euen so these are to pray and request you to continue the same beneuolence toward them, and other our marchants and subiects, which doe or heereafter shall resorte to your countrey: And for the moze assurance and incouragement to trade and exercise the feate of marchandise with your subiects and all other marchants within your dominions, that it may please you at this our contemplation to assigne and authorize such Commissioners as you shall thinke meete to trade and conferre with our welbeloued subiects and marchants, the sayd Richard Chancelour, George Killingworth, & Richard Graie, bearers of these our letters: who are by vs authorized for for that purpose: and to confirme and graunt such other liberties and priuiledges vnto the Governour, Consuls, Assistants, and Communitie of the fellowship of the saide Marchants, as the saide bearers in their name propone and require by you to be granted for their safe conduct, good government, and order to bee erected and continued among them in your saide dominions; And this with such your clemencie and expedition, as wee, vpon the next arrivall of the saide Richard Chancelour may bee enforced of your gracious disposition and answer. Which your beneuolences so to bee extended, wee bee minded to requite towards any your subiects Marchants, that shal frequent this our realme at your contemplation therefore to be made. Thus right high, right Excellent, and right mightie, Abnightie God the Father, the Sonne and the holy Ghost haue you in his blessed keeping. Given vnder our seale at our Palace of Westminster, the first of April, in the yere from the blessed incarnation of our Saviour Iesus Christ, 1555, and in the first and second yeres of our reignes.

Articles conceiued and determined for the Commission of the Merchants of this company resident in Russia, and at the Warehouse, for the second voyage, 1555. the first of May, as followeth.

First, the Governour, Consuls, Assistants and whole company assembled this day in open court, committeth and authorizeth Richard Gray and George Killingworth, jointly and severally to be Agents, Factors, and Attorneys generall and speciall, for the whole body of this companie, to buy, sel, trucke, change and permute al, and euery kind and kindes of wares, marchandizes and goods to the saide company appertaining, now laden & shipped in the good ship called the Edward Bonauenture, appointed for Russia, the same to utter and sell to the best commoditie, profit and aduantage of the saide corporation, be it for ready money, wares & marchandises, or truck, presently, or for time, as occasion & benefit of the company shal require: and all such wares as they or either of them shal buy, trucke, or provide, or cause to be bought for the company to lade the homeward in good order and condition, as by prudent course of marchandises, shall, and ought to appertaine, which article extendeth also to Iohn Brooke for the Warehouse, as in the 17. and 18. articles of this commission appeareth.

2 Item, it is also committed, as aboue, to the saide Agents, to binde & charge the saide company by debt for wares vpon credit, as good opportunitie and occasion shal serue, with power to charge and bind the saide company, and their successors, for the payments of such things as shalbe taken vp for credite, and the saide Agents to be relieved ab opere satis dandi.

3 Item full authoritie and power is committed to the saide first named factors, together with Richard Chancelour grand Pilot of this flecte, to repaire to the Emperours court, there to present the king and Queenes Maiesties letters, written in Greeke, Polish, and Italian, and to giue and exhibite the marchants presents at such time and place as shalbe thought most expedient, they, or one of them to demand, and humbly desire of the Emperour such further grants and priuiledges to be made to this companie, as may be beneficiall for the same, to continue in traffike with his subiects, according to such instructions as bee in this behalfe deuised and deliuered to the Agents whereunto relation is to be had, and some one of these persons to attend vpon the court for the obtaining of the same, as to their discretions shalbe thought good.

4 Item, that all the saide Agents doe well consider, ponder and weigh such articles as bee deliuered to them to know the natures, dispositions, lawes, customes, maners and behaviours of the people of the countreys wherethey shal traffike, as well of the Nobilitie as of the Lawyers, Marchants, Partners and common people, and to note diligently the subtilties of their bargaining, buying and selling, making as fewe debtes as possible may bee, and to bee circumspect, that no lawe neither of religion nor politie bee broken or transgressed by them or any minister vnder them, ne yet by any mariner or other person of our nation, and to foresee that all tolles, customes, and such other rites be so duely paid, that no forfeiture or confiscation may ensue to our goods either outward or inward, and that al things passe wick quiet, without breach of the publike peace or common tranquillitie of any of the places where they shall arrive or traffike.

5 Item, that provision bee made in Mosco or elswhere, in one or mo good townes, where good trade shall be found for a house or houses for the Agents, and companie to inhabite and dwell at your accustomed diets, with warchouses, sellers, and other houses of offices requisite, and that none of the inferiour ministers of what place or vocation soeuer he be, doe lie out of the house of the Agents without licence to be giuen, and that euery inferiour officer shalbe obedient to the orders

ders, rules and governments of the said Agents, and in case any disobedient person shall be found among any of them, then such person to be punished for his misbehaviour, at the discretion of the said Agents, or of one of them in the absence of the other.

6 Item, if any person of the said ministers shall be of such pride or obstinacie, that after one or two honest admonitions, hee will not be reformed nor reconciled from his faultes, then the saide Agents to displace every such person from the place or roome to him heere committed, and come other discrete person to occupie the same, as to the saide Agents by their discretions shall seeme meete.

7 Item, if any person shall be found so arrogant, that he will not be ordered nor reformed by the said Agents or by one of them in the absence of the other, then the sayde person to be deliuered to the Iustice of the countrey, to receiue such punishment, as the lawes of the countrey doe require.

8 Item, that the saide Agents and factours shall daily one houre in the morning conferre and consult together what shall be most convenient and beneficiall for the companie, and such orders as they shall determine, to be written by the Secretarie of the companie in a booke to be provided for that purpose, and no inferiour person to infringe or breake any such order or devise, but to obserue the same exactly, upon such reasonable paine as the Agents shall put him to by discretion.

9 Item, that the said Agents shall in the ende of euerie weeke, or oftener as occasion shall require, peruse, see and trie, not onely the Cashiers, bookes, reckonings and accounts, signing the same with their handes, but also shall receiue and take weekly the account of every other officer, as well of the Vendes, as of the imprecous, and also of the state of the household expenses, making thereof a perfect declaration as shall appertaine, the same accounts also to be signed by the saide Agents handes.

10 Item, that no inferiour minister shall take upon him to make any bargain or sale of any wares, marchandises or goods, but by the Commission and Warrantie of the sayde Agents under their handes, and hee not to transgresse his Commission by any way, pretense or colour.

11 Item, that every inferiour minister, that is to understand, all Clerks and yong merchants being at the order of the saide Agents, shall ride, goe, saile and trauaile to all such place, and places, as they or hee shall be appointed vnto by the saide Agents, and effectually to follow and do all that which to him or them shall be committed, well and truly to the most benefite of the company, according to the charge to him or them committed, euen as by their othes, duties and bondes of their masters they be bounden and charged to doe.

12 Item, that at every moneths end, all accounts and reckonings shalbe brought into perfect order, into the Lidger or memoriall, and the decrees, orders, and rules of the Agents together with the priuileges, and copies of letters, may and shall be well and truly written by the secretarie, in such forme as shalbe appointed for it, and that copies of all their doings may be sent home with the said ship at her returne.

13 Item, that all the Agents doe diligently learne and obserue all kinde of wares, as well naturals as forein, that be beneficiall for this Realme, to be sold for the benefite of the company, and what kinde of our commodities and other things of these West partes be most vendible in those Realmes with profite, giuing a perfect aduise of all such things requisite.

14 Item, if the Emperour will enter into bargain with you for the whole masse of your stock, and will haue the trade of it to utter to his owne subiects, then debating the matter prudently among your selues, let such high prizes of your commodities, as you may assure your selues to be gainers in your owne wares, and yet to buy theirs at such base prizes, as you may here also make a commoditie and gaine at home, hauing in your mindes the notable charges that the companie haue distrayed in aduancing this voyage: and the great charges that they sustaine dayly in wages, victuals and other things: all which must be requited by the wise handling of this voyage, which being the first president shalbe a perpetual president for euer: and therefore all circumspection is to be vsed, and to be seene in this first enterprise, which God blesse and prosper vnder you, to his glorie, and the publike wealth of this Realme, whereof the Queenes Maiestie, and the Lords of the Councell haue conceiued great hope, whose expectations are not to be frustrated.

15 Item, it is to be had in minde, that you vse all wayes and meanes possible to learne howe men may passe from Russia, either by land or by sea to Cathaia, and what may be heard of our other ships, and to what knowledge you may come, by conferring with the learned or well trauailed persons, either naturall or forein, such as haue trauailed from the North to the South,

16 Item, it is committed to the said Agents, that if they shall be certified credibly, that any of our said first ships be arrived in any place wher unto passage is to be had by water or by land, that then certaine of the company at the discretion of the Agents shall bee appointed to be sent to them, to learne their estate & condition, to visite, refresh, relieue, and furnish them with all necessaries and requisites, at the common charges of the companie, and to embrace, accept, and intreat them as our deare and welbeloued brethern of this our societie, to their reioycing and comfort, aduertising Syr Hugh Willoughbie and others of our carefullnes of them and their long absence, with our desire to heare of them, with all other things done in their absence for their commoditie, nolesse then if they had bene present.

17 Item, it is decreed, that when the ships shal arrive at this going forth at the Wardhouse, that their Agents, with master Chancelor grand pilot, John Brooke merchant, deputed for the Wardhouse, with John Buckland master of the Edward, John Howlet master, and John Robins pilot of the Philip and Marie, shall conferre and consult together, what is most profitable to be done therfore for the benefit of the company, & to consider whether they may bargain with the captaine of the castle, and the inhabitants in that place, or alongst the coast for a large quantity of fish, orie or wet, killed by the naturals, or to be taken by our men at a price reasonable for trucke of cloth, meale, salt, or beere, and what traine oyle, or other commodity is to be had there at this time, or any other season of the yeere, and whether there will be had or found sufficient lading for both the sayd shippes, to be bought there, and how they may conferre with the naturals for a continuance in hanting the place, if profit wil so arise to the company, and to consider whether the Edward in her returne may receiue at the Wardhouse any kind of lading homeward, and what it may amount unto, and whether it shall be expedient for the Philip to abide at the Wardhouse the returne of the Edward out of Russia, or getting that she may returne with the first good wind to England, without abiding for the Edward, and so to conclude & accorde certainly among themselves upon their arrivall, that the certaintie may (upon good deliberation) be so ordered and determined betwene both ships, that the one may be assured of the other, and their determinations to be put in writing duplicate to remaine with ech ship, according to such order as shall be taken betwene them.

The Philip and Marie.

18 Item, that John Brooke our marchant for the Wardhouse take good aduise of the rest of our Agents, how to vse himselfe in all affaires, whiles the ship shalbe at the Wardhouse, he to see good order to be kept, make bargains aduisedly, not crediting the people untill their natures, dispositions & fidelities shal be well tried, make no debtes, but to take ware for ware in hand, and rather be trusted then to trust. Note diligently what be the best wares for those parts, and howe the fish falleth on the coast, and by what meane it is to bee bought at the most aduantage, what kindes and diuersities of sortes in fishes be, and whether it will keepe better in bulke piled, or in caskes.

Note.

Note.

19 Item, he to haue a diligent eye & circumspection to the beere, salt, and other liquid wares, and not to suffer any waste to be made by the companie, and he in all contracts to require aduise, counsel, and consent of the master and pilot, the marchant to be our housewife, as our speciall trust is in him, he to tender that no lawes nor customes of the countrey be broken by any of the company, and to render to the prince, and other officers, all that which to them doth appertaine, the company to be quiet, voide of all quarrelling, fighting, or veration, abstaine from all excessse of drinking as much as may bee, and in all to vse and behaue themselves as to quiet marchants doeth, and ought to appertaine.

20 Item, it is decreed by the companie, that the Edward shall returne home this yeere with as much wares as may be conueniently & profitably prouided, bought, and laden in Russia, and the rest to be taken in at the Wardhouse, as by the Agents shall be accorded. But by all meanes it is to be forseterne and noted, that the Edward returne home, and not to winter in any forrein place, but to come home, and bring with her all the whole aduertisements of the marchants, with such further aduise for the next yeeres prouision, as they shall giue.

21 Item, it is further decreed and ordeined, inuolably to be obserued, that when the good ships, or either of them (by Gods grace) shall returne home to the coastes of England, that neither of them shall stay or touch in any Hauen or Port of England, other wise then wind and weather shall serue, but shall directly saile and come to the Port of the citie of London, the place of their right discharge, and that no bulke be broken, hatches opened, chests, fardell, trusse, barrel, fat, or whatsoeuer thing it shall be, be brought out of the shippe, vntill the companie shall giue order for the same, and appoint such persons of the companie as shall be thought meet for that purpose, to take viewe, and consider the shippe and her lading, and shall giue order for the breaking vp of the saide bulke, or giue licence by discretion, for things to be brought to land. And that euery officer shall shewe the inuise of his charge to him first committed, and to examine the wares and losses, losses, and to deliuer the remainder to the vse and benefit of the company, according to such order as shall be appointed in that behalfe.

Note.

22 Item, the company exhorteth, willet, and requirer, not onely all the said Agents, pilots, masters, marchants, clerkes, boatswaines, stewards, skafemasters, and all other officers and ministers of this present voyage, being put in charge and trust dayly to peruse, reade, and studie such instructions as be made, giuen, & deliuered to them for perfect knowledge of the people of Russia, Moscouia, Wardhouse, and other places, their dispositions, maners, customes, vses, tollies, carriages, coines, weights, numbers, measures, wares, merchandises, commodities, and incommunities, the one to be accepted and imbraced, the other to be reiected and utterly abandoned, to the intent that every man taking charge, may be so well caught, perfected, and readily instructed in all the premises, that by ignorance, no losse or prejudice may grow or chance to the company: assuring themselves, that forasmuch as the company hath travelled and laboured so in these their instructions to them giuen, that every man may bee perfect, and fully learned to eschew all losses, hurts and damages that may insue by pretence or colour of none knowledge, the company entendeth not to allow, or accept ignorance for any lawfull or iust cause of excuse, in that which shall be misordered by negligence, the burden whereof shall light vpon the negligent offending person, especially vpon such as of their owne heads, or temeritie, will take vpon him or them to doe or to attempt any thing, whereby prejudice may arise, without the commission of the Agents as aboue is mentioned, whereunto relation must be had.

23 Forasmuch as it is not possible to write and indite such prescribed orders, rules and commissions to the Agents and factours, but that occasion, time and place, and the pleasures of the princes, together with the operation or successe of fortune shall change or shift the same, although not in the whole, yet in part, therefore the said company doe commit to you their deare and intire beloued Agents and factours to doe in this behalfe for the commodity and wealth of this company, as by your discretions, vpon good advised deliberations shalbe thought good and beneficiall. Prohibited alwayes, that the honour, good name, fame, credite, and estimation of the same companie be conserved and preserved: which to confirme we beseech the liuing Lord to his glory, the publike benefit of this realme, our common profits, and your praises.

If finally for the seruice, and due accomplishment of all the premises, every Agent and minister of and for this voyage, hath not onely giuen a coppyall othe vpon the Euangelists to observe, and cause to be observed, this commission, and every part, clause and sentence of the same, as much as in him lyeth, as well for his owne part as for any other person, but also haue bounde themselves and their friendes to the companie in severall summes of money, expessed in the actes and records of this societie, for the tructh and fidelities of them, for the better, and also manifestter testification of the trueith, and of their othes, promises, and bands aforesaid, they haue to this Commission subscribed particularly their severall hands, and the company also in confirmation of the same, haue set their seale. Given the day, moneth, and yeeres first aboue mentioned,

The othe ministred to the seruants of the fellowship.

E sweare by the holy contents of that booke, that ye shal wel, faithfully and truly, and vppightly, and with all your indenour, serue this right worshipfull company in that order, which by this fellowships Agent or Agents in the dominions of the Emperours of Russia, &c. shall bee vnto you committed, by commission, commandement, or other his direction. And that you shall bee obedient and faithful to the same our Agent or Agents, and that well, and truly and vppightly according to the commission, charge, commandement, or other direction of the said Agent or Agents to you from time to time giuen and to be giuen, you shall prosecute and doe all that which in you lieth, for the good renowne, commoditie, benefite and profite of the said fellowship: and you shall not directly or indirectly, openly or couertly doe, exercise or vse any trade or feates of merchandizes for your owne priuate account, commodity, gaine or profite, or for the account of or for any other person or persons, without consent or licence of this said fellowship, first obtained in writing. And if you shall know or vnderstand any other person or persons to vse, exercise or doe any trade, traffike or feat of marchandise, to or for his or their own account or accounts, at any time or times hereafter, that then ye shall truly and plainly disclose, open, utter and reueale, and shew the same vnto this said fellowship, without fraude, colour, couin or delay: So helpe you God, &c.

The letter of M. George Killingworth the companies first Agent in Moscouie, touching their interteinement in their second voyage. Anno 1555. the 27. of Nouëember in Mosco.

Right worshipfull, my duetie considered, &c. It may please your worship to vnderstand, that at the making hereof we all be in good health, thanks be to God, saue onely Wilhaum our cooke as we came from Colmogro fell into the riuier out of the boate, and was drowned. And the 11. day of September wee came to Vologda, and there we laide all our wares by, and sold very litle: but one marchant would haue giuen vs 12. robes for a broad cloth, & he said he would haue had them all, and 4. altines for a pound of sugar, but we did refuse it because he was the first, and the marchants were not come thither, nor would not come before Winter, trusting to haue more: but I feare it will not be much better. Yet notwithstanding we did for the best. And the house that our wares lie in costs from that day vntil Easter ten robes. And the 28. day of September we did determine with our selues that it was good for D. Gray, Arthur Edwards, Thomas Hautory, Christopher Hudson, Iohn Segewicke, Richard Iohnson, and Richard Iudde, to tarie at Vologda, and D. Chancelor, Henry Lane, Edward Prife, Robert Best and I should goe to Mosco. And we did lade the Emperours sager, with part of all sorts of wares to haue had to the Mosco with vs, but the way was so deepe, that we were faine to turne back, and leaue it still at Vologda till the frost. And we went forth with poste horse, & the charge of euery horse being siten in number, comes to 10. s. 7. d. halfe penie, besides the guides. And wee came to the Mosco the 4. day of October, and were lodged that night in a simple house: but the next day we were sent for to the Emperour his secretarie, and he bade vs welcome with a cheerefull countenance and cheerefull wordes, and wee shewed him that we had a letter from our Queenes grace to the Emperour his grace, and then he desired to see them all, and that they might remain with him, to haue them perfect, that the true meaning might be declared to the Emperour, and so we did: and then we were appointed to a better house: and the seueneth day the secretarie sent for vs againe, & then he shewed vs that we should haue a better house, for it was the Emperour his will, that we should haue all things that we did lacke, and did send vs meade of two sorts, and two hens, our house free, and euery two dayes to receiue eight hens, seuen altines, and two pence in money, and meade a certaine, and a poore fellow to make cleane our house, & to doe that wherunto we would set him. And wee had giuen many rewards before, which you shal perceiue by other, and so we gaue the messengers a reward with thanks: and the ninth day we were sent to make vs readie to speak with the Emperour on the morrow. And the letters were sent vs, that wee might deliuer them our selues, & we came before him the tenth day: and before we came to his presence we went thorow a great chamber, where stood many small tunnes, pailles, bowles and pots of siluer, I meane, like washing bowles, all parfel gilt: and within that another chamber, wherein sate (I thinke) neere a hundred in cloth of gold, and then into the chamber where his grace sate, & there I thinke were more then in the other chamber also in cloth of gold, and we did our duty, & shewed his grace our Queenes graces letters, with anote of your present which was left in Vologda: and then his grace did aske how our Queenes grace did, calling her cousin, saying that hee was glad that wee were come in health into his Realme, and we went one by one vnto him, and tooke him by the hand, and then his grace did bid vs goe in health, and come to dinace againe, and we dined in his presence, and were set with our faces towards his grace, & none in the chamber sate with their backs towards him, being I thinke neere a hundred at dinner then, and all serued with golde, as platters, chargers, pottes, cuppes, and all not slender but very massy, and yet a great number of platters of golde, standing still on the cupboord, not moued: and diuers times in the dinner time his grace sent vs meat and drinke from his owne table, and when we had dined we went vp to his grace, and receiued a cuppe with drinke at his owne hand, and the same night his grace sent certaine gentlemen to vs with diuers sortes of wine and meade, to whome wee gaue a rewarde. And afterwarde we were by diuers Italians counselled to take heed whom we did trust to make the copie of the priuileges that we would desire to haue, for feare it should not be writte in the Ruffie tongue, as we did meane. So first a Russian did write for vs a breuiat to the Emperour, the tenour wherof was, that we did desire a stronger priuilege: & when the Secretary saw it, he did deliuer it to his grace, and when we came againe, his grace willed vs to write our minds, and hee would see it, and so we did. And his grace is so troubled with preparations to warres, that as yet wee haue no answer: but we haue byn required of his Secretary, and of the vnder Chancelor, to know what wares we had brought brought into the Realme; and what wares we doe intend to haue, that are, or may bee had in this Realme: and we shewed them, and they shewed the Emperour thereof. And then they said his graces pleasure was, that his best marchants of the Mosco should be spoken to, to meet and talk with vs. And so a day was appointed, and wee mette in the Secretarie his office, and there was the vnder Chancelor, who had made promise since the Emperours marchant, and not his Chancelour: and then the conclusion of our talke was, that the Chancelour willed vs to bethinke vs, where we would desire to haue a house or houses, that wee might come to them as to our owne house, and for marchandize to be made preparation for vs, and they would know our pices of our wares and frise: and we answered, that for our pices they must see the wares before we coulde make any pice thereof, for the like in goodnesse hath not bene brought into the Realme, and we did looke for an example of all sorts of our wares to come from Vologda, with the first sledway, and then they should see them, and then we would shew them the pices of them: and likewise we could not tell them what we would giue them iustly, till we did knowe as well their iust weights as their measures: for in all places where we did come, all weights and measures did vary. Then the Secretary (who had made promise vnto vs before) saide, that we should haue all the fust measures vnder scale, & he that was found faultie in the contrary, to buy or sel with any other measure then that, the law was, that he should be punished: he said mozeouer, that if it so happed that any of our marchants do promise by couenat at any time to deliuer you any certain sum of wares in such a place, and of such like goodnesse, at such a day, for such a certaine pice, that then because of variance, we should cause it to be writen, according as the bargain is, before a iustice or the next ruler to the place: if he did not keepe couenat & promise in all points, according to his couenat, that then looke what losse or hinderance we could iustly proue that we haue thereby, he should make it good if he be worth so much: and in like case we must do to them: and to that we did agree, saue onely if it were to come ouer the sea, then if any such fortune should bee (as God forbid) that the ship should mischance or be robbed, & the prooffe to be made that such kind of wares were laden, the English marchants to beare no losse to the other marchant. Then the Chancelor said, me thinks you shall do best to haue your house at Colmogro, which is but 100. miles fro the right discharge of the ships, and yet I trust the ships shal come neerer hereafter, because the ships may not tary long for their lading, which is 1000. miles from Vologda by water, and all our marchants shall bring all our marchandize to Colmogro to you, and so shall our marchants neither go empty nor come empty: for if they lacke lading homeward, there is salt, which is good ware here, that they may come laden againe. So we were very glad to heare that, and did agree to his saying: for we shal neuertheless, if we list, haue a house at Vologda, & at the Mosco, yea, & at Nouogrode, or where we wil in Rusland: But the thre & twentieth of this present we were with the secretary, and then among other talke, we moued, that if we should tary at Colmogro with our wares, and should not come to Vologda, or further to seeke our market, but tary stil at Colmogro, and then the marchants of the Mosco and others should not come and bring their wares, and so the ships should come, and not haue their lading ready, that then it were a great losse and hinderance for vs: then saide he againe to vs, that the marchants had bene againe together with him, and had put the like doubt, that if they should come and bring their wares to Colmogro, and that they should not find wares there sufficient to serue them, that then they should be at great losse and hinderance, they leauing their other trades to sal to that: and to that we did answer, that after the time that we do appoint with them to bring their wares to Colmogro, God willing, they should neuer come thither, but at the beginning of the yere, they should find that our marchants would haue at the least for a thousand rubles, although the ships were not come: so that he saide, that then wee must talke further with the marchants: so that as yet I know not, but that we shall haue neede of one house at Colmogro, and another at Vologda, and if that they bring not their wares to Colmogro, then wee shall be fure to buy some at Vologda, and to be out of bondage.

And thus may we continue thre or foure yeeres, and in this space we shall know the countrey and the marchants, and which way to saue our selues best, and where to plant our houses; and where to seeke for wares: for the Mosco is not best for any kind of wares for vs to buy, saue onely ware, which we cannot haue vnder seven pence the Russe pound, and it lackes two ounces of our pound, neither will it be much better cheape, for I haue bidden 6. pence for a pound. And I haue bought moze, five hundred weight of parne, which stands mee in eight pence farthing the Russe pound one with another. And if wee had receiued any store of money, and were dispatched hère of that we tary for, as I doubt not but we shall be shortly (you know what I meane) then as soone as we haue made sale, I doe intend to goe to Nouogrode, and to Plesco, whence all the great number of the best tow flaxe cometh, and such wares as are there I trust to buy part. And feare you not but we will do that may be done, if God send vs health, desiring you to prepare fully for one one ship to be ready in the beginning of April to depart off the coast of England.

Concerning all those things which we haue done in the wares, you shal receiue a perfect note by the next bearer (God willing) for he that carrieth these from vs is a marchant of Terwill and he was caused to carry these by the commandement of the Emperour his secretarie, whose name is Iuan Mcallawich Weskawate, whom we take to be our very friend. And if it please you to send any letters to Danciske to Robert Elson, or to William Watsons seruicant Dunstan Walton to be conueyed to vs, it may please you to inclose ours in a letter sent from you to him, written in Polish, Dutch, Latine or Italian: so inclosed, comming to the Mosco to his hands, he wil conuey our letters to vs wheresoeuer we be. And I haue written to Danciske already to them for the conueyance of letters from thence.

And to certifie you of the weather here, men say that these hundred yeres was neuer so warme weather in this countrey at this time of the yeere. But as yesternight wee receiued a letter from Christopher Hudson from a citie called Yeraslaue, who is comming hither with certaine of our wares, but the winter did deceiue him, so that he was faine to tarie by the way: and he wrote that the Emperours present was deliuered to a gentleman at Vologda, and the sled did ouerthrow, and the butte of Pollocke was lost, which made vs all very sozpy.

I pray you be not offended with these my rude letters for lacke of time: but as soone as sales be made, I will finde the meanes to conuey you a letter with speed: for the way is made so doubtful, that the right messenger is so much in doubt, that he would not haue any letters of any effect sent by any man, if he might, for he knowes not of these: and to say the truth, the way is not for him to trauell in. But I will make another shift beside, which I trust shall serue the turne till he come, if sales be made befoze he be ready, which is and shall be as pleaseeth God: who euer preserve your worshipping, and send vs good sales. Written in haste.

A copie of the first Priuileges graunted by the Emperour of Russia to the English Marchants in the yeere

Ohn Vasiluich, by the grace of God Emperour of Russia, great duke of Nouogrode, Moscouia, &c. To all people that shal see, reade, heare or vnderstand these presents, greeting. Forasmuch as God hath planted al realmes and dominions in the whole world with sundry comodities, so as the one hath neede of the amity and commodities of the other, and by means thereof traffike is be-sed from one to another, and amity thereby increased: and for that as amongst men nothing is moze to be desired then amity, without the which no creature being of a naturall Good disposition can liue in quietnes, so that it is as troublesome to be utterly wanting, as it is perceiued to be grieuous to the body to lacke aire, fire, or any other necessities most requisite for the conseruation and maintenance thereof in health: considering also how need-full marchandize is, which furnissheth men of all that which is conuenient for their liuing and nouriture, for their clothing, trimming, the satisfiing of their delights, and all other things conueni-ent and profitable for them, and that marchandize bringeth the same commodities from diuers quarters in so great abundance, as by meanes thereof nothing is lacking in any part, and that all things be in euery place (where entercourse of marchandizes is receiued and imbraced) generally in such fort, as amity thereby is entered into, and planted to continue, and the inioyers thereof be as men liuing in a golden world: Upon these respects and other weighy and good considerations, vs hereunto mouing, and chiefly vpon the contemplation of the gracious letters, directed from the right high, right excellent, and right mighty Queene Mary, by the grace of God Queene of England, France, &c. in the fauour of her subiects, merchants, the gouernour, consuls, assistants, and communalitie of merchants aduenturers for discouery of lands, &c.

Know ye therefore, that we of our grace speciall, meere motion, and certaine knowledge, haue giuen and graunted, and by these presents for vs, our heires and successours, do giue and grant as much as in vs is and lieth, vnto Sebastian Cabota Gouernour, Sir George Barnes knight, &c.
Consuls: Sir Iohn Gresham, &c. Assistants, and to the communalitie of the afozenamed fellowship, and to their successours for euer, and to the successours of euery of them, these articles, granted,

grants, immunities, franchises, liberties and privileges, and euery of them here after following, expressed and declared. Videlicet:

1 First, we for vs, our heires and successors, do by these presents giue and graunt free licence, facultie, authoritie and power vnto the said Gouverneur, Consuls, Assistants, and communalty of the said fellowship, and to their successors for euer, that all and singular the marchants of the same company, their Agents, factours, doers of their businesse, attornies, seruants, and ministers, and euery of them may at all times hereafter for euer more surely, freely and safely with their shippes, merchandizes, goods and things whatsoeuer saile, come and enter into all and singular our lands, countreies, dominions, cities, townes, villages, castles, portes, iurisdictions and distraicts by sea, land or fresh waters, and there tary, abide and sojourne, and buy, sell, barter and change all kind of merchandizes with al maner of marchants and people, of whatsoeuer nation, rite, condition, state or degrees they be, and with the same or other ships, wares, merchandizes, goods & things whatsoeuer they be, vnto other empires, kingdomes, dukedomes, parts, and to any other place or places at their pleasure and libertie by sea, land or fresh waters may depart, and exercise all kinde of merchandizes in our empire and dominions, and euery part thereof freely and quietly without any restraint, impeachment, price, exaction, prelt, straight custome, toll, imposition, or subside to be demanded, tared or paid, or at any time hereafter to be demaied, tared, set, leuied or inferred vpon them or any of them, or vpon their goods, ships, wares, merchandizes and things, of, for or vpon any part or parcell thereof, or vpon the goods, ships, wares, merchandizes, and things of any of them, so that they shall not need any other safe conduct or licence generall, ne speciall of vs, our heires or successors, neither shall be bound to aske any safe conduct or licence in any of the aforesaid places subiect vnto vs.

2 Item, we giue and graunt to the said marchants this power and libertie, that they, ne any of them, ne their goods, wares, merchandizes or things, ne any part thereof, shall be by any meanes within our dominions, landes, countreies, castles, townes, villages, or other place or places of our iurisdiction, at any time hereafter attached, staied, arrested ne disturbed for anie debt, due tie or other thing, for the which they be not principall debtors or sureties, ne also for any offence or trespass committed, or that shall be committed, but onely for such as they or any of them shall actually commit, and the same offences (if any such happen,) shall bee by vs onely heard, and determined.

3 Item, we giue and graunt, that the said Marchants shall and may haue free libertie, power, and authoritie to name, choose and assigne brokers, shippers, packers, weighers, measurers, wagoners, and all other meet and necessary labozers for to serue them in their feat of merchandises, and minister and giue vnto them and euery of them a corpozall othe, to serue them well and truly in their offices, and finding them or any of them doing contrary to his or their othe, may punish and dismisle them, and from time to time choose, sweare and admit other in their place or places, without contradiction, let, peration or disturbance, either of vs, our heires or successors, or of any other our Iustices, officers, ministers or subiects whatsoeuer.

4 Item, we giue and graunt vnto the saide Marchants and their successors, that such person as is, or shall be commended vnto vs, our heires or successors by the Gouverneur, Consuls and assistants of the said fellowship resident within the citie of London within the realme of England, to be their chiefe Factor within this our empire and dominions, may and shall haue full power and authoritie to gouerne and rule all Englishmen that haue had, or shall haue access, or repaire in or to this said Empire and iurisdiction, or any part thereof, and shall and may minister vnto them, and euery of them good iustice in all their causes, plaints, quarrels, and disorders betwene them moued, and to be moued, and assemble, deliberate, confide, conclude, define, determine and make such actes, and ordinaunces, as he so commended with his Assistants shall thinke good and meete for the good order, gouernment and rule of the said Marchants, and all other Englishmen repairing to this our saide empire and dominions, or any part thereof, and to let and leuie vpon all, and euery Englishmen, offender or offenders, of such their acts and ordinaunces made, and to be made, penalties and inlets by fine or imprisonment.

5 Item, if it happen that any of the saide Marchants, or other Englishman, as one or more doe rebell against such chiefe Factor or Factors, or his or their deputies, and will not dispose him or themselves to obey them and euery of them as shall appertaine; if the saide Rebels or disobedients doe come, and bee founde in our saide Empire and iurisdiction, or any part and place thereof, then wee promise and graunt, that all and euery our officers, ministers, and subiects shall effectually ayde and assist the saide chiefe Factor or Factors, and their deputies, and for their power shall really worke, to bring such rebell or disobedient rebels, or disobedient to due obedience: And to that intent shall lende vnto the same Factor or Factors, and their deputies deputies vpon request therfore to be made, prisons, and instruments for punishments from time to time.

6 Item, we promise vnto the saide Marchants, and their successours vpon their request to exhibite and doe vnto them good, exact and fauourable iustice, with expedition in all their causes, and that when they or any of them shall haue access, or come to or before any of our Iustices, for any their plaints mooued, and to bee mooued betweene any our subiects or other stranger, and them, or any of them, that then they shalbe first and forthwith heard, as soon as the party which they shal find before our Iustices shalbe depeached, which party being heard forthwith, and as soone as may be, the saide English marchants shall be ridde and dispatched: And if any action shall be mooued by or against any of the saide Marchants being absent out of our saide empire and dominions, then such Marchants may substitute an Atturney in all and singular his causes to be followed as need shall require, and as shall seeme to him expedient.

7 Item, wee graunt and promise to the saide Marchants, and to their successours, that if the same Marchants or any of them shall bee wounded, or (which God forbid) slaine in any part or place of our Empire or dominions, then good information thereof giuen, & we and our Iustices and other officers shall execute due correction and punishment without delay, according to the exigence of the case: so that it shall bee an example to all other not to commit the like. And if it shall chauce the factors, seruants, or ministers of the saide Marchants or any of them to trespass or offende, whereby they or any of them shall incurre the danger of death or punishment, the goods, wares, marchandizes, and things of their Masters shall not therfore bee forfeited, confiscated, spoiled ne seized by any meanes by vs, our heires or successours, or by any our officers, ministers or subiects, but shall remaine to their vse, franke, free, and discharged from all punishment and losse.

8 Item, wee graunt that if any of the English nation be arrested for any debt, he shal not be laid in prison, so farre as he can put in sufficient suretie and pawne: neither shall any sergeant, or officer leade them or any of them to prison, before he shall haue knowen whether the chiefe factor or factors, or their deputies shalbe sureties, or lying in pawne for such arrested: then the officers shal release the partie, and shall set him or them at libertie.

9 Moreover, wee giue, graunt and promise to the saide Marchants, that if any of their ships or other vessels shall bee spoiled, robbed, or damaged in sayling, anchoring or returning to or from our saide Empires and Dominions, or any part thereof, by any Pirats, Marchants, or other person, whatsoeuer hee or they bee, that then and in such case, wee will doe all that in vs is to cause restitution, reparation, and satisfaction to bee duly made to the saide English marchants by our letters and otherwise, as shall stand with our honour, and be consonant to equitie and iustice.

10 Item, for vs, our heires and successours, wee doe promise and graunt to performe, maintain, corroborate, autenticate, and obserue all and singular the aforesaide liberties, franchises, and priuiledges, like as presently we firmly doe intend, and will corroborate, autentike and performe the same by all meane and way that we can, as much as may be to the commoditie and profite of the saide English Marchants, and their successours for euer.

And to the intent that all and singular the saide giftes, graunts and promises, may bee inuiolably obserued and performed, we the said Iohn Vasiluich by the grace of God Emperour of Russia, great Duke of Nouogrode, Mosco, &c. for vs, our heires and successours, by our Imperiall and lordly word in stead of an othe, haue and doe promise by these presents, inuiolably to mainteyne and obserue, and cause to be inuiolably obserued and maintained all and singular the aforesayde giftes, graunts and promises from time to time, and at all and euery time and times hereafter. And for the more corroboracion hereof haue caused our Signet herunto to be put: Dated in our Castle of Mosco the 20. day of in the peere,

The Charter of the Marchants of Russia, graunted vpon the discoverie of the saide Countrey, by King

Philip and Queene Marie.

Philip and Marie, by the grace of God King and Queene, &c. To all manner of officers, true Iurie men, ministers and subiects, and to all other people as well within this our Realme or elsewhere under our obeylance, iurisdiction, and rule, or otherwise vnto whome these our letters shall bee shewed, scene, or read, greeting.

Whereas wee be credibly informed, that our right trustie, right faithfull, and

and welbeloued Counsaillors, William Marques of Winchester Lord high Treasurer of this our Realme of England, Henrie Earle of Arundel Lord Steward of our houtholde, Iohn Earle of Bedford Lord keeper of our priuite Seale, William Earle of Pembroke, William Lord Howard of Effingham Lord high Admirall of our saide Realme of England, &c. haue at their owne aduenture, costs and charges, prouided, rigged, and tackled certaine ships, pinnesses, and other meete vessels, and the same furnished with all things necessary haue aduanced and set forward, for to discouer, descerie, and finde Isles, landes, territoriez, Dominions, and Seigniozies vnknownen, and by our subiects before this not commonly by sea frequented, which by the sufferance and grace of Almighty God, it shall chaunce them sailing Northwards, Northeastwards, and Northwestwards, or any partes thereof, in that race or course which other Christian Monarches (being with vs in league and amitie) haue not heeretofore by Seas traffiqued, haunted, or frequented, to finde and attaine by their said aduenture, as well for the glorie of God, as for the illustrating of our honour and dignitie royall, in the increase of the reuenues of our Crowne, and generall wealth of this and other our Realmes and Dominions, and of our subiects of the same: And to this intent our subiects aboue specified and named, haue most humbly beseeched vs, that our abundant grace, fauour and clemencie may be graciously extended vnto them in this behalfe: Whereupon wee inclined to the petition of the foresaide our Counsaillours, subiects and marchants, and willing to animate, aduance, further and nourish them in their said goodlie, honest, and good purpose, and, as we hope, profitable aduenture, and that they may the more willingly, and readilye achieue the same, Of our especiall grace, certaine knowledge and meere motion, haue graunted, and by these presents doe graunt, for vs, our heires and successours, vnto our said right trustie, and right faithfull, and right welbeloued Counsaillours, and the other before named persons, that they by the name of marchants aduenturers of England, for the discouery of lands, territoriez, Isles, Dominions, and Seigniozies vnknownen, and not before that late aduenture or enterpryse by sea or Nauigation, commonly frequented as aforesaid, shalbe from henceforth one bodie and perpetuall fellowship and communaltie of themselves, both in deede and in name, and them by the names of Marchants aduenturers for the discouerie of lands, territoriez, Isles & seigniozies vnknownen, and not by the seas, and Nauigations, before their saide late aduenture or enterpryse by sea or Nauigation commonly frequented, We doe incorporate, name, and declare by these presents, and that the same fellowship or communaltie from henceforth shalbe, and may haue one Gouvernour of the saide fellowship, and communaltie of Marchants aduenturers.

Sebastian Cabota
first gouernour of the Golfroute
companye.

And in consideration that one Sebastian Cabota hath bin the chiefest setter forth of this iourney or voyage, therefore we make, ordeine, and constitute him the said Sebastian to be the first and present gouernour of the same fellowship and communaltie, by these presents. To haue and enioy the said office of Gouvernour, to him the said Sebastian Cabota during his naturall life, without amouing or dimissing from the same roome.

And furthermore, we graunt vnto the same fellowship and communaltie and their successours, that they the saide fellowship and communaltie, and their successours after the decease of the saide Sebastian Cabota, shall, and may freely and lawfully in places convenient and honest, assemble themselves together, or so many of them as will or can assemble together, as well within our citie of London, or elsewhere, as it shall please them, in such sort and maner, as other twoshippfull corporations of our saide citie haue used to assemble, and there peereley name, elect and choose one Gouvernour or two, of themselves, and their liberties, and also as well peereley during the natural life of the said Sebastian Cabota now Gouvernour, as also at the election of such saide Gouvernour or gouernours before his decease, to choose, name and appoint eight and twenty of the most sayd, discreete, and honest persons of the saide fellowship, and communaltie of Marchant aduenturers, as is aboue specified, and 4. of the most expert and skilfull persons of the same 28. to be named and called Consuls, and 24. of the residue, to be named and called Assistants to the saide Gouvernour or gouernours, and Consuls for the time being, which shal remaine and stand in their authoritties for one whole yeere then next following. And if it shall fortune the saide Gouvernour, Consuls, and assistants, or any of them so to be elected, and chosen as is aforesaid, to die within the yeere after his or their election, that then and so often, it shall and may be lawfull to and for the said fellowship, and communaltie, to elect and choose of themselves other Gouvernour or gouernours, Consuls and assistants, in the place and steade of such as so shall happen to die, to serue out the same yeere.

Sir George
Barnes, William Garrar, Anthony Husie, Iohn, Such-
cor, the first 4.
Consuls.

And further we do make, ordeine, and constitute George Barnes knight and Alderman of our Citie of London, William Garrar Alderman of our saide Citie, Athonie Husie, and Iohn Suchcor, to be the first and present 4. Consuls of the said fellowship and communaltie by these presents, to haue and enioy the said offices of Consuls to them the said George Barnes, William Garrar,

Anthonic

Anthony Husie, & Iohn Suthcot, for terme of one whole yere next after y^e date of these our letters patents: And we doe likewise make, ordeine and constitute Sir Iohn Gresham knight, Sir Andrew Iudde knight, Sir Thomas White knight, Sir Iohn Yorke knight, Thomas Offley the elder, Thomas Lodge, Henry Herdson, Iohn Hopkins, William Watson, Will. Clifton, Richard Pointer, Richard Chamberlaine, William Mallorie, Thomas Pallie the elder, William Allen, Henry Becher, Geoffrey Walkenden, Richard Fowles, Rowland Heyward, George Eaton, Iohn Ellor, Iohn Sparke, Blase Sanders, & Miles Mording, to be the first and present 24. Assistants to the saide Gouvernour or gouernours, and Consuls, and to the said fellowship and communalitie by these presents, to haue and enioy the said offices of assistants to them for terme of one whole yere, next after the date of these our letters patents. And further, we for vs, our heires and successours, as much as in vs is, wil & graunt by these presents vnto the saide Gouvernour, Consuls, assistants, fellowship & company of Marchants aduenturers aforesaid, & to their successours, that the said gouernour or gouernours, 4. Consuls, & 24. assistants, that now by these patents are nominated and appointed, or that hereafter by the saide fellowship & communalitie of marchants aduenturers, or the more part of them, which shalbe then present, so from time to time to be chosen, so that there be 15, at the least wholly agreed therof, the said Gouvernour or gouernours, or one of them, and 2. of the said Consuls shalbe there, and 12. of the residue of the said number of 15. shall be of the saide assistants, and in the absence of such Gouvernour, that then 3. of the said Consuls, and 12. of the saide assistants at the least for the time being shal & may haue, vse and exercise full power and authoritie to rule and gouerne all and singular the Marchants of the said fellowship and communalitie, and to execute and doe full and speedie iustice to them, and euery of them, in all their causes, differences, variantes, controuerfies, quarrels, and complaints, within any our realmes, dominions & iurisdictiones onely moued, and to be moued touching their marchandise, traffikes, and occupiers aforesaid, or the good order or rule of them or any of them.

Also wee for vs, our heires and successours, so much as in vs is, doe likewise by these presents graunt, that the said Gouvernour, Consuls, assistants, fellowship and communalitie, and their successours shall and may haue perpetuall succession, and a common Seale which shall perpetuallie serue for the affaires and businesse of the saide fellowship and communalitie. And that they and their successours, shall and may bee for euerrable persons, and capar in the lawe, for to purchase and possesse in fee and perpetuities, and for terme of life or liues, or for terme of yeeres or otherwise, lands, tenements, rents, reuerfions, and other possessions, and hereditaments whatsoeuer they bee, by the name of the Gouvernour, Consuls, assistants, fellowship and communalitie of the Marchants aduenturers by Seas and Nauigations for the discouerie of lantes, territories, Isles, Dominions, and Seignories vnknownen, and before the saide last aduenture or enterprise by Seas not frequented, as before is specified, and by the same names shall and may lawfully alien, graunt, let and set the same or any part thereof to any person or persons able in the lawe to take and receiue the same. So that they doe not graunt nor alien the same, or any part thereof into mortmaine, without speciall licence of vs, our heires or successours, first had and obtained.

Also wee for vs, our heires and successours haue graunted, and by these presents doe graunt vnto the saide Gouvernours, Consuls, assistants, fellowship and communalitie of the saide Marchants and to their successours, that they and their successours, shall and may lawfully purchase vnto them and their successours for euer, landes, tenements and hereditaments whatsoeuer, of the cleare yeerely value of threescore sixe pounds, thirtene shillings & foure pence of lawful money of England and not above, as well of such landes, tenements and hereditaments, as bee holden or shall be holden of vs, our heires or successours, as of any other person or persons, the statutes provided against alienations into mortmaine, or any of them, or any article or clause in them or any of them contained, or any other lawe, custome, statute or prouision to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding. And that they by the name of the Gouvernour, Consuls, assistants, fellowship and communalitie of Marchants aduenturers, for the discourrie of lands territories, Isles, dominions and Seignories vnknownen by the Seas and Nauigations, and not before the said last aduenture or enterprise by Seas frequented as aforesaid, shall and may be able in the lawe to implead, and be impleaded, to answer, and to be answered, to defende, and to be defended before whatsoeuer Judge or Justice, temporall or spirituall, or other persons whatsoeuer, in whatsoeuer court, or courts, and in all actions personall, reall, and mixt, and in euery of them, and in all plaints of nouel disseison, and also in all plaints, suites, quarrels, affaires, businesse and demands whatsoeuer they bee, touching and concerning the saide fellowship and communalitie, and the affaires and businesse of the same onely, in as ample manner and forme, as any other corporation of this our Realme may doe,

Wherefore, wee for vs, our heires and successours, haue giuen and graunted, and by these presents doe giue and graunt vnto the said Gouernour, Consuls, assistants, fellowshippe, and communaltie of Marchantes aduenturers aforesaid, and to their successours, that the said Gouernour, or Gouernours, Consuls and assistants, and their successours, in maner, forme, and number afoze rehearsed, shall haue full power and authoritie from time to time hereafter, to make, ordeine, establish and erect all such statutes, actes and ordinaunces, for the gouernement, good condition, and laudable rule of the said fellowship and communaltie of Marchantes aduenturers aforesaid, as to them shall bee thought good, meete, conuenient and necessarie, and also to admit vnto the said Corporation and fellowship to be free of the same, such and as many persons, as to them shall bee thought good, meete, conuenient and necessarie. And that euery such person or persons, as shall fortune hereafter to bee admitted into the said fellowshippe, communaltie and corporation, shall from the time of his or their admittance, be free of the same. And also wee will, and by these presents graunt for vs, our heires and successours, vnto the said Gouernours, Consuls, assistants, fellowship, communaltie of Marchantes aduenturers aforesaid, and to their successours, that the Gouernour, or gouernours, Consuls and assistants of the same, in maner, forme, and number afoze rehearsed, and their successours for the time being, shall, and may haue full power and authoritie by these presents from time to time, as to them shall seeme good, to limite, set, ordeine and make, mulcts, and penalties by fines, forfeitures, & imprisonmentes, or any of them vpon any offender of the said fellowship and communaltie, for any offence touching the same fellowship and communaltie, and also that all acts and ordinaunces by them or their successours to bee made, which inue shall thinke not necessarie or preiudiciall to the said fellowship or communaltie, at all times to reuoke, breake, frustrate, annihilate, repeale and dissolue at their pleasure and libertie. And further, wee will, that if any of the said fellowship and communaltie shall be found contrarious, rebellious, or disobedient to the said Gouernour or gouernours, Consuls, and the said assistants for the time being, or to any statutes, acts or ordinaunces by them made or to be made, that then the said Gouernour or gouernours, Consuls, and the said assistants, in maner, forme, and number aboue specified, for the time being, shall and may by vertue of these presents, mulct, and punish euery such offender or offenders, as the quality of the offence requirerth, according to their good discretions.

And further, we will that none of the said offender or offenders shall decline from the power of the said Gouernour, or gouernours, Consuls and assistants, in maner, forme, and number abouesaid for the time being: so alwayes, that the said actes, statutes and ordinaunces, doe onely touch and concerne the said Gouernour or gouernours, Consuls, assistants, and the said fellowship and communaltie of our before named Marchantes aduenturers, or the men of the same fellowship and communaltie, and none other; And so alwayes, that such their acts, statutes and ordinaunces bee not against our prerogative, lawes, statutes, and customes of our realmes and Dominions, nor contrary to the seuerall duetie of any our subjects towards vs, our heires and successours, nor contrarie to any compacts, treaties or leagues, by vs or any our progenitours heretofore had or made, or hereafter by vs, our heires and successours to bee made, to or with any forreine Prince or potentate, nor also to the preiudice of the corporation of the Maior, communalities and Citizens of our Citie of London, nor to the preiudice of any person or persons, bodie politique, or corporate, or incorporate, iustly pretending, clayming, or hauing any liberties, franchises, priuiledges, rightes or preheminences, by vertue or pretext of anie graunt, gift, or Letters patents, by vs, or anie our progenitours, heretofore giuen, graunted, or made.

Wherefore, we for vs, our heires, and successours, will, and by these presents, doe graunt vnto the said Gouernours, Consuls, assistants, fellowship and communaltie of our Marchantes aforesaid, that their said Gouernour or gouernours, Consuls and assistants, and their successours for the time being, in maner, forme and number aboue rehearsed, shall haue full power and authoritie to assigne, constitute and ordaine one officer, or diuers officers as well within our aforesaid Citie of London, as also in any other place or places of this our Realme of England, or else where within our dominions, which officer or officers, wee will to be named and called by the name of Sergeant or Sergeants to the fellowship or communalty of the said marchantes, and that the said sergeant or sergeants, shall and may haue full power and authoritie by these presents, to take, leuie and gather all maner fines, forfeitures, penalties and mulcts of euery person and persons, of the said fellowship and communaltie conuict, and that shall be conuicted, vpon or for breaking of any statutes, acts, ordinaunces, to bee made by the said Gouernour or gouernours, Consuls and assistants for the time being.

And further, wee will and also graunt for vs, our heires and successours, that the said officer or officers shall haue further power and authoritie for the default of payment, or for disobedience in this behalfe (if neede be) to set hands and arrest aswell the bodie and bodies, as the goods and chattels of such offender, and offenders, & transgressors, in euery place and places not franchised. And if it shall fortune any such offender or offenders, their goods and chattels or any part thereof, to be in any citie, borough, towne incorporated, or other place franchised or priuiledged, where the said officer or officers may not lawfully intronit or intermeddle, that then the Mayor, Sherrifes, baylifes, and other head officers, or ministers, within euery such citie, borough, towne incorporated, or place or places franchised, vpon a precept to them, or any of them, to be directed from the gouernour or gouernours, Consuls and assistants of the said fellowship, in number and forme aforesaid, vnder the common seale of the sayd fellowship and communitie for the time being, shall and may attach & arrest the body or bodies of such offender or offenders, as also take, and seise the goods and chattels of all and euery such offender or offenders, being within any such place or places franchised, and the same body and bodies, goods and chattels of all and euery such offender and offenders, being within any such place or places franchised, and euery part thereof so attached and seized, shall according to the tenor and purport of the sayd precept, retorne, and deliuer vnto the sayd officer or officers of the aforesaid fellowship, and communitie.

And further, we will and grant for vs, our heires and successours by these presents, that all, and euery such Mayor, Sherrife, baylife, or other head officers or ministers of any citie, borough, towne incorporated, or other places franchised, shall not be impeached, molested, vexed or sued in any our court or courts, for executing or putting in execution of any of the said precept or precepts.

And furthermore, we of our ample and abundant grace, mere motion, & certaine knowledge, for vs, our heires, and successours, as much as in vs is, haue giuen and granted, and by these presents doe giue and grant vnto the sayd gouernour, Consuls, assistants, fellowship, and communitie of Marchants aduenturers, and to their successours, and to the Factor and Factors, assigne and assignes of euery of them, full and free authoritie, libertie, facultie and licence, and power to saile to all portes, regions, dominions, territories, landes, Isles, Islands, and coastes of the sea, wheresoever before their late aduenture or enterprise vnknewen, or by our Marchants and subiects by the seas not heretofore commonly frequented, vnder our banner, stander, flags and ensignes, with their shippe, ships, barke, pinnelles, and all other vessels of whatsoeuer portage, bulke, quantitie or qualitie they may be, and with any Mariners, and men as they will leade with them in such shippe or shippes, or other vessels at their owne and proper costs and expences, for to traffique, descrie, discover and finde, whatsoeuer Isle, Islands, countreys, regions, prouinces, creekes, armes of the sea, riuers & streames, as wel of Gentiles, as of any other Emperour, king, prince, gouernour or Lord whatsoeuer he or they shalbe, and in whatsoeuer part of the world they be situated, being before the sayd late aduenture or enterprise vnknewen, and by our Marchants and subiects not commonly frequented: and to enter and land in the same, without any manner of denying, paine, penaltie or forfeiture to be had or taken by anie our lawes, customes or statutes to our vse, or to the vse of our heires or successours for the same.

And we haue also granted, and by these presents, for vs, our heires and successours, doe graunt vnto the sayd Gouernours, Consuls, assistants, fellowship and communitie, and to their successours, and to their Factors and assignes, and to euery of them, licence for to reare, plant, erect, and fasten our banners, standards, flags, and Ensignes, in whatsoeuer citie, towne, village, castle, Isle, or maine lande, which shall be by them newly found, without any the penalties, forfeitures, or dangers aforesayde, and that the sayd fellowship and communitie, and their successours, Factors & assignes and euery of them shall and may subdue, possesse and occupie, all manner cities, townes, Isles, and maine lands of infidelitie, which is or shall be by them, or any of them newly founde or descried, as our vassals and subiects, and for to acquire and get the Dominion, title, and iurisdiction of the same Cities, Townes, Castles, Villages, Isles, and maine landes, which shall bee by them, or any of them newly discovered or found vnto vs, our heires and successours for ever.

And furthermore, whereas by the voyage of our subiects in this last yeere attempted by Nauigation, towards the discoverie and disclosure of vnknewen places, Realmes, Islandes, and Dominions by the seas not frequented, it hath pleased Almighty God to cause one of the three shippes by them set forth for the voyage, and purpose aboue mentioned, named the Edward Bonauenture, to arrive, abide, and winter within the Empire and dominions of the high and mightie Prince our cousin and brother, Lord Iohn Basiluich Emperour of all Russia, Volodomer, great duke of Moscouie, &c. Who, of his clemencie, for our loue and zeale, did not onely admitte the Captaine, and marchants our subiects into his protection, and Princely presence, but also receiued and intertained them very graciously, and honourably, granting granting unto them by his letters addrested unto vs, franke access into all his Seigniozies and dominions, with licence freely to traffique in and out with all his Subiects in all kinde of Marchandise, with diuers other gracios priuiledges, liberties and immunities specified in his sayde letters vnder his Signer: Know pee therefore that wee of our further royall fauour and munificence, of our meere motion, certaine knowledge, and speciall grace, for vs our heires and successours, haue giuen and granted, and by these presents doe giue and grant vnto the same Gouvernours, Consuls, assistants, fellowship, and comunalty about named, and to their successours, as much as in vs is, that all the mayne landes, Isles, portes, hauens, creekes, and riuers of the said mighty Emperour of all Russia, and great duke of Mosco, &c. And all and singular other lands, dominions, territoriez, Isles, portes, hauens, creekes, riuers, armes of the sea, of al and euery other Emperoz, king, prince, ruler and gouernoz, whatsoeuer he or they before the said late aduenture or enterpryse not knownen, or by our fore sayd marchants and subiects by the seas, not commonly frequented, nor by any part nor parcell thereof lying Northwards, North-eastwards, or North-westwards, as is aforesayd, by sea shall not be visited, frequented nor hanted by any our subiects, other then of the sayd company and felowship, and their successours without expresse licence, agreement and consent of the Gouvernour, Consuls, and Assistants of the said felowship and communalte about named, or the more part of them, in manner and number aforesayd, for the time being, vpon paine of forfeiture, and losse, as well of the shippe and shippes, with the appurtenances, as also of all the goods, marchandises, and things whatsoever they be, of those our subiects, not being of the sayd felowship and communalty, which shall attempt or presume to faile to any of those places, which bee, or hereafter shall heppen to bee found, and trafficked vnto: the one halfe of the same forfeiture to be to the vse of vs, our heires and successours, and the other halfe to be to the vse of the sayd felowship and communalte. And if it shall fortune anie stranger or strangers, for to attempt to hurt, hinder, or endamage the same marchants, their factors, deputies or assignes, or any of them in sailing, going or returning at any time in the sayd aduenture, or for to faile or trade to or from any those places, landes or coastes, which by the sayd marchants, their factors, deputies and assignes haue bene, or shall bee descried, discouered and found, or frequented, as well within the coastes and limites of gentility, as within the dominions and Seigniozies of the sayd mighty Emperour and Duke, and of all and euery other Emperour, King, Prince, Ruler and gouernour whatsoever he or they be, before the sayd late aduenture or enterpryse not knownen by any our said marchants and subiects, by the seas not commonly frequented, and lying Northwards, North-westwards or North-eastwards as aforesaid, then wee will and grane, and by these presents doe licence, and authoize for vs, our heires and successours, the said marchants, their factors, deputies, and assignes, and euery of them to doe their best in their defence, to resist the same their enterpryses and attempts. Willing therefore, and straightly commanding and charging al and singular our Officers, Maiors, Sherifes, Escheatores, Constables, Bailifes, and all and singular other our ministers and liege men, and subiects whatsoever, to be aiding, fauouring, helping & assisting vnto the sayd gouernour or gouernours, Consuls, assistants, fellowship and communalty, and to their successours and deputies, factors, seruants, and assignes, and to the deputies, factors and assignes of euery of them, in executing and enioying the premises, as well on land as in the sea, from time to time, and at all times when you or any of you shall be therunto required. Certaine instructions deliuered in the third voyage, Anno 1556.

for Russia, to euery Purser and the rest of the seruants, taken for the voyage, which may serue as good and necessary directions, to all other like aduenturers.

First you shall before the ship doth begin to lade, goe aboard, and shall there take, and write one inuentorie, by the aduise of the Master, or of some other principall officer there aboard, of all the tackle, apparell, cables, ankers, ordnance, chambers, shot, powder, artillerie, and of all other necessities whatsoever doth belong to the sayd ship: and the same iustly taken, you shall write in a booke, making the sayd Master, or such officer priuie of that which you haue so written, so that the same may not be denied, when they shall call account thereof: that done, you shall write a copie of the same with your owne hand, which you shall deliuer before the shippe

Shippe shall depart, for the voyage to the companies booke keeper here to be kept to their behalfe, to the ende that they may be iustly answered the same, when time shall require: and this order to be seene and kept euery voyage orderly, by the Purfers of the companies owne ship, in any wise.

2 Also when the shippe beginneth to lade, you shall be ready a boord with your booke, to enter such goods as shall be brought aboord, to be laden for the company, packed, or vnpacked, taking the markes and numbers of euery packe, fardell, trusse, or packer, cozonoga, chest, fatte, butte, pipe, puncheon, whole barrell, halfe barrell, firken, or other cask, maunde, or basket, or any other thing, which may, or shall be packed by any other manner of wates or deuise. And first, all such packes, or trusses, &c. as shall be brought aboord to be laden, not marked by the companies marke, you shall doe the best to let that the same be not laden, and to enquire diligently to know the owners thereof, if you can, and what commoditie the same is, that is so brought aboord to be laden: if you can not know the owners of such goods, learne what you can thereof, as well making a note in your booke, as also to send or bring word thereof to the Agent, and to some one of the foure Merchants with him adioined to speedily as you can, if it be here laden or to be laden in this riuer, being not marked with the companies marke, as is aforesaid: and when the sayd shippe hath received in all that the companies Agent will haue laden, you shall make a iust copie of that which is laden, reciting the parcels, the markes and numbers of euery thing plainly, which you shall likewise deliuer to the sayd bookekeeper to the vse aforesaid.

3 Also when the ship is ready to depart, you shall come for your cockets and letters to the Agent, and shall shew him all such letters as you haue receiued of any person or persons priuately or openly, to be deliuered to any person or persons in Russia or elsewhere, and also to declare if you know any other that shall passe in the ship either master or mariner that hath receiued any letters to be priuily deliuered to any there, directed fro any person or persons, other then from the Agent here to the Agent there: which letters so by you receiued, you shall not carie with you, without you be licenced so to doe by the Agent here, and some of the foure merchants, as is aforesaid: and such others as do passe, hauing receiued any priuie letters to be deliuered, you shall all that in you lieth, let the deliuerie of them at your arriuing in Russia: and also if you haue or do receiue, or shall know any other that doth or hath receiued any goods or ready money to be employed in Russia, or to be deliuered there to any person or persons from any person or persons, other then such as bee the companies goods, and that vnder their marke, you shall before the ship doeth depart, declare the same truly to the sayd Agent, and to some of the other merchants to him adioyned, as it is before declared.

4 Also when the shippe is ready to depart, and hath the master and the whole company aboord, you shall diligently foresee and take heede, that there passe not any priuie person or persons, other then such as be authorized to passe in the said ship, without the licence and warrant of one of the Gouernours and of the assistants, for the same his passage, to be first shewed. And if there be any such person or persons that is to passe and will passe without shewing the same warrant, you shall let the passage of any such to the uttermost of your power: And for that there may no such priuie person passe vnder the cloke and colour of some mariner, you shall vpon the weying of your ships anker, call the master and the mariners within boord by their names and that by your bookes, to the ende that you may see that you haue neither more nor lesse, but iust the number for the voyage.

5 Also you must haue in remembzance, that if it shall chauce the shippe to bee put into anie harbour in this coast by contrary windes or otherwise in making the voyage, to send word thereof from time to time as the case shall require, by your letters in this maner. To master I. B. Agent for the company of the New trades in S. in London: If you doe hier any to bring your letters, write that which he must haue for the portage. And for your better knowledge and learning, you shall do very well to keepe a dayly note of the voyage both outwards and homewards.

6 And principally see that you forget not dayly in all the voiage both morning and euening, to call the company within boord to prayer, in which doing you shall please God, and the voiage will haue the better successe thereby, and the company prosper the better.

7 Also in calme weather and at other times when you shall fortune to come to anker in the seas during the voyage, you shall for the companies profite, and for the good husbanding of the victuals aboord, call vpon the Boateswaine and other of the company to vse such hookes and other engines as they haue aboord to take fish with, that such fish so taken may bee eaten for the cause aforesaid: and if there bee no such engines aboord, then to provide some before you goe from hence.

8 And when God shall send you in safetie into the Bay of S. Nicholas at an anker, you shall goe a shore with the first boate that shall depart from the ship, taking with you such letters as you haue haue to deliuer to the Agent there : and if he be not there at your comming a land , then send the companies letters to Colmogro to him by some sure mariner or other wise, as the master and you shall thinke best , but goe not your selfe at any hand, nor yet from aboord the ship , vntlesse it bee a shoue to treate with the Agent for the lading of the ship that you be appointed in, which you shall applye diligently to haue done so speedily as may be. And for the discharging of the goods therein in the Bay , to be carried from thence, see that you doe looke well to the vnlading thereof, that there be none other goods sent a shoue then the companies , and according to the notes entered in your booke as is aforesaid : if there be, inquire diligently for whom they bee, and what goods they be, noting who is the receiuer of the sayd goods, in such sort that the company may haue the true knowledge thereof at your comming home.

9 Also there a shoue, and likewise aboord, you shall spie and search as secretly as you may, to learne and know what bargaining, buying and selling there is with the master and the mariners of the shippe and the Russes, or with the companies seruants there : and that which you shall perceiue and learne , you shall keepe a note thereof in your booke secretly to your selfe , which you shall open and disclose at your comming home to the gouernours and assistants , in such sort as the truth of their secret trades and occuppings may be reuealed and knownen. You shall need alwayes to haue Argos eyes, to spie their secret packing and conueance, as well on land as aboord the shippe , of and for such furrer and other commodities, as yeerely they doe vse to buy, packe and conuey hither. If you will bee vigilant and secrete in this article, you cannot misse to spie their priuie packing one with another, either on shoue or aboord the shippe : worke herein wisely, and you shall deserue great thanks of the whole company.

10 Also at the lading againe of the shippe, you shall continue and abide aboord, to the ende that you may note and write in your booke all such goods and marchandises as shall be brought and laden, which you shall orderly note in all sort as heretofore, as in the second article partly it is touched : and in any wise put the Master and the company in remembrance, to looke and see whether substantially to the roomaging of the shippe, by faire means or threats, as you shall see and thinke will serue for the best.

11 Thus when the shippe is full laden againe, and all things aboord in good order, and that you doe fortune to goe a shoue to the Agent for your letters, and dispatch away : you shall demand whether all the goods be laden that were brought thither, and to know the truely thereof, you shall repaire to the companies storehouse there at S. Nicholas, to see if there be any goods left in the sayd storehouse : if there be, you shall demand why they be not laden, and note what kinde of goods they be that be so left : and seeing any of the shippes there not fully laden, you shall put the Agent in remembrance to lade those goods so left, if any such be to be laden, as is aforesaid. And thus God sending you a faire wind, to make speede and away.

12 Finally, when God shall send you to arrive againe vpon this coast in safetie, either at Harewich, or else where, goe not you aland, if you may possible, to the ende that when you be gone a shoue, there may no goods be sent priuily a shoue to be solde, or else to be solde aboord the ship in your absence, but keepe you still aboord, if you can by any means, for the causes aforesaid, and write the company a letter from the shippe of your good arriual, which you may conuey to them by land by some boy or mariner of the shippe, or otherwise as you shall thinke best : and likewise when God shall send you and the shippe into the riuer here, doe not in any wise depart out of the shippe that you be in, until the company doe send some other aboord the shippe, in your steede and place, to keepe the shippe in your absence.

The Nauigation and discouerie toward the riuer of Ob, made by Master Steuen Burrough, Master of the Pinnesse called the Serch-thrift, with diuers things worth the noting, passed in the yere 1556.

April 23.

Departed from Ratcliffe to Blackewall the 23 of April. Saturday being S. Markes day, we departed from Blackewall to Grays.

The 27 being Sunday, the right Worthyfull Sebastian Cabota came aboord our Pinnesse at Grauesende, accompanied with diuers Gentlemen, and Gentlewomen, who after that they had vie wred our Pinnesse, and talked of such chere as we could make them aboord, they went on shoue, giuing to our mariners right liberrall rewards : and the good olde Gentleman Master Cabota gaue to the poore most liberrall almes, wishing them to pray for the good fortune, and prosperous successe of the Serchthrift, our Pinnesse. And then at the signe of the Christopher, hee and his friends banqueted, and made me, and them that were in the company great chere : and for very ioy that he had to see the towardnes of our intended discouery, he entred into the dance himselfe, amongst the rest of the young and lusty company: which being ended, hee and his friends departed most gently, commending vs to the gouernance of almighty God.

Tuesday we rode till at Grauesend, making prouision for such things as we wanted.

28

Wednesday in the morning we departed from Grauesende, the winde being at South-west, that night we came to an anchor thwart our Lady of Hollands.

29

Thursday at three of the clocke in the morning we wyped, and by eight of the clocke, we were at an anchor in Orwell twannes, and then incontinent I went aboard the Edward Bonauenture, where the worshipfull company of marchants appointed me to be, vntill the sayd good ship arrived at Wardhouse. Then I returned againe into the pinnesse.

30

Friday the 15 of May we were within 7 leagues of the shoze, on the coast of Norway: the latitude at a South sunne, 58 degrees and a halfe, where we saw three sailles, beside our owne company: and thus we followed the shoze of land, which lieth North-north-west, North and by West, and North-west and by North, as it doth appeare by the plat.

Note
May 15.

Saturday at an East sunne we came to S. Dunstons Island, which Island I so named. It was off vs East two leagues and a halfe, the wind being at Southeast: the latitude this day at a South sunne 59 degrees, 42 minutes. Also the high round mountaine bare East of vs, at a South sunne: and when this hill is East of you, and being bound to the Northward, the land lyeth North and halfe a point West, from this sayd South sunne, vnto a North sunne twenty leagues North-west alongst the shoze.

Upon Sunday at six of the clocke in the morning, the farthest land that we could see that lay North-north-west, was East of vs three leagues, and then it trended to the Northwards, and to the Eastwards of the North, which headland I iudged to be Scoutnesse. At seuen of the clocke we changed our course and went North, the wind being at South-southeast, and it waied very thicke and mistie, and when it cleered, we went North-northeast. At a South sunne we lost sight of the Serchehrife, because of the mist, making our way North. And when we lost sight of the shoze and pinnesse, we were within two leagues & a halfe of the shoze: the last land that we saw when this mist came vpon vs, which is to the Northwards of Scoutnesse, lay North-northeast, and South-south-west, and we made our way North vntill a west sunne five leagues.

17

From that vntill Monday three a clocke in the morning ten leagues North-northeast: and then we went North and by East, because the winde came at the West-south-west with thicke mist: the latitude this day at a South sunne sixtie three degrees and a halfe truly taken: at this season we had sight of our Pinnesse againe.

18

From that vntill Tuesday a South sunne North-northeast fortye foure leagues, and then North-east. From a South sunne vntill eight of the clocke, fiftene leagues North-east.

19

From that vntill Wednesday a South sunne North-northeast, except the first watch North-east: then had we the latitude in sixtie seuen degrees, thirtie nine minutes. From that vnto a North-west sunne eighteen leagues North-east, & then we were within two leagues off the shoze, and saw the high land to the Southwards of Lowfoote breake out through the mist, and then we went North and by east.

20

From the sayd North-west sunne vntill foure of the clocke in the morning North and by East ten leagues and a halfe: and then North-northeast vntill a South sunne, the latitude being sixtie nine degrees, and a halfe. From that vntill halfe an houre past seuen of the clocke, North-northeast eleuen leagues and a halfe, and then we went North-east ten leagues. From that 3 leagues and a halfe East-northeast, and then we sawe the land through the cloudes and hazie thwart on the broad side of vs the winde being then at South-south-west.

From that vntill Saturday, at eight of the clocke in the morning East-northeast, and to the Northwards fortye eight leagues, and then the wind came vp at North, we being aboard the shoze, and thwart of the Chappel, which I suppose is called Kedilwike: then we cast the shippes head to the seawards, because the winde was verie scant: and then I caused the Pinnesse to heare in with the shoze, to see whether she might find an harbourough for the ships or not, and that she found and saw two roaders ride in the sound: and also they sawe houses. But notwithstanding, God be prayed, the winde enlarged vpon vs, that we had not occasion to goe into the harbourough: and then the Pinnesse bare her Hyslen mast our boord with flagge and all, and lost the flagge: with the mast there fell two men ouer boord, but God be praised, they were saued: the flagge was a token, whereby we might vnderstand whether there were a good harbour there or not.

23

Kedilwike chappell.

At a North sunne the North cape (which I so named the first voyage) was thwart of vs, which is nine leagues to the Eastwards of the foresayd Chappel from the Eastermost point of it.

The North cape so named by Steuens Burrowe.

June

Iune.

7 The Sunday we towed in Corpus Christi Bay, at a North-east and by East sunne: the Bay is almost halfe a league deepe: the headland which is Corpus Christi point, lyeth Southeast and by East, one league from the head of the Bay, where we had a great tyde, like a race over the flood: the Bay is at the least two leagues over: so doe I imagine from the sayre foze land to Corpus Christi point ten leagues Southeast and by East: It floweth in this Bay, at a South and by West moone full sea. From that we went untill seuen a clocke at after noone twentie leagues Southeast and by South: and then we tooke in all our sailes, because it was then very mistie, and also we met with much ice that ran out of the Bay, and then wee went South-south-east with our foze saile: at eight of the clocke, we heard a piece of ordnance, which was out of the Edward, which bade vs farewell, and then we shot off another piece, and bade her farewell: we could not one see the other, because of the thicke miste: at a North-west sunne it began somewhat to cleere, and then we sawe a head lande, and the shoare trended to the South-westward, which I iudged to be about Crosse Island: it was off vs at a North-north-west sunne, West-south-west.

8 From this North-north-west sunne, untill Sunday, we went Southeast, and this morning we came at anker among the shoales that lie off of point Looke out, at a North-east and by East sunne, the wind being at East-south-east. At this point Looke out, a south Moone maketh a full sea. Cape good fortune lyeth from the Isle of Crosse Southeast, and betweene them is tenne leagues: point Looke out lieth from Cape Good fortune East-south-east, and betweene them are sixe leagues. S. Edmonds point lieth from point Looke out East-south-east, and halfe a point to the Southwards, and betweene them are sixe leagues. There is betweene these two points, a Bay that is halfe a league deepe, and is full of shoales and dangers. At a Southeast sunne we weyed, and turned to the windwards, the winde being at East-south-east: and at a Southeast sunne, we came to an anker, being then a full sea, in five fadoms and a halfe water. It bieth at this place where we roade, and also at point Looke out, foure fadome water. At a West-north-west sunne we weyed, and dyued to the windwards, untill Tuesday, a North-north-east sunne, and then being a high water, we came to an anker open of the riuer Cola, in eight fadome water. Cape S. Bernard lyeth from S. Edmonds point, Southeast and by South, and betwixt them are sixe leagues, and also betwixt them is the Riuer Cola, into which Riuer wee went this evening.

10 Wednesday we roade still in the sayd riuer, the winde being at the north: we sent our skiffe a land to be dressed: the latitude of the mouth of the riuer Cola is sixtie five degrees, fortye and eight minutes.

11 Thursday at 6 of the clocke in the morning, there came aboard of vs one of the Russe Lodias, rowing with twentie oares, and there were foure and twenty men in her. The master of the boate presented me with a great loafe of bread, and sixe ringes of bread, which they call Colatches, and foure dyed pikes, and a pecke of fine ottemeale, and I gaue unto the Master of the boate, a combe, and a small glasse: and he declared unto me, that he was bound to Pechora, and after that, I made them to drinke, the tide being somewhat broken, they gently departed. The Masters name was Pheodor.

Whereas the tenth day I sent our Pinnesse on shoare to be mended, because she was leake, and weake, with the Carpenter and three men more to helpe him, the weather chanced so, that it was Sunday before they could get aboard our shippe. All that time they were without provision of victuals, but onely a litle bread, which they spent by Thursday at night, thinking to haue come aboard when they had lifted, but winde and weather denied them: insomuch that they were faine to eate grasse, and such weedes as they could finde then about grounde, but fresh water they had plentie, but the meate with some of them could scant frame by reason of their queazie stomackes.

14 From Thursday at afternoone, untill Sunday in the morning, our barke did ride such a road that it was to be marvelled, without the helpe of God, how she was able to abide it.

In the bight of the Southeast shoare of the riuer Cola, there is a good roade in five fadome, or foure fadome and a halfe, at a lowe water: but you shall haue no land North-north-east of you then. I proued with our pinnesse, that the depth goeth on the Southeast shoare.

18 Thursday we weyed our ankers in the Riuer Cola, and went into the Sea seuen or eight leagues, where we met with the winde farre Northerly, that of force it constrained vs to goe againe backe into the sayd riuer, where came aboard of vs sunery of their Boates, which declared red unto me that they were also bound to the northwards, a fishing for Horse, and Salmon, and gave me liberally of their white and wheaten bread.

As we rode in this river, wee sawe daily comming downe the river many of their Lodias, and they that had least, had foure and twenty men in them, and at the last they grew to thirtie saile of them: and amongst the rest, there was one of them whose name was Gabriel, who shewed me very much friendship, and he declared unto mee, that all they were bound to Pechora, a fishing for Salmon, and Horses: inso much that hee shewed mee by demonstrations, that with a faire winde wee had seven or eight dayes sailing to the River Pechora, so that I was glad of their company. This Gabriel promised to give mee warning of shoales, as hee did indeede.

From Cola to Pechora is but 7 or 8 dayes sailing.

Sunday being the one and twentieth day, Gabriel gave me a barrell of Peade, and one of his speciall friends gave me a barrell of beere, which was carped vpon mens backs at least 2 miles.

21

Monday we departed from the river Cola, with all the rest of the said Lodias, but sailing before the wind, they were all too good for vs: but according to promise, this Gabriel and his friend did often strike their sayles, and taried for vs forsaking their owne company.

22

of one Gabriel.

Tuesday at an Eastnortheast burre we were thwart of Cape S. Iohn. It is to be understood, that from the Cape S. Iohn unto the river or bay that goeth to Mezen, it is all sunke land, and full of shoales and dangers, you shall haue scant two sadome water, and see no land. And this present day wee came to an anker thwart of a creeke, which is 4 or 5 leagues to the Northwards of the said Cape, into which creeke Gabriel and his fellow rowed, but we could not get in: and before night there were about 20 saile that went into the said creeke, the wind being at the North-east. We had indifferent good landfang.

23

cellar note.

This afternoone Gabriel came aboard with his skiffe, and then I rewarded him for the good company that he kept with vs ouer the shoales with two small iuoy combes, and a Steele glasse, with two or three trifles more, for which he was not ungratefull. But notwithstanding, his first company had gotten further to the Northwards.

Wednesday being Midsummer day, we sent our skiffe a land to sound the creeke, where they found it almost drye at a low water. And all the Lodias within were on ground.

Although the harborough were euil, yet the stormie similitude of Northerly winds tempted vs to set our sayles, & we let slip a cable and an anker, and bare with the harborough, for it was then neere a high water: and as alwaies in such iourneys varieties do chance, when we came vpon the barre in the entrance of the creeke, the wind did shrink so suddenly vpon vs, that we were not able to lead it in, and before we could haue flatted the shippe before the winde, we should haue bene on ground on the lee shore, so that we were constrained to let fall an anker vnder our sayles, and rode in a very beach, thinking to haue warpt in. Gabriel came out with his skiffe, and so did sundry others also, shewing their good will to helpe vs, but all to no purpose, for they were likely to haue bene drowned for their labour, in so much that I desired Gabriel to lend me his anker, because our owne ankers were too big for our skiffe to lay out, who sent me his owne, and borrowed another also and sent it vs. Then we layd out one of those ankers, with a hawser which he had of 140 fadom long, thinking to haue warpt in, but it would not be: for as we shorted vpon y^e said warpe the anker came home, so that we were faine to heare the end of the warpe, that we rushed in vpon the other small anker that Gabriel sent aboard, and layd that anker to seawards: and then betwene these two ankers we trauesed the ships head to seawards, and set our foresaile and maine saile, and when the barke had way, we cut the hawser, and so gate the sea to our friend, and tryed out at that day with our maine cosle.

The Thursday we went roome with Cape S. Iohn, where we found indifferent good rode for a Northnortheast wind, and for a neede, for a North and by West wind.

Friday at afternoone we weyed, and departed from thence, the wether being meetly faire, & the winde at Eastsoutheast, and plied for the place where we left our cable and anker, and our hawser: & as soone as we were at an anker, the foresaid Gabriel came aboard of vs, with 3 or foure more of their small boats, and brought with them of their Aquauice & Peade, professing unto me very much friendship, and reioiced to see vs againe, declaring that they earnestly thought that we had bene lost. This Gabriel declared unto me, that they had saued both the ankers and our hawser, and after we had thus communed, I caused 4 or 5 of them to goe into my cabin, where I gaue them figs, and made them such cheere as I coule. While I was thus banketing of the, there came another of their skiffes aboard with one who was a Keril, whose name afterwards I learned, & that he dwelt in Colmogro, & Gabriel dwelled in the towne of Cola, which is not far from the rivers mouth. This foresaid Keril said unto me that one of the ankers which I borrowed was his, I gaue him thanks for the lone of it, thinking it had bene sufficient. And as I continued in one accustomed maner, that if the present which they brought were worth entertainment, they had it accordingly, he brought nothing with him, & therfore I regarded him but little. And thus we ended, & they took their leave and went ashore. At their coming ashore, Gabriel and Keril were at vneconuenient words, and by the eares, as I vnderstand: the cause was because the one had better entertainment then the other: but you that vnderstand that Gabriel was not able to make his party good, because there were 17 lobias of the Kerils company who tooke his part, and but 2 of Gabriels company,

26

Twentie eight lobias belonging to Cola.

The next high water Gabriel and his company departed from thence, and rowed to their former company and neighbours, which were in number 28 at the least, and all of them belonging to the riuer Cola.

27

And as I vnderstood Keril made reckoning that the hawser which was fast in his anker should haue bene his owne, and at first would not deliuer it to our boat, insomuch that I sent him word that I would complaine vpon him, whereupon he deliuered the hawser to my company.

The next day being Saturday, I sent our boat on shore to fetch fresh water and wood, and at their coming on shore this Keril welcomed our men most gently, and also banketed them: and in the meane time caused some of his men to fill our baricoes with water, and to help our men to beare wood into their boat: and then he put on his best silke coate, and his collar of pearles, and came aboard againe, & brought his present with him: and thus hauing more respect vnto his present then to his person, because I perceiued him to be vainglorious, I bade him welcome, and gaue him a dish of figs: and then he declared vnto me that his father was a gentleman, and that he was able to shew me pleasure, and not Gabriel, who was but a priests sonne.

After their departure from vs we weied, and plyed all the ebbe to the windwards, the winde being Northerly, & towards night it waied very stormie, so that of force we were constrained to go roome with Cape S. Iohn againe, in which storme wee lost our skiffe at our sterne, that wee bought at Wardhouse, and there we rode vntil the fourth of Iuly. The latitude of Cape S. Iohn is 66 degrees 50 minutes. And it is to be noted, that the land of Cape S. Iohn is of height from the full sea marke, as I iudge, 10 fadomes, being cleane without any trees growing, & also without stones or rockes, and consists onely of blacke earth, which is so rotten, that if any of it fall into the sea, it will swimme as though it were a piece of wood. In which place, about three leagues from the shore you shall not haue about 9 fadom water, and clay ground.

Saturday at a Northnorthwest sunne the wind came at Eastnortheast, & then we weied, and plied to the Northwards, and as we were two leagues shot past the Cape, we saw a house standing in a valley, which is dainty to be scene in those parts, and by and by I saw three men on the top of the hill. Then I iudged them, as it after wards proued, that they were men which came from some other place to set traps to take vermin for their furs, which trappes we did perceiue very thicke alongst the shore as we went.

5

Sunday at an East sunne we were thwart off the creeke where the Russes lay, and there came to an anker, and perceiuing the most part of the Lobias to be gone we thought it not good to tary any longer there, but weyed and spent all the ebbe, plying to the windwards.

6

Monday at a South sunne it was high water. All alongst the coast it floweth little, onely a South moone makes a full sea: and as we were a weying we espied the Russe Lobias, which we first lost. They came out of a creeke amongst the sandy hills, which hills beginne 15 leagues Northnortheast from Cape S. Iohn.

7

Plying this ebbe to an end, we came to an anker 6 leagues Northnortheast from the place where we saw the Russes come out: and there the Russes harboured themselves within a soonke banke, but there was not water enough for vs.

The latitude
68 degrees and a halfe.

At a North sunne we weyed and plied to the Northwards, the land lying Northnortheast, and Southsouthwest, vntill a South sunne, and then we were in the latitude of 68 degrees & a halfe: and in this latitude ende those sandy hills, and the land beginneth to lie North and by West, South and by East, and Northnorthwest, and to the Westwards, and there the water beginneth to ware deepe.

8

At a Northwest sunne we came to an anker within halfe a league of the shore, where we had good plenty of fish, both Haddockes and Codds, riding in 10 fadom water.

Tuesday we weyed, and plyed neerer the headland, which is called Caninoz, the wind being at East and by North.

Thursday the wind being scant we turned to windwards the ebbe, to get about Caninoz: the latitude this day at noone was 68 degree 40 minutes.

Friday

Friday we turned to the windward of the ebbe, but to no purpose: and as we rode at an anchor, we saw the similitude of a shoare rising at Northnorthwest, & could not tell where to get rode nor succor for that winde, and harborough we knew none: & that land which we rode vnder with that winde was a lee shoare. And as I was musing what was best to be done, I saw a saile come out of a creeke vnder the foze sayd Caninoz, which was my friend Gabriel, who forsooke his harborough and company, and came as neere vs as he might, and pointed vs to the Eastwards, & then we weyed and followed him, and went East and by South, the wind being at Westnorthwest, and very mistie.

10

Saturday we went Eastsoutheast & followed Gabriel, and he brought vs into an harborough called Morgiouets, which is 30 leagues from Caninoz, & we had vpon the barre going in two fadome and a fourth part: and after we were past in ouer the barre, it wared deeper, for we had 5 fadoms, 4 and a half, and 3 fadom &c. Our barke being mozed, I sent some of our men to shoare to provide wood, where the p had plenty of drift wood, but none growing: and in this place we found plenty of young foule, as Gulls, Seapies, and others, whereof the Russes would eate none, whereof we were nothing sorry, for there came the moze to our part.

11
Morgiouets an

Drift wood.

Sunday our men cut wood on shoare, and brought it aboard, and we ballasted our shippe with stones.

12

This morning Gabriel saw a smoke on y way, who rowed vnto it with his skiffe, which smoke was two leagues from the place where we rood: and at a Northwest sunne he came aboard again, and brought with him a Samord, which was but a young man: his apparell was then strange vnto vs, and he presented me with thre young wild geese, and one young barnacle.

13
A Samord.

Monday I sent a man to the maine in Gabriels boat, and he brought vs aboard 8 barricoes of fresh water: the latitude of the said Morgiouets is sixtie eight degrees and a terce. It floweth there at a Southsouthwest moone full sea, and hyleth two fadome and a halfe water.

13

At a Westnorthwest sunne we departed from this place, and went East 25 leagues, and then saw an Island North and by West of vs eight leagues, which Island is called Dolgoieue: and from the Eastermost part of this Island, there lyeth a land East and by South 7 leagues long.

14 Dolgoieue an Island.

Tuesday at a North and by East sunne Swerinoz was South of vs 5 leagues. This day at afternoone we went in ouer the dangerous barre of Pechora, and had vpon the barre but one fadome water.

15
Pechora.

Thursday we rood still.

16

Friday I went on shoare and obserued the variation of the Compasse, which was three degrees and a halfe from the North to the West: the latitude this day was sixtie nine degrees ten minutes.

17
The variation
of the Compas

From two or three leagues to the Eastward of Swerinoz, vntill the entering of the riuer Pechora, it is all sandy hilles, and towards Pechora the sandie hilles are very low.

It higheth on the barre of Pechora foure foote water, & it floweth there at a Southwest moone a full sea.

Sunday at a North & by East sunne, we weyed, and came out ouer the sayd dangerous barre, where wee had but siue foote water, insomuch that wee found a foote lesse water coming out then wee did going in. I thinke the reason was, because when we went in the winde was off the sea, which caused the sands to breake on either side of vs, and wee kept in the smoothest betweene the beaches, which we durst not haue done, except we had seene the Russes to haue gone in before vs: and at our coming out the winde was off the shoare, and fayre weather, and then the sands did not appeare with beaches as at our going in: we thanke God that our ship did draw so little water.

When we were a lea beyond the barre the wind scanted vpon vs, and was at Eastsoutheast, insomuch that we stopped the ebbs, and plyed all the floods to the windewards, and made our way Eastnortheast.

Tuesday at a Northwest sunne we thought that we had seen land at East, or East & by North of vs: which afterwards proved to be a monstrous heape of ice.

Within a little moze then halfe an houre after, we first saw this ice, we were inclosed within it before we were aware of it, which was a fearefull sight to see: for, for the space of siue houres, it was as much as we could doe to keepe our shippe aloofe from one heape of ice, and beare roomer from another, with as much wind as we might beare a coarce. And when we had past from the danger of this ice, we lay to the Eastwards close by the wind.

Ice.

The next day we were againe troubled with the ice.

22

Thursday being calme, we plyed to the windwards, the winde being Northerly. We had the latitude this day at noone in 70 degrees 11 minutes.

23

The lat. 70 degrees 11 min.

We had not runne past two houres North-west, the wind being at North-north-east and North-east and by North a good gale, but we met againe with another heape of ice: we westered the head of it, and lay a time to the seawards, and made way West 6 leagues.

24 Friday at a Southeast sunne we cast about to the Eastwards, the wind being at North-north-east: the latitude this day at noone was 70 degrees 15 minutes.

25 On S. James his day bolting to the windwardes, we had the latitude at noone in seuen degrees twentie minutes. The same day at a Southwest sunne, there was a monstrous Whale aboard of vs, so nere to our side that we might haue thrust a sworde or any other weapon in him, which we durst not doe for feare hee should haue ouerthrowen our shippe: and then I called my company together, and all of vs shouted, & with the crye that we made he departed from vs: there was as much aboute water of his backe as the bredth of our pinnelle, and at his falling downe, he made such a terrible noyse in the water, that a man would greatly haue marvelled, except hee had knowen the cause of it: but God be thanked, we were quietly deliuered of him. And a little after we spied certaine Islands, with which we bare, and found good harbor in 15 or 18 fadome, and blacke oze: we came to an anker at a North-east sunne, & named the Island S. James his Island, where we found fresh water.

S. James Island.

26 Sunday, much wind blowing we rode still.

27 Sunday I went on shoare and tooke the latitude, which was 70 degrees 42 minutes: the variation of the compasse was 7 degrees and a halfe from the North to the West.

The variation
of the Compas
7 degrees and a halfe.

28 Tuesday we plyed to the Westwards alongst the shoare, the wind being at North-west, and as I was about to come to anker, we saw a saile comming about the point, wherunder we thought to haue ankered. Then I sent a skiffe aboard of him, and at their comming aboard, they tooke acquaintance of them, and the chiefe man said hee had bene in our company in the riuer Cola, and also declared vnto them that we were past the way which should bring vs to the Ob. This land, sayd he, is called Noua Zembla, that is to say, the New land: and then he came aboard himselfe with his skiffe, and at his comming aboard he told mee the like, and sayd further, that in this Noua Zembla is the highest mountaine in the worlde, as he thought, & that Camen Bolshay, which is on the maine of Pechora, is not to be compared to this mountaine, but I saw it not: he made me also certaine demonstrations of the way to the Ob, and seemed to make haste on his owne way, being very lothe to tarry, because the yeere was farre past, and his neighbour had set Pechora, and not he: so I gaue him a Steele glasse, two pewter spoones, and a paire of velvet sheathed knives: and then he seemed somewhat the more willing to tary, and shewed me as much as he knew for our purpose: he also gaue me 17 wilde geese, and shewed me that foure of their lodias were dyuen perforce from Caninoze to this Noua Zembla. This mans name was Loshak.

29 Wednesday, as we plyed to the Eastwards, we espied another saile, which was one of this Loshaks company, and we bare roome, and spake with him, who in like sort tolde vs of the Ob, as the other had done.

30 Thursday, we plyed to the Eastwards, the wind being at East-north-east.

31 Friday, the gale of winde began to increase, and came Westlerly withall, so that by a North-west sunne we were at an anker among the Islands of Aigats, where we saw two small lodias, the one of them came aboard of vs, and presented me with a great loafe of bread: and they told me that they were all of Colmogro, except one man that dwelt at Pechora, who seemed to be the chiefe among them in killing of the Hozle.

The Islands of Aigats.

There were some of their company on shoare, which did chase a white beare ouer the high cliffs into the water, which beare the lodia that was aboard of vs killed in our sight.

This day there was a great gale of wind at North, and we saw so much ice lying a scaboard, that it was then no going to sea.

August.

1 Saturday I went ashore, and there I saw three mooses that they had killed: they held one tooth of a Hozle, which was not great, at a roble, and one white beare skin at three robes & two robes: they further tolde me, that there were people called Samoeds on the great Island, and that they would not abide them nor vs, who haue no houses, but onely coverings made of Deerskins, set ouer them with stakes: they are men expert in shooting, and haue great plenty of Deere.

Samoeds.

This night there fell a cruell storme, the wind being at West.

2 Sunday we had very much winde, with plenty of snow, and we rode with two ankers a head.

3 Sunday we weped and went roome with another Island, which was five leagues East-north-east from vs: and there I met againe with Loshak, and went on shore with him, and hee brought me me to a heap of the Samoeds tools, which were in number about 300, the worst and the most un-artificiall worke that euer I saw: the eyes and mouthes of sundrie of them were bloodie, they had the shape of men, women and children, very grossly wrought, & that which they had made for other parts, was also sprinkled with blood. Some of their idols were an old sickie with two or thre notches, made with a knife in it. I saw much of the footing of the sayd Samoeds, and of the sleds that they ride in. There was one of their sleds broken, and lay by the heape of idols, & there I saw a deers skinne which the fowles had spoiled: and before certaine of their idols blocks were made as high as their mouthes, being all bloody, I thought that to be the table wheron they offered their sacrifice: I saw also the instruments, wherupon they had roasted flesh, and as farre as I could perceive, they make their fire directly under the spit.

The manners of the Sas moeds.

Loshak being there present tolde me that these Samoeds were not so hurtful as they of Ob are, and that they haue no houses, as indeede I saw none, but onely tents made of Deers skins, which they vnderproppe with stakes and poles: their boates are made of Deers skins, and when they come on shoare they cary their boates with them vpon their backs: for their cariages they haue no other beastes to serue them, but Deere only. As for bread and coyne they haue none, except the Russes bring it to them: their knowledge is very base, for they know no letter.

The Samoeds of the Ob very hurtfull and shewd people.

Tuesday we turned for the harborough where Loshaks barke lay, whereas before we rood vnder an Island. And there he came aboard of vs and said vnto me: if God sende winde and weather to serue, I will goe to the Ob with you, because the Horses were scant at these Islands of Vaigats: but if he could not get to the riuer of Ob, then he sayd hee would goe to the riuer of Naramzay, where the people were not altogether so sauage as the Samoyds of the Ob are: hee shewed me that they will shoot at all men to the uttermost of their power, that cannot speake their speech.

Naramzay,

Wednesday we saw a terrible heape of ice approach neere vnto vs, and therefore wee thought good with al speed possible to depart from thence, and so I returned to the Westwards againe, to the Island where we were the 31 of July.

5

Thursday I went a shoare, and tooke the latitude, which was 70 degrees 25 minutes: and the variation of the compasse was 8 degrees from the North to the West.

6

The latitude.
The variation
of the compas.

Loshak and the two small Lodias of Pechora departed from this Island, while I was on shoare taking the latitude, and went to the Southwards: I marvelled why he departed so suddenly, and went ouer the shoales amongst the Islands where it was impossible for vs to follow them.
But after I perceiued them to be weatherwise.

Friday we rood still, the winde being at Northnortheast, with a cruell storme. The ice came in so abundantly about vs at both ends of the Island that we rood vnder, that it was a fearefull sight to behold: the storme continued with snow, raine, and hayle plenty.

Saturday we rood still also, the storme being somewhat abated, but it was altogether misty, that we were not able to see a cables length about vs, the winde being at Northeast and by East.

8

Sunday at foure of the clocke in the morning we departed from this Island, the winde being at Southeast, and as we were cleere a sea boord the small Islandes and shoales, it came so thick with mistes, that we could not see a base shotte from vs. Then we tooke in all our sailes to make little way.

At a Southeast sunne it waxed cleere, and then we set our sayles, and lay close by the wind to the Southwards along the Islands of Vaigats. At a West sunne we tooke in our sayle againe because of the great mist and raine. Wee sounded at this place, and had fve and twenty fadomes water, and lost blacke oze, being thre leagues from the shoare, the winde being at South and by East, but still misty.

Sunday at an East sunne we sounded, and had 40 fadomes, and oze, still misty: at noone wee sounded againe, and had 26 fadome, still misty.

10

Tuesday at an Eastnortheast sunne we let fall our anker in thre and twenty fadome, the mist still continuing.

11

Wednesday at thre of the clocke in the morning the mist brake vp, the wind being at Northeast & by East, and then we saw part of the Islands of Vaigats, which we bare withall, and went Eastsoutheast close by the winde: at a West sunne we were at an anker vnder the Southwest part of the said Vaigats, and then I sent our skiffe to shoare with three men in her, to see if they might speake with any of the Samoeds, but could not: all that day was raine, but not windie.

12

The land vp-on Vaigatz.

Thursday the wind came Westerly, so that we were faine to seeke vs another place to ride in, because the wind came a seaboord land, and although it were misty, yet wee followed the shoare by our lead: and as we brought land in the winde of vs, we let fall our anker. At a West sunne the mist brake vp, so that we might see about vs, and then we might perceiue that we were entred into a sound.

This afternoone weooke in two or three skiffes lading of stones to ballast our shippe withall. It byeth here foure foci water, and floweth by fits, vncertaine to be iudged.

The vncertaine of ebbing & flowing.

Ifriday we roade still in the sound, the wind at South-west, with very much raine, and at the end of the raine it wared againe mistie.

15 Saturday there was much winde at West, and much raine, and then againe mistie.

16 Sunday was very mistie, and much winde.

17 Sunday very mistie, the winde at West-north-west.

18 Tuesday was also mistie, except at noone: then the sunne brake out through the mist, so that we had the latitude in 70 degrees 10 minutes: the afternoone was misty againe, the wind being at West-north-west.

19 Wednesday at three of the clocke afternoone the mist brake vp, & the wind came at East-north-east, and then we weyed, and went South & by East, vntil seuen of the clocke, eight leagues, thinking to haue had sight of the landie hilles that are to the Eastwards of the riuer Pechora. At a North-west sunne we took in our maine saile, because the wind increased, & went with a fore saile West-north-west, the wind being at East-north-east: at night there grewe so terrible a storme, that we saw not the like, although we had indured many stormes since we came out of England. It was wonderfull that our barke was able to brooke such monstrous & terrible seas, without the great helpe of God, who neuer fayleth them at neede, that put their sure trust in him.

They were within 15 leagues of Pechora

Thursday at a South-south-west sunne, thanks be to God, the storme was at the highest, & then the winde began to flake, and came North-erly withall, & then I reckoned the Westermost point of the riuer Pechora to be South of vs 15 leagues. At a West-south-west sunne we set our maine sayle, and lay close by the winde, the winde being at North-west and by North, making but little way, because the billow went so high: at midnight wee cast about, and the shippe caped North-north-east, making little way.

21 Ifriday at noone we had the latitude in 70 degrees 8 minutes, and we sounded, and had 29 fadomes land, and in maner stremy ground. At a West sunne we cast about to the Westwards, and a little after the wind came vp at West.

22 Saturday was calme: the latitude this day at noone was 70 degrees and a cerce, we sounded heere, and had nine and forty fadomes and oze, which oze signified that we dyet towards Noua Zembla.

And thus we being out of all hope to discouer any more to the Eastward this yeere, wee thought it best to returne, and that for three causes.

They returne
the 22 of Aug
gust.

The first, the continuall North-east and North-erly winds, which haue more power after a man is past to the Eastwards of Caninoze, then in any place that I doe know in these North-erly regions.

Second, because of great and terrible abundance of ice which we saw with our eyes, and we doubt greater soze abideth in those parts: I aduentured already somewhat too farre in it, but I thanke God for my safe deliuerance from it.

Third, because the nights wared darke, and the winter began to draw on with his stormes: and therefore I resolued to take the first best wind that God should send, and plie towards the bay of S. Nicholas, and to see if we might do any good there, if God would permit it.

24 This present Saturday we saw very much ice, and were within two or three leagues of it: it thewed vnto vs as though it had bene a firme land as farre as we might see from North-west off vs to the Eastwards: and this afternoone the Lord sent vs a little gale of wind at South, so that we bare cleere off the Westermost part of it, thanks be to God. And then against night it wared calme againe, and the winde was at South-west: we made our way vntill Sunday noone North-west and by West, and then we had the latitude in 70 degrees and a halfe, the winde at South-west: there was a billow, so that we could not discerne to take the latitude exactly, but by a reasonable gesse.

25 Sunday there was a pretie gale of wind at South, so that wee went West and by South, the latitude this day at noone was 70 degrees 10 minutes: wee had little winde all day: at a West-north-west sunne we sounded, and had 29 fadomes blacke sandie oze, & then we were North-east 5 leagues from the North-east part of the Island Colgoieue.

26 Tuesday the wind all West-erly we plyed to the wind wards.

27 Wednesday the wind was all West-erly, and calme: we had the latitude this day in 70 degrees 10 minutes, we being within three leagues of the North part of the Island Colgoieue.

28 Thursday, we went roome about the Westermost part of the Island, seeking where we might finde finde a place to ride in for a North west wind, but could find none, and then we cast about againe to the seawards, and the winde came at Westsouthwest, and this morning we had plenty of snow.

Friday, the winde being at Southwest and by West, we plied to the windewards.

Saturday, the winde being at South, we plied to the Westwards, and at afternoone the mist brake vp, and then we might see the land seuen or eight leagues to the Eastwards of Caninoz: we sounded a litle before and had 35. fathoms and oze, And a while after wee sounded againe, and had 19. fadome and sand: then we were within three leagues and a halfe of the shoze, and towards night there came downe so much winde, that we were faine to bring our ship a trie, and laide her head to the Westwards.

Sunday, the winde became more caline, and then it wared verie mystie: At noone wee cast about to the Eastwards, the winde beeing at South, and ranne eight houres on that boozde, and then we cast about and caped West south west: we sounded and had 32. fathomes, and tough oaze like clay.

Munday, we doubled about Caninoze, and came at an anker there, to the intent that we might kill some fish if God would permit it, and there we gate a great Ruse, which Ruses were there so plentie, that they would scarcely suffer any other fish to come neere the hookes: the said Ruses carried away sundrie of our hookes and leads.

31

A litle after at a West Sunne, the winde began to blow stormie at West south west, so that we were faine to wey and forsake our fishing ground, and went close by the winde Southwest, and Southwest and by West, making our way South south west.

September.

Tuesday at a West Sunne we sounded and had 20. fathoms, and broken Wilkeshels: I reckoned Canonize to be 24 leagues Northnortheast from vs.

The elcuenly day we arrived at Colmogro, and there we wintered, expecting the approach of the next Sommer to proceede farther in our intended discouerie for the Ob: which (by reason of our imployments to Wardhouse the next spring for the search of some English ships) was not accordingly performed.

Tirst, after we departed out of England we sell wth Norway, and on that coaste lieth Northbern or Northbergen, and this people are vnder the King of Denmarke: But they differ in their speech from the Danes, for they speake North. And North of Northbern lie the Isles of Roste and Losoor, and these Islands pertaine vnto Finmarke, and they keepe the lawes and speake the language of the Islanders. And at the Eastermost part of that land is a castle which is called the Ward house, and the King of Denmarke doeth fortifie it with men of warre: and the Russes may not goe to the Westward of that castle. And East Southeast from that castle is a lande called Lappia: in which lande be two maner of people, that is to say, the Lappians, and the Scrickfinnes, which Scrickfinnes are a wilde people which neither know God, nor yet good order: and these people liue in tents made of Deares skines: and they haue no certaine habitations, but continue in herds and companies by one hundred and two hundredes. And they are a people of small stature, and are clothed in Deares skines, and drinke nothing but water, and eat no bread but flesh all raw. And the Lappians bee a people adioyning to them & be much like to them in al conditions: but the Emperour of Russia hath of late ouercome manie of them, and they are in subiection to him. And this people will say that they beleene in the Russes God. And they liue in tents as the other doe. And Southeast and by South from Lappia lyeth a prouince called Corelia, and these people are called Kerilli. And South southeast from Corelia lyeth a countrey called Nouogardia, And these three nations are vnder the Emperour of Russia, and the Russes keepe the Lawe of the Grekes in their Churches; and write somewhat like as the Grekes write, and they speake their owne language, and they abhorre the Latine tongue, neither haue they to doe with the Pope of Rome, and they holde it not good to worshippe any caried Image, yet they will worshippe paynted Images on tables or boozdes. ches, treepies, and houses are all of wood : and their shippes that they haue are sowed with wiches and haue no nayles. The Kerisses, Russians and Dolscouians bee much alike in all conditions. And South from the Dolscouians lyeth the Tartarians, which bee Mahumetans, and liue in tentes and wagons, and keepe in herdes and companies : and they holde it not good to abide long in one place, for they will say, when they will curse any of their children, I would thou mightest tary so long in a place that thou mightest smell thine owne dung, as the Christians doe : and this is the greatest curse that they haue. And East North-east of Russia lieth Lampas, which is a place where the Russes, Tartars and Samoeds meete twice a yeere, and make the faire to barter wares for wares. And North-east from Lampas lieth the countrey of the Samo-eds, which be about the river of Pechere, and these Samoeds bee in subiection to the Emperour of Russia, and they lie in tentes made of Deere skimes, and they vse much witchcraft, and shoot well in bowes. And North-east from the river Pechere lieth Vaygarz, and there are the wilde Sa-moeds which will not suffer the Russes to land out of the Sea, but they will kill them and eate them, as wee are tolde by the Russes : and they liue in herdes, and haue all their carriages with deere, for they haue no horses. Beyond Vaygarz lyeth a lande called Nova Zembla, which is a great lande, but wee sawe no people, and there wee had foule inough, and there wee sawe white Fores and white Beares. And the sayde Samoeds which are about the bankes of Pechere, which are in subiection to the Emperour of Russia, when they will remoue from one place to another, then they will make sacrifices in manner following. Euerie kinred doeth sacrifice in their owne tent, and hee that is most auncient is their Priest. And first the Priest doeth beginne to playe upon a thing like to a great lute, with a skinn on the one ende like a drumme : and the stick that he playeth with is about a spanne long, and one ende is round like a ball, couered with the skinn of an Hart. Also the Priest hath upon his head a thing of white like a garlande, and his face is couered with a piece of a shirt of maile, with manie small ribbes, and teeth of fishes, and wilde beastes hanging on the same maile. Then hee singeth as wee vse heere in Englande to halloo, whoope, or shouer at handes, and the rest of the company answere him with this Dwtis, Igha, Igha, Igha, and then the Priest replieth againe with his vopces. And they answer him with the selfsame wordes so manie times, that in the ende he becommeth as it were madde, and falling downe as hee were dead, hauing nothing on him but a shirt, lying upon his backe I might perceine him to breathe. I asked them why hee lay so, and they answered mee, Nowe doeth our God tell him what wee shall doe, and whither wee shall goe. And when he had lye still a litle while, they cried thus thre times together, Oghao, Og-hao, Oghao, and as they vse these thre calles, hee riseth with his head and lieth downe againe, and then hee rose vp and sang with like vopces as hee did before : and his audience answered him, Ig-ha, Igha, Igha. Then hee commaunded them to kill fure Dlenis of great Deere, and continued singing still both hee and they as before. Then hee tooke a sword of a cubite and a spanne long, (I did meete it my selfe) and put it into his bellie halfe way and sometime lesse, but no wounde was to bee seene, (they continuing in their sweete song still) Then he put the sword into the fire till it was warme, and so thrust it into the slitte of his shirt and thrust it through his bodie, as I thought, in at his nauill and out of his fundament : the poynt beeing out of his shirt behinde, I layde my finger vpon it, then hee pulled out the sword and sate downe. This beeing done, they set a kettle of water ouer the fire to heate, and when the water doeth see the,
the Priest beginneth to sing againe they answering him, for so long as the water was in heating, they sate and sang not. Then they made a thing being foure square, and in height and squarenesse of a chaire, and couered with a gown very close the fozepart therof, for the hinder part stood to the tents side. Their tents are rounde and are called Chome in their language. The water still seething on the fire, and this square seate being ready, the Priest put off his shirt, and the thing like a garland which was on his head, with those things which couered his face, & he had on yet all this while a paire of hosen of deeres skins with f hatte on, which came vp to his buttocks. So he went into the square seate, and sate down like a tailour and sang with a strong voyce of halowing. Then they tooke a small line made of deeres skimes of foure fathoms long, and with a small knotte the Priest made it fast about his necke, and vnder his left arme, and gaue it vnto two men standing on both sides of him, which held the ends together. Then the kettle of hote water was set before him in the square seate, at this time the square seate was not couered, and then it was couered w a gown of broad cloth without lining, such as the Russes do weare. Then the 2. men which did hold p ends of the line still standing there, began to draw, & drew till they had drawn the ends of the line tisse and together, and then I hearde a thing fall into the kettle of water which was before him in the tent.
Thereupon I asked them that sate by me what it was that fell into the water that stood before him. And they answered me, that it was his head, his shoulder and left arme, which the line had cut

cut off, I meane the knot which I sawe afterwarde drawen hard together. Then I rose vp and would haue looked whether it were so or not, but they laid hold on me, and said, that if they should see him with their bodily eyes, they should lue no longer. And the most part of them can speake the Russe tongue to bee understood: and they tooke me to be a Russian. Then they beganne to halloo with these wordes, Oghao, Oghao, Oghao, many times together. And as they were thus singing & outcalling, I sawe a thing like a finger of a man two times together thrust through the gowne from the Priest. I asked them that late next to me what it was that I sawe, and they saide, not his finger; for he was yet dead: and that which I sawe appeare through the gowne was a beast, but what beast they knew not nor would not tell. And I looked vpon the gowne, and there was no hole to bee seene: and then at the last the Priest lifted vp his head with his shoulder and arme, and all his bodie, and came forth to the fire. Thus farre of their seruice which I sawe during the space of certaine houres: but how they doe worship their Idoles that I sawe not: for they put vp their Ruffes to remoue from that place where they lay. And I went to him that serued the Priest, and asked him what their God saide to him when he lay as dead. He answered, that his owne people doeth not know, neither is it for them to know: for they must doe as he commanded. This I sawe the fift day of Ianuarie in the yere of our Lord 1556, after the English account.

A discourse of the honourable receiuing into England of the first Ambassador from the Emperour of Russia, in the yeere of Christ

1556, and in the third yeere of the raigene of Queene Marie, seruing for the third voyage to Moscoue. Registred by Master John Incent Protonotarie.

IT is here recozded by writing and autenticall testimonie, partly for memoize of things done, and partly for the veritie to be knowen to posteritie in time to come, that where as the most high and mightie Iuan Vasiluich Emperour of all Russia, gre at Duke of Volodemer, Moscouia and Nouogrode, Emperour of Cassan, and of Astrachan, Lord of Pleskie, and gre at Duke of Smolenskie, Tuerskie, Yowgoriskie, Permskie, Viatskie, Bolgarskie, and Sibierskie, Emperour and gre at Duke of many others, as Nouogrode in the nether countries, Chernigoskie, Rezanskie, Polodskie, Rezewskie, Bielskie, Rostoskie, Yeraslaueskie, Bealozarskie, Oudarskie, Obdorskie, Condenskie, and manie other countries, and lord ouer all those partes, in the yere of our Lord God, folowing the account of y Latin church, 1556, sent by the sea from the port of S. Nicholas in Russia, his right honorable ambassadoz surnamed Osep Napea, his high officer in the towne and countrey of Vologda, to the most famous and excellent princes, Philip and Mary by the grace of God, king and Quene of England, Spaine, France and Ireland, defenders of the faith, Archdukes of Austria, dukes of Burgundie, Millaine, & Brabant, counties of Haspurgie, Flanders and Tyroll, his ambassadoz & Oratoz with certaine letters tenderly conceiued, together with cert ain presents and gifts mentioned in the foot of this memorial, as a manifest argument and token of a mutual amity and friendship to be made and continued betweene their maiesties & subiects respectiuelly, for the commoditie and benefit of both the realmes and people: which Oratoz was the 20. day of Iuly imbarked and shipped in, and vpon a good English ship named the Edward Bonauenture, belonging to the Gouernoz, Consuls and company of English marchantes, Richard Chancelor being grand Pilot, and Iohn Buckland master of the said ship. In which was laden at the aduecture of the foresaid Ambassadoz, and marchants at seuerall accounts, goods & merchandizes, viz. in ware, trane oyle, tallow, furs, felts, yarne and such like, to the summe of 20000. li. sterling, together with 16. Russies attendant vpon the person of the said Ambassadoz.ouer and aboue ten other Russies shipped within the said Bay of S. Nicholas, in one other good ship to the said company also belonging called the Bona Speranza, with goods of the said Oratoz & marchants to the value of 6000. li. sterling, as by the inuoyces and letters of lading of the said seuerall ships (wherunto relation is to be had) particularly appeareth. Which good ships comming in good order into the seas, & trauesing the same in their iourney towards the coast of England, were by contrary Windes and extreme tempests of weather seuered the one from the other, that is to say, the saide Bona Speranza with two other English ships also appertaining to the saide company, the one surnamed the Philip and Mary, the other the Confidentia, were driuen on the coast of Norway, into Drenton water, where the saide Confidentia was seene to perish on a Rocke, and the other, videlicet, the Bona Speranza, with her whole company, being to the number of foure and twentie persons seemed to winter there, whereof no certaintie at this present day is knowen. The third, videlicet, the Philip and Mary arriued in the Thames nigh London the eighteenth day of April, in the yere of our Lord one thousand five hundred fiftie and seven. The Edward Bonaventure traueiling the seas foure moneths, finally the tenth day of Nouember of the aforesaid yeere of our Lozde one thousand five hundred, fiftie and sixe, arriv'd within the Scottissh coast in a Bay named Pettislego, where by outrageous tempests, and extreme stormes, the said ship being beateen from her ground tackles, was driven vpon the rockes on shore, where she brake and split in pieces in such sort, as the grand Pilot vsing all carefulnesse for the safetie of the bodie of the sayde Ambassadour and his trayne, taking the boat of the said ship, trusting to attaine the shore, and so to saue and preserve the bodie, and seven of the companie or attendants of the saide Ambassadour, the same boat by rigorous waues of the seas, was by darke night overwelmed and drowned, wherein perished not only the bodie of the said grand Pilot, with seven Russes, but also diuers of the Partners of the sayd ship: the noble personage of the saide Ambassadour with a fewe others (by Gods preservation and speciall fauour) onely with much difficultie saued. In which shipwacke not onely the saide shippe was broken, but also the whole masse and bodie of the goods laden in her, was by the rude and rauenous people of the Countrey therunto adioynning, rifled, spoyled and caried away, to the manifest losse and utter destruction of all the lading of the said ship, and together with the ship, apparell, ordnance and furniture belonging to the companie, in value of one thousand pounds, of all which was not restozed toward the costs and charges to the summe of five hundred pound sterling.

As soone as by letters addrested to the said companie, and in London deliuered the first of December last past, it was to them certainly knowen of the losse of their Pilote, men, goods and ship, the same merchants with all celeritie and expedition, obtained not onely the Queenes maiesties most gracious and fauourable letters to the Ladie Dowager, and lordes of the Councell of Scotland for the gentle comfortment and entertainment of the saide Ambassadour, his traine and companie, with preservation and restitution of his goods, as in such miserable cases, to Christian pitie, princely honour and meere Justice appertaineth, but also addrested two Gentlemen of good learning, grauitie and estimation, videlicet, Master Lawrence Huffie Doctor of the Ciuill Lawe, and George Gilpin with money and other requisites into the Realme of Scotland, to comfort, ayde, assist, and relieue him and his there, and also to conduct the Ambassadour into England, sending with them by poste a Talmach or Speechman for the better furniture of the seruice of the sayde Ambassadour, trusting thereby to haue the more ampie and speedie redresse of restitution: which personages vsing diligence, arriv'd at Edenborough (where the Queenes court was) the thre and twentieth day of the saide moneth of December, who first visiting the saide Ambassadour, declaring the causes of their coming and Commission, shewing the letters addrested in his fauour, the order giuen them for his solace and furniture of all such things as hee woulde haue, together with their daily and readie seruice to attend vpon his person and affaires, repaired consequently vnto the Dowager Queene, deliuering the letters.

Whereupon they receiued gentle answers, with hope and comfort of speedie restitution of the goods, apparell, iewels and letters: for the more apparance whereof, the Queene sent first certaine Commissioners with an Haroll of armes to Pettislego, the place of the Shipwacke, commanding by Proclamation and other Edictes, all such persons (no degree excepted) as had any part of such goods as were spoyled and taken out of the ship to bring them in, and to restoze the same with such further order as her grace by aduise of her Councell thought expedient: by reason whereof not without great labours, paines and charges (after long time) diuers small parcels of Ware, and other small trifling things of no value, were by the poorer sort of the Scottes brought to the Commissioners, but the Jewels, rich apparell, presents, gold, silver, costly furrres, and such like, were conueyed away, concealed and vterly embezelled. Whereupon, the Queene at the request of the said Ambassadour, caused diuers persons to the number of 180. or moe, to be called personally before her princely presence, to answer to his said spoile, & really to exhibite and bring in all such things as were spoyled and violently taken, & caried out of the same, whereof not onely good testimonie by writing was shewed, but also the things themselves found in the hands of the Scottissh subiects, who by subtile and craftie dealings, by conniueance of the commissioners, so vsed or rather abused themselves towards the same Dracor & his attendants, that no effectuall restitution was made: but he fatigated with daily attendance and charges, the 14. day of February next ensuing, distrustful any reall and effectual rendring of the saide goods and marchandizes and other the premises, vpon leaue obtained of the saide Queene, departed towards England, hauing attending vpon him the said two English Gentlemen and others (leaving neuertheless in Scotland thre Englishmen to pursue the deliuerie of such things as were collected to haue bene sent by ship to him in England: which being in April next, and not before before imbarked for London, was not at this present day here arrived) came the 18. day of February to Bar wike within the dominion and realme of England, where he was by the Queenes maiesties letters and commandement honourably receiued, used and intertained by the right honourable lord Wharton, lord Warden of the East marches, with goodly conducting from place to place, as the dayly iourneys done ordinarily did lie, in such order, maner and forme, as to a personage of such estate appertained. He prosecuting his voyage until the 27. of February approached to the citie of London within twelue English miles, where he was receiued with fourscore merchants with chaines of gold and goodly apparell, as wel in order of men seruants in one waiforne luerie, as also in and vpon good hoxles and geldings, who conducting him to a marchants house foure miles from London, receiued there a quanttie of gold, veluet and like, with all furniture thereunto requisite, where with he made him a riding garment, reposing himselfe that night. The next day being Saturday and the last day of February, he was by the merchants aduenturing for Russia, to the number of one hundred and foztie persons, and so many or more seruants in one luerie, as abovesaid, conducted towards the citie of London, where by the way he had not onely the hunting of the fore and such like sport shewed him, but also by the Queenes maiesties commandement was receiued and embzaced by the right honourable Viscount Montague, sent by her grace for his entertainment: he being accompanied with diuers lustie knights, esquires, gentlemen and yeomen to the number of three hundred hoxles led him to the North partes of the Citie of London, where by foure notable merchants richly apparellled was presented to him a right faire and large gelding richly trapped, together with a footcloth of Orient crimson veluet, enriched with gold laces, all furnished in most glorious fashion, of the present, and gift of the sayde merchants: where vpon the Ambassadour at instant desire mounted, riding on the way towards Smithfield barres, the first limites of the liberties of the Citie of London. The Lord Mayor accompanied with all the Aldermen in their skarlet did receiue him, and so riding through the Citie of London in the middle, betweene the Lord Mayor and Viscount Montague, a great number of merchants and notable personages riding before, and a large troupe of seruants and apprentices following, was conducted through the Citie of London (with great admiration and plausibilitie of the people running plentifully on all sides, and replenishing all streets in such sort as no man without pitticullie might passe) into his lodging situate in Fant church stree, where were provided for him two chambers richly hanged and decked, ouer and aboue the gallant furniture of the whole house, together with an ample and rich cupboord of plate of all sortes, to furnish and serue him at all meales, and other seruices during his abode in London, which was, as is vnderwritten, until the third day of May: during which time daily diuers Aldermen and the grauest personages of the said companie did visite him, providing all kind of victuals for his table and his seruants, with al sorts of Officers to attend vpon him in good sort and condition, as to such an ambassadour of honour doeth and ought to appertaine.

It is also to be remembred that at his first entrance into his chamber, there was presented vnto him on the Queenes Maiesties behalfe for a gift and present, and his better furniture in apparel, one rich piece of cloth of tissue, a piece of cloth of golde, another piece of cloth of golde raised with crimosin veluet, a piece of crimosin veluet in graine, a piece of purple veluet, a piece of Damask purple, a piece of crimosin damaske, which he most thankfully accepted. In this beautifull lodging refreshing and preparing himselfe and his traine with things requisite he abode, expecting the kings maiesties repaire out of Flanders into England, whose highnesse arriuing the one and twentie of March, the same Ambassadour the five and twentieth of March being the Annunciation of our Ladie (the day tweluenometh he tooke his leaue from the Emperour his master) was most honourably brought to the King and Queenes maiesties court at Westminster, where accompanied first with the said Viscount and other notable personages, and the merchants, hee arriuing at Westminster bridge, was there receiued with sixe lords, conducted into a stately chamber, where by the lords, Chancellor, Treasurer, Priuie seale, Admirall, Bishop of Elie, and other Counsellors, hee was visited and saluted: and consequently was brought vnto the Kings and Queenes maiesties presence, sitting vnder a stately cloth of honour, the chamber most richly decked and furnished, and most honourably presented. Where, after that hee had deliuered his letters, made his Oration, given two timber of Sables, and the report of the same made both in English and Spanish, in most louing maner embzaced, was with much honour and high entertainment, in sight of a great confluence of people, Lordes and Ladies chiffoones remitted by water to his former lodging, to the which, within two dayes after by the assignement of the King and Queenes maiesties, repaired and conferred with him secretly two graue Counsellors, that is, the lord Bishop of Elie, and Sir William Peter Knight, chiefe Secretary to their highnesse, who after diuers secret talkes and conferences, reported to their highnesse their proceedings, the grauicie, wisdom, and stately behaviour of the sayd Ambassadour, in such sort as was much to their maiesties contentations.

26 league and articles of amitie concluded and confirmed vnder the great seale of England.

Finally concluding vpon such treaties and articles of amitie, as the letters of the Kings and Queenes maiesties most graciously vnder the great seale of England to him by the sayd counsellors deliuered, both appeare.

The thzee and twentieth of Aprill, being the feast of S. George, wherein was celebrated the solemnitie of the Noble order of the Garter at Westminster, the same lord ambassadour was estoones required to haue audience: and therefore conducted from the sayd lodging to the court by the right Noble the lords Talbot and Lumley to their maiesties presence: where, after his Oration made, and thanks both giuen and receiued, hee most honourably tooke his leaue with commendations to the Emperour. Which being done, he was with special honour led into the chappell, where before the Kings and Queenes maiesties, in the sight of the whole Order of the Garter, was prepared for him a stately seate, wherein he accompanied with the Duke of Norfolk, the lords last aboue mentioned, and many other honorable personages, was present at the whole seruice, in ceremonies which were to him most acceptable: the diuine seruice ended, he estoones was remitted and reduced to his barge, and so repaired to his lodging, in like order and gratulation of the people vniuersally, as before.

Four goodly ships of the merchants provided for Russia, 1557.

The time of the peere hasting the profection and departure of the Ambassadour, the merchants hauing prepared foure goodly and well trimmed shippes laden with all kinds of merchandises appoynted for Russia, the same Ambassadour making prouision for such things as him pleased, the same ships in good order valed downe the Riuer of Thames, from London to Grauesend, where the same Ambassadour with his traine and furniture was imbarked towards his voyage homeward, which God prosper in all felicitie.

It is also to be remembred, that during the whole abode of the sayd Ambassadour in England, the Agents of the sayde marchants did not onely prosecute and pursue the matter of restitution in Scotland, and caused such things to be laden in an English shippe hired purposely to conuey the Ambassadours goods to London, there to be deliuered to him, but also during his abode in London, did both inuite him to the Maior, and diuers worshipfull mens houses, feasting and banquetting him right friendly, shewing vnto him the most notable and commendable sights of London, as the kings palace and house, the Churches of Westminster and Powles, the Tower and Guild hall of London, and such like memorizable spectacles. And also the said 29. day of Aprill, the said merchants assembling themselves together in the house of the Drapers hall of London, exhibited and gaue vnto y^e said Ambassadour, a notable supper garnished with musike, Enterludes and bankets: in the which a cup of wine being drunke to him in the name and lieu of the whole companie, it was signified to him that the whole company with most liberal and friendly hearts, did frankly giue to him and his all manner of costs and charges in victuals riding from Scotland to London during his abode there, and untill setting of saile aboord the ship, requesting him to accept the same in good part as a testimonie and witnes of their good hearts, zeale and tenderesse towards him and his countrie.

It is to be considered that of the Bona Speranza no word nor knowledge was had at this present day, nor yet of the arriual of the ships or goods from Scotland.

The third of May the Ambassadour departed from London to Grauesend, accompanied with diuers Aldermen and merchants, who in good gard set him aboord the noble shippe, the Primrose Admiral to the flecte, where leaue was taken on both sides and parts, after many embracements and diuers farewells not without expressing of teares.

The King and Queenes second letters to the Emperour of Russia.

Memorandum, that the first day of May the Counsellors, videlicet, the Bishop of Elye, and Sir William Peter on the behalfe of the Kings and Queenes Maiesties repairing to the lord Ambassadour did not onely deliuer vnto him their highnes letters of recommendations vnder the great seale of England to the Emperour, very tenderly and friendly wrytten, but also on their maiesties behalfe gaue and deliuered certaine notable presents to the Emperours person, and also gifts for the lord Ambassadours proper vse and behoofe, as by the particulars vnder wrytten appeareth, with such further good wordes and commendations, as the more friendly haue not bin heard, whereby it appeareth how well affected their honours be to haue and continue amitie and traffique betwene their honours and their subiects: which thing as the kings and Queenes maiesties haue shewed of their princely munificences & liberalities, so haue likewise the merchants and fellowship of the Aduenturers, for and to Russia, manifested to the world their good willes, mindes and zeales bozne to this new commended voyage, as by the discourse aboue mentioned, and other the notable actes ouer long to be recited in this present memoriaziall, doeth and may most clearly clearly appeare, the like whereof is not in any president or hillozie to bee shewed.

Forasmuch as it may bee doubted how the ship named the Edward Bonaventure suffered shipwracke, what became of the goods, howe much they were spoiled and deteined, how little restored, what charges and expences ensued, what personages were drowned, how the rest of the ships either arrived or perished, or howe the disposition of almighty God hath wrought his pleasure in them, how the same ambassadour hath bene after the miserable case of shipwracke in Scotland uncreuerently abused, and consequently into England receiued and conducted, there intertaind, vsed, honoured, and finally in good safetie towards his returne, and repaire furnished, and with much liberallitie and franke handling friendly dismissed, to the intent that the trueth of the premisses may bee to the most mightie Emperour of Russia sincerely signified in eschewment of all euents and misfortunes that may chauce in this voyage (which God defend) to the Ambassadors person, traine, and goods, this present memoriall is written, and authentically made, and by the sayde Ambassadour his seruants, whose names be vnderwritten, and traine in presence of the Notarie, and witnesses vndernamed, recognized, and acknowledged. Given the day, moneth, and yeere vnderwritten, of which instrument into euery of the sayde Shippes one testimoniall is deliuered, and the first remaineth with the sayde Compagnie in London.

The voyage of the foresaid M. Stephen Burrough, An. 1557. from Colmogro to Wardhouse, which was sent to seeke the Bona Esperanza, the Bona Confidentia, and the Philip and Mary, which were not heard of the yeere before.

May.

23 pon Sunday the 23. of May, I departed with the Searchlight from Colmogro, the latitude whereof is 64. degrees, 25. minutes, and the variation of the compasse, 5. degrees, 10. minutes from the North to the East.

26 ednesday we came to the Island called Pozanka, which Island is within foure leagues of the barre Berozoua. It floweth here at an East and by South Moone full sea.

29 Saturday in the morning we departed from Pozanka, and plied to the barre of Berôzoua Gooba, whereupon we came to anker at a lowe water, and sounded the said Barre with our two Skiffes, and found in the best vpon the shoaldest of the barre 13. foote water by the rule. It higheth vpon this barre, in spring streames 3. foote water: and an East Moone maketh a full sea vpon this barre.

30 Sunday in the morning wee departed from the barre of Berozoua, and plied along by the shoals in fine sadome, vntill I had sight of S. Nicholas roade, and then wee cast about to the Northwards, and went with a hommocke, which is halfe a mile to the Eastwards of Coia Reca, which hommocke and S. Nicholas abbey lye Southsouthwest, and Northnortheast, and betweene twene them are 11. leagues. Coia Reca is halfe a mile to the Eastwards of Coscaynos, Coscaynos & the middes of the Island called Mondeuoua ostroue, which is thwart of the barre of Berozoua lieth South and by East, North and by West, and betweene them are 4. leagues, or as you may say from the Scaboord part of the barre to Coscaynos are 3. leagues and a halfe.

Sunday at a North east and by East sunne we were thwart of Coscaynos.

Dogs nose lieth from Coscaynos Northnorthwest, and betweene them are eight leagues; and Dogs nose sheweth like a Turners head, if you be inwardly on both sides of it: on the lowe point of Dogs nose there standeth a crosse alone.

June.

From Dogs nose to Forenose are three leagues, North and by West.

The 2. day of June I went on shoare 2. miles to the Northwards of Dogs nose, and had the latitude of that place in 65. degrees, 47. minutes. It floweth a shoare at this place, at an East Moone full sea, and the Shippe lay thwart to wende a flood, in the off, at a Southsoutheast moone. So that it is to be vnderstoode, that when it is a full sea on the shoare, it is two points to ebbe, before it be a lowe water in the off. The variation of the Compasse at this place is 4. degrees from the North to the East.

This day the Northnorthwest winde put vs backe againe with Dogs nose, where a ship may ride thwart of a salt house, in 4. fadome, or 4. fadome and a halfe of water, and haue Landfange for a North and by West winde: which Salt house is halfe a mile to the Southwards of Dogs nose.

Friday at a Southsouthwest Sunne, wee departed from this Salt house. It is to be noted that foure miles to the Northwards of Dogs nose there growe no trees on the banke by the water side: and the bankes consist of fullers earth.ouer the cliffes there growe some trees: so that Dogs nose is the better to be knowen because it is fullers earth, and the like I haue not scene in all that Countrey.

A head of Fore nose a league from the shoare there are 15. fadome: betwixt Fore nose and Zolaticsa there are 6. leagues, I meane the Southerly part of Fore nose.

Sunday I founded the barre of Zolaticsa, which the Russes told me was a good harborow, but in the best of it I found but 4. foote water.

Sunday, I had the latitude in 66. degrees, and then was point Pentecost sixe leagues South of vs.

Wednesday I went on land at Crosse Island, and tooke the latitude, which was 66. degrees 24. minutes.

We being one league North east of Crosse Island, I sawe the land on the Eastside, which I iudged to be Cape good fortune, and it was then Eastsoutheast of vs 9. leagues.

Cape grace is 7. leagues and a halfe North east from Crosse Island.

There are 2. Islands 5. leagues Northnorth east from Cape grace, the Southermost of them is a little long Island almost a mile long, and the Northermost a little round Island, and they are both hard aboard the shoar.

Cape Race is from the Southermost Island North and by West, and betweene them are two leagues, and from that and halfe a league Northnorth west, there is another poynt. Betweene which poynt and Cape Race, the Russes haue a Stanauish or harborow for their Lodias: and to the Westwards of the said poynt, there is a shoale bay.

Three leagues and a halfe to Northwards of Cape Race, we had the latitude on the 10. day of this moneth in 67. degrees 10. minutes. Rising within half a league of the shoare in this latitude I found it to be a full sea at a North and by East moone. I had where we roade two and twentie fadome, and the tallow which is taken vp is full of great broken shels, and some stones withall like unto small sand congealed together.

From a South sunne that wee weyed, the winde being at North and by East, wee driued to the windwards halfe the ebbe, with the ships head to the Eastwards. And then when we cast her head to the Westwards, we founded, and had 22. fadome broken shels, and gray sand; this present day was very mistie, with frost on the shrowds as the mist fell.

Friday in the morning at an East sunne, the mist brake vp a little, the winde being at North and by West a stiff gale, our shrowdes and roapes ouer head being couered with frost, and likely to be a storme: I thought it good to seeke an harborow, and so plied roome with the Islands which are two leagues to the Southwards of Cape Race, and within these Islands (thankes bee to God) we found harborow for vs. It higheth at these Islands two fadome water: it floweth in the harborow at this place at a Southsoutheast moone full sea: and a sea boord it floweth at a Southsouthwest moone a full sea. The Russes call this Island, Tri Ostrove.

You may come in betweene the little Island and the great Island, and keepe you in the mids of the Sound, and if you boordwe on any side, let it bee on the greatest Island, and you shall haue at a low water, foure fadome, and thre fadome and a halfe, and thre fadome, untill that you be shot so farre in as the narrowest, which is betweene the Northmost point of the greatest Island, and the Southerne point of the maine which is right against it, and then hale to the Northwards with the crosse which standeth in the maine, and you shall haue at a lowe water 10. foote water, and faire sand. And if you be disposed to goe through the Sound to the Southwards, keepe the Northwest shoare aboord, for on the Island side after you be shotte so farre in as the crosse, it is a shoale of rockes halfe the sound ouer: which rockes do last unto the Southerly part of the great Island, and rather to the Southwards. And if you be constrained to seeke a harbor for Northerly windes, when you come out of the sea, hale in with the Southerly part of the great Island, giuing the Island a faire birth, and as you shoote towards the maine, you shall finde roade for all Northerly windes, in foure fadome, fise, sixe and seuen fadome, at a lowe water.

Also within this great Island (if neede bee) you may haue a good place to ground a ship in: the great Island is almost a mile long and a quarter of a mile ouer.

Ice.
The variation.

This storme of Northerly winde lasted untill the 16. of this moneth, and then the winde came Southerly, but we could not get out for Ice. I went on shoare at the crosse, and tooke the latitude, which is 66. degrees, 58. minutes, 30. seconds: the variation of the Compasse 3. degrees and a halfe from the North to the East.

17

Thurs day being faire weather, and the winde at North we plied to the winde-wards with sailes and oares: wee stopped the flood this day three leagues to the Northwards of Cape Race, two miles from the shoare, and had twentie fadome water, faire gray and blacke sand, and broken shels. And when the flake came wee wayed and made aboord to the shoare-wards, and had within two cables length of the shoare, eightene fadomes faire gray and blacke sand: a man may finde roade there for a North winde, and so to the Westwards.

18

Two leagues to the Southward of Corpus Christi poynt, you may haue Landfang for a North and by East winde, and from that to the Westwards in 23. fadome almost a mile from shoare, and faire sand, and amongst the sand little yong small limpets, or such like as growe vpon muscles: and within two cables length and lesse of the shoare are eightene fadomes, and the sounding asofesaid, but the yong limpets more plentifull. It was a full sea where we roade, almost a mile from shoare, at a South and by West moone: two leagues to the Southwards of Corpus Christi point is the bittermost land, which land and Cape Race lyeth South and halfe a point to Westwards, and North and halfe a point to the Eastwards, and betweene them are sixe leagues. Riding this day sixe leagues to the Northwards of Cape Race, the winde at Northnorthwest, with mist and frost, at noone the sunne appeared through the mist, so that I had the latitude in 67. degrees, 29. minutes.

19

Corpus Christi point.

Sunday we were thwart of Corpus Christi point, two leagues and a halfe from shoare, or rather more, where we sounded, and had 36. fadoms, and broken cocke shels, with byannie sand, but the broken shels very thicke.

22
Cape Gallant.

Tuesday in the morning we were shotte ahead of Cape gallant, which the Russes call Sotinoz. And as we were shot almost halfe a league betwixt it, and Cape comfort, the wind came by at the Northwest, and after to the Northwards, so that we were faine to beare roome to seeke a harbour, where we found good harbour for all windes, and the least 7. fadome water betweene S. Johns Islands, and the maine.

After that we came to an ancre, we tooke the latitude, which was 68. degrees 1. minute, after noone, the winde at North with plentie of snowe.

At a West sunne there came aboord vs certaine Lappians in a boate, to the number of sixteene persons, and amongst them there were two wenches, and some of them could speake the Russe tongue: I asked them where their abiding was, and they tolde me that there was a companie or heard of them, to the number of 100. men, besides women and childzen, but a litle from vs in the riuer Iekonga.

They tolde me that they had bene to seeke meate among the rockes, saying, If wee get no meate, wee eate none. I sawe them eate rocke weedes as hungrily, as a cowe doeth grasse when shee is hungrie. I sawe them also eate foules egges rawe, and the yong birdes also that were in the egges.

25 Friday in the morning we departed from Saint Johns Island : to the Westwards thereof, a mile from the shoare, we sounded, and had 36. fadoms, and oazie sand,

Iuana Creos. Iuana Creos is from Cape gallant Westnorthwest, and halfe a point to the Northwards, and betweene them is 7. leagues. The point of the Island, which is Cape comfort, lyeth from Iuana Creos, Northwest and by North, and almost the 3. part of a point to the Westwards, and betweene them are 3. leagues.

S. Georges Islands. The Eastermost of S. Georges Islands, or the 7. Islands, lyeth from Iuana Creos North-west, & halfe a point to the Northwards, and betweene them are 14. leagues & a halfe. The uttermost of the 7. Islands, & Cape comfort lieth Northwest, & by North, Southeast, and by South.

Cape comfort. Under the Southermost Island you shall finde good roade for all Northerly windes from the Northwest to the Northeast. From the Southeast part of the 7. Islands, unto the Northwest part of them, are 3. leagues and a halfe.

S. Peters Islands. From the Northwest part of the Islands aforesaid, unto S. Peters Islands, are 11. leagues Northwest.

26 S. Peters Islands rise an indifferent low point, not seeming to be an Island, and as if it had a rattle vpon it.

S. Pauls Islands. S. Pauls Islands lie from S. Peters Islands Northwest and to the Westwards, and betweene them are 6. leagues. Within these Islands there is a faire sandy bay, and there may be found a good roade for Northerly windes.

Cape Sower beere. Cape Sower beere lyeth from S. Pauls Islands Northwest and by West, and betweene them are 5. leagues.

Ribbina. Cape comfort, which is the Island of Kildina, lieth from Cape Sower beere, 6. leagues West Northwest, and it is altogether a bay betweene them seeming many Islands in it.

Cape Bona-venture. From Cape Bonaventure, to Chebe Nauoloch are 10. leagues Northwest, and a litle to the Westwards. Chebe Nauoloch is a faire point, wheron standeth a certaine blacke, like an empytie butte standing a head.

Kegor. From Chebe Nauoloch to Kegor, is 9. leagues and a halfe Northwest, and halfe a point to the Westwards. Kegor riseth as you come from the Eastwards like 2. round homocks standing together, and a faire saddle betweene them.

Doms-haff. 27 It floweth where we roade this Sunday to the Eastwards of Kegor, at a Southeast and by East moone, a full sea: we roade in 15. sadome water within halfe a mile of the shoare: at a Northwest Sunne the mist came downie so thicke, that we were faine to come to an ancre within lesse then a mile of the point that turneth to Doms haff, where we had 33. sadome, and the sounding like to the skurfe of a skalde head.

Wardhouse. 28 Sunday at afternoone, wee came into the Sound of Wardhouse, although it were very mistie. Then I sent a man a shoare to know some newes, and to see whether they could heare any thing of our ships.

Which were the Bona Esperanza, the Bona confidencia and the Philip and Marie. Where of the two first were lost. 29 Tuesday I went on shoare, and dined with the Captaines deputie, who made mee great cheere: the Captaine himselfe was not as yet come from Bergen: they looked for him euery houre, and they said that he would bring newes with him.

At a Northwest and by North sunne we departed from Wardhouse, toward Colmogro.

Colmogro. 30 Wednesday we came to Kegor, where we met with the winde at East Southeast, so that we were faine to go in to a bay to the Westwards of the point Kegor, where a man may moare 2. or 3. small ships, that shall not draw past 11. or 12. foote water, for all windes, an East Northeast winde is the worst. It is a ledge of rocks, that defendeth the Northerly winds fro the place where they moare. When we came into the bay we saw there a barke which was of Droncon, & three or foure Norway peaghes, belonging to Northberne: so when I came a shoare, I met first with the Dutchmen, amongst whom was the Foxrow-masters sonne of Droncon, who tolde me that the Philip and Mary wintered at Droncon, and departed from thence for England in March: and withall he shewed me that the Confidence was lost, and that he had bought her sailes for his ship. Then the Dutch-men caried me to their Boothe, and made me good cheere, where I sawe the Lappians chepen of the said Dutchmen, both silver platters and dishes, spoones, gilt rings, ornaments for girles of silver & gilt, and certaine things made to hang about the necke, with silver chaines belonging to them.

Droncon. The Dutchmen bring hither mightie strong beere, I am certaine that our English double beere would not be liked of the Kerils and Lappians, as long as that would last.

The Whilip and Marie. The Bona Confidencia cast away. Here I sawe the Dutchmen also haue course cloeth, both blew, greene and redde, and sad horse-flesh colour. And hither they bring also Ottars cases and foxe cases, both blacke and redde: our English fore cases are but counterfeites vnto them.

They would not let me vnderstand any of their pyises, but as I otherwise vnderstood they bartered 2. load of silver for 100 of stockfish, and 2. loades is a doller. And the Dutchmen told me, that they

they had made a notable good yeere this present yeere 1557. They tolde me that they should be faine to goe to Wardhouse with one lading, and lay it on land there, and so come againe and fetch another. The Bozrowmasters some told me, that he would go to Amsterdam with his lading of stockfish, who gaue me a barrell of strong beere, and bzeught it in aboard our ship himselfe.

After this I went among the Russes and Kerils, who offered me fish to sell, and likewise the Lappians desired me to looke upon their fish. I made them answer, that I had nowe no wares nor money to barter with them, and said that I came only to see if I might meete with our English ships. Then they desired me that I would come thither the next yeere: I said to them, If I should come the next yeere, I thinke here would not be fish ynough to serue the Dutchmen and vs also. They answered me, that if more ships did resoꝛt thither, there would more people labour to kill and make fish: and further they said, that some of them came thither a fishing 8. weekes iourney with Deere, which Deere will trauaile more speedily then hozles will.

so gainefull trade of fishing at Ilegor.

As I was thus in talke with the Kerils and Lappians, the Emperour of Russia his deputie (who was there to gather the tribute of the Lappians) sent for me to come to his tent, who alter familiar salutations, made me good cheere. He demaunded of me, why none of our ships came thither. I answered him, because we knew not the place before now, neither yet heard of any faire that was kept there. Then said he, If you will come hither, here would more people resoꝛt to kill fish, I thinke it good (said he) that you make a beginning. I tolde him, that by the grace of God the next yeere, one English ship should come thither.

Because I sawe the seruants of the king of Denmarke there also gathering the tribute, I asked Vasilie Pheodorouich the Ruslie deputie, whether the Denmarks would not be a let to vs, if we should come to this Kegor. And he said, no, they should not: for this land is my kings, and therefore be bolde to come hither.

The Kerils and the Lappians solde no fish, untill the said deputie had looked vpon it, and had giuen them leaue to sell. I asked him what wares were best for vs to bring thither, and he said, siluer, pearles, cloth, blew, red, and greene, meale, strong beere, wine, pewter, fere cases, and gold.

Commodities fit for Ilegor.

The Lappians pay tribute to the Emperour of Russia, to the king of Denmarke, and to the king of Sweden. We tolde me that the Riuer Cola is little more then 20. leagues to the Southwards of Kegor, where we should haue great plentie of salmion, if coꝛne were any thing cheape in Russia: for then poore men would resoꝛt thither to kill salmion.

The Dutchmen tolde me that they had made a good yeere of this, but the Kerils complained of it, because they could not sell all their fish, and that which they sold was as pleased the Dutchmen, and at their owne price. I asked the Kerils at what price they sold their fish to the Russes, & they said good cheape: wee sell 24. fishes for 4. altines. I thinke they solde little aboue 20. pence, the 25. fishes this yeere.

The Dutchmen tolde me that the best stockfish is made at Kegor. I sawe at Vasilies tent 7. or 8. iauelins, and halfe a dozen of bowes bent, with their budgets of arrowes, & likewise swordes with other weapons: Other wise I sawe no weapons there.

I was also conuꝛsed to their lodgings, which gathered tribute for the king of Denmarke, where I sawe a paire of bilbowes: and I asked whether they were for the Lappians (if neede were,) and they said no, but onely for their owne company if they should chance to be vntruly.

The Kerils and the Lappians are not to be trusted, for they will steale as well as the Russes, if they may conueniently come by any thing.

Concerning my voyage, because the winde was scant to goe backe againe to Colmogro, I tarried to the Eastwards of the poynt Kegor, and sent to land, and baked two batches of bread in the ovens that the Kerils haue for their pꝛouision.

Instructions giuen to the Masters and Mariners to be obserued in and about this Fleete, passing this yeere 1577. toward the Bay of S. Nicolas in Russia, for this present Race to be made & returne of the same by Gods grace to the port of London, the place of their right discharge, as in the Articles ensuing is deduced.

First, it is accorded and agreed betweene the seuerall pꝛoprietaries and owners, masters and companies of the foure ships, surnamed the Primrose, the Iohn Euangelist, the Anne and the Trinitie, and the Lieutenant, Consuls, assistants and companie of the Marchant aduenturers, that the aboue named foure ships shall in good order and conduct, saile, passe, and trauaile together in one floote, ging, and conserue of societie, to be kept indissolubly and not to be seuered, but vnited within continuall sight, so farre sooth as (by winde & weather) by possibilitie shall or may be be without any separation or departure of one from the other.

2 Item, it is agreed that the good ship named the Primrose, shall be Admirall of this flete, and that Anthony Jenkinson Gentleman, shall be captaine thereof: and that all other the 3. ships shall ensue and follow her in all courtes, and that no course nor waying (in harborough especially) shall be made without advice, consent and agreement of the sayd Captaine, the Master, his mate, and two other officers of the said ship, or of three of them at the least.

3 Item, that the said Anthony is and shall be reputed & taken for Captaine general of the said flete together with all such orders, preeminences, priuiledges and preferments as by the order of seas is due and accustomed to a Captaine during his abode and exercise of the same.

4 It is also ordeined, that if any one or more of the said 3. ships shall be out of sight either before or behinde the Admirall, that then the rest of the ships shall tacke or take off their sailes in such sort as they may meete and come together, in as good order as may be, to the intent to keepe the consoiment exactly in all poynts.

5 It is constituted, that if any ships shall be seuered by mist or darke weather, in such sort as the one cannot haue sight of the other, then and in such case the Admirall shall make sound and noise by drumme, trumpet, horne, gunne or otherwise or meanes, that the ships may come as nigh together, as by safetie and good order they may.

6 It is also to be obserued, that euery day once the other three shippes shall send and come a-boord the Admirall, and there consult and determine of such matter and things as shall be for the assurance of their Nauigation, and most expedition of the same.

7 Item, that notes & entrie be daily made of their Nauigations put in writing & memozy, and that the yong Mariners and apperntices may be taught & caused to learne and obserue the same.

8 It is accorded that the said Captaine shall haue the principall rule and gouernement of the apperntices: And that not onely they, but also all other the sailors, shall be attendant and obedient to him, as of duetie and reason appertaineth.

9 Also that no beere nor byoth, or other liquoz be spilt vpon the balast, or other place of the ship, whereby any amoyance, stinke, or other vnlauiouesnesse shall growe in the shippe to the infection or hurt of the persons in the same.

10 Item, that the Captaine by discretion shall from time to time disship any artificer or English seruicingman or apperntice out of the Primrose into any of the other three ships, and in lieu of him or them, take any such apperntice as he shall thinke conuenient and most meete to serue the benefite of the companie.

11 Item, that great respect be had to the Gunners and Cookes roomes, that all danger and perill of powder and fire may be eschewed and auoyded.

12 Item, that singular care and respect be had to the ports of the ship, aswell in Nauigation as in harborow; and especially in lading and unlading of the shippes, that nothing be lacking or furcharged: and that the bookes may oftentimes be conferred and made to agree in eschument of such losses, as may ensue.

13 Special foresight is to be had, that at the Wardhouse no treacherie, inuasion, or other perill of molestation be done or procured to be attempted to our ships by any kings, princes, or companies, that do unlike this new found trade by seas to Russia, or would let & hinder the same; whereof no small boast hath bene made: which giueth occasion of more circumspection and diligence.

14 If the winde and weather will serue, it is thought good rather to goe by the Wardhouse then to come in and ancre there, lest any male engine, or danger may be the rather attempted against vs, our goods and ships as aboue.

15 It is thought good that Richard Iohnson, late seruant to H. Chancellor, shall be sent home in this next returne, to instruct the company of the state of the Countrey, and of such questions as may be demanded of him, for our better aduertisements and resolutions, in such doubt as shall arise here: and that he shall haue the roome of the Captaine in such sort, as Master Jenkinson is in this present cocket assigned vnto. And if Iohnson can not, may not, nor will not returne and occupie the said place, then any other person to be preferred thereunto, as by the discretion of our said Captaine, with consent of our Agents, shall be thought meete and apt to supply the same.

16 Provided alway, that the ships returning be not disfurnished of one such able man, as shall occupie the Captainship in like order, as is, and hath bene in such case appoynted, as reason and good order requircth.

17 Item that all other former orders, rules, and deuises, made and provided for the good order of our ships, wares, and goods, being not repugnant, contrary or diuerse, to these articles, and the contents of the same, shall be, and stand in full force and effect, to be in all respects obserued and kept of all and euery person and persons, whom the same doth or shall touch or concerne.

In witnesse of the premises faithfully to be obserued and kept, the owners and Masters of the said foure ships, together with the said Captaine, to these seuenteeene articles, contained in two sheetes of paper, haue subscribed their hands. Given in London, the third of May, in the yeere of our Loyd God 1557.

A letter of the Company of the Marchants aduenturers to Russia vnto George Killingworth, Richard Gray, and Henry Lane their Agents there, to be deliuered in Colmogro or els where : sent in the Iohn Euangelist.

After our heartie commendations vnto you and to either of you : your generall 1557.
letter and other particular letters with two bookes of the sale and remainders of our goods, and the buying of ware there with you, we receiued about the ende of November out of the Edward, with heauie newes of the losse of the sayde good shippe and goods at Peislego in Scotland, with the death of Richard Chancelor and his Boy, with certaine of the Embassadours seruantes, and he himselte with nine of his seruants escaped very hardly onely by the power of God : but all his goods and eurs in maner were lost and pilfered away by the Scots, and that that is saued is not yet come to our hands, but we looke for it daily, and it will skant pay the charges for the recouering of it. No remedy but patience : and to pray to God to send vs better fortune hereafter. As touching the receiuing and entertaining of the Embassadour and his retinewe since his coming to England at the king and Queenes Maiesties hands, with the Counsell & Lords of this Realme, and the Marchants that be free in Russia with feasting and beneuolence giuen him, wee referre it to his report and others. The like we thinke haue not bene seene nor shewed here of a long time to any Ambassadour. The Philip and Marie arrived here tenne dayes past : shee wintered in Norway. The Confidence is lost there. And as for the Bona Esperanza, as yet we haue no newes of her. We feare it is wrong with her. By your billes of lading receiued in your generall letters we per-ceiue what wares are laden in them both. Your letters haue no date nor mention where they were made, which were written by Henry Lane, and signed by you George Killingworth and Richard Gray : both it and the other Letters and Bookes came so sore spoiled and broken with water that we cannot make our reckoning by them. You shall vnderstand we haue freighted for the parts of Russia foure good shippes to be laden there by you & your order : That is to say, The Primerose of the burthen of 240. Tunnes, Master vnder God Iohn Buckland : The Iohn E-uangelist of 170. Tunnes, Master vnder God Laurence Roundal : The Anne of London of the burthen of 160. tunnes, Master vnder God Dauid Philly, and the Trinitie of London of the burthen of 140. Tunnes, Master vnder God Iohn Robins, as by their Charter parties may ap-peare : which you may require to see for diuers causes. You shall receiue, God willing, out of the said good ships, God sending them in safety for the vse of the Company, these kinds of wares following, all marked with the general marke of the Company as followeth. 25. fardels containing 207. sorting clothes, one fine violet in graine, and one skarlet, and 40. cottons for wrappers, be-

God to send the said good ships to you in safetie, you are to receiue our said goods, and to procure the sales to our most advantage either for ready money, time or batter: hauing consideration that you doe make good debts, and giue such time, if you giue any, as you may employ and returne the same against the next voyage; and also for seeing that you batter to a profit, and for such wares as be here most vendible, as were, tallowe, traine oyle, hempe and flaxe. Of furies we desire no great plentie, because they be dead wares. And as for felts, we will in no wise you send any. And whereas you haue provided tarre, and as as we suppose, some hempe ready bought, our aduise is, that in no wise you send any of them hither unwrought, because our freight is 4.li. a tunne or little lesse: which is so deare, as it would not beare the charges: and therefore we haue sent you 7. ropemakers, as by the copies of their covenants here inclosed shall appeare. Whom we wil you sit to worke with al expedition in making of cables & ropes of al sorts, from the smallest rope to xii. inches: And that such tarre and hempe as is already brought to the water side, they may there make it out, and after that you settle their worke in Vologhda or Colmogro as you shall thinke good, where their stufte may be nerrest to them: at which place and places you doe assigne them a principall ouerseer aswell to see the deliuerie of the stufte unwrought, as also to take charge of the stufte wrought, & to foresee that neither the parne be burnt in tarring, nor the hempe rotted in the watering; and also to furnish them so with labourers, workemen and stufte, as hereafter when these workmen shall come away, we be not destitute of good workmen, and that these may dispatch as much as possibly they may, doing it substantially: for we esteeme it a principall commoditie, and that the Counsel of England doth well allowe. Let all diligence be vsed, that at the returne of these shippes we may see samples of all ropes & cables if it be possible, and so after to continue in worke, that we may haue good store against the next yeere. Therefore they haue neede to haue a place to worke in, in the winter: and at any hand let them haue helpe ynough to spinne their stufte: for seeing you haue great plentie of hempe there, and at a reasonable price, we trust we shalbe able to bring as good stufte from thence, and better cheape then out of Danske: if it be diligently vsed, and haue a good ouerseer.

Let the chiefest lading of these fourte shippes be principally in were, flaxe, tallowe and traine oyle. And if there be any more wares then these ships be able to take in, then leaue that which is least in value and grossest in stouage vntill the next shipping: for wee doe purpose to ground our selues chiefly vpon these commodities, as were, cables and ropes, traine oyle, flaxe and some linnen parne. As for Halls, Tarre, Hempe, fcatthers, or any such other like, they would not beare the charges to haue any, considering our deere freight. We haue sent you a Skinner to be there at our charges for meate, drinke and lodging, to viewe and see such furies as you shall cheape or buye, not minding neuerthelesse, that you shall charge your selues with many, except those which bee most vendible, as good martens, minuers, otherwise called Lettis, and Hynkes. Of these you may send vs plentie, finding them good and at a reasonable price. As for Sables and other rich furies, they bee not euery mans money: therefore you may send the fewer, vsing partly the discretion of the skinner in that behalfe.

We heare that there is great plentie of Steele in Russia and Tartarie, whereof wee would you sent vs part for an example, and to write your mindes in it what store is to be had: for we heare say there is great plentie, and that the Tartars Steele is better then that in Russia. And likewise we be informed that there is great plentie of Copper in the Emperours Dominions: we would be certified of it what plentie there is, and whether it be in plates or in round flat cakes, and send vs some for an example. Also we would haue you to certifie vs what kinde of wollen cloth the men of Ric and Reuel, and the Poles and Lettoes doe bring to Russia, and send the skantlings of them with part of the lists, and a full aduise of the lengths and breadths, colours and prices, and whether they be strained or not: and what number of them may be vttered in a yeere, to the intent we may make prouision for them for the like sortes, and all other Flemish wares which they bring thither and be most vendible there. And to certifie vs whether our set clothes be vendible there or not: and whether they be rowed and thorne: because oftentimes they goe vnderest. Moreover, we will you send vs of euery commoditie in that Countrey part, but no great quantitie other then such as is before declared. And likewise euery kinde of Lether, whereof wee bee informed there is great store bought yeerely by the Esterlings and Duches for hie Almaine and Germanie.

More, that you doe send vs for prooue a quantity of such earth, hearbes, or what thing soeuer it be, that the Russes do die and colour any kinde of cloth linnen or wollen, Lether or any other thing withall: and also part of that which the Tartars and Turkes doe bring thither, and how it must be vsed in dying and colouring. Moreover, that you haue a speciall foresight in the chusing of your Tallowe, and that it may be well purified and tried, or els it will in one yeere putrefie & consume.

7. Ropemakers sent into Russia.

Cables and Ropes a principall commoditie.

Danske the old chief place for Cables.

Commodities not bearing the charges of long freight.

Furies most vendible.

Steele.

Copper.

Wollen cloth of Ric and Reuel, of Poles and Lettoes.

Russian lether.

Things good to die withall.

Also

Also that you certifie vs the trueth of the waights and measures, and howe they doe answere with ours, and to send vs 3. robes in money, that we may trie the iust value of them.

Also we doe send you in these ships ten yong men that be bound Apprentises to the Companie, whom we will you to appoynt euery of them as you shall there finde most apt and meete, some to keepe accompts, some to buy and sell by your order and Commission, and some to send abroad into the notable Cities of the Countrey for vnderstanding and knowledge. And we will you send vs aduertisement from time to time astwell of the demeanours of our Apprentises which we doe send now, as also of such other as bee already there with you. And if you finde any of them remisse, negligent, or otherwise misle themselves and will not be ruled, that then you doe send him home, and the cause why.

Ten yong men sent into Russia.

And because we doe perceiue the Countrey to be large, and that you haue three households, we doe appoynt Henry Lane to be one of our Agents, and to ioyne with you in all your doings, and to haue like authoritie and power as you George Killingworth and Richard Gray haue: not doubting but you three will so conferre together, as both our Apprentises and others may be appoynted and diuided euery of them to his office, and to that he can best skill of: and you also so diuide your selues euery of you to an house, as by aduertisement one from another, our businesse and trafficke may take good successe. And for diuers considerations, to auoyde many troubles and businesse that might happen; wee haue appoynted that hee which shall abide at Colmogro (which we doe thinke to be most meetest Henry Lane) shall haue with him three such of our yong men, as can best skill in keeping of accompts after the maner of Marchants, that is, by Debitor and Creditor: And that there shall be the place, where our bookes shall be kept: because it is neerer the sea side, where our goods shall be discharged and our ships laden. And the said Henry Lane to be charged with all such goods as we shall discharge there out of our ships, according to our Inuoyces. Which goods are to be sent from Colmogro to Vologhda or to Mosco, or to any other place where you three or two of you do appoynt the to be sold, so that Henry Lane be one. And so from time to time immediately as any thing is sold, doe you certifie the same to Henry Lane, that he may enter it into the Bookes as appertaineth: otherwise he should be too farr behinde in his Bookes at the coming of our ships, when he should send vs the accompt of the whole yeere passed. And we will also that you George Killingworth and Richard Gray doe in the fine of April next send either of you vnto Henry Lane a whole, perfitt, & iust accompt signed with your owne hands of all the goods you haue solde and bought untill that time, and what remaineth unsolde: and also the accompt of all maner costs of wares, and charges of you and the yong men vnder you particularly in such sort as the said accompt may bee with him in Colmogro at the fine of May at the furthest: to the intent that hee may make all our accompts perfitte against the coming of our ships: and in any wise to keepe accompt of euery voyage by it selfe, and not mingle one voyage with another at no hand. And as we will haue you to keepe accompt of euery voyage by it selfe, euen so wee would haue all the whole cosies and charges of euery yeere put into the voyage of that yeere. As the charges of all the last yeere must be put to the accompt of the third voyage: and the charges of this yeere present, must in the fine of April next, be put to the fourth voyage. Not doubting but your wisdom is such, that you will not take it in euill part, that wee doe appoynt Henry Lane to take the accompt of the rest. For we doe it for none other cause, but to keepe a good order in our bookes, that his bookes and ours may by this meanes agree: and hee being the yonger man, may best take paines: and that you doe keepe accompt of euery kinde of wares by it selfe, to the intent wee may perceiue wherein is our most gaine. And also in the making of your returne, in any wise name in your billes of lading, letters, and accompts, what wares doe appertaine to the first, second, and third voyage: and that wee may knowe the same by the numbers or otherwise as you shall thinke good by your wisdomes, putting the charges of the saide wares vnto them, as nigh as you can. And all such money as shall bee made of your goods in any place, wee referre that to your discretion, where it shall remaine untill it bee employed, either at Vologhda, Mosco, or els where. And likewise wee will that Henry Lane doe make in a readinesse about the beginning of Iune euery yeere our whole accompt of the voyage in that yeere passed: in such sort that wee may receiue the same by our shippes: and that wee may plainly perceiue what sales are made, and what remaineth of the first, second, third, and fourth voyage, and what charges haue bene layde out for the sayd voyages, and what wares bee bought, and laden, and what they cost, and for what voyage euery parcell thereof is: and to send vs a copie of the same accompt in euery shipp. And also forasmuch as at this time we haue sent you but small store of wares in comparison of that we haue hope will bee vttered in short space, and yet neuertheless much more then you wrote for, whereby there shall not be sufficient to make any ample returne

The fourth

returne: and understanding that there is great quantitie of goods stayed for our trade there by the Emperour, wee haue moued the Embassadoz that you may haue credite for such quantitie as shall seeme good to you to prouide for our benefite. Which credite if you may by his meanes obtaine, or otherwise haue, we would you bought as much there principally as you may get. For if there be in that countrey so great quantitie, as we be informed there is, it will be the best commodity we may haue: for hauing that wholly in our hands, we may serue our owne countrey and others. Therefore seeing the Emperour doth minde, that such commodities as bee in his dominions shall not passe to Rie and Rebel and Poland as they haue done, but bee reserved for vs: therefore we must so lay for it, that it may not ly vpon their hands that haue it to sell, alwayes hauing consideration in the price and time as our next dispatch may correspond. Whereof you may send a certaine aduise, as well what you shall receiue of credit, and to what quantitie, as also what wares are remaining in your hands: which together well considered, you may aduertise vs as well for how many hundred tonnes we must prouide freight against the next yeere, as also what sortes, quantities and qualities of wares we shall send you, as well to pay your credite, as also to furnish the next aduenture after. Of this we would be answered largely. For we trust by this time you are able to giue full instructions of the state of the countrey: according to the articles of your first Commissions, and what commodities doe principally abound there with their prices: and likewise what of our commodities haue most utterance there, and what prices will be giuen for them there: and all other things requisite and necessary to be knowne.

The olde traffike of Russia to Rie, Ruel and Poland turned to Saint Petersburg.

The articles of their first Commission giuen 1555.

Leonard Brian sent to search our Pewe in the North parts of Russia.

2. Coopers sent into Russia.

Also we doe understand that in the Countrey of Permia or about the riuer of Pechora is great quantitie of Pewe, and likewise in the Countrey of Vgory, which we be desirous to haue knowledge of, because it is a speciall commodity for our Realme. Therefore wee haue sent you a yong man, whose name is Leonard Brian, that hath some knowledge in the wood, to shew you in what sorte it must be cut and clouen. So our minde is if there be any store, and that it bee found to be good, that there you doe prouide a good quantitie against the next yeere for the coming of our shippes: and if there can bee found none that will serue for our purpose, then you may let the sayd Leonard Brian to any other businesse that you shall finde most fittest for him, vntill the returne of our ships the next yeere. For he is hired by the yeere onely for that purpose. We doubt not but that hee shall doe you good seruice there, for hee hath good knowledge of wares of that Countrey: for his bringing vp hath bene most in Danske, and hath good understanding in making of Ropes and Cables. Also we doe send you two Coopers to remaine there with you at our finding for mcate and drinke and lodging to make in a readinesse all such caske as shalbe needfull for traine oyle, tallowe, or any thing else. One of them may goe with Leonard Brian to cut and cleue such Pewe as he shall like there. And because we be not sure what timber they shall finde there to make Caske, we haue laden in these ships 140. tunnes emptie Caske, that is 94. tunnes shaken Caske and 46. tunnes whole, and ten thousand hoopes, & 480. wretches of twigs: they may be doing with that till they can prouide other timber, which we would be glad to heare of. They haue an example with them of the bignesse of the Caske they shall make. Moreover, all such Buttes and Hoggeheads as may be found to serue we will shalbe filled with Traine Oyle.

Also we charge you that you suffer no goods nor marchandies of any persons being not free of the Company, and of the account of the Company to be laden in any wise in our ships either now or at any time hereafter: except the Emperour or Embassadour minde to send any thing to the King and Queenes Maesties, or to any noble man, or to the Marchants of the Company: Nor likewise that you suffer any goods that goe in these ships to be brought on land there, except the Ambassadors goods, and the Physicians & Apothecaries, and others that hee hath with him, who carie no Marchandise. And because our ships be freighted by the great, it shalbe very needfull that you do appoynt certaine to see the romaging of the ships, and to giue the master or Boatwaine, or him that will take vpon him to romage, a good reward for his labour to see the goods well romaged. If it be iii. d. or iiij. d. the tunne, it shall not be amisse. For if it be not substantially well looked vnto, it may bee a great deal of money out of our wayes.

Also because we reckon that from the Mosco will bee alwayes better conueyance of letters to vs by land: our minde is that from time to time as occasion shall serue, our Agents shall write to him that shall lie at Mosco of all things that shall passe, that hee may giue vs large instructions, as well what is solde and bought, as also what lading we shall take, and what quantitie and kinde of goods we shall send. For hitherto we haue had but a slender aduise, moze like a bill to serue a Chapman, then for quantitie of wares to serue a kingdome. For we must procure to utter good quantitie of wares, especially the commodities of our Realme, although we affoord a good pennyworth, to the intent to make other that haue traded thither, wearie, and so to bring our selues and our commodities in estimation, and likewise to procure to haue the chiefe commodities of that countrey in our hands, as ware and such others, that other nations may be serued by vs and at our hands. For wee doe vnderstand that the greatest quantitie of ware that cometh to Danske, Lubeck, and Hambourgh, cometh out of Russia. Therefore if wee should buy part, and they also buy, it would raise the price there, and would be little woorth here. And all such letters of importance and secrecie as you doe send by land for any wares or other wise, you must write them in Cyphers, after the order of a booke sent you in the shippes: alwayes taking good heede in placing of your letters and cyphers, that wee may vnderstand them by the same booke heere, and to send them in such sort, that we may haue them here by Christmas or Candlemas, if it be possible. And because you cannot so certainly aduertise vs by letters of your doings, but some doubt may arise, whereof we would most gladly be certified: our mind is therefore that with these ships you send vs home one such young man as is most expert in knowledge of that countrey, and can best certifye vs in such questions as may be demanded, whome we will remit vnto you againe in the next ships. We thinke Arthur Edwards will be fittest for that purpose: neuerthelesse vse your discretion in that matter.

As touching our goods that were robbed and pilfered out of our ships at Colmogro and Vollogda we trust by this time they are restored againe, and the malefactors so punished that other may take example for doing the like, other wise it will be an euill president. Moreover, wee doe perceiue that Richard Gray doeth buy masses to send into England, they will not quit the costes, except we had a ship of purpose for them. And likewise that Steuen Burrow is returned from his discouerie with the Serchthrift, and wintereth at Colmogro, and is minded to set forth in the beginning of Iune next to seeke the riuer of Ob. We pray God to speede him well, and trust to haue him here in England this yeere to bring vs good newes.

The voyag of Steuen Burrowe for the discouerie of the riuer of Ob.

We doe perceiue there is a riuer found about the mouth of S. Nicholas Bay that hath thirteen foot vpon the barre at a lowe water, and is as neere Colmogro as S. Nicholas: which will bee a great pleasure vnto vs. We will that Steuen Burrowe doe proceed on his voyag to discouer. Also we haue sent you one Anthonie Jenkinson Gentleman, a man well trauelled, whom we mind to vse in further traueilling, according to a Commission deliuered him, subscribed by master Anthonie Huse and others. Therefore we will you deliuer him one or more of such painfull young men as he shal thinke meetest for his purpose: and likewise such money and wares as he shal thinke best to take with him. He must haue forty pounds a yeere for foure yeeres, to be paid him by the halfe yeere, or as he wil demaund it of you, so let him haue it from Easter last. Also the prices of wares here at this present are, bale flaxe twenty pound the packe and better, tow flaxe twentie eight pound the hundred, traine oyle at nine pound the tunne, ware at foure pound the hundred, tallow at sixtene shillings the hundred, cables and ropes very deare: as yet there are no shippes come out of Danske.

Mr. Anthonie Jenkinson his first traualle intended for Casthay by the Caspian sea and Boghar.

Kept vntill the tenth day of this present. As this day came the goods out of Scotland that were recovered out of the Edward Bonauenture: and now we doe perceiue that the caske that the trayne oyle came in, is verie good, and much better then ours. Therefore our minde is, that you shall lade it all in such barrells of the bigger sort as you laded in the Edward, and no long barrells nor small. And that caske that wee haue sent may serue for the Tallowe or any other ware that is not leakage. Neuerthelesse, this voyage you must take such as you can get.

Good caske made in Russia.

Also if the Emperour bee minded to deliuer you any summe of money, or good Ware at as reasonable a price as you may buye for readie money, wee will that you shall take it and lade it for our accomptes, and to come at our aduenture, and hee to be payed at the returne of the shippes in Velucts, Sattens, or any other kinde of silke, or cloth of golde, cloth of tissie, or according as his Commission shall bee that hee shall sende vs in the shippes, and according to such paterines as hee shall send. Wee doe not finde the Ambassadour now at the last so conformable to reason as wee had thought wee shoulde. Hee is very mistrustfull, and thinke heuerie man will beguile him. Therefore you had neede to take heede howe you haue to doe with him or with any such, and to make your bargaines plaine, and to set them downe in writing. For they be subtil people, and doe not alwayes speake the truerth, and thinke other men to be like themselves. Therefore we would haue none of them to send any goods in our shippes at any time, nor none to come for passengers, vntill the Emperour doe make a bargain with you, as is aforesaid, for his owne person.

Also we charge you not to suffer any of our nation to send any wares to their wiues or friends in any of our ships: but to take their money there to be paid heere by the companie and not otherwise: and to haue consideration how you doe take the robe. For although we doe rate it after sixtene shillings eight pence of our money, yet it is not worth past 12. or 13. shillings sterling.

Bozeour, you had neede to sende newe accomptes, for them that came in the Edward bee marred and tozned, so that we can make no reckoning by them: and likewise to write vs a perfect note of all the goodes which you received the last voyage out of the Edward, and heerein not to faile,

A Letter of Master Thomas Hawtrey to the worshipfull Master Henrie Lane Agent at Colmogro, written in Vologda
the 31. of Ianuarie 1557.

VWorshipfull Sir, heartie commendations premised. These may bee to aduertise you, that yester day the thirtieth of this present came hither Robert Best, and brought with him two hundred robes, that is, one hundred for this place, and one hundred for you at Colmogro. As for hempe which is here at two robes and a halfe the berconite, master Gray hath written to buy no more at that price: for Iohn Sedgewicke hath bought for sixe or seuen hundred robes worth at Nouogrode for one robe and a halfe the berconite, and better cheape: and white Nouogrode flaxe is there at three robes the berconite. I trust hee will doe much good by his going thither. As I doe vnderstand, Richard Iohnson is gone to Nouogrode with money to him, I doubt not but Master Gray hath aduertised you of all their doings, both at the Mosco and at Nouogrod. And touching our doings heere, you shall perceiue that wee haue solde wares of this fourth voyage for one hundred and fourtie robes, besides fiftie robes of the second and third voyage since the giuing vp of my last account, and for wares of the Countrey, you shall vnderstand that I haue bought tried and vntried for 77. robes foure hundred podes of tried tallowe, besides foure hundred podes that I haue giuen out money for, whereof God graunt good receipt when the time cometh, which is in Lent. And in browne flaxe and hempe I haue bought seuentene berconites, sixe podes and sixtene pound, which cost 28. robes, elcuen almes two pence. And as for other kindes of wares I haue bought none as yet. And for mastes to be provided, you shall vnderstand that I wrote a letter to Torma the 28. of this present for fiftie mastes, to wit, for 25. of fiftene fathoms, and 25. of fourtene fathoms, to be an arshine and a halfe at the small ende. And more, I haue written for 30. great trees to be two arshines and a halfe at the small end, and for the other that were provided the last yeere, I trust they shall be sent downe in the spring of the yeere. And as concerning the Ropemakers, you shall vnderstand that their abiding place shall bee with you at Colmogro, as I doe thinke Master Gray hath aduertised you. For, as Roger Bontinge Master of the woorkes doeth say, there is no place more meete for their purpose then with you: and there it will be made with lesser cost, considering that the pale is the one halfe of it: which is to set one pale more to that, and so for to couer it ouer, which as they say, will be but little cost. They doe pray that it may bee made sixtene foote broade, and one hundred and eightie fathoms long: and that in the midde way twentie foote from the pale towards the water side there may be a house made to tarre in, standing alone by it selfe for danger of fire. The Tarre house that they would haue made, is to bee fiftene fathoms long, and ten fathoms broade, and they would that house should be made first: for I thinke they will not tarre before they come there. And farther they desire that you will provide for as much tarre as you may, for heere wee haue small store, but when the time cometh that it shoulde be made, I will provide as much as I can here, that it may bee sent downe when the Nasade cometh. The stuffe that they haue ready spanne is about five thousand waight, and they say that they trust to haue by that time they come downe yarne ynough to make 20. cables. As concerning a copie of the Alphabet in cyphers Master Gray hath written hither that Robert Austen had one, which he willed that he shoulde deliuer to you. Thus I surcease, beseeching God to preserve you in health, and to send you your hearts desire.

A Letter

A Letter of Master Richard Gray one of the first Agents of the Moscouie companie to Master Henrie Lane at Mosco, written in Colmogro the 19. of Februarie 1558.

1558

Worshipfull Sir, after heartie commendations &c. You shall vnderstand that this Lent committly to Lampas such a number of men of diuers nations with wares, as hath not bene scene these ten peeres. Thither come many out of Vgori: therefore I would haue bene there my selfe, and also haue receiued such money as is owing vs in wares by Kerill his brother and Oles Boscouo. For as you well know, thence they will goe with their wares to the Mosco, and make vs payment with delays, as they haue done these other peeres past. Colobone and his partner be departed towards Lampas with seuen sledges laden with victuals. Others also are gone to that Part. As touching the bringing of money with you, it will bee good, for I assure you since our coming to this countrey haue not so many persons gone to the Sea, as will doe this peere. Trusting that God will send good store of traine oyle, I will cause as much calke to bee in a readinesse as I can, if you shall thinke it meete to send some money before. All our olde hempe is spunne and wrought in tenne cables from fifteene ynches to ten the least, and thirreue Haulers from sixe ynches to three ynches: and all may weigh white eight and twenty thousande pounde weight and byward. There is in hempe ockam five thousand pound two hundred weight in twelue sakes or the least: the flate that came downe in the Nassadaes with those seuen podes that came last is all spunne with a good part of that hempe that came last. God send more shortly, for all that is here and that is coming in the three other sledges, will bee dispatched by the fourth weeke in Lent. Within these few dayes I bought thirteene podes, seuen pound of hempe that cost two robes, twenty eight alines, foure pence, which together with that that was bought before, shall bee laide in dipping and soundfug lines, for it is very good. There are spent aboute fiftie barrells of tarre alreadie: you shall vnderstand that these eight workemen will spinne and lay aboute fourscore and tenne thousand pound of hempe, so it bee dyelled readieto their hands, hauing two to turne the wheelles, and two to winde vp. Therefore I haue agreed with these two boyes to serue the worshipfull companie foure peeres a piece. One of them windeth vp and is very apt to spinne: therefore I will haue two other young men Russes to spinne, if they can finde good sureties for their truth. I haue bene in hand with these two young men that came out of the Trinitie, and they with me, but vnder seuen pound a peere they will not serue, nor Thomas Bunting that was Roger Bunting his seruant. Therefore I would haue thir Russes at the least to spinne, five of them will be as good as these three, and will not be so chargeable all, as one of these would be. I thinke it were good that our Nassada were somewhat strengthened in her floore on both sides with planks of fine or sixe ynches thicke, from the steeune to the sterne, as I haue written to Thomas Hawtreu at Vologda. Also if you shall so thinke meete; your ware and tallowe shall bee laden in two Dosnicks, for they bee meete to goe aboard the shippes: I doe intend to set vp an house at Borosleua ouer against the place whereas the shippes shall ride, your aduise therein I expect, it shall not cost aboute thre robes, and yet if we will, there shall be two warme roomes in it. As for other matter at this present I haue not to trouble you withall, and if it would please you I would be glad to heare some good newes of Master Ienkinson. Thus Iesus be with you and be his guide.

1558

Mercy premised vnto your worshipps, with commendations &c. It may please you to be aduertised, by my last I sent fro Smolefco, which I trust you haue receiued in other letters to

diuers of our English men, wherein I certified you of my long stayning there, as also of my departure from thence, and howe that I had hired a Tovar to bring mee to Danske. We came to a certaine village on Satterday the five and twentieth of Februarye, and there remained that night and Sunday to refresh our hoxses, intending to haue gone away on Monday early. But on Saturday at night one of his neighbours departed to Tirwill, and there declared to the Captaine howe that at such a place there was a Dutch man that was come from the Mosco, and woulde ride to Danske, saying, for the one, I cannot tell what he is. The Captaine incontinent rode to the King to shewe him thereof, so that without any delay there was sent out for mee one of the Gentlemen of the Kings house, and one of the Heltnicks of the Towne with five Officers to take mee. They came thither in the night about midnight, and there apprehended mee and tooke all that I had from me: they left mee nothing but my clothes to put on my backe, and so brought mee to Tirwill to the Captaines house, where befoze I dyed, I had a paye of fetters clapped on my legges, wherewithall I sate vntill it was Sunday in the Easterweeke. On which day, after long and earnest calling to the Captaine as hee rode by the windowe, hee commaunded the Marshall that mine prons shoulde be taken off, but no worde I could heare when I should be deliuered out of captiuitie till it was Saint George his day: on which day I was had befoze the Marshall, who declared vnto me that the Kings Maiestie had shewed his mercie and goodnesse towardes mee: for his pleasure was that I should be deliuered out of prison to depart into England, but no way else. So after I had giuen thanks for the Kings Maiesties goodnesse shewed vnto me, I desired him that he woulde be a meane that I might haue the remaynder of such thinges as were taken from me restored vnto me againe. Hee made me answere, that I might thanke God that I escaped with my head, and that if euer there came any more of vs through the land, they shoulde not so doe. The weeke befoze Easter they deliuered mee my Corobia againe with all thinges that were therein. They tooke from mee in money nine Hungers gylderns in golde, five shillings foure pence in Lettoes money, fourtie Altines in Russe money, whereof twentie and more were for tokens, halfe an anell and a quarter of Master Doctor Standishes, with his golde ring. Your two pieces of money (Master Gray) that you sent to your wife and daughter, with my two pieces of Boghary money. Of all this I had eight Hungers gylberns deliuered mee the thirde weeke of mine imprisonment to paye for my charges, which stode mee in a Doller a weeke. So that at the day of my deliuerie I had but three gylbernes left me. For the rest I made a supplication to the Captaine and had the like answere giuen mee as the Marshall gaue me. So that all the rest of the thinges befoze writtten are lost, and no recouerie to bee had, which grieueth me more for the tokens sakes then doeth mine eight weeks imprisonment. They haue also my sword, my bootes, my bowe and arrowes that I bought at Smolensco, which cost me foure marks, my sled, my felt, the combold, a booke of the fflowres of godly prayers, and my booke wherein my charges were writtten. Of all these I can get nothing againe, not so much as my two bookes.

After I had remayned there five and thirtie dayes, I was had befoze the Captaine by into a great chamber to bee examined for letters and of the cause of my comming through the Countrey. In the Captaines companie was one of the Lordes of Danske. They demanded of mee where my letters were, I declared vnto them that I had none: your Officers (sayd I) tooke me when I was in my bedde, they searched mee and tooke all that I had from mee, if there be any they shall finde them among my stufte which they haue. They asked mee then, for what cause I went home ouer lande: I declared vnto them, that the Winter being a warme season, and hauing intelligence that The frozen Sea was not much frozen, and supposing this Sommer it woulde be nauigable, I was onely sent to prouide a Shippe to bee sent to passe the sayde Seas to discover Carai: which if God graunted wee might doe, it woulde not onely bee a commoditie to the Realme of Englande, but vnto all Christian landes, by the riches that might bee brought from thence, if the histories bee true that are writtten thereof. Much other communication I had with them concerning the same voyage. Then hee demanded of mee what wares wee brought into Russia, and what wee carried from thence. I declared the same vnto them. Then they burdened mee, that wee brought thither thousandes of ordnance, as also of harreis, swordes, with other munitions of warre, artificers, copper, with many other thinges: I made them answere, that wee had brought thither about one hundred shittes of maple, such olde thinges newe scowzed as no man in Englande woulde weare. Other talke they had with mee concerning the trade of Moscouia too long to commit to writing.

At my comming hither heere were Ambassadors from the townes of Danske, Lubeck, and

Doctor Standish the Cinperours Phil-sition.

and Hamburg, as also out of Liefland to desire this king to bee their Captaine and head in their intended voyage, which was to stoppe all such shippes as shoulde goe out of England for Moscouia. Whereunto the King graunted, and immediately they departed to prepare their shippes. So that I am affraide that either these our enemies, or the great warres that we haue with France and Scotland will be an occasion that you shall haue no shippes at Colmogro this yeece.

To conclude, although I haue no tokens to deliuer them, that the tokens taken from me were sent vnto, yet I will declare vnto them that I had tokens for them, with the mischance. And thus I commit you to Amightie God with the rest of the companie, who keepe you in health to his holy will and pleasure.

By yours to commaund

THOMAS ALCOCKE.

18. of September, 1559.

Worshipfull Sir, after my heartie commendations premised with most desire to God of your welfare and prosperous successe in all your affaires. It may please you to bee aduertised that the fourth of this present I arriued with Richard Iohnson and Robert Iohnson all in health, thanks bee to God. Wee haue bene as farre as Boghar, and had proceeded farther on our voyage toward the lande of Cathay, had it not bene for the vncessant and continuall warres, which are in all these byutall and wilde countreys, that it is at this present impossible to passe, neither went there any Carauan of people from Boghar that way these three yeeres. And although our iourney hath bene so miserable, dangerous, and chargeable with losses, charges and expences, as my penne is not able to expresse the same: yet shall wee bee able to satisfie the worshipfull Companies mindes, as touching the discouerie of The Caspian Sea, with the trade of merchandise to bee had in such landes and countreys as bee thereabout adiacent, and haue brought of the wares and commodities of those Countreies able to answere the principall with profite: wishing that there were vterance for as great a quantitie of kersies and other wares as there is profite to bee had in the sales of a small quantitie, (all such euill fortunes bee- ing escaped as to vs haue chaunced this present voyage,) for then it woulde be a trade worthe to bee followed. Sir, for that I trust you will be here shortly (which I much desire) I will deferre the discouerie with you at large vntill your comming, as well touching my trauel, as of other things. Sir, Iohn Lucke departed from hence toward England the seuenth of this present, and intendeth to passe by the way of Sweden, by whom I sent a letter to the worshipfull Companie, and haue written that I intend to come downe vnto Colmogro to be readie there at the next shipping to imbarke my selfe for England, declaring that my seruice shal not be needfull here, for that you are a man able to serue their worships in greater affaires then they haue heere to doe, so farre as I perceiue. As touching the Companies affaires heere, I referre you to Christopher Hudsons letters, for that I am but newly arriued. Hauing here but litle businesse to doe, I send you Richard Iohnson to helpe you there in your affaires. Thus giuing you most heartie thanks for my wench Aura Soltana, I commend you to the tuition of God, who send you health with hearts desire.

Master Henrie Lane, Christopher Hudson, and Thomas Glouer sent in their seuenth voyage to Saint Nicholas with three ships; the Swallowe, the Philip and Marse, and the Iesus the fifth of May, 1560.

After our heartie commendations to you. The twelfth day of the last moneth here arriued in safetie, thanks be to God, our two ships, & by them we receiued your letters & inuoyces very well

Tallowe. well perceiuing what you haue laden in them. The tallowe came euill conditioned and broken, by reason it came in Corrobias, wee lose and spoyle more then the Caske will cost; and much of this tallowe is verie euill, blacke, soft and putrified. Touching the Ware, as yet wee knowe not howe the weight will rise, by reason that some of it was lost in the barkes. The weight of the last peeres ware did not rise so well as the other peeres before it did. There had neede good heede to bee taken in the weighing. Also much of this Ware haue a great foote and is not so faire ware as in times past wee haue had. You must cause the foote to bee taken off before you doe weigh it, or else you must seeke to haue a good allowance for it. The traine

Ware. Oyles which you laden this peere came well conditioned, and the caske was good and of a good sile. But if they were made a little bigger it were the better, for they be not hogshreds. You haue written to vs to send you caske which is not heere to be had, neither doe wee thinke it so best if it were heere, considering it must goe either shaken and bounde vp, or else emptie, which will bee pesterable, and likewise will thinke and drie, and not be fitte to lade oyles in. Therefore our minde is, you shall cause so much caske to bee made there of the sile of hogshreds as will serue both for your oyles and tallowe, and let them be well trimmed with pitch on the heads and seames, and stand full of water three or foure dayes before you put Oyles in them. Your Cowper may bee ouerseer to them that make them, that they be well hooped and cleere tymber without knottes, the woofst caske you may put the tallowe in. Wee that seech the filling of the oyles had neede to looke well to it, for there was much water in this that came nowe. Wee perceiue you haue bought and haue in a readinesse one hundred and fourtie tunnes of oyles, and that if neede be you may haue more store. Wherefore we doe minde to send you shipping for three hundred tunnes and bywards, because we would haue this next Sommer as great a returne as you can of the commodities of that Countrey, as also such of our wares as you haue that are not vendible, or will not be solde or bartered, because we would haue a full knowledge and state of our accounts. The Sables which you sent this yeere be very base, among them all we could not make one principall timber: we haue alwayes written unto you to send them that bee good or else none. The Woluerings were indifferent, and some of the wolues, the rest verie base, the Lusernes but meane, the Lettes not so large skinned as we haue had: the best is, they were of a new death. As for the Ermines, they cost more there with you, then we can sell them for here. Therefore buy no more of them, nor of Squirrels, for wee lost the one halfe in the other. The wares that we would haue you prouide against the coming of the shippes are, Ware, Tallowe, traine Oyles, Flaxe, Cables and Ropes, and furrer, such as we haue written to you for in our last letters by the shippes: and from henceforth not to make any great prouision of any rich furrer except principall Sables & Lettes: for now there is a Proclamation made that no furrer shall be worne here, but such as the like is growing here within this our Realme. Also we perceiue that there might be a great deal of tallowe more prouided in a peere then you send. Therefore our minde is, you should enlarge somewhat more in the price, and to send us if you can three thousand podes a peere: for we doe most good in it. And likewise the Russes, if you would giue them a reasonable price for their wares, would be the willing to buy and sell with you, and not to carie so much to Nouogrode as they doe, but would rather bring it to Vologda to you, both Ware, Tallowe, Flaxe, Hemp, and all kinde of other wares fitte for our Countrey. Our minde is you should prouide for the next shipps five hundred Loth hives, of them that be large and faire, and thickest in hand, and to be circumspect in the choosing, that you buy them that bee killed in season and well dyed and whole. If they bee good we may sell them here for sixteene shillings and better the piece, wee would haue the whole skinned, that is, the necke and legges withall, for these that you sent now lacke their neckes and legges. Neuertheless for this time you must sende them as you may get them: if you coulde finde the meanes that the haire might bee clipped off them, they would not take so much roome in the shippes as they doe. We perceiue by your letters that the prices of Ware doe rise there with you, by reason that the Poles and Lifelanders doe trade into Russia by licence: which, if there shoulde bee peace betweene them, would bee an occasion that all other commodities in Russia would rise to a bigger price, and not bee sufficient to serue them and vs too, and likewise would bring downe there the prices of our commodities. Therefore we thinke it good you should make a supplication to the Emperour in the name of The Companie to returne the trade from Rye and Reuel to vs, especially for such wares as wee doe buy: promising that wee will bee bounde to take them at a reasonable price, as wee haue bought them in times past: and likewise that wee will bring to them such wares of ours, as are thought fitte for the Countrey, and to sell them at such reasonable prices as wee haue done. If this shoulde not come to passe, wee might be out of hope of doing any good by the trade there: but that we haue a further hope of some good trade to be found out by Maſter Antonie Ienkinſon : by reaſon we doe perceiue by your letters, that raw ſilke is as plentiful in Perſia, as ſilke is in Ruſſia : beſide other commodities that may come from thence. Wee vnderſtand by your letters that you be at a point with the Ruſſe for the Ware, Tallow, and Crane oyles that he ſhipped the laſt yere for 311 robes 20 altimes, which is well: although much be not gotten by it, but becauſe they ſhould not vnderſtand our reckonings. We much maruel what you mean to buy Seale ſkins and canne them. All that you haue ſent in times paſt lie here vnſold, and will yeelde no money. If you ſend 100 of them tawed with the hair on, they will bee ſold; or elſe not. In our ſhippe we will ſend you ſuch things as you write to haue for the ropers: and wee would they ſhould make moze ſtoze of ſmall cables and ropes, as cables of 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, inches. For theſe great cables be not for euery man; and the greateſt cables bee not beſt ſad: and likewiſe ſmall ropes for ſhroudes, ſhoes, and other ſmall tackeling: and that you looke better to the ſpinning of their yarne that it be euen and well tarred. The ſables that you doe mind to ſend vs let them be principall and fayre, and not paſt foure or ſiue timbars. For they will not be ſo commonly woꝛne here as they haue bin with noble men: and likewiſe of Luſerns ſend ſeue and principall good. We mind to ſend you in our ſhippes 100 tunnes of ſalte. And becauſe we perceiue that ballaſt is hardly to be had at our lading place there with you, we would you ſhould haue in a readineſſe 100 tunnes of the white ſtones whercof you ſent vs home an example two yeres paſt. And likewiſe to haue in a readineſſe maſters of all ſortes for our ſhippes: for we know not what neede wee ſhall haue of them. The byinger hercof is Thomas Alcock, he could not be ſuffered the the laſt yere to paſſe thꝛough Poland. And as we wrote vnto you in our ſhippes, hee is our ſervant for yeres: And for that we know him to be honeſt, true and painefull, our mind is he ſhalbe placed where he may do beſt ſervice. We doth know the commodities and diſcommodities of all kinde of wares which you doe ſend vs. Therefore we would you ſhould crede his ſayings both in quantitie of wares and goodnes, as alſo wherin is moſt our proſit. We ſee by your letters that your opinion is that the ropemakers ſhould remaine there two yeres moze; and that you haue pꝛouided great plentie of hempe, which we are content withall. But as yet we haue ſold none of our cables nor halſers, neither is the pꝛooſe of them known; becauſe the firſt you ſent vs were made of ſilke, which are woꝛth no money: for after they be once wet they will rotte and moulder away like moſſe. And thoſe which you ſent vs now laſt, by miſfortune there with you at the lading were wetted and fretted in many places, and haue loſt their colour: by means whercof they be not ſo vendible as if they had come well conditioned. Of an hard beginning we truſt God will ſend vs a good ending. We hope in your next letters to heare good newes of the proceedings of Maſter Antonie Ienkinſon. We perceiue by his letters that Aſtracan is not ſo good a Mart towne as the ſame hath gone of it: and maruell much that round pewter ſhould be ſo good, and good chepe there, and from whence it ſhould come. And whereas you write that you will come for England in our next ſhippes, we would gladly haue you to remaine there vntill the next yere following, for the better inſtruction of our ſervants there; who haue not had ſo long time of continuance for the language, and knowledge of the people, countrey, and wares as you haue had. Neuertheleſſe if you will needs come away, we haue no doubt, but that you will leaue good order with our ſervants there, namely with Chriſtopher Hodſon and Thomas Glouer, whom we appoint to remaine there as Agents in your roome, till further order bee taken: not doubting but that they will vſe themſelues ſo diſcretely and wiſely in all their doings, as ſhall be to the woꝛthip and benefite of this company. And as we haue a good hope in them that they will be carefull, diligent and true in all their doings: ſo haue we no leſſe hope in all the reſt of our ſervants there, that they will bee not onely obedient to them (conſidering what roome they be in) but alſo will be carefull, painefull, diligent, and true euery one in his roome and place for the benefite and proſite of the company: That hereafter in the abſence of others they may be called and placed in the like roome there or elſewhere. And if you find any to be diſobedient and ſubboꝛne, and will not be ruled; wee will you ſhall ſend him home in our ſhippes: who ſhall find ſuch ſmall fauour and friendſhip during the time that he hath to ſerue, as by his diſobedience and euill ſervice hee hath deſerued. And whereas Chriſtopher Hodſon hath written to come home, as partly he hath good cauſe, conſidering the death of his father and mother: yet in regard that Sir George Barne and the Ladie his wife were his ſpecial friends in his abſence, we doubt not but that he will remain in the roome, which we haue appointed him, if you doe not tarye and remaine there, till farther order be taken: and for his ſervice and paines hee ſhall be conſidered, as reaſon is, as friendly as if his friends were liuing. Thus we truſt you will take ſuch order the one to remaine at the Moſco, and the other at Colmogro, or elſewhere, as moſt neede is. Thomas Alcocke is deſirous to be in the Moſco: neuertheleſſe you ſhall find him reaſonable to ſerue where he may doe moſt good. The 62 robes which you receiued of Iohn Boucher we haue payed him here, and also the 8 robes, which you receiued the yere befoze of Christopher Rose, and the money which you receiued moze of George Burton, for the which we haue you our debtozs. Thus we rest, referring that which is here omitted to the report of the byinger: and so God haue you in his keeping. Also we wold that you should send vs in our shippes 200 hofse-clothes moze. The things befoze witten wee would that you should let our seruants see and reade, to the intent they may perceiue our mindes,

Another letter to the foresaid parties. 1560.

This letter befoze witten is the copie of one sent you by Thomas Alcock, trusting that hee was with you long since. The 26 day of the last moneth we receiued a letter from him, dated in Stockholme in Sweden the 14 day of January, and we perceiue by his letter that hee had talked with a Dutch man that came lately from the Mosco, who informed him that our friend Master Antony Ienkinson was returned to the Mosco in September last past, but how farre he had beene, or what he had done, he could not tell. Also he wrote that one Iohn Lucke a Joyner was taken by the Liefelanders, and put in prison. As yet wee haue not heard from the sayd Iohn Lucke, nor know not whether he be released out of prison or not. We suppose that by him you wrote some letter which as yet is not come to our hands: so that we thinke hee is yet in prison, or otherwise dispatched out of the way. The fifteenth day of December wee receiued a letter from Christopher Hodson, dated in the Mosco the 29 of Iuly, by the way of Danske: which is in effect a copie of such another receiued from him in our shippes. You shal vnderstand that we haue laden in thre good shippes of ours these kind of wares following: to wit, in the Swallowe of London, Master vnder God Steuen Burrow, 34 fardels No 136 broad hofse clothes, and foure fardels No 58 Hampshire Kersies: and 23 pipes of ballards and seckes, and 263 pieces of raisins and 4 hogsheds No 154 pieces of round pewter, and ten hogsheds and poncheons of munes, and one dyfatte with Almonds. And in the Philip and Marie, Master vnder God Thomas Wade, 25 fardels No 100 broad clothes, and thre fardels No 42 Hampshire Kersies, and thirte pipes of seckes and ballards, and 100 pieces of raisins. And in the Iesus of London, Master vnder God Arthur Petre, 10 fardels No 40 broad hofse clothes, and twenty seven pipes of ballards and seckes, as by the Inuices here withinclosed may appeare: Also you shall receiue such necessities as you did write to bee sent for the rope makers: trusting that you shall haue better successe with them which you shall send vs in these ships, then with the rest which you haue sent vs yet: for we as yet haue sold none of them. And whereas we wrote vnto you in our former letter, that we would send you a hundred tunnes of salte, by reason it is so deare here we doe send you but nine tunnes and a halfe, for it cost here ten pence the bushell the first penic: namely in the Swallow 6 tunnes and a halfe, in the Philip and Marie one tunne and a halfe, and in the Iesus one tunne and a halfe. The 4 hogsheds of round pewter goe in the Swallow and in the Philip and Marie No 154 pieces, as is aforesaid. We send you thre ships, trusting that you haue provided according to our former writing good stowe of lading for them. If yee haue moze wares then will lade the ships, let it be Traine oyles that you leaue behinde: the price is not here so good as it was: it is worth here 9 pound the tunne. We thinke it good you should let the smallest ship bring as much of the traine as she can carry: And that the masters of the ships doo looke wel to the romaging, for they might bring away a great deale moze then they doe, if they would take paine in the romaging: and bestowe the traine by it selfe, and the ware and tallowe by it selfe: for the leakage of the traine doth fowle the other wares much. As for Allard the Skinner, if you thinke good, he may come home in these shippes. We haue no doubt but that you Henrie Lane, if you minde to come home now in these ships as you requested, will leaue such good order there with our seruants as shall bee for our most profite and their preferment, if they doe their duties diligently and truly. If our friend Master Antonie Ienkinson bee returned, and meane to come away in these ships to declare his mind and opinion of his traualle, if need require and he be so minded he may returne thither by land and be there by the line of Ianuarie or befoze. But as we be uncertaine whether he be returned or not: so we know not what he hath done, nor what benefite may rise hereafter of his traualle. Therefore in this wee remit it to his and your good discretions. We send you Thomas Hawtreay which is our seruant for yeeres: our minde is he should be placed, where he may doe best seruice.

Also we send you Nicholas Chancelour to remaine there, who is our apprentice for yeeres: our minde is hee should be set about such businesse as he is most fit for: he hath been kept at writing schoole long: he hath his Algorisme, and hath vnderstanding of keeping of bookes of reckonings. We send you now but 100 Kersies: but against the next yeere, if occasion serue, wee will send send you a greater quantitie, according as you shal advise vs: One of the pipes of leekes that is in the Swallow, which hath 2 round compasses vpon the lung, is to be presented to the Emperour: for its special good. The nete waight of the 10 puncheons of pines is 4300. 2 thirds 1 pound. It is written particularly vpon the head of euery puncheon: and the nete weight of the fatte of almonds is 500 li. two quarters. The raisins, pines, and almonds you were best to dispatch away at a reasonable price, and principally the raisins. for in keeping of them will be great losse in the waight, and the fruit will decay. We thinke it good that you prouide against the next yeere for the comming of our shippes 20 or 30 bullockes killed and salted, for beefe is very deare here. Therefore you were best to saue some of this salt that we doe send you in these ships for the purpose. The salte of that countrey is not so good. In this you may take the opinion of the masters of the shippes. Fore skins, white, blacke, and russet will be vendible here. The last yere you sent none: but there were mariners that bought many. If any of the mariners doe buy any trifling furre or other commodities, we will they shall be registred in our puruers bookes, to the intent we may know what they be. We desire to know how the Emperour tooke the letter which we sent in our ships, as an answer to the letter that came in his name and vnder his seale for the five thousand dallers. Thus wee rest, committing you to God, from London the fift day of May 1560.

If or lacke of time the gouernours haue not firmed this letter: which is the copie of the other two letters firmed by them.

Yours, William Mericke,

Yours, Blase Sanders,

The maner of Iustice by lots in Russia, written by Master Henrie Lane, and executed in a controuerisie betweene him and one Sheray Costromitskey in Mosco. 1560.

After the comming home into Russia of Ioseph Napea the first ambassadour to Queene Marie, I remaining the Agent there, sundrie Russian marchants by Iosephs procurement obtained letters from the Emperour to freight goods and passe in our ships for England: which thing vpon good consideration I answered and refused. They were then diuised to credite vs and compound in value untill the next returne. At which time, notwithstanding good accompt in the value of 600 robles, there grewe question by their double demand. So in April Anno 1560, before my comming from Moscouia, they obtained trial by combat or letter to haue their summe double, or as I proffered 600 robles. For combatte I was prouided of a strong willing Englishman, Robert Belt, one of the companies seruants: whome the Russes with their Champion refused. So that we had the words of our priuiledge put in effect, which were to draw lots. The day and maner of triall appointed by the Emperour at his castle in his palace and high Court of Moscouia was thus. The Emperours two Treasurers, being also Chancelours and chiefe Judges, sate in court. They appointed officers to bring me, mine interpreter, & the other, through the great presse within the rayle or barre, and permitted me to sit downe some distance from them: the aduersie parties being without at the barre. Both parties were first perswaded with great curtesie, to wit, I to enlarge mine offer, and the Russes to mitigate their challenge. Notwithstanding that I protested my conscience to be cleere, and their game by accompt to bee sufficient, yet of gentlenes at the magistrates request I made proffer of 100 robles more: which was openly commended, but of the plaintifes not accepted. Then sentence passed with our names in two equall balles of waxe made and holden vp by the Judges, their sleeves stripped vp. Then with standing vp and wishing well to the truth attributed to him that should be first drawn, by both consents among the multitude they called a tall gentleman, saying: Thou with such a coate or cap, come vp: where roome with speede was made. He was commanded to hold his cappe, wherein they put the balles, by the crowne vpright in sight, his arme not abasing. With like circumspetion, they called at aduenture another tall gentleman, commanding him to strip vp his right sleeve, and willed him with his bare arme to reach vp, and in Gods name seu'rally to take out the two balles: which he did, deliuering to either Judge one. Then with great admiration the lotte in ball first taken out was mine: which was by open sentence so pronounced before all the people, and to be the right and true parte. The chiefe plaintifes name was Sheray Costromitsky. I was willed forthwith to pay the plaintifes the summe by me appointed. Out of which for their wrong or sinne, as it was termed, they payd tenne in the hundred to the Emperour. Many dayes after, as their maner is, the people tooke our nation to be true and vpright dealers, and talked of this iudgement to our great credite;

Trial by combat or lot.

Note.

The former letters dated 1558, 1559, and 1560, should all followe M. Ienkinsons voyage to Boghar.

The first voyage made by Master Anthonie Ienkinson, from the Citie of London toward the land of Russia, begun the twelfth of May, in the yecre 1557.

First by the grace of God, the day and yeece aboue mentioned, I departed from the sayd Citie, and the same day at Grauesend embarked my selfe in a good shippe, named the Primerose, being appointed, althoigh unworthy, chiefe captaine of the same, and also of the other 3 good ships, to say, the Iohn Euangelist, the Anne, and the Trinitie, hauing also the conduct of the Emperour of Russia his ambassadour named Osep Nepea Gregoriwich, who passed with his company in the sayd Primerose. And thus our foure tall ships being well appointed, aboue for men as victuals as other necessarie furniture, the saide twelfth day of the moneth of May, we weyed our ankers, and departed from the saide Grauesend, in the after neone, and plying downe the Thames, the wind being Easterly, and saye weather, the 13 day we came a ground with the Primerose, vpon a land called the blacke taile, where we late fast untill the 14 day in the morning, and then God be prayesed, she came off: and that day we plying downe as farre as our Ladie of Holland, and there came to an anker, the wind being Easterly, & there remayned untill the 20 day: then we weyed and went out at Goldmore gate, and from thence in at Balley lade, and so into Orwel wands, where we came to an anker: but as we came out at the sayd Goldmore gate, the Trinitie came on ground on certaine rockes, that lye to the Northward of the said gate, and was like to be bilged and lost. But by the aide of God, at the last she came off againe, being very leake: and the 21 day the Primerose remaining at an anker in the wands, the other three shippes bare into Orwel hauen, where I caused the sayd Trinitie to be grounded, searched, and repaired. So we remayned in the said hauen, untill the 28 day: and then the winde being Easterly, the three shippes that were in the hauen, weyed and came forth, and in coming forth the Iohn Euangelist came on ground vpon a land, called the Andros, where she remained one tide, and the next full sea she came off againe without any great hurt, God be prayesed.

The 29 day in the morning all foure ships weied in the Wands, and that tide went as farre as Orfordnesse, where we came to an anker, because the wind was Northerly: And about sixe of the clock at night, the wind vered to the South west, and we weyed anker, and bare cleere of the nesse, and then set our course North east & by North untill midnight, being then cleare of Yarmouth sands. Then we winded North and by West, and Northnorthwest, untill the first of Iunie at noone, then it waied calme, and continued so untill the second day at noone: then the winde came at North west, with a tempest, and much raine, and we lay close by, and caped Northnorth east, and North east and by North, as the winde shifted, and so continued untill the third day at noone: then the wind vered Westerly againe, and we went North our right course, and so continued our way untill the fourth day, at three of the clocke in the afternoone, at which time the wind vered to the North west againe and blew a fresh gale, and so continued untill the seuenth day in the morning, we plying with all our shippes close by, and capping to the Northwards: and then the wind vering moze Northerly, we were forced to put roomer with the coast of England againe, and fell ouerthwart Re wecastle, but went not into the hauen, & so plying vpon the coast the eight day & the ninth.

The tenth day the winde came to the Northnorth west, & we were forced to beare roomer with Flamborow head, where we came to an anker, and there remained untill the seuenteenth day. Then the winde came faire, and we weyed, and set our course North and by East, and so continued the same with a mery winde untill the 21 at noone, at which time we tooke the sunne, and had the latitude in sixty degrees. Then we shifted our course, and went Northnorth east, and North east and by North, until the 25 day. Then we discovered certaine Islands, called Heilick Islands, lying from vs North east, being in the latitude of sixty six degrees, 40 minutes. Then we went north and by West, because we would not come too nigh the land, and running that course foure houres, we discovered, and had sight of Rost Islands, joining to the main land of Finnmarke. Thus continuing our course along the coast of Norway and Finnmark, the 27 day we tooke the Sunne, being as farre shot as Lofoot, and had the latitude in 69 degrees. And the same day in the afternoone appeared ouer our heads a raine bow, like a semicircle, with both ends byward. Note that there there is between the said Rost Islands & Lofoot, a whirle poole called Malestrand, which from halfe ebbe untill halfe flood, maketh such a terrible noise, that it shaketh the ringes in the doores of the inhabitants houses of the sayd Islands tenne miles off. Also if there cometh any Whale within the current of the same, they make a pitifull crie. Moreover, if great trees be caried into it by force of streams, and after with the ebbe be cast out againe, the ends and boughs of them haue bene so beaten, that they are like the stalkes of hempe that is bzuisd. Note, that all the coaste of Finmarke is high mountaines and hills, being couered all the yere with snow. And hard aboord the shoare of this coast, there is 100 or 150 fadomes of water in depth. Thus proceeding and sailing forward, we fell with an Island called Zenam, being in the latitude of 70 degrees. About this Island we saw many Whales, very moultous, about our ships, some by estimation of 60 foot long: and being the ingendring time they roared and cried terrible. From thence we fell with an Island, called Kertelwicke.

Malestrand a strange whirle poole.

Zenam Island.

Kertelwicke Island.

This coast from Rost vnto Lofoot lieth North and south, and from Lofoot to Zenam North-east and south-west, and from Zenam to Kertelwicke East-north-east and West-south-west. From the said Kertelwicke we sailed East and by North 10 leagues, and fell with a land called Inger sound, where we fished, being becalmed, and tooke great plenty of Cods. Thus plying along the coast, we fell with a Cape, called the North Cape, which is the Northmost land that wee passe in our voyage to S. Nicholas, and is in the latitude of 71 degrees and ten minutes, and is from Inger sound East, and to the Northwards 15 leagues. And being at this North Cape the second day of July, we had the sunne at North 4 degrees aboue the Horizon. The third day wee came to Wardhouse, hauing such mists that we could not see the land. This Wardhouse is a Castle standing in an Island 2 miles from the maine of Finland, subiect to the king of Denmarke, and the Eastermost land that he hath. There are two other Islands neere adioining vnto that, whereon the Castle of Wardhouse standeth. The inhabitants of those three Islands liue onely by fishing, and make much stockefish, which they dry with frost: their most feeding is fish; bread and drinke they haue none, but such as is brought them from other places. They haue small store of cattell, which are also fed with fish. From Wardhouse we sailed South-south-east ten leagues, and fell with a Cape of land called Keger, the Northmost part of the lande of Lappia. And betwene Wardhouse, and the said Cape is a great Bay, called Dommes haff, in the South part whereof is a Monasterie of Monkes of the Russes religion, called Pechinchow. Thus proceeding forward and sailing along the coast of the said land of Lappia, winding Southeast, the fourth day thorough great mists and darkenes we lost the company of the other three ships, and met not with them againe, untill the seventh day, when we fell with a Cape or headland called Swetinoz, which is the entering into the Bay of S. Nicholas. At this Cape lieth a great stone, to the which the barkes that passed thereby, were wont to make offerings of butter, meale, and other victuals, thinking that vnlesse they did so, their barkes or vessels should there perish, as it hath bene oftentimes seene: and there it is very darke and mistie. Note that the sixt day we passed by the place where Sir Hugh Willoughbie, with all his company perished, which is called Arzina reca, that is to say, the riuer Arzina.

The land of Lappia is an high land, hauing snow lying on it commonly all the yere. The people of the Countrey are halfe Gentiles: they liue in the summer time neere the sea side, and vse to take fish, of the which they make bread, and in the winter they remoue by into the countrey into the woods, where they vse hunting, and kill Deere, Beares, Woodnes, Fores, and other beasts, with whose flesh they be nourished, and with their skinner apparelled in such strange fashion, that there is nothing seene of them bare but their eyes. They haue none other habitation, but onely in tents, remouing from place to place, according to the season of the yere. They know no arte nor facultie, but onely shooting, which they exercise dayly, as well men as women, and kill such beasts as serue them for their foode. Thus proceeding along the coast from Swetinoz aforesaid, the ninth day of July wee came to Cape Grace, being in the latitude of 66 degrees and 45 minutes, and is at the entering in of the Bay of S. Nicholas. Aboord this land there is 20 or 30 fadoms water, and sundry grounds good to anker in. The current at this Cape runneth South-west and Northeast. From this Cape wee proceeded along untill we came to Crosse Island, which is seven leagues from the sayd Cape Southwest: and from this Island, wee set ouer to the other side of the Bay, and went South-west, and fell with an headland called Foxenose, which is from the sayd Island 25 leagues. The entering of this Bay from Crosse Island to the nearest land on the other side is seven leagues ouer. From Foxenose proceeding forward the twelfth day of the sayd moneth of July, all our foure ships arrived in safetie at the roade of Saint Nicholas in the land of Russia, where we ankered, and had sailed from London vnto the said roade seven hundred and fifty leagues. The Russian ambassadour and his company with great ioy got to shore

The Lappians covered all sailing their eyes.

The entering of the Bay of S. Nicholas is seven leagues broad at the least.

August.

Shore, and our ships here forthwith discharged themselves: and being laden againe, and having a faire winde, departed toward England the first of August. The third of the sayd monerth I with other of my company came unto the citie of Colmogro, being an hundred verstes from the Bay of Saint Nicholas, and in the latitude of 64 degrees 25 minutes. I tarried at the said Colmogro untill the fiftteenth day: and then I departed in a little boate by the great river of Dwina, Pinego river.

which runneth very swiftly, and the selfe same day passed by the mouth of a river called Pinego, leaving it on our left hand fiftene verstes from Colmogro. On both sides of the mouth of this river Pinego is high land, great rockes of Alabaster, great woods, and pineapple trees lying along within the ground, which by report haue lien there since Noes flood. And thus proceeding forward the nineteenth day in the morning, I came into a towne called Yemps, an hundred verstes from Colmogro. All this way along they make much tarre, pitch and ashes of Aspen trees.

Vking.

From thence I came to a place called Vking, an ancient citie the last day of August. At this citie meete two rivers: the one called Iug, and the other Succana, both which fall into the aforesaid river of Dwina. The river Iug hath his spring in the land of the Tartars called Cheremizzi, joining to the countrey of Permia: and Succana hath his head from a lake not farre from the citie of Vologda. Thus departing from Vking, and passing by the river Succana, we came to a towne called Toima. About this place the water is verie shallow, and stonie, and troublesome for Barkes and boats of that countrey, which they call Nassades, and Dosnecks, to passe that way: wherein marchandise are transported from the aforesaid Colmogro to the citie of Vologhda.

The description of their Nassades.

These vessels called Nassades, are very long builded, broad made, and close aboue, flatte bottomed, and draw not above foure foote water, and will carrie two hundred tunnes: they haue none iron appertaining to them but all of rimber, and when the winde seruerth, they are made to saile. Otherwise they haue many men, some to hale and drawe by the neckes with long small ropes made fast to the sayd boars, and some set with long poles. There are many of these barks upon the river of Dwina: And the most part of them belongeth unto the citie of Vologhda: for there dwell many marchants, and they occupie the said boates with carying of salte from the sea side unto the sayd Vologhda. The twentieth of September I came unto Vologhda, which is a great citie, and the river passeth through the midst of the same. The houses are builded with wood of Firre trees, ioynd one with another, and round without: the houses are foure square without any iron or stone worke, couered with birch barkes, and wood ouer the same: Their Churches are all of wood, two for euery parish, one to be heated for Winter, and the other for Summer.

On the toppes of their houses they laye much earth, for feare of burning: for they are sore plagued with fire. This Vologhda is in 59 degrees, eleuen minutes, and is from Colmogro, 1000 verstes.

Good counsell for traucters.

All the way I neuer came in house, but lodged in the wilderneffe, by the rivers side, and caried provision for the way. And he that will trauell those wayes, must carie with him an hatchet, a tinder bore, and a kettle, to make fire and seethe meate, when he hath it: for there is small succour in those parts, vntil he be in townes.

December.

The first day of December, I departed from Vologhda in posse in a sled, as the maner is in Winter. And the way to Moscu is as followeth. From Vologhda to Commelski, 27 verstes, so to Olmor 25 verstes, so to Teloytske 20 verstes, so to Vre 30 verstes, so to Voshansko 30 verstes, then to Yerasslaue 30 verstes, which standeth upon the great river Volga, so to Rosloue, 50 verstes, then to Rogarin 30 verstes, so to Perasslaue 10 verstes, which is a great towne, standing hard by a faire lake. From thence to Dowbnay 30 verstes, so to Godoroke 30 verstes, so to Owchay 30 verstes, and last to the Mosco 25 verstes, where I arrived the first day of December.

There are 14 postes called Yannes betwene Vologhda and Mosco, which are accompted 500 verstes asunder.

The 10 day of December I was sent for to the Emperors Castle by the sayd Emperour, and deliuered my letters unto the Secretary, who talked with me of diuers matters, by the commandement of the Emperour. And after that my letters were translated, I was answered that I was welcome, and that the Emperour would giue me that I desired.

The 25 day, being the day of the natiuite, I came into the Emperors presence, and kissed his hand, who sat aloft in a goodly chaire of estate, hauing on his heade a crowne most richly decked, and a staffe of gold in his hand, all apparellled with golde, and garnished with precious stones.

There sat distant from him about two yardes his brother, and next vnto him a boy of twelue yeares of age, who was inheritor to the Emperour of Casan, conquered by this Emperour 8 yeares past.

past. Then sate his nobilitie round about him, richly apparellled with gold and stone. And after I had done obeisance to the Emperour, he with his own mouth calling me by my name, bade me to dinner, and so I departed to my lodging till dinner time, which was at five of the clocke, by candle light.

The Emperour dined in a fayre great hall, in the midst whereof was a pillar foure square, very artificially made, about which were diuers tables set, and at the bypermost part of the hall, sate the Emperour himselfe, & at his table sate his brother, his Uncles sonne, the Metropolitane, the young Emperour of Casan, and diuers of his noble men, all of one side. There were diuers Ambassadors, & other strangers, as well Christians as heathens, diuersly apparellled, to the number of 600 men, which dined in the sayd hall, besides 2000 Tartars, men of warre, which were newly come to render themselves to the Emperour, & were appointed to serue him in his wars against the Lieflanders, but they dined in other hals. I was set at a litle table, hauing no stranger with me, directly befoze the Emperours face. Being thus set and placed, the Emperour sent me diuers bowles of wine, and meade, & many dishes of meate from his own hand, which were brought me by a Duke, and my table serued all in gold and siluer, and so likewise on other tables, there were set bowles of gold, set with stone, worth by estimation 400 pounds sterling one cup, besides the plate which serued the tables.

There was also a Cupbord of plate, most sumptuous and rich, which was not vsed: among the which, was a piece of golde, of two yardes long, wrought in the toppes with towers, and dragons heads, also diuers barrels of gold and siluer, with Castles on the bungs, richly and artificially made. The Emperour and all the hall thzoughout was serued with Dukes: and when dinner was ended, the Emperour called me by name, & gaue me drinke with his own hand, & so I departed to my lodging.

Note, that when the Emperour drinketh, all the company stand vp, and at euery time he drinketh or casteth of a dish of meate he blesteth himselfe. Many other things I saue that day, not here noted.

The 4 of January, which was Twelfside with them, the Emperour, with his brother and all his nobles, all most richly apparellled with gold, pearles, precious stones, and costly fures, with a crowne vpon his head, of the Tartarian fashion, went to the Church in procession, with the Metropolitane, and diuers bishops and priests. That day I was befoze the Emperour again in Russe apparell, and the Emperour asked if that were not I, and his Chancelor answered yea. Then he bad me to dinner: then came he out of the church, and went with the procession vpon the riuer, being all frozen, and there standing bare headed, with all his Nobles, there was a hole made in the ice, and the Metropolitane hallowed the water with great solemnitie and seruice, and did cast of the sayd water vpon the Emperours sonne and the Nobilitie. That done, the people with great thzonging filled pots of the said water to carie home to their houses, and diuers children were thzowen in, and sicke people, and plucked out quickly againe, and diuers Tartars chziftened: all which the Emperour beheld. Also there were brought the Emperours best horses, to drinke at the sayd hallowed water. All this being ended, he returned to his palace againe, and went to dinner by candle light, and sate in a wooden house, very fairely gilt. There dined in the place, aboue 300 strangers, and I sate alone as I did befoze, directly befoze the Emperour, and had my meate, bread and drinke sent me from the Emperour.

The citie of Mosco is great, the houses for the most part of wood, and some of stone, with windowes of yron, which serue for summer time. There are many faire Churches of stone, but moze of wood, which are made hot in the winter time. The Emperours lodging is in a faire and large castle, walled foure square of bricke, high, and thicke, situated vpon a hill, 2 miles about, and the riuer on the South-west side of it, and it hath 16 gates in the walles, & as many bulwarks. His palace is separated from the rest of the Castle, by a long wall going north and south, to the riuer side. In his palace are Churches, some of stone and some of wood, with round towers fairely gilded. In the Church dooies and within the Churches are images of golde: the chiefe markets for all things, are within the sayd Castle, and for sundry things sundry markets, and euery science by it selfe. And in the winter there is a great market without the castle, vpon the riuer being frozen, and there is sold corne, earthen pots, tubs, sleds, &c. The castle is in circuit 2900 paces.

The countrie is full of marish ground, & plaine, in woods and riuers abundant, but it bzingeth forth good plenty of corne. This Emperour is of great power: for he hath conquered much, as wel of the Lieflanders, Poles, Lettoes, and Swethens, as also of the Tartars, & Gentiles, called Samcoes, hauing thereby much enlarged his dominions. He keepeth his people in great subiection: all matters passe his iudgement, be they neuer so small. The law is sharpe for all offenders.

The Metropolitane dealeth in matters of religion, as himselfe listeth, whome the Emperour greatly greatly honoꝛeth. They vse the ceremonies, and oꝛders of the Greeke Church. They worship many images painted on tables, and specially the image of S. Nicholas. Their Priests be maried, but their wiues being dead, they may not marie the second time, and so become Monkes, whercof there are a great number in the land.

They haue foure Lents in the peere, and the weeke before Shrovetide, they call the Butter weeke, &c.

They haue many soꝛtes of meats and dꝛinkes, when they banquet and delight in eating of grosse meates, and sinking fische. Before they dꝛinke they vse to blowe in the cup: their greatest friendship is in dꝛinking: they are great talkers and lyers, without any faith oꝛ trust in their wordes, flatterers and dissemblers. The women be there very obedient to their husbands, & are kept straightly from going abroad, but at some seasons.

At my being there, I heard of men and women that drunke away their children, and all their goods at the Emperours tauerne, and not being able to pay, hauing impaired himselfe, the Tauerneer dꝛingeth him out to the high way, and beates him vpon the legges: then they that passe by, knowing the cause, and hauing peraduenture compassion vpon him, giue the money, and so he is ransomed.

In euery good towne there is a drunken Tauerne called a Curfmay, which the Emperour sometime letteth out to farme, & sometimes bestoweth for a yeare oꝛ two on some ruke oꝛ gentle man, in recompense of his seruice: and for that time he is Lord of all the towne, robbing and spoiling, and doing what pleaseth him: and then he being growen rich, is taken by the Emperour, and sent to the warres againe, where he shall spend all that which he hath gotten by ill meanes: so that the Emperour in his warres is little charged, but all the burden lieth vpon the poore people.

They vse sadles made of wood & sinewes, with the tree gilded with damaske worke, & the seat couered with cloth, sometimes of golde, and the rest Saphian leather, well stiched. They vse little dꝛummes at their saddle bowes, by the sound whercof their hoxses vse to runne moze swiftly.

The Russe is apparelled in this maner: his vpper garment is of cloth of golde, silke, oꝛ cloth, long, doونه to the foot, and buttoned with great buttons of siluer, oꝛ els laces of silke, set on with brooches, the sleeues thereof very long, which he weareth on his arme, ruffed vp. Under that he hath another long garment, buttoned with silke buttons, with a high collar standing vp of some colour, and that garment is made straight. Then his shirt is very fine, and wrought with red silk, oꝛ some gold, with a collar of pearle. Under his shirt he hath linnen breeches, vpon his legs, a paire of hose without teete, and his bootes of red oꝛ yellow leather. On his head hee weareth a white Colepecke, with buttons of siluer, gold, pearle, oꝛ stone, and vnder it a blacke Foxe cap, turned vp very broad.

When he rideth on hoxsebacke to the warres, oꝛ any iourney, he hath a sword of the Turkish fashion, and his bowe and arrowes of the same maner. In the towne he weareth no weapon, but onely two oꝛ thre paire of kniues, hauing the hastes of the tooth of a fische, called the Hoxse.

In the Winter time, the people trauell with sleds, in towne and countrey, the way being hard, and smooth with snow: the waters and riuers are all frozen, and one hoxse with a sled, will draw a man vpon it 400 miles, in thre daies: but in the Summer time, the way is deepe with mire, and traueilling is very ill.

The Russe, if he be a man of any abilitie, neuer goeth out of his house in the winter, but vpon his sled, and in Summer vpon his hoxse: and in his sled he sits vpon a carpet, oꝛ a white Beares skinne: the sled is drawn with a hoxse well decked, with many Foxes and Woolues tailed at his necke, & is conducted by a little boy vpon his backe: his seruants stand vpon the taile of the sled &c.

The voyage, wherein Osep Napea the Moscouite Ambasadour returned home into his countrey, with his entertainment at his arriuall, at Colmogro: and a large description of the maners of the Countrey,

He twelfth of Maye, in the yeare of our Lorde 1557 there departed from Grauelend, foure good shippes well appointed for Marchants, which were presently bound into the Baye of S. Nicholas in Russia: with which shippes was transported, oꝛ caried home, one Osep Gregorowich Napea, who was sent Messenger from the Emperour and great Duke of Moscouia. The foure shippes were these, whose names follow, viz,

The Primerose Admirall.

The Iohn Euangelist Viceadmirall.

The

The Anne and the Trinitie Attendants.

The 13 of July, the foresayd foure shippes came to an anchor in the Baye of S. Nicholas, befor an Abbey, called the Abbey of S. Nicholas, whereas the sayde Messenger, Osep Gregori-wich Napea went a shoare, and as many English men as came to serue the Emperour remained with him at the Abbey for the space of sixe daies, untill he had gotten all his things a shoare, and laden the same in barkes, to goe by the riuer Dwiná, vnto Vologhda, which is by water 1000 verstes, and euery verste is about three quarters of an English mile.

The 20 of July, we departed from S. Nicholas, and the 24 of the same; we came to Col-mogro, where we remained eight daies: and the sayd Messenger was there of all his acquaintance welcommed home, and had presents innumerable sent vnto him, but it was nothing but meate and drinke. Some sent white bread, some rie bread, and some buttered bread & panakes; beeefe, mutton, bacon, egges, butter, fishes, swannes, geese, duckes, hennes, and all manner of victuals, both fish and flesh, in the best maner, that the rude people could deuise: for among them, these presents are highly esteemed.

Presents used in Russia are all for the most part of victuals.

The 29 of July, we departed from Colmogro, and the 14 of August we came to Vsiug, where we remained one day, and changed our barkes or boates.

The 27 of August, we came to Vologhda, where we remained 4 daies vnlading the barkes, and lading our chestes and things in small waggons, with one horse in a piece, which in their tongue are called Telegos, and with these Telegoes they caried our stuffe from Vologhda vnto the Mosco, which is 500 verstes: and we were vpon the same way 14 daies: for we went ne faster then the Telegoes.

There are three great towncs betweene the Mosco and Vologhda, that is to say, Yeraslaue, Rostauc, & Pereslaue. Vpon one side of Yeraslaue runneth a famous riuer, which is called Volga.
It runneth into the Caspian sea, and it denieth it selfe before it come into the Mare Caspium, in 50 parts or more, and nere vnto the same sea there stands a great Citie, called Boghar, the inhabitants of the which are called by the same name.

The citie of Boghar.

The people of the said Citie doe traffique vnto the Citie of Mosco: their commodities are spices, muske, ambergreene, rubarbe, with other drugs. They bring also many fures which they buy in Siberia comming towards the Mosco: the sayd people are of the sect of Mahomet.

The 12 of September we came vnto the citie of Mosco, where we were brought by Napea, and two of the Emperours gentlemen vnto a large house, where euery one of vs had his chamber appointed.

They arrived at Mosco.

The 14 of September we were commanded to come vnto the Emperour, and immediatly after our coming we were brought into his presence, vnto whom each of vs did his due tie accordingly, and kissed his right hand, his maiestie sitting in his chaire of estate, with his crowne on his head, and a staffe of goldsmiths worke in his left hand well garnished with rich and costly stones:
and when we had all kissed his hand and done our duties, his maiestie did declare by his interpreter that we were all welcome vnto him, and into his countrey, & therupon willed vs to dine with him: that day we gaue thanks vnto his maiestie, and so departed vntill the dinner was ready.

When dinner time appoched, we were brought againe into the Emperours dining chamber, where we were set on one side of a table that stood ouer against the Emperours table, to the end that he might wel behold vs al: and when we came into the foresayd chamber, we found there readie set these tables following.

First at the vpper end of one table were set the Emperour his maiestie, his brother, & the Em-perour of Cazan, which is prisoner. About two yardes lower sate the Emperour of Cazan his sonne, being a child of five yeres of age, and beneath him sate the most part of the Emperours noble men.

And at another table nere vnto the Emperours table, there was set a Donke all alone, which was in all points as well serued as the Emperour. At another table sate another kind of people called Chirkasses, which the Emperour entertaineth for men of warre to serue against his enemies. Of which people and of their countrey, I will hereafter make mention.

All the tables aforesayd were couered onely with salt and bread, and after that we had sieten a while, the Emperour sent vnto euery one of vs a piece of bread, which were giuen and deliuered vnto euery man seuerally by these words: The Emperour and great Duke giue: h the bread this day, and in like manner thre or foure times before dinner was ended, he sent vnto euery man drinke, which was giuen by these words, The Emperour and great Duke giue: thee to drinke.
All the tables aforesayd were serued in vessels of pure and fine golde, as well basons and ewers, platters, dishes and saucers, as also of great pots, with an innumerable sort of small drinking pottes of diuers fashions, whercof a great number were set with stone. As for costly meates

I haue many times seene better : but for change of wines, and diuers sorts of meads, it was wonderfull : for there was not left at any time so much void roome on the table, that one cuppe more might haue bin set, and as far as I could perceiue, all the rest were in the like maner serued.

In the dinner time there came in fire singers which stood in the midst of the chamber, and their faces towards the Emperour, who sang there befoze dinner was ended three seuerall times, whose songs or voices delighted our eares little or nothing.

The Emperour neuer putteth more of meate in his mouth, but he first blesseth it himselfe, & in like maner as often as he drinketh: for after his maner he is very religious, & he esteemeth his religious men about his noble men.

This dinner continued about the space of five houres, which being ended, and the tables taken vp, we came into the midst of the chamber, where we did reuerence vnto the Emperours maiestie, and then he deliuered vnto euery one of vs with his own hands a cup of mead, which when euery man had receiued, and drunke a quantity thereof, we were licenced to depart, & so ended that dinner. And because the Emperour would haue vs to be mery, he sent to our lodging the same Evening three barrells of meade of sundry sortes, of the quantitie in all of one hogshed.

The 16 day of September the Emperour sent home vnto our lodging for euery of vs a Tartarie horse to ride from place to place as we had occasion, for that the streets of Mosco are very fowle and mtrie in the Summer.

The 18 of September there were giuen vnto master Standish doctor in Physick, and the rest of our men of our occupations, certaine furred gownes of branched velvet and gold, and some of red damaske, of which master Doctors gowne was furred with Sables, and the rest were furred some with white Ermine, and some with gray Squirrel, and all faced and edged round about with blacke beauer.

The 1 of October in the morning we were commanded to come vnto the Emperours court, and when we came thither, we were brought vnto the Emperour vnto whom we did our duties accordingly: whereupon he willed vs to dine with him that day, and so with thanks vnto his maiestie, we departed vntill dinner time, at which time we came and found the tables couered with bread and salt as at the first: & after that we were all set vpon one side of the table, the Emperours maiestie according to his accustomed maner sent vnto euery man a piece of bread by some of the Dukes which attended on his highnesse.

And whereas the 14 of September we were serued in vessels of gold, we were now serued in vessels of silver, and yet not so abundantly as was the first of gold: they brought drinke vnto the table in silver boles which contained at the least sixe gallons a piece, and euery man had a small silver cuppe to drinke in, & another to dip or to take his drinke out of the great boll withall: the dinner being ended, the Emperour gaue vnto euery one of vs a cup with meade, which when we had receiued, we gaue thanks and departed.

Moreouer, whensoever the Emperours pleasure is that any stranger shall dine with him, he doth send for them in the morning, and when they come befoze him, he with his owne mouth biddeth them to dinner, and this order he alwaies obserueth.

The 10 of October the Emperour gaue vnto M. Standish 70 rubles in money, and to the rest of our men of occupations 30 rubles apiece.

The 3 of November we dined againe with the Emperour, where we were serued as befoze.

The 6 of December being S. Nicholas day, we dined againe at the Emperours, for that is one of the principall feasts which the Moscouites hold: we were serued in silver vessels and ordered in all points as befoze, and it was past 7 of the clocke at night befoze dinner was ended.

The Emperours maiestie bleseth euery yeare in the moneth of December, to haue all his ordinance that is in the citie of Mosco caried into the field which is without the Suburbs of the citie, and there to haue it planted and bent vpon two houses of Wood filled within with earth: against which two houses there were two faire white markes set vp, at which markes they discharge all their ordinance, to the ende the Emperour may see what his Gunners can doe. They haue faire ordinance of brasse of all sortes, bales, faulcons, minions, sakers, culuerings, cannons double and ropall, basistikes long and large, they haue sixe great pieces whose shot is a pard of height, which shot a man may easily discern as they flee: they haue also a great many of mortar pieces or pot-guns, out of which pieces they shoote wild fire.

The 12 of December the Emperours Maiestie and all his nobility came into the field on horse-backe, in most goodly order, hauing very fine Jennets & Turkie horses garnished with gold & silver abundantly. The Emperours maiestie hauing on him a gowne of rich tulle, & a cap of skarlet on his head, set not only with pearles, but also with a great number of rich and costly stones: his noble men were all in gownes of cloth of gold, which did ride befoze him in good order by 3. & 3. and befoze before them there went 5000 harquebusiers, which went by 5 and 5 in a rank in very good order, every of them carrying his gun upon his left shoulder, and his watch in his right hand, and in this order they marched into the field where as the forelaid ordinance was planted.

And before the Emperors maiestie came into the field, there was a certaine stage made of small poles which was a quarter of a mile long, and about thre score yardes off from the stage of poles were certaine pieces of ice of two foot thicke, and sixe foote high set up, which ranke of ice was as long as the stage of poles, and as soone as the Emperors maiestie came into the field, the harquebusiers went upon the stage of poles where they settled themselves in order. And when the Emperors maiestie was settled where he would be, and where he might see all the ordinance discharged and shot off, the harquebusiers began to shoot off at the banke of ice, as though it had bin in any skiemish or battel, who ceased not shooting, untill they had beaten all the ice flat on the ground.

After the handgunes, they shot off their wild fire up into the aire, which was a goodly sight to behold. And after this, they began to discharge the smal pieces of brasse, beginning with the smallest and so orderly bigger and bigger, untill the last and biggest. When they had shot them all off, they began to charge them againe, and so shot them al off 3 times after the first order, beginning with the smallest, and ending with the greatest. And note that before they had ended their shooting, the 2 houses that they shot vnto were beaten in pieces, & yet they were very strongly made of wood and filled with earth, being at the least 30 foote thicke. This triumph being ended, the Emperour departed and rode home in the same order that he came forth into the field. The ordinance is discharged every yeare in the moneth of December, according to the order before mentioned.

On Christmas day we were all willed to dine with the Emperors Maiestie, where for bread, meat and drinke, we were served as at other times before: but for goodly and rich plate, we neuer saw the like or so much before. There dined that day in the Emperors presence about 500 strangers, and two hundred Russes, and all they were served in vessels of gold, and that as much as could stand one by another vpon the tables. Besides this there were foure cupboards garnished with goodly plate both of gold & silver. Among the which there were 12 barrels of silver, containing about 12 gallons a piece, and at each end of every barrell were 6 hoopcs of fine gold: this dinner continued about sixe houres.

Every yeare vpon the 12 day they use to blesse or sanctifie the riuer Moscua, which runneth through the citie of Mosco, after this maner.

First, they make a square hole in the ice about 3 fadoms large every way, which is trimmed about the sides & edges with white boards. Then about 9 of the clocke they come out of the church with procession towards the riuer in this wise.

First and foremost there goe certaine young men with ware tapers burning, and one carrying a great lanterne: then follow certaine banners, then the crosse, then the images of our Lady, of S. Nicholas, and of other Saints, which images men carie vpon their shoulders: after the images follow certaine priests to the number of 100 or more: after them the Metropolitane who is led betwene two priests, and after the Metropolitane came the Emperour with his crowne vpon his head, and after his maiestie all his noble men orderly. Thus they followed the procession vnto the water, & when they came vnto the hole that was made, the priests set themselves in order round about it. And at one end of the same poole there was a scaffold of boards made, vpon which stood a faire chaire in which the Metropolitane was set, but the Emperours maiestie stood vpon the ice.

After this the priests began to sing, to blesse and to senle, and did their seruice, and so by that time that they had done, the water was holy, which being sanctified, the Metropolitane tooke a little thereof in his hands, and cast it on the Emperour, likewise vpon certaine of the Dukes, & then they returned againe to the church with the priests that sate about the water: but that preasse that there was about the water when the Emperour was gone, was wofull to behold, for there came about 5000 pots to be filled of that water: for that Moscouite which hath no part of that water, thinks himselfe unhappy.

And very many went naked into the water, both men and women and children: after the preasse was a litle gone, the Emperours Jennets and horses were brought to drinke of the same water, and likewise many other men brought their horses thither to drinke, and by that means they make their horses as holy as themselves.

All these ceremonies being ended, we went to the Emperour to dinner, where we were served in vessels of silver, and in all other points as we had bene beforetime.

The Russes begin their Lent alwaies 8 weekes before Easter: the first weeke they eate eggs, milke, cheese & butter, and make great cheare with pancakes and such other things, one friend visiting another, & from the same Sunday vntil our Shrovelunday there are but few Russes sober, but they are drunke day by day, and it is accounted for no reproch or shame among them.

The Russes
Lent.

The next weeke being our first weeke of Lent, or our ctenling weeke, beginning our Shrofe-sunday, they make and keepe a great fast. It is reported, and the people do verily beleue that the Metropolitane neither eateth nor drinketh any manner of thing for the space of seven dayes; and they say that there are many religious men which doe the like.

The Emperours Maieste eateth but one morsel of bread, and drinketh but one draught of drinke once in the day during that weeke, and all men that are of any reputation come not out of their houses during that time, so that the streetes are almost void of company, saving a few poore folkes which wander to and fro. The other five weekes they keepe as we do ours, but not one of them will eate either butter, cheefe, eggs or milke.

On Palme Sunday they haue a very solemne procession in this maner following.

First, they haue a tree of a good bignesse which is made fast vpon two sleds, as though it were growing there, and it is hanged with apples, raisins, figs and dates, and with many other fruits abundantly. In the midst of the same tree stand 5 boyes in white vestures, which sing in the tree before the procession: after this there followed certaine young men with waxe tapers in their hands burning, & a great lanterne that al the light should not go out: after them followed two with long banners, & five with round plates set vpon long staves: the plates were of copper very full of holes and thin: then followed 6 carping painted images vpon their shoulders, after the images followed certaine priests to the number of 100 or more, with goodly vestures, whereof 10 or 12 are of white damaske, set and imbrodered round about with faire and orient pearles, as great as peale, and among them certaine Saphires and other stones. After them followed the one halfe of the Emperours noble men: then cometh the Emperours maieste and the Metropolitane, after this maner.

First, there is a horse couered with white linnen cloth down to the ground, his eares being made long with the same cloth like to an asses eares. Vpon this horse the Metropolitane sitteth sidelong like a woman: in his lappe lieth a faire booke, with a crucifix of Goldsmiths worke vpon the cover, which he holdeth fast with his left hand, and in his right hand he hath a crosse of gold, with which crosse he ceaseth not to blesse the people as he rideth.

There are to the number of 30 men which spread abroad their garments before the horse, and as soone as the horse is past ouer any of them, they take them by againe and run before, and spread them againe, so that the horse doth alway go on some of them. They which spread the garments are all priests sonnes, and for their labours the Emperour giueth vnto them new garments.

One of the Emperours noble men leadeth the horse by the head, but the Emperour himselfe going on foote leadeth the horse by the ende of the reine of his bridle with one of his hands, and in the other of his hands he had a branch of a Palme tree: after this followed the rest of the Emperours noble men and Gentlemen, with a great number of other people. In this order they went from one church to another within the citie, about the distance of two flights shot: and so returned againe to the Emperours Church, where they made an end of their seruice. Which being done, the Emperours maieste and certaine of his noble men went to the Metropolitane his house to dinner, where of delicate fishes and good drinks there was no lacke.

The rest of this weeke untill Easter day they kept very solemnelly, continuing in their houses for the most part, and vpon Sunday or Thursday the Emperour doth alwayes vse to receiue the Sacrament, and so doe most of his nobles.

Vpon good Friday they continue all the day in contemplation and prayers, and they vse euery yere on good Friday to let loose a prisoner in the stead of Barrabas. The night following they go to the Church where they sleepe vntill the next morning, & at Easter they haue the resurrection, & after euery of the Lents they eat flesh the next weeke following, Friday, Saturday and all.

They haue an order at Easter which they alwaies obserue, and that is this: euery yere against Easter to die or colour red with Brazell a great number of eggs, of which euery man and woman giueth one vnto the priest of their Parish vpon Easter day in the morning. And moreover the common people vse to carie in their hands one of their red eggs, not onely vpon Easter day, but also three or foure dayes after, and gentlemen and gentlewomen haue eggs gilded which they carie in like maner. They vse it as they say for a great loue, and in token of the resurrection, whereof they reioyce. For when two friends meete during the Easter holy dayes, they come & take one another by the hand: the one of them sayeth, the Lord or Christ is risen, the other answereth, it is so of a truth, and then they kisse and exchange their eggs both men and women, continuing in kissing 4 dayes together.

The 12 of Aprill being Tuesday in the Easter weeke, master Ienkinson and master Graie, and certayne other of vs English men dined with the Emperour, where we were serued as we had bin before time. And after dinner the Emperours maieste gaue vnto master Ienkinson and vnto M. Gray, and so ordeily vnto euery one of vs a cup of Mead, according to his accustomed maner which which when euery man had receiued and giuen thanks, M^r. Ienkinson stepped into the midst of the chamber befoze the Emperours maiestie, and gaue thanks to his highnesse for his goodnesse vnto him extended, desiring his grace to licence him to depart, and in like maner did Master Gray. His maiestie did not onely licence them to depart, but also graunted vnto master Ienkinson his letters vnder his great seale, vnto all princes through whose dominions master Ienkinson should haue occasion to passe, that he might the sooner and quietlier passe by meanes thereof. Which being granted, master Ienkinson and Gray lowly submitted themselves, thanking his maiestie. So the Emperour gaue vnto either of them a cuppe of mead to drinke, and willed them to depart at their pleasure in Gods peace.

With these letters M^r. Ienkinson tooke his voyage the same Aprill to Boghar.

The 14. of Aprill in the morning when M^r. Gray and I were ready to depart towards England, the Chancelloz sent vnto vs and willed vs to come to their office in the Chancerie, where at our comming they shewed vs a great number of the Emperours iewels, and rich robes, willing vs to marke and beholde them well, to the end that at our arriual into England, we might make report what we had seene there.

The chiefest was his maiesties crowne, being close vnder the top very faire wrought: in mine opinion, the workmanship of so much gold few men can amend. It was adorned and becket with rich and precious stones abundantly, among the which one was a rubie, which stood a handfull higher then the top of the crown vpon a small wiser, it was as big as a good beane: the same crown was lined with a faire blacke Sable, worth by report 400. robes.

The Emperours wardrobe.

We sawe all his maiesties robes which were very richly set with stones, they shewed vs manie other great stones of diuers kindes, but the most part of them were vneuen, in maner as they came out of the worke, for they doe more esteeme the greatnesse of stones, then the proportion of them.

We sawe two goodly gownes which were as heauie as a man could easily carrie, all set with pearles ouer and ouer: the gards or borders round about them were garnished with sapphires and other good stones abundantly. One of the same gownes was very rich, for the pearles were very large, round and orient: as for the rest of his gownes and garments, they were of rich tissue and cloth of gold and all furred with very blacke Sables.

When we had sufficiently perused all these things, they willed master Gray at his arriual in England, to prouide if he could, such iewels and rich clothes as he had seene there, and better if he could, declaring that the Emperour would gladly bestow his money vpon such things.

So we tooke our leaue the same time, and departed towards Vologda immediatly.

The maners, vsages, and ceremonies of the Russes.

Of the Emperour.

The Emperours name in their tongue is Iuan Vasiluich, that is as much to say, as Iohn the sonne of "Vasilie and by his princely state hee is called Otesara, as his predecessors haue bene befoze, which to interpret, is a king, that giueth not tribute to any man. And this word Otesara his maiesties interpreters haue of late dayes interpreted to be Emperour, so that now hee is called Emperour and great Duke of all Russia, &c. Befoze his father they were neither called Emperours nor kings but onely Ruesse Velike, that is to say, great Duke. And as this Emperour which now is Iuan Vasiluich, doeth errede his predecessors in name, that is, from a Duke to an Emperour, euen so much by report he doeth errede them in stoutnesse of courage and valiantnesse, and a great deale more: for he is no more afraid of his enemies which are not few, then the Pobbie of the larks.

"M^r. Basilus.

His enemies with whom he hath warres for the most part are these: Litto, Poland, Sweden, Denmarke, Lissland, the Crimmes, Nagaian, and the whole nation of the Tartartans, which are a stoute and a hardie people as any vnder the Sunne.

This Emperour vserh great familiaritie, as wel vnto all his nobles and subiects, as also vnto strangers which serue him either in his warres, or in occupations: for his pleasure is that they shall dine oftentimes in the peere in his presence, and besides that he is oftentimes abroad, either at one Church or another, and walking with his noble men abroad. And by this meanes he is not onely beloued of his nobles and commons, but also had in great dread and feare through all his dominions, so that I thinke no prince in Christendome is more feared of his owne then he is, nor yet better beloued. For if he bid any of his Dukes goe, they will runne, if he giue any euill or angrie worde to any of them, the partic will not come into his maiesties presence againe of a long time time if he be not sent for, but will saue him to be very like, and will let the haire of his head grow very long, without either cutting or shauing, which is an euident token that hee is in the Emperors displeasure: for when they be in their prosperity, they account it a shame to weare long haire, in consideration whereof, they vse to haue their heads shauen.

Note, His maiesty heareth all complaints himselfe, and with his owne mouth giueth sentence, and iudgement of all matters, and that with expedition: but religious matters he medleth not withall, but referreth them wholly vnto the Metropolitane.

His maiestie retaineth and well rewardeth all strangers that come to serue him, and especially men of warre.

Hee delighteth not greatly in hauking, hunting, or any other pastime, nor in hearing instruments of musicke, but setteth all his whole delight vpon two things: First, to serue God, as vndoubtedly he is very deuoute in his religion, and the second, howe to subdue and conquere his enemies.

He hath abundance of gold and siluer in his owne handes or treasure: but the most part of his know not a crowne from a counter, nor gold from copper, they are so much cumbered therewithall, and he that is worth 2. 3. or 4. grotes, is a rich man.

Of their Religious men.

The Metropolitane is next vnto God, our Lady and S. Nicholas excepted: for the Emperors maiesty iudgeth & affirmeth him to be of higher dignitie then himselfe; for that, saith he, he is Gods spiritual officer, and I the Emperour am his temporall officer, and therefore his maiestie submitteth himselfe vnto him in many things concerning religious matters, as in leading the Metropolitans horse vpon Palme Sunday, and giuing him leaue to sitte on a chaire vpon the 12. day, when the riuer Mosco was in blessing, his maiestie standing on the pee.

All matters of religion are reformed by the Metropolitane, he heareth the causes and giueth sentence as himselfe listeth, and is authorized so to doe, whether it be to whip, hang or burne, his will must needs be fulfilled.

They haue both monks, friers and nunnies, with a great number of great & rich monasteries: they keepe great hospitalitie, and doe relieue much poore people day by day. I haue bene in one of the monasteries called Troieres, which is walled about with bricke very strongly like a castle, and much ordinance of brasse vpon the walles of the same. They told me themselves that there are seuen hundred brethren of the which belong vnto that house. The most part of the lands, towns, and villages which are within 40. miles of it, belong vnto the same. They shewed me the church, wherein were as many images as could hang about, or vpon the wals of the Church round about, and euen the roofof the church was painted ful of images. The chiefe image was of our Ladie, which was garnished with gold, rubies, saphirs and other rich stones abundantly. In the midst of the church stood 12. waue tapers of two yards long, and a fathom about in bignesse, & there stands a kettle full of waue with about 100. weight, wherein there is alwayes the wicke of a candle burning, as it were a lampe which goeth not out day nor night.

They shewed me a coffin couered with cloth of gold which stood vpon one side within their church, in which they told me lay a holy man, who neuer eate or drinke, and yet that he liueth. And they told me (supposing that I had beleued them) that he healeth many diseases, and giueth the blind their sight, with many other miracles, but I was hard of belief because I saw him worke no miracle whilst I was there.

After this they brought me into their sellers, and made me taste of diuers kinds of drinks, both wine and beere, mead and quassie, of sundry colours and kinds. Such abundance of drink as they haue in their sellers, I doe suppose few princes haue more, or so much at once.

Their barrels or vessels are of an vnumeasurable bignes & size: some of them are 3. yards long and more, and 2. yards & more broad in their heads: they containe 6. or 7. tunnes a piece: they haue none in their sellers of their owne making that are lesse then a tunne. They haue 9. or 10. great vantes which are full of those barrels which are seldome remooued: for they haue trunks which come downe through the roofof the vantes in sundry places, through which they pot to drinke downe, hauing the calke right vnder it to receiue the same, for it should be a great trouble to bring it all downe the staires.

The hospitalitie of their monasteries.

They giue bread, meat and drinke vnto all men that come to them, not onely while they are at their abbey, but also when they depart, to serue them by the way.

There are a great number of such monasteries in the Realm, and the Emperors maiesty rideth oftentimes from one to another of them, and lieth at them 3. or 4. daies together.

The

The same monkes are as great merchants as any in the land of Russia, and doe occupy buying and selling as much as any other men, and haue boats which passe too and fro in the riuers with merchandize from place to place where any of their countrey do traffike.

They eate no flesh during their liues as it is reported: but vpon Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday it is lawfull for them to eate egges, butter, cheese and milke, and at all times to eate fish, and after this sort they lead their liues.

They weare all blacke garments, and so doe none other in all the lande, but at that abbey onely.

They haue no preachers no not one in al the land to instruct the people, so that there are many, & the most part of the poore in the country, who if one aske them how many gods there be, they will say a great many, meaning that euery image which they haue is a god: for all the countrey and the Emperours maiesty himselfe wil blesse and bowe, and knocke their heads befoze their images, in so much that they will cry earnestly vnto their images to helpe them to the things which they need. Al men are bound by their law to haue those images in their houses, and ouer euery gate in all their towines and cities are images set vp, vnto which the people bow and bend, and knocke their heads against the ground befoze them: as often as they come by any church or crosse they do in like maner. And when they come to any house, they blesse themselves 3. or 4. times befoze they will salute any man in the house.

Want of preachers cause of great ignorance and idolatry.

They reckon and hold it for great sinne to touch or handle any of their images within the circle of the boord where the painting is, but they keep them very daintily, and rich men deck them ouer and about with gold, siluer and stones, and hang them ouer and about with cloth of gold.

The priests are married as other men are, and weare all their garments as other men doe, except their nightcaps, which is cloth of some sad colour, being round; & reacheth vnto the eares: their crownes are shauen, but the rest of their haire they let grow, as long as nature will permit, so that it hangeth beneath their eares vpon their shoulders: their beards they neuer shauē: if his wife happen to die, it is not lawfull for him to mary againe during his life.

They minister the Communion with bread and wine after our order, but he breaketh the bread and putteth it into the cup vnto the wine, and commonly some are partakers with them: and they take the bread out againe with a spoon together with part of the wine, and so take it themselves, and giue it to others that receiue with them after the same maner.

Their ceremonies are al as they say, according to the Greeke Church vsed at this present day, and they allow no other religion but the Greeks, and their owne: and will not permit any nation but the Greeks to be buried in their sacred burials, or churchyards.

All their churches are full of images, vnto the which the people when they assemble, doe bowe and knocke their heads, as I haue befoze said, that some will haue knobbes vpon their foreheads with knocking, as great as egges.

All their seruice is in the Russe tongue, and they and the common people haue no other prayers but this, Ghospodi Iesus Christos esine voze ponuloi nashe. That is to say, O Lord Iesus Christ, sonne of God haue mercy vpon vs: and this is their prayer, so that the most part of the vnlabeled know neither Pater noster, nor the Beliefe, nor Ten commandments, nor scarcely vnderstand the one halfe of their seruice which is read in their Churches.

All their seruice is in their mother tongue.

Of their Baptisme.

When any child is borne, it is not baptized vntil the next Sunday, and if it chance that it be not baptized then, it must tary vntil the second Sunday after the birth, and it is lawfull for them to take as many Godfathers and Godmothers as they will, the more the better.

When they go to the Church, the midwife goeth foremost, carrying the child, & the Godfathers and Godmothers follow into the midst of the Church, where there is a small table ready set, and on it an earthen pot full of warme water, about the which the Godfathers and Godmothers, with the child, settle themselves: then the cleerke giueth vnto euery of them a small wate candle burning, then commeth the priest, and beginneth to say certaine words, which the Godfathers and Godmothers must answere word for word, among which one is, that the child shal forsake the deuill, and as that name is pronounced, they must all spit at the word as often as it is repeated. Then he blesseth the water which is in the pot, and doth breathe ouer it: then he taketh al the candles which the godfathers haue, and holding them all in one hand letteth part of them drop into the water, and then giueth euery one his candle againe, and when the water is sanctified, he taketh the child and holdeth it in a small tubbe, and one of the Godfathers taketh the pot with warme water, and pouereth it all vpon the childs head.

After

After this he hath many more ceremonies, as anoynting eares and eyes with spittle, and making certaine crosses with oyle upon the backe, head, and brest of the childe: then taking the childe in his armes, carrieth it to the images of S. Nicholas, and our Labie, &c. and speaketh vnto the images, desiring them to take charge of the childe, that he may liue, and beleeue as a Christian man or woman ought to doe, with many other words. Then comming backe from the images, he taketh a paire of sheares and clipperth the yong and tender haire of the childes head, in three or foure places, and then deliuereth the childe, wherunto euery of the Godfathers & Godmothers lay a hand: then the priest chargerth them, that the childe be brought vp in the faith & feare of God or Christ, and that it be instructed to clinege and bow to the images, and so they make an end: then one of the Godfathers must hang a crosse about the necke of the childe, which he must alwayes weare, for that Russe which hath not a crosse about his necke they esteeme as no Christian man, and thereupon they say that we are no Christians, because we do not weare crosses as they do.

Of their Matrimonie.

Their matrimonie is nothing solemnized, but rather in most points abhominable, and as neere as I can learne, in this wise following.

First, when there is loue betwene the parties, the man sendeth vnto the woman a small chest or boxe, wherein is a whip, needles, threed, silke, linnen cloth, sheares, and such necessities as shee shall occupie when she is a wife, and perhaps sendeth therewithall raisins, figs or some such things, giuing her to vnderstand, that if she doe offend, she must be beaten with the whip, & by the needles, threed, cloth, &c. that she should apply her selfe diligently to sowe, and do such things as shee could best doe, and by the raisins or fruites he meaneth if she doe well, no good thing shall be withdrawn from her, nor be too deare for her: and she sendeth vnto him a shirt, handkerchers, and some such things of her owne making. And now to the effect.

When they are agreed, and the day of marriage appointed, when they shall goe towards the Church, the bride will in no wise consent to go out of the house, but resisteth and striueth with the that would haue her out, and faineth her selfe to weepe, yet in the end, two women get her out, and lead her towards the church, her face being couered close, because of her dissimulation, that it should not be openly perceiued: for she maketh a great noise, as though she were sobbing and weeping, vntill she come at the Church, and then her face is vncouered. The man commeth after among other of his friends, and they cary with them to the church a great pot with wine or mead: then the priest couereth them together much after our order, one promising to loue and serue the other during their liues together, &c. which being done, they begin to drinke, and first the woman drinketh to the man, and when he hath drunke he letteth the cuppe fall to the ground, halting immediately to cread vpon it, and so doth she, and whether of them tread first vpon it must haue the victorie and be master at all times after, which commonly happeneth to the man, for he is readiest to set his foot on it, because he letteth it fall himselfe, then they goe home againe, the womans face being vncouered. The boyes in the streetes crie out and make a noyse in the meane time, with very dishonnest wordes.

When they come home, the wife is set at the vpper end of the table, and the husband next vnto her: they fall then to drinking till they bee all drunke, they perchance haue a minstrell or two, and two naked men, which led her from the Church daunce naked a long time before all the company. When they are wearie of drinking, the bride and the bridegrome get them to bed, for it is in the euening alwayes when any of them are married: and when they are going to bedde, the bridegrome putterth certain money both golde and siluer, if he haue it, into one of his boots, and then sitteth down in the chamber, crossing his legges, and then the bride must plucke off one of his boots, which she will, and if she happen on the boote wherein the money is, she hath not onely the money for her labor, but is also at such choyse, as she need not euer from that day forth to pul off his boots, but if she misse the boote wherein the money is, she hath not onely loose the money, but is also bound from that day forwards to pull off his boots continually.

Then they continue in drinking and making good cheere three daies following, being accompanied with certaine of their friends, and during the same three daies he is called a Duke, & shee a dutches, although they be very poore persons, and this is as much as I haue learned of their matrimony: but one common rule is amongst them, if the woman be not beaten with the whip once a weeke, she will not be good, and therefore they looke for it orderly, & the women say, that if their husbands did not beate them, they should not loue them.

They vse to marry there very yong, their sonnes at 16, and 18. yeeres olde, and the daughters at 12. or 13. yeeres or yonger: they vse to keepe their wiues very closely, I meane those that be of any reputation, so that a man shall not see one of them but at a chance, when she goeth to church at Christmas or at Easter, or els going to visite some of her friends.

The most part of the women vse to ride a stride in saddles with stirrups, as men do, and some of them on sleds, which in summer is not commendable.

The husband is bound to finde the wife colours to paint her withall, for they vse ordinarily to paynt themselves: it is such a common practise among them, that it is counted for no shame: they grease their faces with such colours, that a man may discern them hanging on their faces almost a flight shooote off: I cannot so well liken them as to a millers wife, for they looke as though they were beaten about the face with a bagge of meale, but their eye browes they colour as blacke as icat.

The women of Russia paynt their faces.

The best properitie that the women haue, is that they can sowe well, and imboder with like and golde excellently.

Of their buriall.

Vhen any man or woman dieth, they stretch him out, and put a new paire of shooes on his feete, because he hath a great iourney to goe: then doe they winde him in a sheet, as we doe, but they forget not to put a testimonie in his right hand, which the priest giueth him, to testifie vnto S. Nicholas that he died a Christian man or woman. And they put the coarfe alwayes in a coffin of wood, although the partie be very pooze: and when they goe towards the Church, the friends and kinsmen of the partie departed carrie in their hands small ware candles, and they weepe and howle, and make much lamentation.

They that be hanged or beheaded, or such like, haue no testimonie with them: how they are receiued into heauen, it is a wonder, without their passport.

There are a great number of pooze people among them which die daily for lacke of sustenance, which is a pitifull case to beholde: for there hath bene buried in a small time, within these two yeeres, aboue 80. persons young and old, which haue died onely for lacke of sustenance: for if they had had straw and water enough, they would make shift to liue: for a great many are forced in the winter to dye straw and stampe it, and to make bread thereof, or at the least they eate it in stead of bread. In the summer they make good shift with grasse, herbes and rootes: barks of trees are good meat with them at all times. There is no people in the world, as I suppose, that liue so miserably as do the pouerty in those parts: and the most part of them that haue sufficient for themselves, and also to relieue others that need, are so vnnmerciful that they care not how many they see die of famine or hunger in the streets.

Bread made of straw.

The vnnmercifullnesse of the Russes toward the pooze.

It is a countrey full of diseases, diuers, and euill, and the best remedie is for anie of them, as they holde opinion, to goe often vnto the hote houses, as in a maner euery man hath one of his owne, which hee heateth commonly twise euery weeke, and all the household sweate, and wash themselves therein.

Stoones or baths vsuall with the hot countres.

The names of certaine sortes of drinckes vsed in Russia, and commonly drunke in the Emperours Court.

The first and principall meade is made of the iuice or liccour taken from a berrie called in Russia, Malieno, which is of a marueilous sweete taste, and of a carmolant colour, which berry I haue seene in Paris.

Reported by Thomas Bulley.

The second meade is called Viskoua, because it is made of a berry so called, and is like a black gooseberrie: but it is like in colour and taste to the red wine of France.

The third meade is called Amarodina or Smorodina, short, of a small berry much like to the small resin, and groweth in great plentie in Russia.

The fourth meade is called Chereunikyna, which is made of the wilde blacke cherry.

The fift meade is made of hony and water, with other mirtures.

There is also a delicate drinke drawn from the root of the birch tree, called in the Russe tongue Berozeuites, which drinke the noble men and others vse in Aprill, May, and Iune, which are the three moneths of the spring time: for after those moneths, the sappe of the tree dyeth, and then they cannot haue it.

Moscouie companie.

The 23. day of April, in the yeere 1558. (having obtained the Emperour of Russia his letters, directed unto sundry kings and princes, by whose dominions I should passe) I departed from Mosco by water, having with mee two of your servants, namely, Richard Iohnson, & Robert Iohnson, and a Tartar Tolmach, with diuers parcels of wares, as by the inuentory appeareth: and the 28. day we came to a town called Collom, distant from the Mosco 20. leagues, & passing one league beyond the saide Collom, we came unto a riuer called Occa, into the which the riuer Mosco falleth, and looseth his name: and passing downe the said riuer Occa 8. leagues, we came unto a castle called Terreuettsko, which we left vpon our right hand, and proceeding forward, the second day of May, we came unto another castle called Perossau, distant 8. leagues, leaving it also on our right hand. The third day we came unto the place where olde Rezan was situate, being now most of it ruined and ouergrown, and distant from the said Perossau, 6. leagues: the 4. day we passed by a castle called Terrecouia, from Rezan 12. leagues, & the 6. day we came to another castle called Cassim, vnder the gouernment of a Tartar prince named Vezar Zegoline, sometime Emperour of the worthy citie of Cazan, and now subiect vnto the Emperour of Russia. But leaving Cassim on our left hand, the 8. day we came unto a faire town called Morom, from Cassim 20. leagues, where we took the sonne, and found the latitude 56. degrees: and proceeding forward the 11. day, we came unto another faire town & castle called Nyse Nouogrod, situated at the falling of the foresaid riuer Occa into the worthy riuer of Volga, distant from the saide Morom 25. leagues, in the latitude of 56. degrees 18. minutes. From Rezan to this Nyse Nouogrod, on both sides the said riuer of Occa, is raised the greatest store of ware and hony in all the land of Russia. We tarried at the foresaid Nyse Nouogrod vntil the 19. day, for the coming of a captain which was sent by the Emperour to rule at Astracan, who being arrived, and having the number of 500. great boates vnder his conduct, some laden with victuals, souldiers, and munition: and other some with merchandise, departed altogether the said 19. day from the said Nyse Nouogrod, and the 22. we came unto a castle called Vassiliagorod, distant 25. leagues, which we left vpon our right hand. This towne or castle had his name of this Emperours father, who was called Vassilius, and gorod in the Russe tongue is as much to say as a castle, so that Vassiliagorod is to say, Vassilius castle: and it was the furthest place that the said Emperour conquered from the Tartars. But this present Emperour his sonne, called Iuan Vassilwich, hath had great good successe in his warres, both against the Christians and also the Dahometists and Gentiles, but especially against the Tartars, enlarging his Empire euen to the Caspian sea, having conquered the famous riuer of Volga, with all the countreis thereabout adiacent. Thus proceeding on our journey the 25. day of May aforesaide, we came to another castle called Sabowshare, which we left on our right hand, distant from Vassiliagorod 16. leagues. The countrey heereabout is called Mordouits, and the habitants did profess the law of the Gentiles: but now being conquered by this Emperour of Russia, most of them are christened, but lie in the woods and wildernesse, without towne or habitation.

The 27. day we passed by another castle called Swyasko, distant from Sabowshare aforesaid 25. leagues: we left it on our right hand, and the 29. came unto an Island one league from the citie of Cazan, from which falleth downe a riuer called Cazanka reca, & entreteth into the foresaide Volga. Cazan is a faire town after the Russe or Tartar fashion, with a strong castle, situated vpon a high hill, and was walled round about with timber & earth, but now the Emperour of Russia hath giuen order to plucke downe the old walles, and to builde them againe of free stone. It hath bene a citie of great wealth and riches, and being in the hands of the Tartars it was a kingdome of it selfe, and did more bere the Russes in their warres, then any other nation: but 9. yeres past, this Emperour of Russia conquered it, and tooke the king captiue, who being but young is now baptised, and brought vp in his court with two other princes, which were also kings of the said Cazan, and being each of the in time of their reignes in danger of their subiects through ciuill discord, came and rendred themselves at seuerall times vnto the said Emperour, so that at this present there are three princes in the court of Russia, which had bene Emperours of the said Cazan, whom the Emperour vseth with great honour.

We remained at Cazan till the 13. day of June, and then departed from thence: and the same day day passed by an Island called the Island of merchants, because it was wont to be a place where all merchants, as well Russes and Cazanites, as Nagayans and Crimmes, and diuers other nations did resort to keepe mart for buying and selling, but nowe it is forsaken, and standeth without any such resort thither, or at Cazan, or at any place about it, from Mosco vnto Mare Caspium.

The Island of merchants.

Thus proceeding forward the 14. day, we passed by a goodly riuer called Cama, which we left on our left hand. This riuer falleth out of the countrey of Permia into the riuer of Volga, and is from Cazan 15. leagues: and the countrey lying betwixt the said Cazan and the said riuer Cama on the left hand of Volga is called Vachen, and the inhabitants be Gentiles, and liue in the wilderness without house or habitation: and the countrey on the other side of Volga ouer against the said riuer Cama is called the land of Cheremizes, halfe Gentiles, halfe Tartars, and all the land on the left hand of the said Volga from the said riuer vnto Astracan, and so following the North and Northeast side of the Caspian sea, to a land of the Tartars called Turkemen, is called the countrey of Mangat or Nagay, whose inhabitants are of the law of Mahomet, and were all destroyed in the yeere 1558, at my being at Astracan, through ciuill warres among them, accompanied with famine, pestilence, and such plagues, in such sort that in the said yeere there were consumed of the people, in one sort and another, about one hundred thousand: the like plague was neuer seen in those parts, so that the said countrey of Nagay being a countrey of great pasture, remaineth now vnreplenished to the great contentation of the Russes, who haue had cruel warres a long time together.

The riuer of Cama.

Nagay Tartars

The Nagayans when they flourished, liued in this manner: they were diuided into diuers companies called Wozds, and euery Wozd had a ruler, whom they obeyed as their king, and was called a Murle. Towne or house they had none, but liued in the open fields, euery Murle or King hauing his Wozds or people about him, with their wiues, children and cattell, who hauing consumed the pasture in one place, remooued vnto another: and when they remooue they haue houles like tents set vpon wagons or carts, which are drawn from place to place with camels, & therein their wiues, children, and all their riches, which is very litle, is caried about, and euery man hath at the least foure or fise wiues besides concubines. Use of money they haue none, but doe barter their cattell for apparell and other necessaries. They delight in no arte nor science, except the warres, wherein they are expert, but for the most part they be pasturing people, and haue great store of cattel, which is all their riches. They eate much flesh, and especially the horse, and they drinke mares milke, where with they be oftentimes drunke: they are lechituous & inclined to theft and murther. Coyne they knowe not, neither doe eate any bread, mocking the Christians for the same, and disabling our strengths, saying we liue by eating the top of a weede, and drinke a drinke made of the same, allowing their great deuouring of flesh, and drinking of milke to be the increase of their strength. But now to proceed forward to my iourney.

Wozda.

All the countrey vpon our right hand the riuer Volga, from ouer against the riuer Cama vnto the towne of Astracan, is the land of Crimme, whose inhabitants be also of the lawe of Mahomet, and liue for the most part according to the fashions of the Nagayans, hauing continual wars with the Emperour of Russia, and are valiant in the fildes, hauing countenance, and support from the great Turke.

The Crimme Tartars.

The 16. day of Iune we passed by certaine fishermens houles called Petowse twenty leagues from the riuer Cama, where is great fishing for sturgeon, so continuing our way untill the 22. day, and passing by another great riuer called Samar, which falleth out of the aforesaid countrey, and runneth through Nagay, and entrench into the saide riuer of Volga. The 28. day wee came vnto a great hill, where was in times past a castle made by the Crimmes, but now it is ruined, being the iustt midway betwene the said Cazan and Astrachan, which is 200. leagues or thereabout, in the latitude of 51. degrees 47. minutes. Vpon all this shore groweth abundance of Licoris, whose root runneth within the ground like a vine.

The riuer of Samar.

Licoris in great plenty.

Thus going forward the first day of Iuly we came to a place called Perouolog, so named because in times past the Tartars caried their boates from Volga vnto the riuer Tanais, otherwise called Don, by land, when they would robbe such as passed downe the said Volga to Astracan, and also such as passed downe by the riuer Tanais, to Asou, Caffa, or any other towne situated vpon Mare Euxinum, into which sea Tanais falleth, who hath his spring in the countrey of Rezan, out of a plaine ground. It is at this streight of Perouolog from the one riuer to the other two leagues by land, and is a dangerous place for theeuers and robbers, but now it is not so euill as it hath bene, by reason of the Emperour of Russia his conquests.

Departing from Perouolog, hauing the wilderness on both sides, wee saue a great heard of Nagayans, pasturing, as is abouesaid, by estimation about a thousand Camels drawing of cattles with houses vpon them like tents, of a strange fashon, seeming to bee a farre off a towne: that word was belonging to a great Hurle called Smille, the greatest prince in all Nagay, who hath slaine and vniuen away all the rest, not sparing his owne brethren and children, and hauing peace with this Emperour of Russia he hath what he needeth, and ruleth alone: so that now the Russes liue in peace with the Nagayans, who were wont to haue moztall warres together.

Astracan.

Store of Surgions.

The 14. day of Iuly passing by an old castle, which was Old Astracan, and leauing it vpon our right hand, we arriued at New Astracan, which this Emperour of Russia conquered fire yeeres past, in the yeere 1552. It is from the Mosco vnto Astracan fire hundred leagues, or thereabout. The towne of Astracan is situated in an Island vpon a hill side, hauing a castle within the same, walled about with earth and timber, neither faire nor strong: The towne is also walled about with earth: the buildings and houses (except it be the capitaines lodging, and certaine other gentlemens) most base and simple. The Island is most destitute and barren of wood and pasture, and the ground will beare no corne: the aire is there most infected, by reason (as I suppose) of much fish, and specially Surgion, by which onely the inhabitants liue, hauing great scarcitie of flesh and bread. They hang by their fish in their streets and houses to dry for their prouision, which causeth such abundance of flies to increase there, as the like was neuer seene in any land, to their great plague. And at my being at the sayd Astracan, there was a great famine and plague among the people, and specially among the Tartars called Nagayans, who the same time came thither in great numbers to render themselves to the Russes their enemies, & to seeke succour at their hands, their countrey being destroyed, as I said before: but they were but ill entertained or relieved, for there died a great number of them for hunger, which lay all the Island through in heapes dead, and like to beasts vnburied, very pitifull to behold: many of them were also sold by the Russes, and the rest were banished from the Island. At that time it had bene an easie thing to haue conuerted that wicked Nation to the Christian faith, if the Russes themselves had bene good Christians: but how should they shew compassion vnto other Nations, when they are not mercifull vnto their owne? At my being there I could haue bought many goodly Tartars children, if I would haue had a thousand, of their owne fathers and mothers, to say, a boy or a wench for a loose of bread worth fife pence in England, but we had more need of victuals at that time than of any such merchandise. This Astracan is the furthest hold that this Emperour of Russia hath conquered of the Tartars towards the Caspian sea, which he keepeth very strong, sending thither euery yeere prouision of men, and victuals, and timber to build the castle.

There is a certaine trade of merchandise there vsed, but as yet so small and beggerly, that it is not worth the making mention, and yet there come merchants thither from diuers places. The chiefest commodities that the Russes bring thither are redde hides, redde sheeps skinner, wooden vessels, vnbles, and saddles, knives, and other trifles, with corne, bacon, and other victuals. The Tartars bring thither diuers kindes of wares made of cotton wooll, with diuers kindes of wrought silkes: and they that come out of Persia, namely from Shamacki doe bring sowing silke, which is the courtest that they vse in Russeland. Crasko, diuers kinds of pike silkes for girdles, shirts of male, bowes, swords, and such like things: and some yeeres corne, and wall-nuts, but all such things in such small quantitie, the merchants being so beggerly and poore that bring the same, that it is not worth the writing, neither is there any hope of trade in all those parts worth the following.

The length of the Island of Astracan.

They enter into the Caspian sea.

This foresaid Island of Astracan is in length twelue leagues, and in breadth thre, & fiftie East and West in the latitude of fortie seuen degrees, nine minutes: we taried there vntill the first day of August, and hauing bought and prouided a boate in company with certaine Tartars and Persians, we laded our goods and imbarcked our selues, and the same day departed I, with the said two Iohnsons hauing the whole charge of the Nauigation downe the sayd river Volga, being very crooked, and full of flats toward the mouth thereof. We entered into the Caspian sea the tenth day of August at the Easterly side of the sayd river, being twentie leagues from Astracan asforesaid, in the latitude of fortie six degrees, twentie seuen minutes.

The blew sea.

Volga hath seuentie mouthes or fals into the sea: and we hauing a large wind, kept the North-east shoze, and the eleuenth day we sailed seuen leagues East-northeast, and came vnto an Island hauing an high hill therein, called Accurgar, a good marke in the sea. From thence East tenne leagues, we fell with another Island called Bawhiata, much higher then the other. Within these two Islands to the Northwards, is a great Baie called the Blew sea. From thence we sailed East and by North ten leagues, and hauing a contrary wind, we came to an anker in a sadome water, and so rid vntill the fiftenth day, hauing a great storme at Southeast, being a most contrary wind, which we rid out. Then the wind came to the North, and we weped, and set our course Southeast, and that day sailed eight leagues.

Thus

This proceeding forwards, the 17. day wee lost sight of land, and the same day sailed thirte leagues, and the 18. day twentie leagues winding East, and fell with a land called Baughleata, being 74. leagues from the mouth of the said Volga, in the latitude of 46. degrees 54. minutes, the coast lying nearest East and by South, and West and by North. At the point of this land lieth buried a holy Prophet, as the Tartars call him, of their law, where great deuotion is vsed of all such Mahometists as doe passe that way.

Baughleata being 74. leagues from Volga.

The nineteenth day the winde being West, and we winding Eastsoutheast, we sailed tenne leagues, and passed by a great riuer called Iaic, which hath his spring in the lande of Siberia, nigh vnto the foresaid riuer Cama, and runneth through the lande of Nagay, falling into this Mare Caspium. And by this riuer one dayes iourney is a Towne called Serachick, subiect to the foresaid Tartar prince called Musie Smille, which is nowe in friendship with the Emperour of Russia. Here is no trade of merchandize vsed, for that the people haue no vse of money, and are all men of warre, and pastures of cattel, and giuen much to theft and murther. Thus being at an anker against this riuer Iaic, and all our men being on land, sauing I, who lay sore sicke, and sine Tartars, whereof one was reputed a holy man, because he came from Mecca, there came vnto vs a boate with thirrie men well armed and appointed, who boorded vs, and began to enter into our barke, and our holy Tartar called Azy, perceiving that, asked them what they would haue, and withall made a prayer: with that these rousers staled, declaring that they were Gentlemen, banished from their countrey, and out of liuing, & came to see if there were any Russes or other Christians (which they call Caphars) in our barke: To whom this Azi most stoutly answered, that there were none, auowing the same by great othes of their lawe, (which lightly they will not breake) whom the rousers beleueed, and vpon his words departed. And so through the fidelity of that Tartar, I with all my company and goods were saued, and our men being come on boord, and the wind faire, we departed from that place, and winding East and Southeast, that day being the 20. of August sailed 16. leagues.

Iaic riuer.

Serachick.

The 21. day we passed ouer a Bay of 6. leagues broad, and fell with a Cape of land, hauing two Islands at the Southeast part thereof, being a good marke in the sea: & doubling that Cape the land trended Northeast, and maketh another Bay, into which falleth the great riuer Yem, springing out of the land of Colmack.

The Countrey of Colmack.

The 22. 23. and 24. dayes, we were at an anker.

The 25. the winde came faire, and we sailed that day 20. leagues, and passed by an Island of lowe land, and thereabout are many flats and sands: and to the Northward of this Island there goeth in a great Bay, but we set off from this Island, and winded South to come into deepe water, being much troubled with shoals & flats, and ran that course 10. leagues, then East Southeast 20. leagues, and fel with the maine land, being full of copped hills, and passing along the coast 20. leagues, the further we sailed, the higher was the land.

The 27. day we crossed ouer a Bay, the South shore being the higher land, and fel with a high point of land: & being ouerthwart the Cape, there rose such a storme at the East, that we thought verily we should haue perished: this storme continued 3. dayes. From this Cape we passed to a port called Manguslaue. The place where we should haue arrived at the Southermost part of the Caspian sea, is 12. leagues within a Bay: but we being sore tormented and tossed with this foresaid storme, were driuen vnto another land on the other side the Bay, ouerthwart the sayd Manguslaue being very lowe land, and a place as well for the ill commoditie of the hauen, as of those brute field people, where neuer barke nor boate had before arrived, not liked of vs.

The port of Manguslaue.

But yet here we sent certaine of our men to land to talke with the gouernour and people, as well for our good vslage at their handes, as also for prouision of camels to carry our goods from the sayd sea side to a place called Sellyzure, being from the place of our landing sine and twentie dayes iourney. Our messengers returned with comfortable wordes and faire promises of all things.

Wherefore the 3. day of September 1558. we discharged our barke, and I with my company were gently entertained of the Prince & of his people. But before our departure from thence, we found them to be very bad and brutish people, for they ceased not daily to molest vs, either by fighting, stealing or begging, raising the pryse of horse and camels, & victuals, double that it was wont there to be, and forced vs to buy the water that we did drinke: which caused vs to hasten away, and to conclude with them as well for the hire of camels, as for the pryse of such as we bought, with other prouision, according to their owne demaund: So that for euery camels lading, being but 400. waight of ours, we agreed to giue thre hides of Russia, and foure wooden dishes, and to the Prince or gouernour of the sayd people, one ninch, and two scuenchs: namely, nine seuerall things, and twise seuen seuerall things: for money they vse none.

They goe on land.

The countrey
of Manguslaue,

And thus being ready, the fourteenth of September we departed from that place, being a Carauan of a thousand camels. And hauing trauailed five dayes iourney, we came to another Princes Dominion, and vpon the way there came vnto vs certaine Tartars on horseback, being well armed, and seruants vnto the saide Prince called Timor Solran, gouernour of the said countrey of Manguslaue, where wee meant to haue arriued and discharged our barke, if the great storme aforesaid had not disappointed. These aforesaid Tartars stayd our Carauan in the name of their Prince, and opened our wares, and tooke such things as they thought best for their saide prince without money, but for such things as they tooke from me, which was a ninth (after much dissension) I ridde vnto the same Prince, and presented my selfe before him, requesting his fauour, and passport to trauaile through his countrey, and not to be robbed nor spoiled of his people: which request he graunted me, and entertained me very gently, commaunding me to be well furnished with flesh and mares milke: for bread they vse none, nor other drinke except water: but money he had none to giue mee for such things as he tooke of mee, which might be of value in Russe money, fifteene rubbles, but he gaue me his letter, and a horse woorth seuen rubbles. And so I departed from him being glad that I was gone: for he was reported to be a very tyrant, and if I had not gone vnto him, I vnderstoode his commaundement was, that I should haue bene robbed and destroyed.

20. dayes trauaile in the wildernesse,

of water.

Another gulle of the Caspian sea.

This Solran liued in the fieldes without Castle or towne, and late, at my being with him, in a litle rounde house made of reedes couered without with felt, and within with Carpets. There was with him the great Petropolitan of that wilde Cuntry, esteemed of the people, as the Bishop of Rome is in most parts of Europe, with diuers other of his chiefe men. The Solran with this Petropolitan demanded of me many questions, as wel touching our kingdoms, lawes, and Religion, as also the cause of my coming into those parts, with my further pretence. To whom I answered concerning all things, as vnto me seemed best, which they tooke in good part. So hauing leaue I departed and ouertooke our Carauan, and proceeded on our iourney, and trauailed 20. dayes in the wildernes from the sea side without seeing towne or habitation, carrying provision of victuals with vs for the same time, and were driuen by necessity to eate one of my camels and a horse for our part, as other did the like: and during the said 20. daies we found no water, but such as we dyed out of old deepe welles, being very brackish and salt, and yet sometimes passed two or three dayes without the same. And the 5. day of October ensuing, we came vnto a gulle of the Caspian sea againe, where we found the water very fresh and sweete: at this gulle the customers of the king of Turkestan met vs, who took custome of euery 25. one, and 7. ninthes for the saide king and his brethren, which being receiued they departed, and we remained there a day after to refresh our selues.

Will. de Rubricis describeth
this river of Ardok, cap. 4.

Note that in times past there did fall into this gulf the great riuer Oxus, which hath his springs in the mountains of Paraponisus in India, & now cometh not so far, but falleth into another riuer called Ardock, which runneth toward the North, & consumeth himself in the ground passing vnder ground about 500. miles, and then issueth out againe and falleth into the lake of Kirghay.

Sellizure, or Shayzure.

We hauing refreshed our selues at the foresaide gulle, departed thence the 4. day of October, and the seuenth day arriued at a castle called Sellizure, where the king called Azim Can, remained with 3. other of his brethren, and the 9. day I was commaunded to come before his presence, to whom I deliuered the Emperors letters of Russia: and I also gaue him a present of a ninth, who entertained me very well, and caused me to eate in his presence as his brethren did, feasting me with flesh of a wilde horse, and mares milke without bread. And the next day he sent for me againe, and asked of me diuers questions, as wel touching the affaires of the Emperour of Russia, as of our countrey and lawes, to which I answered as I thought good: so that at my departure he gaue me his letters of safe conduct.

Letters of safe conduct.

This Castle of Sellizure is situated vpon an high hill, where the King called the Can lieth, whose palace is built of earth very basely, and not strong: the people are but poore, and haue litle trade of marchandise among them. The South part of this Castle is lowe lande, but very fruitfull, where grow many good fruites, among which there is one called a Dynie, of a great bignesse and full of moysture, which the people doe eate after meate in steade of drinke. Also there growes another fruit called a Carbusle of the bignesse of a great cucumber, yellow and sweete as sugar: also a certaine cozne called Legur, whose stalke is much like a sugar cane, and as high, and the graine like rice, which groweth at the toppes of the cane like a cluster of grapes; the water that serueth all that countrey is drawn by ditches out of the riuer Oxus, vnto the great destruction of the said riuer, for which cause it falleth not into the Caspian sea as it hath done in times past, and in short time all that land is like to be destroyed, and to become a wildernes for want of water, when the riuer of Oxus shal faile.

The

The 14. day of the moneth we departed from this Castle of Sellizure, and the 16. of the same we arrived at a citie called Vrgence, where we paid custome as wel for our own heads, as for our camels and horses. And having there sojourned one moneth, attending the time of our further tra-Vrgence.
 uaille, the king of that countrey called Aly Solcan, brother to the forenamed Azym Can, returned from a towne called Corasan, within the borders of Persia, which he lately had conquered from the Persians, with whom he and the rest of the kings of Tartaria haue continuall warres. Before this king also I was commanded to come, to whom I likewise presented the Emperors letters of Russia, and he entertained me wel, and demanded of me diuers questions, and at my departure gaue me his letters of safeconduct.

This citie or towne of Vrgence standeth in a plaine ground, with walles of the earth, by estimation 4. miles about it. The buildings within it are also of earth, but ruined and out of good order: it hath one long street that is couered aboue, which is the place of their market. It hath bene wonne and lost 4. times within 7. yeeres by ciuill warres, by meanes whereof there are but few merchants in it, and they very poore, and in all that towne I could not sell aboue 4. kerseis. The chiefest commodities there sold are such wares as come from Boghar, and out of Persia, but in most final quantity not worth the toying. All the land from the Caspian sea to this Citie of Vrgence is called the land of Turkeman, & is subiect to the said Azim Can, and his brethren which be five in number, and one of them hath the name of the chiefe king called Can, but he is little expected sauing in his owne Dominion, and where he dwelleth: for euery one will be King of his owne portion, and one brother seeketh alwayes to destroy another, hating no natural loue among them, by reason that they are begotten of diuers women, and commonly they are the children of slaves, either Christians or Gentiles, which the father doeth keepe as concubines, and euery Can or Sulcan hath at the least 4. or 5. wives, besides yong maidens and boyes, liuing most viciously: and when there are warres betwixt these brethren, (as they are seldome without) he that is overcome if he be not slaine, flieth to the field with such companie of men as will followe him, and there lieth in the wilderness resorting to watering places, and so robbeth and spoileth as many Carauans of Merchants and others as they be able to overcome, continuing in this sort his wicked life, until such time as he may get power and aide to inuade some of his brethren againe. From the Caspian sea vnto the Castle of Sellizure aforesaid, and all the Countreies about the said Sea, the people liue without towne or habitation in the wilde fields, removing from one place to another in great companies with their cattel, whereof they haue great store, as camels, horses, and sheepe both tame and wilde. Their sheepe are of great stature with great buttorks, weighing 60. or 80. pound in weight. There are many wild horses which the Tartars doe many times kil with their hawkes, and that in this order.

of Turkeman.*

The hawkes are lured to leape vpon the beasts neckes or heads, which with chasing of themselves and soe bearing of the hawkes are tired: then the hunter following his game doeth slay the horse with his arrow or sword. In all this lande there groweth no grasse, but a certaine bush or heath, whereon the cattell feeding become very fat.

The Tartars neuer ride without their bow, arrowes, and sword, although it be on hawking, or at any other pleasure, and they are good archers both on horsebacke, and on foote also. These people haue not the vse of golde, silver, or any other coyne, but when they lacke apparell or other necessaries, they batter their cattell for the same. Bread they haue none, for they neither till nor sow: they be great deuourers of flesh, which they cut in final pieces, & eat it by handfulls most greedily, & especially the horseflesh. Their chiefest drink is mares milke soured, as I haue said before of the Nagayans, & they wilbe drunk with the same. They haue no riuers nor places of water in this countrey, until you come to the foresaid gulf, distant from the place of our landing 20. dayes journey, except it be in wells, the water wherof is saltish, & yet distant the one from the other two daies journey and more. They eat their meate vpon the ground, sitting with their legs double vnder them, and so also when they pray. Art or science they haue none, but liue most idly, sitting round in great companies in the fields, deuising, and talking most vainely.

The 26. day of Nouember, we departed from the towne of Vrgence, and hauing trauailed by the riuer Oxus, 100. mile, we passed ouer another great riuer called Ardock, where we paid a certaine petty custome. This riuer Ardock is great, and very swift, falling out of the foresaid Oxus, and passing about 1000. mile to the Northward, it then consumeth it selfe in the ground, and passing vnder the same about 500. mile, issueth out againe, and falleth into the lake of Kuray, as I haue before declared.

The 7. of December following, we arrived at a Castle called Kair, subiect to a Solcan called Saramet Solcan, who meant to haue robbed all the Christians in the Carauan, had it not bene for feare of his brother the king of Vrgence, as we were informed by one of his chiefest counsellors, who willed vs to make him a present, which he tooke, and deliuered: besides we paid at the said castle for custome, of euery camel one red hube of Russia, besides many gifts to his officers.

*The castle of

Thus proceeding in our iourney, the tenth day at night being at rest, and our watch set, there came vnto vs foure hozsemen, which we tooke as spies, from whom wee tooke their weapons and bound them, and hauing well examined them, they confessed that they had seene the tract of many hozsemen, and no footing of camels, & gaue vs to vnderstand, that there were rousers and theeues abroade: for there trauaile few people that are true and peaceable in that Countrey, but in companie of Carauan, where there be many camels: and hozsefecting now without camels were to be doubted. Whereupon we consulted & determined amongst our selues, and sent a poste to the said Solkan of Kayre, who immediately came himselfe with 300. men, and mette these foure suspected men which we sent vnto him, and examined them so streightly, and threatened them in such sort, that they confessed, there was a banished Prince with 40. men 3. daies iourney for ward, who lay in wait to destroy vs, if he could, and that they themselves were of his companie.

The Solkan therefore vnderstanding, that the theeues were not many, appointed vs 80. men well armed with a Captaine to goe with vs, and conduct vs in our way. And the Solkan himselfe returned backe againe, taking the foure theeues with him. These souldiers trauailed with vs two dayes, consuming much of our victuals. And the 3. day in the morning very early they set out before our Carauan, and hauing ranged the wilderness for the space of foure houres, they mette vs, coming towards vs as fast as their hozse could runne, and declared that they had founde the tract of hozses not farre from vs, perceiuing well that we should meeete with enemies, and therefore willed vs to appoint our selues for them, and asked vs what wee would giue them to conduct vs further, or els they would returne. To whom we offered as we thought good, but they refused our offer, and would haue more, and so we not agreeing they departed from vs, and went back to their Solkan, who (as wee coniectured) was priuie to the conspiracie. But they being gone, certaine Tartars of our companie called holy men, (because they had bene at Mecha) caused the whole Carauan to stay, and would make their prayers, and deuine howe wee should prosper in our iourney and whether we should meet with any ill company or no: To which, our whole Carauan did agree. And they tooke certaine sheepe and killed them, and tooke the blade bones of the same, and first sodde them, and then burnt them, and tooke of the blood of the said sheepe, and mingled it with the powder of the saide bones, and wrote certaine Characters with the saide blood, vsing many other ceremonies and wordes, and by the same deuined and found, that wee should meeete with enemies and theeues (to our great trouble) but should ouercome them, to which forerie, I and my companie gaue no credit, but we found it true: for within 3. houres after that the souldiers departed from vs, which was the 15. day of December, in the morning, we escried farre off diuers hozsemen which made towards vs, and we (perceiuing them to be rousers) gathered our selues together, being 40. of vs well appointed, and able to fight, and we made our prayers together euery one after his late, professing to liue and die one with another, and so prepared our selues. When the theeues were nigh vnto vs, we perceiued them to be in number 37. men well armed, and appointed with bowes, arrowes and swords, and the captaine a prince banished from his Countrey. They willed vs to peelee our selues, or els to be slaine, but wee desired them, wherewith they shotte at vs all at once, and wee at them very hotly, and so continued our fight from morning vntill two houres within night, diuers men, hozses and camels being wounded and slaine on both partes: and had it not bene for 4. handgounes which I and my companie had and vled, we had bene ouercome and destroyed: for the theeues were better armed, and were also better archers then we: But after wee had slaine diuers of their men and hozses with our gunnes, they durst not approach to nigh, which caused them to come to a truce with vs vntill the next morning, which we accepted, and encamped our selues vpon a hill, and made the fashion of a Castle, walling it about with packes of wares, and laide our hozses and camels within the same to saue them from the shotte of arrowes: and the theeues also incamped within an arrowe shotte of vs, but they were betwixt vs and the water, which was to our great discomfort, because neither we nor our camels had drinke in 2. dayes before.

Thus keeping good watch, when halfe the night was spent, the Prince of the theeues sent a messenger halfe way vnto vs, requiring to talke with our Captaine, in their tongue, the Carauan Bascha, who answered the messenger. I will not depart from my companie to goe into the halfe way to talke with thee: but if that thy Prince with all his companie will sweare by our Lawe to keepe the truce, then will I send a man to talke with thee, or els not. Which the Prince vnderstanding as well himselfe as his company, swore so loud that we might all heare. And then we sent one of our company (reputed a holy man) to talke with the same messenger. The message was pronounced aloud in this order, Our Prince demandeth of the Carauan Bascha, and

and of all you that be Bullarmans, (that is to say circumcised) not desiring your bloods, that you deliver into his hands as many Caphars, that is, unbelievers (meaning vs the Christians) as are among you with their goods, and in so doing, hee will suffer you to depart with your goods in quietnesse, and on the contrary, you shall be handled with no lesse cruelty then the Caphars, if you overcome you, as he doubteth not. To the which our Carauan Bashha answered, that he had no Christians in his company, nor other dangers, but two Turkes which were of their Law, and although hee had, hee would rather die then deliver them, and that we were not afraide of his threatenings, and that should he know when day appeared. And so passing in talke, the theuees (contrary to their othe) carried our holy man away to their Prince, crying with a lowde voyce in token of victorie, Ollo, ollo. Wherewith we were much discomfited, fearing that that holy man would betray vs: but he being cruelly handled and much examined, would not to death confesse any thing which was to vs prejudiciall, neither touching vs, nor yet what men they had slaine and wounded of ours the day before. When the night was spent, in the morning we prepared our selues to battel againe: which the theuees perceiving, required to fall to agreement & asked much of vs: And to be brieve, the most part of our companie being loth to go to battel againe, and having little to loose, & safes to passe, we were compelled to agree, and to give the theuees 20 murther (that is to say) 20 times 9 scurall things, and a camell to carry away the same, which being received, the theuees departed into the wilderness to their old habitation, and we went on our way forward. And that night came to the river Oxus, where we refreshed our selues, having bene 30 dayes without water and drinke, and carried there all the next day, making mery with our slaine horses and camels, and then departed from that place, & for feare of meeting with the said theuees againe or such like, we left the high way which went along the said river, and passed through a wilderness of sand, and travelled 4 dayes in the same before we came to water: and then came to a well, the water being very blackish, and we then as before were in neede of water, and of other victuals, being forced to kill our horses and camels to eate.

Bullarmans,

The river of Oxus.

A wilderness of sande.

In this wilderness also we had almost fallen into the hands of theuees: for one night being at rest, there came certaine scouters, and carried away certaine of our men which lay a litle separated from the Carauan, wherewith there was a great shoute and crie, and we immediatly laded our camels, and departed being about midnight and very darke, and drove soe till we came to the river Oxus againe, and then we feared nothing being walled with the said river: & whether it was for that we had gotten the water, or for that the same theuees were far from vs when the scouts discovered vs, we knowe not, but we escaped that danger.

So upon the 23 day of December we arrived at the citie of Boghar in the lande of Bactria. This Boghar is situate in the lowest part of all the land, walled about with a high wall of earth, with diuers gates into the same: it is divided into 3 partitions, whereof two parts are the kings, and the 3 part is for Marchants and markets, and euery science hath their dwelling and market by themselves. The Citie is very great, and the houses for the most part of earth, but there are also many houses, temples and monuments of stone sumptuously builded, and gilt, and specially bathhouses so artificially built, that the like thereof is not in the world: the maner wherof is too long to rehearse. There is a litle river running through the middelt of the said Citie, but the water there of is most unhollsome, for it breedeth sometimes in men that drinke thereof, and especially in them that be not there borne, a woyme of an ell long, which lyeth commonly in the legges betwixt the flesh and the skinned, and is plucked out about the ancle with great art and cunning, the Surgeons being much practised therein, and if they beake in plucking out, the partie dieth, and euery day the commeth out about an inch, which is rolled vp, and so worketh till she be all out. And yet it is there forbidden to drinke any other thing then water, & mares milke, and whosoever is found to beake that law is whipped and beaten most cruelly through the open markets, and there are officers appointed for the same, who haue authoritie to goe into any mans house, to search if he haue either Aquavie, wine, or brage, and finding the same, doe beake the vessels, spoile the drinke, and punish the masters of the house most cruelly, yea, and many times if they perceive but by the breath of a man that he hath drunke, without further examination he shall not escape their hands.

Boghar a citie

A strange woyme in mens leggs.

There is a Metropolitane in this Boghar, who causeth this law to bee so strictly kept: and he is more obeyed then the king, and will depose the king, and place another at his will and pleasure, as he did by this king that reigned at our being there, and his predecessor, by the meanes of the sayd Metropolitane: for he betrayed him, and in the night slew him in his chamber, who was a Prince that loued all Christians well.

This Countrey of Boghar was sometime subiect to the Persians, & do now speake the Persian tongue, but yet now it is a kingdom of it selfe, and hath most cruel warres continually with the the sayd Persians about their religion, although they be all Mahomerists. Due occasion of their wars is, for that the Persians will not cut the haire of their upper lips, as the Bogharians and all other Tartars doe, which they accompt great sinne, and call them Caphars, that is, unbelievers, as they doe the Christians.

The king of Boghar hath no great power or riches, his reuenues are but small, and he is most maintained by the Citie: for he taketh the tenth prtie of all things that are there solde, as well by the craftsmen as by the marchants, to the great impouerishment of the people, whom he keepeth in great subiection, and when he lacketh money, he sendeth his officers to the thoppes of the sayd Marchants to take their wares to pay his debts, and will haue credite of force, as the like he did to pay me certaine money that he owed me for 19 pieces of Kersley. Their money is siluer and copper, for gold there is none currant: they haue but one peece of siluer, & that is worth 12 pence English, and the copper money are called Dooles, and 120 of them goeth the value of the said 12 pence, and is more common payment then the siluer, which the king causeth to rise and fall to his most advantage euery other moneth, and sometimes twise a moneth, not caring to oppresse his people, for that he lokech not to reigne aboue 2 or 3 yeres befoze he be either slaine or diuena-way, to the great destruction of the countrey and merchants.

The 26 day of the moneth I was commanded to come befoze the said king, to whom I presented the Emperour of Russia his letters, who intetained vs most gently, and caused vs to eate in his presence, and diuers times he sent for me, and deuised with me familiarly in his secret chamber, as well of the power of the Emperour, and the great Turke, as also of our countreies, lawes, and religion, and caused vs to shoote in handguns befoze him, and did himselfe practise the vse thereof. But after all this great intertainment befoze my departure he shewed himselfe a very Tartar: for he went to the wars owing me money, and saw me not payd befoze his departure. And although indeede he gaue order for the same, yet was I verie ill satisfied, and forced to rebate part, and to take wares as payment for the rest contrary to my expectation: but of a begger better payment I could not haue, and glad I was so to be paid and dispatched.

But yet I must needs praise & commend this barbarous king, who immediately after my arrival at Boghar, hauing vnderstoode our trouble with the theeuers, sent 100 men well armed, and gaue them great charge not to returne befoze they had either slaine or taken the sayd theeuers. Who according to their commission ranged the wilddrines in such sort, that they met with the said company of theeuers, and slew part, and part fledde, and foure they tooke and brought vnto the king, and two of them were sore wounded in our skirmish with our gunnes: And after the king had sent for me to come to see them, he caused them all 4 to be hanged at his palace gate, because they were Gentlemen, to the example of others. And of such goods as were gotten againe, I had part restored me, and this good iustice I found at his hands.

There is perely great resort of Marchants to this Citie of Boghar, which tranasle in great Carauans from the countreies thereabout adioining, as India, Persia, Balgh, Russia, with diuers others, and in times past from Cathay, when there was passage: but these Marchants are so beggerly and poore, and bring so little quantitie of wares, lying two or 3 yeres to sell the same, that there is no hope of any good trade there to be had worth by the following.

The chiefe commodities that are brought thither out of these foresayd Countreys, are these following.

The Indians doe bring fine whites, which the Tartars do all toll about their heads, & al other kinds of whites, which serue for apparell made of cotton wooll and crasko, but golde, siluer, precious stones, and spices they bring none. I enquired and perceiued that all such trade passeth to the Ocean sea, and the baines where all such things are gotten are in the subiection of the Portugals. The Indians carie from Boghar againe wrought silkes, red hides, slaues, and horses, with such like, but of Kersleys and other cloth, they make little accompt. I offered to barter with Marchants of those Countreies, which came from the furthest parts of India, euen from the countrey of Bengala, & the riuer Ganges, to giue them Kersleys for their commodities, but they would not barter for such commoditie as cloth.

The Persians do bring thither Craska, wollen cloth, linnen cloth, diuers kindes of wrought pike silkes, Argomacks, with such like, and doe carie from thence redde hides with other Russe wares, and slaues, which are of diuers countreies, but cloth they will by none, for that they bring thither themselves, and is brought vnto them as I haue inquired from Aleppo in Syria, and the parts of Turkie. The Russes doe carie vnto Boghar, redde hides, sheeps skinnes, wollen cloth of diuers sorts, wooden vessels, bridles, saddles, with such like, and doe carie away from thence diuers kindes of wares made of cotton wooll, diuers kinds of silkes, Crasca, with other things, but there is but smal utterance. From the Countreies of Cathay are brought thither in time of peace, and when the way is open, musk, rubarbe, satten, damaske, with diuers other things. At my being at Boghar, there came Carauans out of all these foresaid Countries, except from Cathay: and the cause why there came none from thence was the great warres that had dured 3 yeres before my comming thither, and yet dured betwixt 2 great Countries & cities of Tartars, that are directly in the way betwixt the said Boghar and the said Cathay, and certaine barbarous fildie people, as well Gentiles as Mahometists bordering to the said Cities. The cities are called Taskent and Caskar, and the people that warre against Taskent are called Cassaks of the law of Mahomet: and they which warre with the sayd countrey of Caskar are called Kings, Gentiles & idolaters. These 2 barbarous nations are of great force liuing in the fildes without house or towne, & haue almost subdued the foresaid cities, & so stopped by the way, that it is impossible for any Carauan to passe vnspoiled: so that 3 yeres before our being there, no Carauan had gone, or vled trade betwixt the countries of Cathay and Boghar, and when the way is cleare, it is 9 moneths iourney.

So speake of the said countrey of Cathay, and of such newes as I haue heard thereof, I haue thought it best to reserve it to our meeting. I hauing made my solace at Boghar in the Winter time, and hauing learned by much inquisition, the trade thereof, as also of all the other countries thereto adioyning, and the time of the yeere being come, for all Carauans to depart, and also the king being gone to the warres, and newes come that he was fled, and I aduertised by the Metropolitane himselfe, that I should depart, because the towne was like to bee besieged: I thought it good and meete, to take my iourney some way, and determined to haue gone from thence into Persia, and to haue seene the trade of that countrey, although I had enformed my selfe sufficiently thereof, as well at Astracan, as at Boghar: and perceiued well the trades not to be much vnlike the trades of Tartaria: but when I should haue taken my iourney that way, it was let by diuers occasions: the one was, the great wars that did newly begin betwixt the Sophie, and the kings of Tartaria, whereby the waies were destroyed: and there was a Carauan destroyed with rousers & theues, which came out of India and Persia, by safe conduct: and about ten daies iourney from Boghar, they were robbed, and a great part slaine. Also the Metropolitane of Boghar, who is greater then the king, tooke the Emperors letters of Russia from me, without which I should haue bene taken slaue in euery place: also all such wares as I had receiued in barter for cloth, and as I tooke perforce of the king, & other his Nobles, in payment of money due vnto me, were not vendible in Persia: for which causes, and diuers others, I was constrained to come backe againe to Mare Caspium, the same way I went: so that the eight of March 1559, we departed out of the said Citie of Boghar, being a Carauan of 600 Camels: and if we had not departed when we did, I and my company had bene in danger to haue lost life and goods. For ten daies after our departure, the king of Samarcand came with an armie, & besieged the said Citie of Boghar, the king being absent, and gone to the wars against another prince, his kinsman, as the like chanceth in those Countries once in two or three yeres. For it is maruell, if a King reigne there aboute three or foure yeres, to the great destruction of the Countrey, and marchants.

He returneth
the eight of March 1559.

The 25 of March, we came to the foresayd towne of Vrgence, and escaped the danger of 400 rousers, which lay in waite for vs backe againe, being the most of them of kindred to that company of theues, which we met with going forth, as we perceiued by foure spies, which were taken. There were in my company, and committed to my charge, two ambassadoys, the one from the king of Boghar, the other from the king of Balke, and were sent vnto the Emperour of Russia. And after hauing taried at Vrgence, and the Caste of Sellysure, eight daies for the assembling, and making ready of our Carauan, the second of Aprill we departed from thence, hauing foure more Ambassadors in our companie, sent from the king of Vrgence, and other Soltans, his brethren, vnto the Emperour of Russia, with answer of such letters as I brought them: and the same Ambassadors were also committed vnto my charge by the sayde Kings and princes: to whom I promised most faithfully, and swore by our law, that they should be well vled in Rusland, and suffered to depart from thence againe in safetie, according as the Emperour had written also in his letters: for they somewhat doubted, because there had none gone out of Tartaria into Russia, of long time before.

Vrgence.

The king of Balke, or Balgh.

The 23 of Aprill, we arrived at the Mare Caspium againe, where we found our barke which we came in, but neither anker, cable, cocke, nor saile: neuerthelesse we brought hempe with vs, and spunne a cable our selues, with the rest of our tackling, and made vs a saile of cloth of cotton wooll, and rigged our barke as well as we could, but boate or anker we had none. In the meane time being deuising to make an anker of wood of a cart wheele, there arrived a barke, which came from Astracan, with Tartars and Russes, which had 2 ankers, with whom I agreed for the one: and thus being in a readines, we set saile and departed, I, and the two Iohnsons being Master and Mariners our selues, hauing in our barke the said sixe ambassadors, and 25 Russes, which had bene bene slaues a long time in Tartaria, nor euer had before my coming, libertie, or meanes to get home, and these slaues serued to rowe when neede was. Thus sailing sometimes along the coast, and sometimes out of sight of lande, the 13. day of May, hauing a contrary winde, wee came to an anker, being thre leagues from the shoare, & there rose a soze storme, which continued 44. houres, and our cable being of our owne spinning, brake, and lost our anker, and being off a lee shoare, and hauing no boate to helpe vs, we hoysed our saile, and bare roomer with the said shoare, looking for present death: but as God provided for vs, we ranne into a creeke full of oze, and so saued our selues with our barke, & liued in great discomfort for a time. For although we should haue escaped with our lines the danger of the sea, yet if our barke had perished, we knew we should haue bene, either destroyed, or taken slaues by the people of that Countrey, who liue wildely in the field, like beasts, without house or habitation. Thus when the storme was leasd, we went out of the creeke againe: and hauing set the land with our Compasse, and taken certaine markes of the same, during the time of the tempest, whilst we ridde at our anker, we went directly to the place where we ridde, with our barke againe, and found our anker which we lost: whereat the Tartars much marueiled, how we did it. While we were in the creeke, we made an anker of wood of cart wheelles, which we had in our barke, which we threw away, when wee had found out yron anker againe. Within two dayes after, there arose another great storme, at the North-east, and we lay a trie, being driuen far into the sea, and had much ado to keepe our barke from sinking, the billow was so great: but at the last, hauing faire weather, we tooke the Sunne, and knowing howe the land lay from vs, we fel with the Riuer Yaik, according to our desire, wherof the Tartars were very glad, fearing that wee should haue bene driuen to the coast of Persia, whose people were vnto them great enemies.

The English
Flag in the Caspian sea.

Note, that during the time of our Navigation, wee set by the redde crosse of S. George in our flagges, for honour of the Christians, which I suppose was neuer seene in the Caspian sea before. We passed in this voyage diuers fortunes: notwithstanding the 28. of May we arriued in safetie at Astracan, and there remained till the tenth of June following, as well to prepare vs small boates, to goe by against the streame of Volga, with our goods, as also for the companie of the Ambassadors of Tartarie, committed vnto me, to bee brought to the presence of the Emperour of Russia.

A notable description of the Caspian sea.

This Caspian sea (to say some thing of it) is in length about two hundred leagues, and in breadth 150. without any issue to other seas: to the East part whereof, ioyneth the great desert countrey of the Tartars, called Turkemen: to the West, the countreyes of the Chyrcaffes, the mountaines of Caucasus, and the Mare Euxinum, which is from the said Caspian Sea a hundred leagues. To the North is the riuer Volga, and the land of Nagay, and to the South part ioyneth the countreyes of Media and Persia. This sea is fresh water in many places, and in other places as salt as our great Ocean. It hath many goodly Riuers falling into it, and it auoideth not it selfe except it be vnder ground. The notable Riuers that fall into it, are first the great Riuer of Volga, called in the Tartar tongue Edell, which springeth out of a lake in a marish or plaine ground, not farre from the Citie of Nouogrode in Russia, and it is from the spring to the Sea, aboue two thousande English miles. It hath diuers other goodly Riuers falling into it, as out of Siberia, Yaik, and Yem: Also out of the mountaines of Caucasus, the Riuers of Cyrus and Arash, and diuers others.

As touching the trade of Shamaky in Media and Tebris, with other townes in Persia, I haue enquired, and do well vnderstand, that it is euen like to the trades of Tartaria, that is little vtterance, and small profit: and I haue bene aduertised that the chiefe trade of Persia is into Syria, and so transported into the Leuant sea. The fewe shippes vpon the Caspian Seas, the want of Mart and port Townes, the pouertie of the people, and the ice, maketh that trade naught.

At Astracan there were merchants of Shamaky, with whom I offered to barter, and to giue them kerlics for their wares, but they would not, saying, they had them as good cheape in their countrey, as I offered them, which was five rubbles for a kerlic, that I asked: and while I was at Boghar, there were brought thither out of Persia, Cloth, and diuers commodities of our countreyes, which were sold as good cheape, as I might sell ours.

The tenth day of June, we departed from Astracan towards the Mosco, hauing an hundred gunners in our company at the Emperours charges, for the safe conduct of the Tartar Ambassadors and me. And the eight and twentieth day of July following, wee arriued at the citie of Cazan, hauing bene vpon the way from Astracan thither, sixe weekes and moze, without any refreshing of victuals: for in all that way there is no habitation.

The twentieth of August following, wee departed from Cazan, and transported our goods by water, as farre as the citie of Morum, and then by land: so that the second of September, we arriued

riued at the citie of Mosco, and the fourth day I came befoze the Emperours Maestie, kissed his hand, and presented him a white Cowes taile of Cathay, and a drumme of Tartaria, which he well accepted. Also I brought befoze him all the Ambassadors that were committed to my charge, with all the Russe slaues: and that day I dined in his Maesties presence, and at dinner, his Grace sent me meate by a Duke, & asked me diuers questions touching the lands and countreis where I had bene. And thus I remained at the Mosco about your affaires, vntill the 17. day of February that your wares were sent downe: and then hauing licence of the Emperours Maestie to depart, the 21. day I came to your house at Vologhda, and there remained vntill the breaking vp of the pere: and then hauing seene all your goods laden into your boates, I departed with the same, and arrived with all in safetie at Colmogro the 9. of May 1560. And here I cease for this time, intreating you to beare with this my large discourse, which by reason of the varietie of matter, I could make no shorter, and I beseech God to prosper all your attempts.

From Boghar to Cascar, 30. dayes.

From Cascar to Cathaya, 30. dayes iourney.

* 21. Vrgenshe.

By the same partie a note of another way more sure to traueile, as he reporteth.

From Astracan to Turkemen by the Caspian sea, 10. dayes with barkes.

From Turkemen by lande specially with Camels, bearing the weight of 15. poodes for their common burthens, is 10. dayes to Vrgenshe.

From Vrgenshe to Boghar, 15. dayes.

Note. At this Citie of Boghar is the marte or meeting place betweene the Turkes and nations of those parts and the Cathayans.

Also the toll there is the 40. part to be payed of Merchandizes or goods.

From

From thence to Cascar is one moneths iourney, and from Cascar (being the frontier of the great Can, hauing many towncs and fortes by the way) is also a moneths trauel for merchants by land to Cathay.

Further, as he hath heard (not hauing bene in those parts himselfe) ships may saile from the dominions of Cathaia vnto India. But of other waies, or how the seas lie by any coast hee knoweth not.

The instruction of another Tartarian merchant dwelling in the citie of Boghar, as he hath learned by other his countrey men which haue bene there.

First from Astracan by sea to Serachick is 15 daies: affirming also that a man may trauell the other way before written by Turkemen.

From Serachick to Vrgence is 15 daies.

From Vrgence to Boghar also 15 daies.

Note. These last 30 daies iourney is without habitation of houses: therefore travellers lodge in their owne tents, caryng with them to eat, their sencerall prouisions: and for dyuells there bee many wels of faire water of equall baiting places not farre distant dayly to be had.

From Boghar to Taskent easie traueilling with goods, is 14 daies by land.

From Taskent to Occient 7 daies.

From Occient to Cascar 20 daies. This Cascar is the head towne or citie of another prince, lying betwene Boghar and Cathaia, called Reshircan.

From Cascar to Sowchick 30 daies iourney, which Sowchick is the first border of Cathay.

From Sowchick to Camchick 5 daies iourney, and from Camchick to Cathay is 2 moneths iourney, all the way being inhabited, temperate, & wel replenished with innumerable fruits, & the chiefe citie in that whole land is called Cambalu, which is yet 10 daies iourney from Cathay.

Beyond this land of Cathay, which they praise to be ciuill & unspeakably rich, is the countrey named in the Tartarian tongue Cara-calmack inhabited with blacke people: but in Cathay, the most part therof stretching to the sunne rising, are people white and of faire complexion. Their religion also, as the Tartars report, is christian, or after the maner of Christians, and their language peculiar, differing from the Tartarian tongue.

There are no great and furious Beares in traueilling through the waies aforesaid, but wolues white and blacke. And because that woods are not of such quantitie there, as in these parts of Russia, but in maner rather scant then plentiful, as is reported, the Beares breed not that way, but some other beasts (as namely one in Russe called Barse) are in those coasts. This Barse appeareth by a skinne of one seene here to sell, to be here to great as a big lion spotted very faire, and therefore we here take it to be a Leopard or Tiger.

Small people.

Note that 20 daies iourney from Cathay is a countrey named Angrim, where liueth the beast that beareth the best Huske, & the principall therof is cut out of the knee of the male. The people are tawnie, & for that the men are not bearded nor differ in complexion from women, they haue certaine tokens of iron, that is to say: the men weare the sunne round like a bolle vpon their shoulders, and women on their priue parts. Their feeding is raw flesh in the same land, and in another called * Titay: the Duke there is called Can. They worship the fire, and it is 34 daies iourney from great Cathay, and in the way lyeth the beautifull people, eating with kniues of golde, and are called Comorom, and the land of small people is neerer the Mosko then Cathay.

The instructions of one of Permia, who reporteth he had bene at Cathay the way before written, and also another way neere the sea coast, as foloweth, which note was sent out of Russia from Giles Holmes.

Pechora be-ney by land of water from Ob.

First from the prouince of Dwina is knowen the way to Pechora, and from Pechora traueiling with Olenes or hartes, is sixe daies iourney by land, and in the Sommer as much by water to the riuer of Ob.

The Ob is a riuer full of flats, the mouth of it is 70. Russe miles ouer. And from thence three daies iourney on the right hand is a place called Chorno-lesce, to say in English, blacke woods, and from thence neere hand is a people called Pechey-cony, wearing their haire by his description after the Irish fashion.

From Pechey-cony to Ioult Calmachey three daies iourney, & from thence to Chorno. Cal-lachay three daies tending to the Southeast.

These two people are of the Tartarian faith, and tributaries to the great Can.

Here

Here follow certaine countreys of the Samoeds which dwell vpon the riuer Ob, and vpon the sea coasts beyond the same, taken out of the Russe tongue word by word, and traualled by a Russe borne in Colmogro, whose name was Pheodor Tontugin, who by report, was slaine in his second voyage in one of the said countreys.

Vpon the East part beyond the countrey of Vgori, the riuer Ob is the most Westermost part thereof. Vpon the sea coast dwell Samoeds, and their countrey is called Molgomsey, whose meate is flesh of Olenes, or Harts, and Fish, and doe eat one another sometimes among themselves. And if any Marchants come vnto them, then they kill one of their chilsen for their sakes to feast them withall. And if a Marchant chance to die with them, they burie him not, but eat him, and so doe they eat them of their owne countrey likewise. They be cull of sight, and haue small noses, but they be swift and shoote very well, and they traualle on Harts and on dogges, and their apparell is Sables and Harts skinner. They haue no Marchandise but Sables onely.

Travelling on dogs & harts.

Item, on the same coast or quarter beyond those people, and by the sea side also doth dwell another kinde of Samoeds in like maner, hauing another language. One moneth in the yeere they lye in the sea, and doe not come or dwell on the dry land for that moneth.

Item beyond these people, on the sea coast, there is another kinde of Samoeds, their meate is flesh and fish, and their merchandise are Sables, white and blacke Foxes (which the Rusles call Plets) and Harts skinner, and Fawnes skinner.

A letter of Sigismund king of Polonia, written in the 39. yeere of his reigne to Elizabeth the Queenes most excellent Maiestie of England, &c. 1559

SIGISMUNDUS Augustus by the grace of God king of Polonia, great Duke of Lithuania, Russia, Prussia, Massouia, and Samogetia, &c. Lord and heire &c. to the most Noble Princesse Lacie Elizabeth by the same grace of God Queene of England, France and Ireland, &c. our deare sister and kinswoman, greeting and increase of all felicitie. Whereas your Maiestie writeth to vs that you haue receiued two of our letters, wee haue looked that you should haue answered to them both. First to the one, in which we intreated more at large in forbidding the voyage to Narue, which if it had bene done, we had bene unburdened of so often writing of one matter: and might haue answered your Maiestie much better to the purpose. Now we thus answere to your Maiestie to those matters of the which you writte to vs the 3 of October from Windfore. First, forasmuch as your Maiestie at the request of our letters hath discharged the arrest of Marchants goods, and of the names of the men of Danske our subiects, which was set vpon them by the commandement of your Maiestie: and also haue restozed the olde and ancient libertie of traffique, we acknowledge great pleasure done vnto vs in the same: and also thinke it to bee done according to common agreement made in times past. Neither were we euer at any time of any other opinion touching your Maiestie, but that wee should obtaine right and reason at your hands. Forasmuch as we likewise shall at all times be ready to grant to your Maiestie, making any request for your subiects, so farre as shall stand with iustice, yet neither will we peebe any thing to your Maiestie in contention of loue, beneuolence, and mutuall office, but that we iudge every good turne of yours to be recompensed by vs to the uttermost : and that shall we prooue as occasion shall serue. Therefore we shall commaund the arrests, if any be made by our subiects (as it is vnknown to vs) of merchants goods and English names to be discharged : and shall conferre the olde libertie of trafficke, and all other things which shall seeme to apperteyne to neighbourhood betweene vs and your Maiesty : so that none of the subiects of your Maiesty hereafter presume to vse the nauigation to the Narue forbidden by vs, and full of danger not onely to our parts, but also to the open destruction of all Christians and liberall nations. The which as we haue written afoze, so now we write againe to your Maiesty that we know and feele of a surety, the Moscouite, enemy to all liberty vnder the heauens, dayly to grow mightier by the increase of such things as be brought to the Narue, while not onely wares but also weapons heretofore vnknown to him, and artificers & arts be brought vnto him : by meane whereof he maketh himselfe strong to vanquish all others. Which things, as long as this voyage to Narue is vsed, can not be stopped. And we perfectly know your Maiesty can not be ignorant how great the cruelty is of the said enemy, of what force he is, what tyranny he vseth on his subiects, and in what seruile sort they be vnder him. We seemed hitherto to vanquish him onely in this, that he was rude of arts, and ignorant of policies. If so be that this nauigation to the Narue continue, what shall be vnknown to him ? Therefore we that know best, and border vpon him, do admonish other Christian princes in time, that they do not betray their dignity, liberty and life of them and their subiects to a most barbarous and cruell enemy, as we can no lesse do by the duty of a Christian prince. For now we do foresee, except other princes take this admonition, the Moscouite puffed vp in pride with those things that be brought to the Narue, and made more perfect in warlike affaires with engines of warre and shippes, will make assault this way on Christendome, to slay or make bound all that shall withstand him : which God defend. With which our admonition diuers princes already content themselves, and abstaine from the Narue. The others that will not abstaine from the said voyage shall be impeached by our nauie, and incurre the danger of losse of life, liberty, wife and childzen. Now therfore if the subiects of your Maiesty will forbear this voyage to Narue, there shall be nothing denied to them of vs. Let your Maiesty well weigh and consider the reasons & occasions of our stopping of ships going to the Narue. In which stopping, our subiects of Danske be in no fault, as we haue already written to your Maiesty, neither vse we their countsell in the same. In any other matter, if there be any fault in them against your Maiesty or your subiects, we will gladly do iustice vpon them, that your Maiesty may well vnderstand that we be carefull of you and your subiects. Neither thinke we it meet to take Hamburg, or any other place to iudge the matter : for we haue our counsell & iudgement seat at Rie, where your Maiesty & your subiects, or any other, shall haue iustice administered vnto them, with whom we haue had ancient league and amity. And thus much we haue thought good to let your Maiesty vnderstand. Fare ye well. Dated the sixt of December the 39 of our reigne.

The Queenes Maiesties Letters to the Emperour of Russia, requesting licence, and safe conduct for M. Anthony Ienkinson to passe thorow his kingdome of Russia, into Persia, to the Great Sophie. 1561.

LIZABETHA Dei gratia, Angliæ, &c. Regina, serenissimo & potentissimo principi, D. Ioanni Basiluich, Imperatori totius Russiæ, Magno Duci, &c. Salutem, & omnium rerum prosperarum felicissimum incrementum. Potentissime Princeps, res est nobis ad memorandum longè gratissima, illa vestra Maiestatis erga nos & nostros amicitia. Quæ tempore felicissimæ memoriæ Regis Edwardi sexti, fratris nostri charissimi, Dei benignitate incepta, deinceps verò vestra non solum singulari humanitate alta atque foras, sed incredibili etiam bonitate aucta atque cumulata, nunc autem omnibus beneuolentiæ vestræ officijs sic firmata est atque constabilita, vt iam minimè dubitemus, quin ea ad laudem Dei, ad gloriam vtriusque nostrum, ad publicam nostrorum vtrouque regnorum immensam commoditatem, ad priuatam singulorum vtriusque subditorum optatam spem, certamque felicitatem multis sit deinceps seculis duratura. Et quanquam hæc vestra bonitas, plenissimè sese effudit in omnes nostros subditos, qui sese in vllas imperij vestri partes vnquam receperunt, (pro qua ingentes nostras, vt par est, gratias vestræ Maiestati habemus, vestrisque xicissim in omni opportunitatis loco libentissimè feremus) tamen abundantia benignitatis vestræ, in accipiendo, tamque humanitè tractando nostrum fidelem & perdilectum famulum Antonium Ienkinson, qui has perfectas literas, seorsum nobis gratissima existit. Nam præterquam quòd nullis non locis vestri Imperij & magna libertate, & summa humanitate vestra serenitatis non permisso solum, sed iussu etiam frueretur, vestra bonitas tamen non in hac domestica benignè faciendi ratione conqueuit, sed perlibenter & vltro eundem nostrum hunc per dilectum famulum, varijs exteris principibus, quoquouerſus ipse iter suum instituere, literis suis, suo magnò Imperiali sigillo consignatis commendauit. Quod beneficium illi vbiuis gentium, & viam sine villo periculo, propter publicam vestram fidem, & aduentum cum magno fauore, propter vestram commendationem, optatè quidem & sceleriter communiuit. Itaq; quemadmodum genuina hæc vestra beneuolentia, cum illa generalis exhibita in vestro regno negotiantibus subditis nostris vniuersis, tum ista seorsini præstita huic Antonio Ienkinson, perfideli nostro famulo, nobis in mente non solum ad gratam perpétuamque memoriã, verum etiam ad mutuat, vel opportunam compensationem, firmissimè defixa est: ita, petimus a vestra Maiestate vt vtramque beneuolentiã vestra rationem & communem nostris vniuersis, & priuatam huic nostro dilecto famulo, vtrisque deinceps dignetur tueri, atq; conseruare. Neque nos quidem diffidimus, quin quem fauorem vestra Maiestas antea sua sponte Antonio Ienkinson, tum quidem priuato ostendit, eundem nunc nostro rogatū eidem Antonio in nostrum iam famulatum cooptato benignè velit denuò declarare. Et propterea petimus a vestra Maiestate, vt dignetur iterum concedere eidem nostro famulo, literas suas conmeatus, publicæ fidei, ac saluiconductus, quarum tenore, authoritate, atque præsidio, sit illi, familiaribus suis, & seruis, tutum, liberumque, cum mercibus, sarcinis, equis, & bonis suis vniuersis, inuehendis euehendisque, per vestra regna, domicilia, atque prouincias, proficisci, ire, transire, redire, abire, & istic morari, quamdiu placuerit, & inde recedere quandocunque illi aut suis libitum fuerit. Et sicut non dubitamus, quin vestra Maiestas hæc omnia humanitatis grata officia, pro immensa bonitate suæ naturæ benignè & largiter huic famulo nostro sit concessura, ita valde optamus, adeoque petimus, vt vestra Maiestas eodem nostrum famulum, vnà cum omnibus suis familiaribus, ac bonis, exteris alijs principibus literis suis dignetur commendare, præsertim verò atque seorsim Magno Sophi, Persarum Imperatori, in cuius etiam imperia & diuisiones idem noster famulus gratia potissimè experiundi peregrina commercia, proficisci vnà cum suis constituit.

Confidimus igitur hæc omnia nostra postulara pro famuli spe, pro nostra expectatione, pro vestra bonitate, pro nostrorum vtrunque subditorum commoditate, fausta illi, grata nobis, accepta etiam vestra Maiestati, & nostris vtròbique perquam vtilia euasura. Deus vestra Maiestatis, &c. Datum in celeberrima nostra Ciuitate Londini, anno mundi 5523. Domini ac Dei nostri Iesu Christi 1561, regnorum verò nostrorum tertio.

ELizabeth by the grace of God, Queene of England, &c. to the right excellent, and right mightie Prince, Lord Iohn Basilwich, Emperour of all Russia, &c. greeting, and most happy increase in all prosperitie. Right mightie Prince, the amitie of your Maiestie towards vs and our subiects is very pleasant to vs to be remembred, which being begun by the goodnesse of God in the reigne of our most deare brother of happie memorie, King Edward the first, and afterwards, through your not onely singular humanitie, fed, and nourished, but also through your incredible goodnesse increased, and augmented, is now firmed and established, with all manner of tokens of your beneuolence, that now we doubt not, but that from hencefoorth, during many ages, the same shall endure to the praise of God, to both our glories, to the publike great commoditie of our Realmes on either part, and to the priuate desired hope, and certeine felicitie of all our subiects. And although that this your goodnesse hath bene abundantly extended to all our subiects, that haue at any time repaired into any part of your Empire, for the which wee giue (as reason is) your Maiestie right heartie thanks, and will againe shew the like vnto yours, right willingly, whensoever opportunitie shall require: yet the abundance of your benignitie both in receiving, and also in entertaining our faithfull and beloued seruant, Anthonie Ienkinson, the bringer of these our letters, is vnto vs for him priuately very thankfull. For besides this, that in all places of your Empire, he not onely by your Maiesties sufferance, but also by your commandement, enioyed much libertie, and great friendship, your goodnesse not ceasing in this your domestickall disposition of clemencie, did right willingly, and of your owne abundant grace, commend the same our welbeloued seruant, by your letters sealed with your Imperiall seale, to sundrie forren Princes, vnto whom he was minded to iourney: which your magnificence did purchase vnto him happily, according to his desire, both passage without all perill, through your notable credit, and also atchieuing of his iourney through your commendation. Therefore like as these your duplicated beneuolences, both that one generally exhibited to all our subiects frequenring that your Realme, and also this the other extended apart to this our right faithful seruant Anthonie Ienkinson, is right assuredly fastened in our remembrance, not onely for a perpetuall and gratefull memoriall, but also for a mutuall and meet compensation: so we desire of your Maiestie, to vouchsafe from henceforth to conserue and continue the geminate disposition of your beneuolences, both generally to all our subiects, and also priuately to this our beloued seruant. And we doubt not, but that at our request, you will againe graciously shew vnto the same Anthony, now admitted into our seruice, the like fauor as heretofore your Maiesty of your meere motion did exhibite vnto him, being then a priuate person. And therefore we desire your Maiesty eftsoones to grant to the same our seruant, your letters of licence, passport, & safe conduct, through the tenour, authority, and helpe whereof, he, his seruants, together with their merchandises, baggages, horses, and goods whatsoener, that shall be brought in, or carried out, by or thow all your empire, kingdome, dominions, and prouinces, may surely and freely iourney, go, passe, repasse, depart, and there tary so long as it shall please him: and from thence returne whensoever it shall seeme good to him or his: and as we doubt not, but that your Maiesty in the goodnesse of your nature will graciously and abundantly grant all these good offices of humanity, so we do heartily desire that your Maiesty wil likewise vouchsafe to commend the same our seruant, together with all his goods, by your letters to other forren Princes, and specially to the great Sophy, and Emperour of Persia, into whose empire and iurisdictiones the same our seruant purposeth with his for to iourney, chiefly for triall of forren merchandises.

We therefore doe trust that all these our demands shall tend, and haue effect, according to the hope of our seruant, and to our expectation, for your wealth, for the commodity of both our subiects, lucky to him, thankfull to vs, acceptable to your Maiesty, and very profitable to our subiects on either part. God grant vnto your Maiesty long and happy felicity in earth, and euertlasting in heauen. Dated in our famous city of London the 25 day of the moneth of April, in the yeere of the creation of the world 5523, and of our Lord God Iesus Christ 1561, and of our reigne the third.

The Queenes Maiesties Letters to the Great Sophy of Persia, sent by M. Anthonie Ienkinson. 1561.

LIZABETHA Dei gratia, Angliæ, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ Regina, &c. Potentissimo & inuictissimo Principi, Magno Sophi Perfarum, Medorum, Parthorum, Hircanorum, Carmanorum, Margianorum, populorum cis & vltra Tygrin fluiuium, & omnium intra Mare Caspium, & Persicum sinum nationum atque Gentium Imperatori salutem, & rerum prosperarum felicissimum incrementum. Summi Dei benignitate factum est, vt quas gentes, non solum inmensa terrarum spacia, & insuperabiles marium vastitates, sed & ipsæ etiam cœlorum cardines longissime disiunxerunt, ipsæ tamen literarum bono & mentis certa cogitata, & humanitatis grata officia, & intelligentiæ mutæ multa comoda facili inter se & opportunè possint communicare. Itaque cum per dilectus, & fidelis noster famulus Anthonius Ienkinson, qui has literas nostras perfert, cum bona venia, fauore, & gratia nostra hoc Angliæ nostræ regnum excedere, & in Persiam vsque, vestrasque alias ditiones Dei benignitate penetrare constituerit, hoc illius institutum perlaudabile quidem grato nostro fauore prosequi, & promouere studuimus: id quod eo nos libentius facimus, quoniam hoc eius propositum ex honesto studio commercij constituendi potissimum cum vestris subditis, alijsque peregrinis hominibus, ad vestra regna confluentibus, omninè exortum sit. Propterea nobis & scribendum ad vestram Maiestatem, ab eaque petendum esse duximus, vt nostro rogatu dignetur concedere huic famulo nostro Antonio Ienkinson literas publicæ fidei, & salui conductus, quarum autoritate atque præsidio, licitum, liberumque sit illi, vnâ cum suis familiaribus, seruis, sarcinis, mercibus & bonis vniuersis, per vestra regna, domicilia, ditiones, atque prouincias liberè, & sine impedimento proficisci, ire, transire, redire, abire, & istic morari, quamdiu placuerit, & inde recedere, quando cunque illi vel suis libitum fuerit. Si hæc sancta hospitalitatis iura & dulcia communis humanitatis officia, inter nos, nostra regna, nostrosque subditos libenter constitui, sincerè coli, & constanter conseruari queant, speramus nos, Deum Optimum Maximum effecturum, vt ab hijs paruis initijs, grandiora rerum momenta, vobis ad magna ornamenta atque decus, nostris ad summa comoda atque vsus, aliquando sint oritura: siquidem, vt non terra, non mare, non cœlum, ad nos longissime seperandos, quàm diuina ratio communis humanitatis, & mutæ beneuolentiæ ad nos firmissimè coniungendos plus virium habuisse videatur. Deus salutem omnem, & felicem in terris, terris, & perpetuam in cœlis, vestræ concedat Maiestati. Dat. in Anglia, in celebri nostra vrbe Londino, 25 die mensis Aprilis, anno mundi, 5523, Domini ac Dei nostri Iesu Christi, 1561, regnorum verò nostrorum tertio.

ELizabeth, by the grace of God, Queene of England, &c. To the right mightie, and right victorious Prince, the great Sophie, Emperour of the Persians, Medes, Parthians, Hircans, Carmanians, Margians, of the people on this side, and beyond the riuer of Tygris, and of all men, and nations, betweene the Caspian sea, and the gulfe of Persia, greeting, and most happie increase in all prosperitie. By the goodnesse of the Almighty God it is ordeined, that those people, which not onely the huge distance of the lands, and the inuincible widenesse of the seas, but also the very quarters of the heauens do most farre separate, and set asunder, may neuer thelesse through good commendation by writing, both ease, and also communicate betweene them, not onely the conceiued thoughts, or deliberations, and gratefull offices of humanitie, but also many commodities of mutuall intelligence. Therefore whereas our faithfull, and right welbeloued seruant Anthonie Ienkinson, bearer of these our letters, is determined with our licence, fauour, and grace, to passe out of this our Realme, and by Gods sufferance to trauell euen into Persia, and other your iurisdictions: we minde truely with our good fauour, to set forward, and aduance that his right laudable purpose: and that the more willingly, for that this his enterprise is onely grounded vpon ay honest intent, to establish trade of merchandise with your subiects, and with other strangers traffiking in your realmes. Wherefore we haue thought good, both to write to your Maiestie, and also to desire the same, to vouchsafe at our request, to grant to our sayd seruant, Anthonie Ienkinson, good passports, and safe conductes, by meanes, and authoritie whereof, it may be free and lawfull for him, together with his familiars, seruants, cariages, merchandise, and goods whatsoeuer, thorow your Realmes, Dominions, Iurisdictions, and Provinces, freely, and without impeachment, to iourney, go, passe, repasse, and tary so long as he shall please, and from thence to returne whensoever he or they shall thinke good. If these holy duties of enterainment, and sweet offices of naturall humanitie may be willingly concluded, sincerely embraced, and firmly obserued betweene vs, and our Realmes, and subiects, then we do hope that the Almighty God will bring it to passe, that of these small beginnings, greater moments of things shall hereafter spring, both to our furniture and honours, and also to the great commodities, and ble of our peoples: so it will be knowne that neither the earth, the seas, nor the heauens, haue so much force to separate vs, as the godly disposition of naturall humanity, and mutuall beneuolence haue to ioyne vs strongly together. God grant vnto your Maiestie long and happy felicity in earth, and perpetuall in heauen. Dated in England, in our famous cite of London, the 25 day of the moneth of April, in the yere of the creation of the world, 5523, and of our Lord and God Iesus Christ, 1561, and of our reigne the third.

This letter was also written in Hebrew, and Italian.

A remembrance giuen by vs the Gouvernours, Consuls, and Assistants of the company of Merchants trading into Russia, the eight day of May 1561, to our rustie friend Anthonie Ienkinson, at his departure towards Russia, and so to Persia, in this our eight iourney.

IFst you shall vnderstand that we haue laden in our good ship, called the Swallow, one Chest, the keyes whereof we doe here deliuer you, and also a bill; wherein are written particularly the contents in the sayd Chest, and what euery thing did cost: and because, as you know, the sayd Chest is of charge, we desire you to haue a speciall regard vnto it, and when God shall send you vnto Mosco, our mindes and will is, that you, with the aduise of our Agents there, doe appoint some such presents for the Emperour and his sonne, either wine, closh of golde, scarlet, or plate, as to your good discretion shall be thought meet, and when you haue deliuered vnto him the Duccenes Maiesties Letters, and our sayd present in the name of the Company, we thinke it good that you make your humble sute vnto his Highnesse in our name, to get his licence or safe conduct for you and all other our seruants or Agents at all times hereafter with such wares and merchandise as you at this time, or they hereafter at all other times shall thinke good to passe out of his dominions towards Tartaria, Persia, or other places, and also to returne vnto Mosco with such wares and merchandises as you shall bring or send from any land or countrey that is not in his dominions, and if it be thought good by you and our Agents there to make composition with the emperour his officers for some certaine custome or tole vpon such goods as we shall passe that way, to the intent we might be the better sauoyed, we refer it to your discretion, foreseeing that p^r opening of this matter be not p^r iudiciall vnto our former priuileges.

And for the sale of our cloth of gold, plate, pearles, saphyres, and otheriewels, we put our trust and confidence in you principally to sell them for ready money, time to good debtors, or in barter for good wares, so that you make our other Agents priuy how and for what price you sell any of the premises, and also deliuer such summes of money, billes or wares, as you shall receiue, vnto our said Agents: thinking good further, that if you perceiue that the plate or otheriewels, or any part thereof will not be sold for p^rofit before your departure from the Mosco, that then you cause them to be safe packed, and set order they may be sent hither againe in our shippes the next yeere, except you perceiue that there may be some p^rofit in carrying some part of them into Persia, which we would not to be of any great value.

We haue also laden in the sayd Swallow and the other two ships 80 fardles, containing 400 kersies, as by p^r inuoice doth appeare, which fardles be packed, & appointed to be caried into Persia: neuertheless, if you chance to finde good sales for them in the Mosco, we thinke it were good to sell part of them there, and to cary the lesse quantitie with you, because we be vncertaine what vent or sale you shall finde in Persia or other places where you shall come.

If you obtaine the Emperours licence to passe out of his dominions, and to returne, as aforesaid, & that you perceiue you may safely do the same, our minde is, that at such time as you thinke best and most conuenient for that purpose, you do appoint so many, and such of our hired seruantes or apprentises as you thinke necessary & meet for our affaires, and may best be spared, to go with you in your said voyage, whereof we would one to be such as you might make priuy of all your doings for diuers considerations and causes that may happen: which seruantes and apprentises, we will and command, by this our remembrance, to be obedient vnto you as vnto vs, not onely to goe with you, and to doe such things as you command them in your p^resence, but also to goe vnto such countreys or places as you shall appoint them vnto, either with wares or without wares, & there to remaine and continue so long as you shall thinke good, and if they or any of them will refuse to do such things as you do appoint them, as aforesaid, or that any of them (be he hired seruant or apprentise) do misuse himselfe by any maner of disobedience or disorder, and will not by gentle and faire meanes be reformed, we will that you send him backe to the Mosco, with straight order that he may be sent from thence hither, & let vs haue knowledge of his euill behauior, to the intent that if he be a hired seruant we may pay him his wages according to his seruice, and if he be an apprentise we may vse him according to his deserts.

We will also that you take with you such kersies, scarlet, and other clothes, or any other such wares of ours, as you shall thinke good, and so in the name of God to take your iourney towards Persia, either by the way of Astracan and Mare Caspium, or otherwise, as you shall see cause: and when God sendeth you into Persia, our minde is, that you repaire vnto the great Sophy with the Queenes Maiesties letters, if he be not too farre from the Caspian sea for you to trauell, and that you make him such app^resent as you shall thinke meet, and if you passe by any other kings, p^rinces, or gouernors, before or after you come to the p^resence of the Sophy, like wise to make them some p^resent, as you see cause, according to their estate and dignitie, and withall to procure letters of priuilege or safconduict of the sayd Sophy or other p^rinces in as large and ample maner as you can, for the sure establishing of further trade in merchandise by vs heereafter to be made, frequented and continued in those parts, not onely that we may freely sell in all places within his dominions such wares as we cary thither, but also buy and bzing away any maner of wares or merchandise whatsoeuer it be, that is for our purpose and commoditie within his dominions, with free passage also for vs at all times, to passe as often as we will with our goods and merchandise into any part of India or other countreys thereunto adioynning, and in like maner to returne thozow his dominions into Russia or elsewhere.

And for the sale of our kersies or other wares that you shall haue with you, as our trust is that you will doe for our most p^rofit and commoditie: euen so we referre all vnto your good discretion, as well in the sale of our sayd goods, as to make our returne in such things as you shall finde there, and thinke best for our p^rofit. But if passage cannot be had into Persia by Astracan, or otherwise, the next Summer, which shalbe in the yeere 1562, then our minde is, that you procure to sell our kersies, & other such wares as are appointed for Persia, in the Mosco, or other the Emperours dominions, if you may sell them for any reasonable price, and then to employ your selfe with such other of your seruantes, as you shall thinke meet for the search of the passage by Noua Zembla, or els you to returne for England as you thinke good. P^rouided alwayes, that if you do perceiue or vnderstand, that passage is like to be had into Persia the Summer folowing, which shalbe shalbe in the yere 1563, and that you can not sell our kettles in the Emperours dominions, as aforesayd, at a reasonable price: then we will rather they may be kept till the said Summer in the yere 1563, and then you to proceed forwards vpon your iourney towards Persia as aforesayd. If passage into Persia cannot be obtained the next yere, neither good hope of passage in the yere 1563, neither yet in the meane time good sale of our kettles in the Emperours dominions, then we thinke good for you to see if you can practise to cary your said wares by safe conduct thorow Polonia, or any other wayes vnto Constantinople, or els where you thinke better sale may be had, then in Russia.

Thus haue we giuen you to vnderstand our meanings in this intended aduenture: but forasmuch as we do consider and know, that if we should prescribe vnto you any certaine way, or direct order what you should doe, we might so worke cleane contrary to our purpose and intent: therefore knowing your approued wisdom with youre experience, and also your carefull and diligent minde in the atchieuing and bringing to good successe (by the helpe of almighty God) all things that you take in hand, we doe commit our whole affaires concerning the said aduenture wholly vnto your good discretion, praying God so to prosper you, as may be first for his glory, secondly for the honour and commoditie of this realme, and next for our profit, with the increase of your good name for euer.

And yet further desiring, and also most earnestly requiring you, as you tender the state of our company, that you will haue a speciall regard vnto the order of our houses & our seruants, aswell at Colmogro and Vologda, as at Mosco, and to see and consider if any misorder be amongst our seruants or apprentices, wherby you thinke we might hereafter be put to hinderance or losse of any part of our goods or priuilege there, that you doe not onely see the same reformed, but also to certifie vs thereof by your letter at large, as our trust is in you.

And for the better knowledge to be had in the prices and goodnes of such things as we do partly suppose you shall finde in the partes of Russia, we doe herewith deliuer you a quantitie of certaine bugges, wherby you may perceiue how to know the best, and also there are noted the prices of such wares and bugges as he here most vendible: also we deliuer you herewith one pound and one ounce weight in brass, to the end, that you may therby, & with the bill of prices of wares, know what things be worth here. As for the knowledge of silks, we need not to giue you any instructions thereof, other then you know.

And if you vnderstand that any commoditie in Russia be profitable for vs to haue with you into Persia or other places, our minde is that our Agents shall either prouide it for you, or deliuer you money to make prouision your selfe. And because the Russes say that in traueling Eastwardes from Colmogro thirty or forty dayes iourney, there is the maine sea to be found, we thinke that Richard Iohnson might imploy his time that way by land, and to be at Mosco time enough to goe with you into Persia: for if it be true that he may trauell to the sea that way, and that he may know how many miles it is towards the East from Colmogro, it will be a great helpe for vs to finde out the straight and passage that way, if any be there to be had.

A compendious and briefe declaration of the iourney of M. Anth.

Fenkinson, from the famous citie of London into the land of Persia, passing in this same iourney thorow Russia, Mosconia, and Mare Caspium, aliàs Hircanum, sent and imployed therein by the right worshipfull Societie of the Merchants Aduenturers, for discouerie of Lands, Islands, &c. Being begun the foureteenth day of May, Anno 1561, and in the third yere of the reigne of the Queenes Maiestie that now is: this present declaration being directed and written to the foresayd Societie.

1561

In embarking my selfe in a good shippe of yours, named the Swallow, at Grauesend, hauing a faire and good winde, our anker then weyed, and committing all to the protection of our God, hauing in our sailing diuersitie of windes, & thereby forced to direct and obserue sundry courses (not here rehearsed, because you haue bene thereof heretofore amply informed) on the foureteenth day of July, the yere aforesayd I arriued in the bay of S. Nicholas in Russia: and the sixe and twentieth day of the same moneth, after conference then had with your Agents there, concerning your worships affaires, I departed from thence, passing thorow the countrey of Vago, and on the eight day of August then following, I came to Vologda, which is distant from Colmogro, seven hundred miles, where I remained foure dayes, attending the arriual of one of your boats, wherein wherein was laden a chest of ietwels with the present, by your two ships appointed for the Emperours Maestie: which being arrived, and the chest receiued, I therewith departed toward the city of Mosco, and came thither the twentieth day of the same moneth, where I immediately caused my coming to be signified vnto the Secretary of the Imperiall Maestie, with the Queenes Highnesse letters addrested vnto the same his Maestie, who informed the Emperour thereof. But his Highnesse hauing great affaires, and being at that present ready to be married vnto a Ladie of Chircalsi, of the Mahometicall law, commanded that no stranger, Ambassadour, nor other, should come before him for a time, with further freight charge, that during the space of three dayes that the same solemne feast was celebrating, the gates of the citie should be shut, and that no person, stranger or native (certeine of his household reserved) should come out of their said houses during the said triumph, the cause thereof vnto this day not being knowne.

The first of September following, the Emperour made a great feast, whereunto were called all Ambassadors and strangers being of reputation, and hauing affaires: amongst whom I was one, but being willed by the Secretary first to come, and to shew him the Queenes Maesties letters, I refused so to doe, saying I would deliuer the same vnto the Emperours owne hands, and not otherwise: which heard the Secretarie answered, that vntill he might first peruse the sayd letters, I should not come into the Emperours presence, so that I was not at the feast. Nevertheless, I was aduertised by a noble man that I was inquired for by the Emperours Maestie, although the cause of my absence was to his Maestie unknowen. The next day following, I caused a supplication to be made, and presented it to his Highnesse owne hands, and thereby declared the cause of my coming, signified by the Queenes Maesties letters, and the answer of his sayd Secretary, most humbly beseeching his Grace that he would receiue and accept the same her Highnesse letters, with such honour and friendship, as his letters sent by Osep Napea were receiued by the hands of our late Soueraigne Lady Queene Mary, or els that it would please his Highnesse to dismisstome, saying that I would not deliuer the said letters but vnto his owne hands, for that it is so vsed in our countrey. Thus the matter being pondred, and the effect of my supplication well digested, I was forthwith commaunded to come with the said letters before his Maestie, and so deliuered the same into his owne hands (with such presents as by you were appointed) according to my request, which were gratefully accepted, & the same day I dined in his Graces presence, with great entertainment. Shortly after, I desired to know whether I should be licenced to passe thorow his Highnesse dominions into the land of Persia, according to the Queenes Maesties request: hereunto it was answered, that I should not passe thither; for that his Maestie meant to send an armie of men that way into the land of Chircalsi, whereby my iourney should be both dangerous & troublesome, and that if I should perish therein, it would be much to his Graces dishonour, but he doubted other matters, although they were not exprest. Thus hauing receiued his answer, neither to my expectation, nor yet contentation, and there remaining a good part of the yere, hauing in that time solde the most part of your kettles and other wares appointed for Persia, when the tyme of the yere required to returne for England, I desired passport, and post horses for money, which was granted: but hauing receiued my passport, ready to depart, there came vnto our house there Osep Napea, who perswaded me that I should not depart that day, saying that the Emperour was not truly informed, imputing great fault to the forwardnesse of the Secretary, who was not my friend: before whom coming againe the next day, and finding the same Secretary and Osep Napea together, after many allegations and obiections of things, and perceiving that I would depart, I was willed to remaine vntill the Emperours Maestie were spoken with againe touching my passage: wherewith I was content, & within three dayes after sending for me, he declared that the Emperours pleasure was, that I should not onely passe thorow his dominions into Persia, but also haue his Graces letters of commendations to foiren princes, with certaine his affaires committed to my charge, too long here to rehearse: whereupon I appointed my selfe for the voyage, & the 15 day of March, the yere aforesaid, I dined againe in his Maesties presence in company of an Ambassadour of Persia and others, and receiuing a cup of pinke at his Maesties hands, I tooke my leaue of his Highnesse, who did not onely giue me letters, as aforesayd, but also committed matter of importance and charge vnto me, to be done when I should arrive in those countreys whither I intended to go, and hauing all things in readinesse for the same voyage, I departed from the city of Mosco the 27 day of April 1562, downe by the great riuer of Volga, in company of the said Ambassadour of Persia, with whom I had great friendship and conference all the way downe the same riuer vnto Astracan, where we arrived all in health the 10 day of June.

And as touching the situations of the cities, townes, castles and countreys, as well of Mahometans as also of Gentils adioyning to the same, whereby I passed from Mosco vnto Astracan, I omit omit in this breuiat to rehearse, for that I heretofore haue declared the same most amply vnto you in my voyage to Boghar. Thus being arriued at Astracan, as is aforesayd, I repaired vnto the captaine there, vnto whom I was commended from the Emperours Maiesty, with great charge that he not only should ayd and succor me with all things needfull during my abode there, but also to safeconduct me with 50 gunners well appointed in two stroogs of brigantines into the Caspian sea, vntill I had passed certaine dangerous places which pirats & rouers do accustome to haunt, and hysing prepared my barke for the sea, the Ambassadors of Persia being before departed in a barke of his owne the 15 day of July, the yeere aforesayd, I and my company tooke our voyage from the sayd Astracan, and the next day at a West sunne, passed the mouth of the said riuer being twenty miles distant, lying next Southeast. The 18 at a Southwest sunne, we passed by three Islands being distant nine miles from the said mouth of Volga, and Southsouthwest from thence, sailing Southsouthwest the next day, at a West & by North sun we fel with the land called Challica Ostriua, being foure round Islands together, distant from the said three Islands forty miles. From thence sailing the said course the next day, we had sight of a land called Tuke, in the countrey of Tumen, where pirats and rouers do vse: for feare of whom we haled off into the sea due East forty miles, and fell vpon shallowes out of the sight of land, and there were like to haue perished, escaping most hardly: then the 22 day we had sight of a goodly Island called Charaler, distant from the said Challica Ostriua an hundred miles, the winde being contrary, and a stiff gale, we were not able to seize it: but were forced to come to an anchor to the leeward of the same five miles off in thre or foure fathom water, being distant from the maine land to the Westward of vs, which was called Skafcaulo Connik a countrey of Mahometans, about miles, and so riding at two ankers a head, hauing no other provision, we lost one of them, the stozne and sea being growen very foze, and thereby our barke was so full of leaks, that with continuall pumping we had much adoe to keepe her aboue water, although we threw much of our goods ouerboard, with losse of our boat, and our selues thereby in great danger like to haue perished either in the sea or els vpon the lee shoze, where we should haue fallen into the hands of those wicked infidels, who attended our shipwacke: and surely it was very unlike that we should haue escaped both the extremities, but onely by the power and mercy of God, for the stozne continued seven dayes, to wit, vntill the thirtiet day of the same moneth: and then the winde comming by at the West with faire weather, our anchor weyed, and our saile displayed, lying South, the next day haling to the shoze with a West sunne, we were nie a land called by the inhabitants Shyruansha, and there we came againe to an anchor, haling the winde contrary, being distant from the said Charaler 150 miles, and there we continued vntill the third day of August, then hauing a faire winde, winding Southsoutheast, and sailing threescore miles, the next day at a Southeast sunne we arriued at a city called Derbent in the king of Hircans dominion, where comming to land, and saluting the captaine there with a present, he made to me and my company a dinner, and there taking fresh water I departed.

This city of Derbent is an ancient towne hauing an olde castle therein, being situated vpon an hill called Castow, builded all of free stone much after our building, the walles very high and thicke, and was first erected by king Alexander the great, when he warred against the Persians and Medians, and then hee made a wall of a wonderfull bright and thickenesse, extending from the same city to the Georgians, yea vnto the principall city thereof named Tewflish, which wall though it be now rased, or other wise decayed, yet the foundation remaineth, & the wall was made to the intent that the inhabitants of that countrey then newly conquered by the said Alexander should not lightly flee, nor his enemies easily invade. This city of Derbent being now under the power of the Sophy of Persia, bordereth vpon the sea, adioyning to the foresaid land of Shalkall, in the latitude of 41 degrees. From thence sailing Southeast and Southsoutheast about 80 miles, the sixt day of August, the yere aforesaid, we arriued at our landing place called Shabran, where my barke discharged: the goods layd on shoze, and there being in my tent keeping great watch for feare of rouers, wherof there is great plenty, being fielde people, the gouernor of the said countrey named Alcan Murcy, comming vnto me, entertained me very gently, vnto whom giuing a present, he appointed for my safegard forty armed men to watch & ward me, vntill he might haue newes from the king of Shiruan. The 12 day of the same moneth newes did come from the king, with order that I should repaire vnto him with all speed: and for expedition, as well camels to the number of foure and forty to cary my goods, as also hoeses for me and my company were in readinesse, so that the goods laden, and taking my iourney from thence the said twelvt day, on the 18 of the same moneth I came to a city called Shamaky, in the said countrey of Hircan, otherwise called Shiruan, and there the king hath a faire place, where my lodging being appointed, the goods were discharged: the next day being the 19 day, I was sent for to come to the king, named

Obdowcan, who kept his court at that time in the high mountaines in tents, distant from the sayd Shamaki twentie miles, to auoyd the iniury of the heat : and the 20 day I came befoze his presence, who gently interteined me, and hauing kissed his hands, he bad me to dinner, and commanded me to sit downe not farre from him. This king did sit in a very rich paullion, wrought with silke & golde, placed very pleasantly, vpon a hill side, of sixtene fathom long, and sixe fathom broad, hauing befoze him a goodly fountaine of faire water : whereof he & his nobility did drinke, he being a prince of a meane stature, and of a fierce countenance, richly appparelled with long garments of silke, and cloth of gold, imbroidzed with pearles and stone : vpon his head was a colipane with a sharpe end standing vpwads halfe a pard long, of rich cloth of golde, wrapped about with a piece of India silke of twentie yards long, wrought with golde, and on the left side of his colipane stood a plume of feathers, set in a trunke of golde richly inameled, and set with pprecious stones: his earerings had pendants of golde a handfull long, with two great rubies of great value, set in the ends thereof : all the ground within his paullion was couered with rich carpets, & vnder himselfe was spred a square carpet wrought with siluer & golde, and therupon was layd two sutable cushions. This the king with his nobility sitting in his paullion with his legs a crosse, and perceiving that it was painfull for me so to sit, his highnesse caused a stoole to be brought in, & did will me to sit thereupon, after my fashion. Dinner time then appproching, diuers clothes were spred vpon the ground, and sundry dishes serued, and set in a ranke with diuers kinde of meats, to the number of 140 dishes, as I numbred them, which being taken away with the table clothes, and others spred, a banket of fruits of sundry kindes, with other banketting meates, to the number of 150 dishes, were brought in: so that two seruices occupied 290 dishes, and at the end of the sayd dinner & banket, the king said vnto me, Quo the quelde, that is to say, Welcome: and called for a cup of water to be drawn at a fountaine, and tasting thereof, did deliuer me the rest, demanding how I did like the same, and whether there were so good in our countrey or not : vnto whom I answered in such sort, that he was therewith contented : then he proponed vnto me sundry questions, both touching religion, and also the state of our countreys, and further questioned whether the Emperoz of Almaine, the Emperoz of Rulsia, or the great Turke, were of most power, with many other things too long here to rehearse, to whom I answered as I thought most meet. Then he demanded whether I intended to goe any further, and the cause of my comming : vnto that I answered, that I was sent with letters from the Queenes most excellent Maiesty of England vnto the great Sophy, to intreat friendship and free passage, and for his safe conductt to be granted vnto English merchants to trade into his Segniories, with the like also to be granted to his subiects, when they should come into our countreys, to the honour and wealth of both realmes, and commodity of both their subiects, with diuers other words, which I omit to rehearse. This sayd king much allowing this declaration sayd, that he would not onely giue me passage, but also ment to safeconduct me vnto the sayd Sophy, lyng from the foze sayd citie of Shamaki thirtie dayes iourney, by into the land of Persia, at a castle called Casbin : so departing from the king at that time, within thre dayes after, being the foure and twentieth day of August the yere afoze said, he sent for me againe: vnto whom I repaired in the morning, and the king not being risen out of his bed (for his maner is, that watching in the night, and then banketting with his women, being an hundred and forty in number, he sleepeth most in the day) did giue one commandement that I should ride on hawking with many Gentlemen of his Court, and that they should shew me so much game and pastime as might be : which was done, and many cranes killed. We returned from hawking about thre of the clocke at the afternoone : the king then risen, and ready to dinner, I was inuited therunto, and appproching nigh to the entring in of his tent, and being in his sight, two gentlemen incountered me with two garments of that countrey fashion, side, downe to the ground, the one of silke, and the other of silke and golde, sent vnto me from the king, and after that they caused me to put off my byper garment, being a gowne of blacke velvet furred with Sables, they put the sayd two garments vpon my backe, and so conducted me vnto the king, befoze whom doing reuerence, and kissing his hand, he commanded me to sit not farre from him, and so I dined in his presence, he at that time being very merry, and demanding of me many questions, and amongst other, how I like the maner of their hawking. Dinner so ended, I required his highnesse safeconduct for to depart towards the Sophy, who dismissing me with great fauour, and appointing his Ambassadour (which returned out of Rulsia) and others, to safeconduct me, he gaue me at my departure a faire horse with all furniture, and custome free from thence with all my goods. So I returned to Shamaki againe, where I remained untill the sixt of October, to provide camels, horses, and other necessities for my sayd intended iourney.

But now befoze I proceed further, I purpose to write something of this countrey of Hircan, now called Shiruan, with the towones and commodities of the same. This countrey of Hircan in times past was of great renowne, hauing many cities, townes, and castles in it: and the kings thereof in time of antiquity were of great power, able to make wars with the Sophies of Persia: but now it is not onely otherwise (for that the cities, townes, and castles be decayed) but also the king is subiect to the sayd Sophie (although they haue their proper king) and be at the commandement of the sayd Sophie, who conquered them not many yeeres passed, for their diuersity in religion, and caused not onely all the nobility & gentlemen of that countrey to be put to death, but also ouer and besides, rased the walles of the cities, townes, and castles of the said realme, to the intent that there should be no rebellion, and for their great terror, caused a turret of free stone and flints to be erected in the sayd city called Shamaki, and in a ranke of flints of the sayd turret, did set the heads of the sayd nobility and gentlemen, then executed. This city is distant from the sea side, with camels, seuen dayes iourney, but now the same being much decayed, & chiefly inhabited with Armenians, another city called Arrash, bordering upon the Georgians, is the chiefest and most opulent in the trade of merchandise, & thereabouts is nourished the most abundant growth of raw silke, and thither the Turks, Syrians, and other strangers do resort and trafficke. There be also diuers good and necessary commodities to be prouided & had in this sayd realme: viz. galls rough and smooth, cotton wooll, allome, and raw silke of the naturall growth of that countrey: besides, nere all kinde of spices and byugges, and some other commodities, which are brought thither from out of East India, but in the lesse quantity, for that they be not assured to haue vent or vterance of the same: but the chiefest commodities be there raw silks of all sorts, whereof there is great plenty. Not farre from the sayd city of Shamaki, there was an olde castle called Gullistone, now beaten downe by this Sophie, which was esteemed to be one of the strongest castles in the world, and was besieged by Alexander the great, long time before he could win it. And not farre from the sayd castle was a sumptuous building, wherein was buried a kings daughter, named Arneleck Channa, who slew herselfe with a knife, for that her father would haue forced her (she professing chastity) to haue married with a king of Tarrarie: upon which occasion the maidens of that countrey do resort thither once euery yere to lament her death.

Also in the sayd countrey there is an high hill called Quiquis, upon the toppe whereof (as it is commonly reported) did dwell a great Giant, named Arneoste, hauing upon his head two great hornes, and eares, and eyes like a horse, and a taile like a Cow. It is further sayd, that this monster kept a passage thereby, untill there came an holy man, termed Hauoir Hamshie, a kinsman to one of the Sophies, who mounted the sayd hill, and combating with the sayd Giant, did binde not onely him in chaines, but also his woman called Lamisache, with his sonne named Afier: for which victory they of that countrey haue this holy man in great reputation, and the hill at this day (as it is hynited) sauioureth so ill, that no person may come nigh vnto it: but whether it be true or not, I referre it to further knowledge.

Now to returne to the discourse of the proceeding in my voyage towards the great Sophie. The 6 of October in the yeere aforesayd, I with my company departed from Shamachi aforesaid, and hauing iourneyed threescore miles, came to a towne called Yauare, wherein the king hath a faire house, with orchards and gardens well replenished with fruits of all sorts. By this towne passeth a great river called Cor, which springeth in the mountaines of the Georgians, & passing thow the countrey of Hircania aforesayd, fallerh into the Caspian or Hircan sea, at a place betwene two ancient townes called Shabran and Bachu, situate within the realme of Hircane, and from thence issueth further, passing thow a fruitfull countrey, inhabited with pasturing people, which dwell in the Summer season upon mountaines, and in Winter they remooue into the valleyes without resorting to townes or any other habitation: and when they remoue, they doe iourney in carrauans or troops of people and cattell, carrying all their wines, childezen and baggage upon bullocks. Now passing this wilde people ten dayes iourney, comming into no towne or house, the sixteenth day of October we arriued at a citie called Ardouill, where we were lodged in an hospitall builded with faire stone, and erected by this Sophies father named Ismael, onely for the succour and lodging of strangers and other trauellers, wherein all men haue victuals and feeding for man and horse, for three dayes and no longer. This aforesayd late prince Ismael lieth buried in a faire Meskit, with a sumptuous sepulchre in the same, which he caused to be made in his life time. This towne Ardouill is in the latitude of eight and thirtie degrees, an ancient citie in the prouince of Aderragan, wherein the Princes of Persia are commonly buried: and there Alexander the great did keepe his Court when he invaded the Persians. Foure dayes iourney to the Westward is the citie Tebris in olde time called Tauris, the greatest citie in Persia, but not of such trade of merchandise as it hath bene, or as others be at this time, by meane of the great inuasion of the Turke, who hath conquered from the Sophie almost to the sayd citie of Tauris, which the sayd Turke once lacked, and thereby caused the Sophie to forsake the

the same, and to keepe his court ten dayes journey from thence, at the sayd citie of Casbin.

The 21 day we departed from Ordowil aforesayd, traueilling for the most part ouer mountaines all in the night season, and resting in the day, being destitute of wood, and therefore were forced to vse for seuell the dung of horses & camels, which we bought deare of the pasturing people. Thus passing ten dayes journey the yere aforesayd, the second day of Nouember we arriued at the fozesayd citie of Casbin, where the sayd Sophie keepeh his court, and were appointed to a lodging not farre from the kings pallace, and within two dayes after the Sophie commanded a prince called Shalli Murzey, sonne to Obdolowcan king of Shiruan aforesayd, to send for me to his house, who asked me in the name of the said Sophie how I did, and whether I were in health, and after did welcome me, and invited me to dinner, whereat I had great entertainment, and so from thence I returned to my lodging. The next day after I sent my interpreter vnto the Sophies Seerctarie, declaring that I had letters directed from our most gracious Souereigne ladie the Queenes most excellent Maestie of the Realme of England, vnto the sayd Sophy, and that the cause of my comming was expessed in the same letters, desiring that at conuenient time I might come into his Maesties presence, who aduertising the Sophy thereof, shortly after answered me that there were great affaires in hand: which being finished, I should come before his presence, willing me in the meane time to make ready my present if I had any to deliuer.

At this time, the great Turkes Ambassadour arriued foure dayes before my comming, who was sent thither to conclude a perpetuall peace betwixt the same great Turke and the Sophie, and brought with him a present in golde, and faire horses with rich furnitures, and other gifts, esteemed to be woorth forty thousand pound. And therupon a peace was concluded with topfull feasts, triumphs and solemnities, corroborated with strong othes, by their law of Alkaron, for either to obserue the same, and to liue alwayes after as swoyne brethren, ayding the one the other against all princes that should warre against them, or either of them. And vpon this conclusion the Sophy caused the great Turkes sonne named Baizer Soltan, a balliant Prince (who being fled from his father vnto the Sophie, had remained in his Court the space of foure yeeres) to be put to death. In which time the sayd Turkes sonne had caused moztall warres betwixt the sayd Princes, and much preuailed therein: the Turke demanded therefore his sonne to be sent vnto him, & the Sophie refused thereunto to consent. But now being slaine according to the Turks will, the Sophie sent him his head for a present, not a litle desired, and acceptable to the vnnaturall father. Discourring at my first arriuall with the king of Shiruan of sundry matters, and being intertaind as hath bene before declared, the sayd king named Obdolowcan, demanding whether that we of England had friendship with the Turks or not: I answered, that we neuer had friendship with them, and that therefore they would not suffer vs to passe thorow their countrey into the Sophy his dominions, and that there is a nation named the Venetians, not farre distant from vs, which are in gre at league with the sayd Turks, who trade into his dominions with our commodities, chiefly to barter the same for raw silks, which (as we vnderstand) come from thence: and that if it would please the sayd Sophie and other Princes of that countrey, to suffer our merchants to trade into those dominions, and to giue vs passport and safe conduct for the same, as the sayd Turke hath granted to the sayd Venetians, I doubted not but that it should grow to such a trade to the profit of them as neuer before had bene the like, and that they should be both furnished with our commodities, and also haue veterance of theirs, although there neuer came Turke into their land, perswading with many other wordes for a trade to be had. This king vnderstanding the matter liked it marueilously, saying, that he would write vnto the Sophie concerning the same: as he did in very deed, assuring me that the Sophie would graunt my request, and that at my retuene vnto him he would giue me letters of safe conduct, and priuileges. The Turkes Ambassadour was not then come into the land, neither any peace hoped to be concluded, but great preparation was made for warre, which was like much to haue furthered my purpose, but it chanced otherwise. For the Turkes Ambassadour being arriued, and the peace concluded, the Turkish merchants there at that time present, declared to the same Ambassadour, that my comming thither (naming me by the name of Franke) would in great part destroy their trade, and that it should be good for him to perswade the Sophy not to fauour me, as his Highnesse meant to obserue the league and friendship with the great Turke his master, which request of the Turkish merchants the same Ambassadour earnestly preferred, and being afterwards dismissed with great honour, he departed out of the Realme with the Turkes sonnes head as aforesayd, and other presents.

The 20 day of Nouember aforesayd, I was sent for to come before the sayd Sophy, otherwise called Shaw Thomas, and about thzee of the clocke at afternoone I came to the Court, and in lighting from my horse at the Court gate, before my feet touched the ground, a paire of the Sophies owne shoes termed in the Persian tongue Basmackes, such as hee himselfe weareth when he ariseth in the night to pray (as his maner is) were put vpon my feet, for without the same shoes I might not be suffered to tread vpon his holy ground, being a Christian, and called amongst them Gower, that is, vnbeleuer, and vncleane: esteeming all to be infidels and Pagans which do not beleue as they do, in their false fittie prophets, Mahomet and Murtezalli. At the sayd Court gate the things that I brought to present his Maiestie with, were deuised by sundry parcels to sundry seruitors of the Court, to carry before me, for none of my company or seruants might be suffered to enter into the Court with me, my interpreter onely excepted. Thus comming before his Maiestie with such reuerence as I thought meete to be vsed, I deliuered the Queenes Maiesties letters with my present, which hee accepting, demaunded of mee of what countrey of Franks I was, and what affaires I had there to doe: Vnto whom I answered that I was of the famous Citie of London within the noble Realme of England, and that I was sent thither from the most excellent and gracious soueraigne Lady Elizabeth Queene of the saide Realme for to treat of friendship, and free passage of our Merchants and people, to repaire and traffique within his dominions, for to bring in our commodities, and to carry away theirs to the honour of both princes, the mutuall commoditie of both Realmes, and wealth of the Subiects, with other wordes here omitted. He then demaunded me in what language the letters were written, I answered, in the Latine, Italian and Hebrew: well said he, we haue none within our Realme that vnderstand those conguers. Whereupon I answered that such a famous and worthy prince (as hee was) wanted not people of all nations within his large dominions to interpret the same. Then he questioned with me of the state of our Countreys, and of the power of the Emperour of Almanie, king Philip, and the great Turke, and which of them was of most power: whom I answered to his contentation, not displaying the great Turke, their late concluded friendship considered. Then he reasoned with mee much of Religion, demaunding whether I were a Gower, that is to say, an vnbeleuer, or a Muselman, that is, of Mahometers lawe. Vnto whom I answered, that I was neither vnbeleuer nor Mahometan, but a Christian. What is that, said he vnto the king of the Georgians sonne, who being a Christian was fiesed vnto the said Sophie, and he answered that a Christian was he that beleueth in Iesus Christus, affirming him to be the Sonne of God, and the greatest Prophet. Doest thou beleue so, said the Sophie vnto me: Yeat that I do, said I: Oh thou vnbeleuer, said he, we haue no neede to haue friendship with the vnbeleuers, and so willed me to depart. I being glad thereof did reuerence and went my way, being accompanied with many of his gentlemen and others, and after me followed a man with a Balanet of sand, sifting all the way that I had gone within the said pallace, euen from the said Sophies sight vnto the court gate.

The Queenes letters deliuered.

The Sophies questions.

The curtesie of Shally Murzey.

Thus I repaired againe vnto my lodging, and the said night Shally Murzey sonne to the king of Hircan aforesaid, who sauoured me very much for that I was commended vnto him from his father, willed mee not to doubt of any thing, putting mee in hope that I should haue good successe with the Sophie, and good intertainment.

Thus I continued for a time, dayly resorting vnto me diuers gentlemen sent by the Sophie to conferre with me, especially touching the affaires of the Emperour of Russia, and to know by what way I intended to returne into my countrey, either by the way that I came, or by the way of Ormus, and so with the Portingals ships. Vnto whom I answered, that I durst not returne by the way of Ormus, the Portingals and wee not being friends, fully perceiving their meaning: for I was aduertised that the saide Sophie meant to haue warres with the Portingals, and would haue charged mee that I had bene come for a spie to passe through his dominions vnto the saide Portingals, thinking them and vs to be all one people, and calling all by the name of Franks, but by the providence of God this was preuented.

Warres intended against the Portingals.

After this the said Sophie conferred with his nobilitie and counsell concerning me, who perswaded that he should not entertaine me wel, neither dismisle me with letters or gifts, considering that I was a Franke, and of that nation that was enemy to the great Turke his brother, perswading that if he did otherwise, and that the newes thereof should come to the knowledge of the Turke, it should be a meane to breake their new league and friendship lately concluded: dissuading further because he had no neede, neither that it was requisite for him to haue friendship with vnbeleuers, whose Countreys lay sacre from him, and that it was best for him to send me with my letters vnto the said great Turke for a present, which he was fully determined to haue done at some meet time, meaning to send his Ambassadour vnto the said great Turke very shortly after.

But the king of Hircanes sonne aforesaid, vnderstanding this deliberation, sent a man in post vnto his father, for to declare and impart the purpose vnto him, who as a gracious prince, considering that I had passed through his dominions, and that I had iourneyed for a good intent, did write to the Sophie all that which he vnderstood of his said determination, & that it should not stand with his Maiesties honour to doe mee any harme or displeasure, but rather to giue mee good entertainment, seeing I was come into his land of my free will, and not by constraint, and that if hee vsed mee evil, there would few strangers reioyce into his countrey, which would bee greatly vnto his hinderance, with many other perswasions: which after that the saide Sophie had well and thoroughly pondered and digested (much esteeming the same king of Hircane, being one of the valiantest princes vnder him and his nigh kinselman) changed his determined purpose, and the twentieth of March 1562, he sent to me a rich garment of clooth of golde, and so dismissed me without any harme.

Conference with Indian Merchants.

During the time that I sojourned at the sayde City of Casbin, diuers merchants out of India came thither vnto mee, with whom I conferred for a trade of spices: whereunto they answered that they would bring of all sorts so much as we would haue, if they were sure of vent, whereof I did promise to assure them, so that I doubt not but that great abundance thereof may from time to time be there provided and had.

M. Ienkinson
returne.

The same twentieth day of March I returned from the saide Citie of Casbin where I remayned all the Winter, hauing sent away all my Camels befoze, and the thirtieth day I came to the saide Citie of Ardouil, and the fifteenth of April vnto Zauat aforesayd, where king Obdolowean was at that present, who immediately sent for me, and demanding of me many questions, declared that if it had not bene for him, I had bene utterly cast away, and sent to the great Turke for a present by the Sophie, though the euill perswasion of his wicked counsell, that the Zeties and holy men were the chiefe and principal procurers and moouers thereof: but the Sophie himselfe ment mee much good at the first, and thought to haue giuen me good entertainment, and so had done, had not the peace and league fortun'd to haue bene concluded betweene them and the great Turke. Neuerthelesse, sayd he, the Sophie hath written vnto me to entertaine you well, and you are welcome into my Countrey, and so he intreated mee very gently, in whose Court I remained seuen dayes, and obtained of him letters of safe conductes and priuiledges in your names to bee free from paying custome, which I deliuered vnto your seruants Thomas Alcocke and George Wrenne, at their departure towards Persia for your affaires: and his highnesse did giue mee two garments of silke, and so dismissed me with great fauour, sending with me his Ambassadour againe vnto the Emperour of Russia, and committed the chiefe secret of his affaires vnto me, to declare the same vnto the Emperours Maiestie at my returne: and thus departing the tenth day of April, I came to the City of Shamachi, and there remayning certaine dayes for provision of Camels downe to the Sea side, I sent from thence befoze men to repaire my Barke, and to make her in a readinesse. And during my abode in Shammachi, there came vnto me an Armenian sent from the king of Georgia, who declared the lamentable estate of the same king, that being enclosed betwixt those two cruell tyrants and mightie princes, the said great Turke and the Sophie, hee had continuall warres with them, requiring for the loue of Christ and as I was a Chyistian, that I would send him comfort by the said Armenian, and aduise how he might send his Ambassadour to the sayd Emperour of Russia, and whether I thought that he would support him or no: and with many other wordes required me to declare his necessitie vnto the same Emperour at my returne: adding further that the said king would haue written vnto me his minde, but that hee doubted the safe passage of his messenger. Vnto whom I did likewise answer by word of mouth, not onely perswading him to sende his Ambassadour to Russia, not doubting but that hee should finde him most honourable and inclined to helpe him, but also I directed him his way how the sayde king might send by the Countrey of Chircassi, though the fauour of Tengeruk king of the sayd Countrey, whose daughter the said king had lately married. And thus dismissing the saide Armenian, within two dayes after I sent Edward Cleark your seruant vnto the Citie of Arrash, where the most Roie of Silkes is to be had, giuing him Commission to haue passed further into the saide Countrey of Georgia, and there to haue repaired vnto the sayde king. And after my commendations premised, and my minde declared to haue pursued for safeconduct of the same Prince for our Merchants to trade into his dominions, and that obtained to haue returned againe with speede. The same your seruant iourneying to the sayd Citie of Arrash, and there finding certaine Merchants Armenians, which promised to goe to the sayd City of Georgia, coming to the borders thereof, was perceiued by a Captaine there, that he was a Chyistian, and thereupon demanded whither he went, and vnderstanding that he could not passe further without great suspicion, answered that he came thither to buy Silkes, and shewed the king of Hircanes letters which hee had with him, and so returned backe againe, and the fifteenth of April came to Shamachi: from whence I departed the sixteene of the same moneth, and the one and twentie thereof coming to the Sea side, and finding my barke in a readinesse, I caused your goods to be laden, and there attended a faire winde.

But befoze I proceede any further to speake of my returne, I intend with your fauours somewhat to treat of the countrey of Persia, of the great Sophie, and of his countrey, lawes and religion.

This land of Persia is great and ample, deuised into many kingdomes and prouinces, as Gilan, Corasan, Shiruan, and many others hauing diuers Cities, towne and castles in the same. Every prouince hath his senerall King or Sulcan, all in obedience to the great Sophie. The names of the chiefe Cities be these: Teueris, Casbin, Keshan, Yesse, Meskie, Heirin, Ardouill, Shamachi, Arrash with many others. The countrey for the most part toward the sea side is plaine and full of pasture, but into the land, high, full of mountaines, and sharpe. To the South it bordereth vpon Arabia and the East Ocean. To the North vpon the Caspian sea and the lands of Tartaria, To the East vpon the prouinces of India, and to the West vpon the confines of Chaldea, Syria, and other the Turkes lands. All within these dominions be of the Sophies, named Shaw Thomas, sonne to Ismael Sophie. This Sophie that now raigeth is nothing valiant, although his power be great, and his people martiall: and through his pusillanimitie the Turke hath much intaded his countreys, euen nigh vnto the Citie of Teueris, wherein hee was wont to keepe his chiefe court. And now hauing forsaken the same, is chiesly resident at Casbin aforesaide, and alwayes as the said Turke pursueth him, he not being able to withstand the Turke in the fildes, trusting rather to the mountaines for his safegard, then to his fortes and castles, hath caused the same to be raised within his dominions, and his ordinance to be molten, to the intent that his enemies pursuing him, they should not strengehen themselves with the same.

The description of Persia.

The chiefe Cities of Persia.

This prince is of the age of fiftie yeeres, and of a reasonable stature, hauing fine children. His eldest sonne he keepeth captiue in prison, for that he feareth him for his valiantnesse and actiuitie: he professeth a kinde of holynesse, and saith that hee is descended of the blood of Mahomet and Murtezalli: and although these Persians be Mahometans, as the Turkes and Tartars be, yet honour they this false fained Murtezalli, saying that hee was the chiefe disciple that Mahomet had, cursing and chiding dayly thre other disciples that Mahomet had called Oucar, Vيران, and Abebeck, and these thre did slay the saide Murtezalli, for which cause and other differences of holy men and lawes, they haue had and haue with the Turkes and Tartars moztall warres. To treat of their religion at large, being moze or lesse Mahomets lawe and the Alkaron, I shall not need at this present. These persons are comely and of good complexion, proude and of good courage, esteeming themselves to be best of all nations, both for their religion and holynesse, which is most erroneous, and also for all other their fashions. They be martial, delighting in faire hoxles and good harnesse, soone angrie, craftie and hard people. Thus much I haue thought good to treat of this nation, and nowe I returne to discourse the proceeding of the rest of my voyage.

The difference of religion.

By barke being ready at the Caspian sea as aforesaide, hauing a faire winde, and committing our selues vnto God the 30. day of May 1563. we arrived at Astracan, hauing passed no lesse dangers vpon the Sea in our returne, then we sustained in our going forth, and remayning at the said Astracan, vntill the tenth day of June, one hundred gunners being there admitted vnto mee for my safegard by the riuer Volga, the fiftieth of July I arrived at the Citie of Cazan, where the Captaine entertained me well, and so dismissing mee, I was conducted from place to place vnto the Citie of Mosco, where I arrived the twentieth day of August 1563. in safetie, thanks be to God, with all such goods, merchandizes, and iewels, as I had provided as well for the Emperours stocke and accompt, as also of yours, all which goods I was commaunded to bring into the Emperours treasure befoze it was opened, which I did, and deliuered those parcels of wares which were for his Maiesties accompt, videlicet, precious stones, and wrought silkes of sundry colours and fortes, much to his highnesse contentation, and the residue belonging to you, viz. Crasko, and rawe silkes, with other merchandizes, (as by accompt appeareth) were brought vnto your house, whereof part there remained, and the rest was laden in your shippes lately returned.

The 30. of May 1563.

Shortly after my coming to the Mosco, I came befoze the Emperours Maiestie, and presented vnto him the apparell giuen vnto me by the Sophie, whose highnesse conferred with mee touching the princes affaires which he had committed to my charge: and my proceedings therein it pleased him so to accept, that they were much to his contentation, saying vnto mee, I haue perceived your good service, for the which I doe thanke you, and will recompence you for the same, wishing that I would trauell againe in such his other affaires, wherein hee was minded to employ mee: to whom I answered, that it was to my heartie reioycing that my service was so acceptable vnto his highnesse, acknowledging all that I had done to be but of duetie, humbly beseeching his grace to continue his goodnesse vnto your worships, and euen at that instant I humbly requenew priuileges obtained hereafter following.

28. Septemb.
1564.

And his Maiestie to vouchsafe to graunt vnto you a newe priuilege moze ample then the first, which immediately was graunted, and so I departed. And afterwards hauing penned a brieue noce howe I meant to haue the same priuileges made, I repaired dayly to the Secretary for the perfecting of the same, and obtained it vnder his Maiesties broad seale, which at my departure from thence, I deliuered vnto the custody of Thomas Glouer your Agent there. The copy whereof, and also of the other priuileges graunted and given by the king of Hircan, I haue already deliuered vnto you. Soicurning all that winter at Mosco, and in the meane time hauing bargained with the Emperours Maiestie, I sent away your seruant Edward Clarke hither ouerland with aduise, and also made preparation for sending againe into Persia in meete time of the yeere. And committing the charge thereof vnto your seruants Thomas Alcocke, George Wrenne, and Richard Cheinie, the 28. of June last, I departed in poste from the said Mosco, and comming to Colmogro and so downe to the Sea side, I found your ships laden and ready to depart, where I embarked my selfe in your good ship called the Swallow, the 9. of July, one thousand six hundred sixtie foure, and hauing passed the Seas with great and extreme dangers of losse of shippe, goods and life, the 28. day of September last (God be praised) we arriued here at London in safetie.

Thus knowing that the couragious and valiant souldier, which aduentureth both fame, member and life, to serue faithfully his soueraigne, esteemeth not the perils and dangers passed (the victorie once obtained) neither for his guerdon desireth any thing moze, then that his seruice bee well taken of him for whom he enterprised it: So I perceiuing your fauourable beneuolence to me extended in accepting my trauels in good part to your contentations, do thinke my selfe therein with in great part recompensed: beseeching Almighty God so to prosper your aduentures, from time to time hereafter to be made for reaping the fruits of my trauels (at your great charges, and to my no small dangers) that ye may plentifully gather in and enioy the same, to the illustrating of the Quenees most excellent Maiestie, the honour and commoditie of this her highnesse Realme, and to the ample benefit and abundant enriching of you and your succession, & posteritie for euer.

A copie of the priuileges giuen by Obdolowcan King of Hircania, to the company of English merchants Aduenturers for Russia, Persia, and Mare Caspium, with all the lands and countreys adioyning to the same, obtained by M. Anthonie Ienkinson at his being there about the affaires of the said company, April 14. Anno 1563.

WHE Obdolowcan by the mightie power of God maker of heauen and of earth, appointed and now reigning king of Shiruan and Hircan, of our meere uotion and great goodnes, at the earnest sute and request of our fauoured and welbeloued Anthonie Ienkinson Ambassa-dour, haue giuen and graunted vnto the right worshipfull Sir William Garrer, Sir William Chester, Sir Thomas Lodge, M. Richard Mallarie, and M. Richard Chamberlaine, with all their company of merchants Aduenturers of the Citie of London in England, free libertie, safe conduct, and licence to come or sende their factorz in trade of merchandize into our countreys, and to buy and sell with our merchants and others, either for ready money or barter, and to tary and abide in our countrey, so long as they will, and to goe away when they list, without impediment, let, or hinderance, either of body or goods.

And further our commaundement and pleasure is, that the said English merchants with their company, shall pay no maner of custome for wares, which they or their factorz shall buy or sel within our dominions. And if at any time our customers or other officers, or any of them, doe disturbe, misuse, force or contraine the said English merchants or any of them, or their factorz, to pay any maner of custome or duetie for any wares they bying in or carry out of our dominions contrary to this our commandement, and the same be knownen vnto vs, then we will that the saide customers and officers shall loose & be put out of their said offices, with our further displeasure, and the saide English merchants to haue restored all such money & wares as our customers haue taken of them for our said custome. And whensoever the saide English merchants or their factorz shall bying any maner of wares meete for our treasure, then our treasurer shall take the said wares into our treasure, and shall giue vnto the said English merchants, either ready money or raw silkes, to the value of their saide wares. And wheresoever this our letter of priuileges shall bee seene and read within our dominion, we straightly wil and command that it take effect, and be obeyed in all points.

Dated at our place of Iauar, the day and yere aboue written, and sealed with our princely seale, and signed by our Secretary in the 12. yeere of our raigne.

The second voiage into Persia made by Tho. Alcock, who was slaine there, and by George Wrenne, & Ric. Cheinie seruants to the worshipfull compaigne of Moscoue merchants in Anno 1563. written by the said Richard Cheinie.

I may please your worshipps to vnderstand, that in the yere 1563. I was appointed by M. Antho. Ienkinson, and M. Thomas Glouer your Agent in Russia, to goe for Persia in your worshipps affaires, one Thomas Alcock hauing the charge of the voyage committed to him, and I one of your worshipps seruants being ioyned with him in your busines, hauing with vs, as they said 1500. rubbles. And if it shall please you I cannot tell certainly what summe of money we had then of the Emperours: for I receiued none, nor disbursed any of it in wares for the voyage. Also, God I take to record, I could not tell what stocke your worshipps had there, for the bookes were kept so priuily that a man could neuer see them. The 10. of May anno 1563. we departed from a towne called Yersaue upon our voyage toward Persia. The 24. of Iuly we arrived at Astracan: and the second of August wee departed from Astracan, and the 4. of the same moneth we came to the Caspian sea, and the 11. day of the said moneth we arrived at our port in Media: and the 21. of the said August wee arrived at Shammaki, whereas the king Obdolocan lay in the field. We were wel entertained of heathen people, for the thirde day after our arrivall at Shammaki wee were called before the king: we gaue him apperent, and he entertained vs very well.

A rubble to a marke Eng-lish.

At our comming to the Court wee were commaunded to come before the king, who sate in his tent upon the ground with his legs a crosse, and all his dukes round about his tent, the ground being couered with carpets: wee were commaunded to sit downe, the King appointing euery man his place to sit. And the king commaunded the Emperour of Russlands Merchants to rise vp, and to giue vs the upper hande. The 20. of October Thomas Alcock departed from Shammaki towards Casbin, leauing mee at Shammaki to recouer such debts as the dukes of Shammaki ought for wares which they tooke of him at his going to Casbin. In the time I lay there I could recouer but little. And at Thomas Alcocks comming from Casbin, who arrived at a towne called Leuuaeta, whereas the king Obdolocan lay, a day and a halfe iourney from the towne whereas I lay, I hearing of his arriuing there, departed from Shammaki, finding him there in safetie with all such goods as he had with him. During his abode there for seuen dayes he made suite to the king for such money as the dukes ought him. But the king was displeased for that the Emperour of Russlands merchant had slaine a Boserman at his going to Casbin. Thomas Alcock seeing the king would shewe vs no fauour, and also hearing from Shammaki, that the Russes sent their goods to the sea side, for that they feared that the king of Persia should haue knowledge of the death of the Boserman, willed mee to depart to Shammaki with all such goods as he had brought with him from Casbin, I leauing him at the Court.

Casbin.

Leuuaeta.

A Boserman is a Rencgado.

The thirde day after mine arrivall at Shammaki, I had newes that Thomas Alcocke was slaine comming on his way towards me. Then the king Obdolocan vnderstanding of his death, demanded whether he had euer a brother. Some said I was, some saide I was not his brother. When this fell out, your worshipps had no other seruant there but mee among those heathen people. Who hauing such a summe of goods lying vnder my handes, and seeing howe the Russes sent their goods with as much hast as they might to the sea side, and hauing but foure men to sende our wares to the sea side, I vsed such diligence, that within two dayes after Thomas Alcocke was slaine, I sent in company with the Russes goods, all your worshipps goods with a Harmer, William August, and a Swethen, for that they might the safer arriue at the seaside, being safely layd in. All which goods afterwards arrived in Russeland in good condition, Master Glouer hauing the receipt of all things which I sent then out of those parties into Russeland. Concerning my selfe, I remained after I had sent the goods into Russeland sixe weekes in Shammaki, for the recovery of such debts as were owing, and at last with much trouble recovered to the summe of fiftene hundred rubbles: there about, which M. Glouer receiued of me at my comming to Mosco, and all such goods as I brought with me out of Kesselbath, as by a note of my hand that hee hath shall appere. Also he hauing the receipt of all such goods as I sent into Russeland by these two aboue named, he then had that voyage in venter of his owne better then an hundred rubbles, one Richard Iohnson twentie rubbles, one Thomas Pette fiftie rubbles, one Euan Chernisin a Tartar seuentie rubbles. All these had their returne: M. Glouer allowed himselfe God knoweth howe, I then being in Persia in your worshipps affaires.

Thomas Alcocke slaine in the way betwene Leuuaeta and Shammaki.

Kesselbath, or Kesselbath.

And whereas he saith, the Emperour had but for his part a double, as farre as I can see, knowing what the wares cost in those partes, hee had treble. If they gaue him so much wares, all charges turned to your worshipps, as well of the Emperours as of their owne returns. I haue sowen the seede, and other men haue gathered the haruett : I haue trauailed both by lande and by water full many a time with a sorrowfull heart, aswell for the safeguard of their goods as yours, how to frame all things to the best, and they haue reaped the fruites of my trauaile. But euer my prayer was to God, to deliuer mee out of those miseries which I suffered for your seruice among those heathen people. Therefore knowing my duetie which I haue done, as a true seruant ought to do, I beseech your worships (although I haue but small recompence for my seruice,) yet let me haue no wrong, and God will prosper you the better.

Gillan in Persia.

Also, to informe your worships of your Persian voyage what I iudge : it is a voyage to bee followed. The king of Gillan, whereas yet you haue had no traffique, liueth al by marchandise: and it is neere Casbin, and not past six weekes trauaile from Ormus, whither all the spices be brought: and here, (I meane at Gillan) a trade may be established: But your worships must send such men as are no riotous liuers, nor drunkards. For if such men goe, it wil be to your dishonour and great hinderance, as appeared by experience the yeere 1565. when as Richard Iohnson went to Persia, whose iourney had bene better stayed then set forward. For whereas before we had the name among those heathen people to be such marchants as they thought none like in all respects, his vicious liuing there hath made vs to be counted worse then the Russes.

Again, if such men trauaile in your affaires in such a voyage, you shall neuer know what gaine is to be gotten. For how can such men imploy themselves to seeke the trade, that are inclined to such vices? or howe can God prosper them in your affaires? But when a trade is established by wise and discreet men, then wil it be for your worships to traffique there, and not before: for a voyage or market made euil at the first, is the occasion that your worships shall neuer vnderstand what gaine is to be gotten thereby hereafter.

The thirde voyage into Persia, begun in the yeere 1565. by Richard Iohnson, Alexander Kitchin, and Arthur Edwards.

A letter of Arthur Edwards to M. Thomas Nicols, Secretarie to the worshipfull company trading into Russia and other the North parts, concerning the preparation of their voyage into Persia.

Ierasslaue & towne vpon the riuer of Volga.

Richard Iohnson chiefe of the third voyage into Persia.

After Nicols, my bounden duetie remembred, with desire of God for the preservation of you and yours: you shall vnderstand that the second of March I was sent by M. Thomas Glouer (your Agent) vnto Ierasslaue, appointed to receiue such goods as should come from Vologhda, as also such kinde of wares as should be bought and sent from Mosco by your Agent, and M. Edward Clarke, thought meete for your voyage of Persia. And further, I was to provide for biscuit, beere, and beefe, and other victuals, and things otherwayes needful according to aduise. Thus I remained here vntil the comming of your Agent, which was the 12. of May, who taried here three dayes, to see vs set forward on our voyage, and then he departed towards Colmogro, hauing appointed (as chiefe for your voyage of Persia) Richard Iohnson. For my part I am willing, as also haue bene & shalbe content to submit my selfe vnder him, whom the Agent shall appoint, although he were such a one as you should thinke in some respects vnmeete. Thirtie two packes of carleis are all of that kinde of cloth that we shall haue with vs. The other 18. packes that should haue gone, were sold in Mosco. What other goods are shipped for our voyage, you shall vnderstand by your Agents letters. Whereas Edward Clarke (being an honest man) was appointed Agent for Persia, as one for those parts moze fit then any I do know here, God hath taken him vnto his mercie, who departed this present life the 16. of March last past. I wished of God for my part he had liued: for my desire was in his company to haue trauailed into Persia. Your barke or craer made here for the riuer of Volga and the Caspian sea is very litle, of the burthen of 30. tunnes at the most. It is handsomly made after the English fashion: but I thinke it too litle for your goods and prouision of victuals. If the worshipfull company would send hither a Shipwright, being skilfull to make one of the burden of 60. tunnes or moze, drawing but sixe foote water at the most when it is laden, I thinke it should be profitable. For if your owne goods would not lade the same, here be Marchants that would bee glad and faine to giue great freight to lade their goods with vs, wherby your charges would be much lessened: And so it may happen, the wages of your men hired here may be saued, and your seruants and goods in farre greater assurance: for their boates here are dangerous to saile with and to passe the Caspian sea. There be Carpenters here that will doe well ynough hauing one to instruct them. Your wares bought here, and orders taken for those that goe for your voyage of Persia are yet vnknown vnto me: wherfore I cannot (as I would at this present) write to you thereof. Yet, (as you do know) it was 20 barke of 30. tunnes made at Ierasslaue 1564. to passe the Caspian seas.

it was the Governours mind I should be acquainted with greater affaires then these. Wherein I doubt not but I shall be informed of them that are appointed, and all things shall be bought when they shall see time and haue moze laisure. Thus in haste (as appeareth) I commit you and yours into the hands of almighty God; who preserve you in perfect health with increase of worship. From Ierasslaue the 15. of May 1565.

By yours to command here or elsewhere during life. Arthur Edwards.

Another letter of the said. M. Arthur Edwards, written the 26. of April 1566. in Shamaki in Media, to the right worshipful Sir Thomas Lodge Knight and Alderman: and in his absence to M. Thomas Nicols, Secretarie to the right worshipfull companie trading into Russia, Persia, and other the North and East partes, touching the successe of Richard Iohnson in the third voiage into Persia.

1566

Worshipfull Sir, my bounden duetie remembred, with heartie prayer vnto God for the preservation of you and yours in perfect health with increase of worship. It may please you that my last letter I sent you was from Astracan the 26 of July 1565. From whence Richard Iohnson, my selfe, and Alexander Kirchin, departed as the 30 of the same. And by meanes of contrary windes, it was the 23 of August before we came to our desired port named Nazauoe. There, after we had gotten your goods on land, with much labour and strength of men, as also windlesse deusted and made, we haled your barke ouer a barre of beach of pebble stones into a small Riuer, sending your ships apparell with other things to an house hired in a village thereby. And as soone as we might get camels, being the fife of September we departed thence, and came to this towne of Shamaki the 11. of the same: and the 17. day following, we presented vnto Abdollocan the king of this countrey, one timber of Sables, one tunne of oil of silver cups parfill gilt, three boxes teeth, 4. Arshines of skarlet, 3. pieces of karlets, with 40. red fozes.

They departed from Astracan the 30. of July 1565.

September.

Presents to the king Abdollocan.

We receiued our presents with giuing vs thanks for our good wils, demanding if M. Iohnson were in good health, and whether he would returne into these parts againe. We willed vs also him selfe to sit downe before him the distance of a quoyts cast from his tent, where he late with diners of his counsaile and nobilitie, sending vs from his table such meate as was before him: And after certaine talke had with vs, he sayd, if he might perceiue or know any maner of person to doe vs any wrong, he would punish them in example of others, whereby we should liue in quietnesse, and haue no cause to complaine, giuing vs a litle house for the time, vntill a better might be poulded in such place as we should thinke most meete, neuer willing vs to rise or depart, vntill such time as we of our selues thought it conuenient. At the taking of our leaue, he willed vs to put our whole minds and requests in writing, that he might further vnderstand our desires. But while we were about to doe so, God tooke this good king our friend out of this present life the 2. of October past. The want of him hath bene the cause that as yet wee cannot receiue certaine debts. Wherein, we doubt not but we shall recouer all such summes of monney as are owing vs for this voyage. As for Thomas Alcocks debts they are past hope of recouerie, which had not bene lost if the king had liued. We trust in the place of him, God will send as friendly a king towards vs: who by report (and as we be credibly informed,) shall bee his sonne named the Mursay: who since the death of his father, at our being with him, promised to shew vs moze friendship then euer we found: God grant the same.

A house giuen our men in Shamaki by the king.

The death of Abdollocan the 2. of October 1565.

Mursay the new king of Media.

Great troubles haue chanced in these parts. Of those which were of the old kings counsell or bare any rule about him in these quarters, some are in prison, some are pinched by the purse, and other sent for vnto the Shaugh. These troubles haue partly bene the let that wares were not sold as they might, to moze profite. Your Agent Richard Iohnson bought foure horses, minding to haue sent to Casbin Alexander Kirchin, whom God tooke to his mercy the 23. of October last: and before him departed Richard Davis one of your Mariners, whose soules I trust the Lord hath receiued to his mercy. We are now destitute of others to supply their roumes. Foure Mariners were few enough to saile your barke, whereof at this present we haue but one, whose name is William Smith, an honest yong man, and one that doeth good seruice here. For want and lacke of Mariners that should know their labours, we all were like to be cast away in a storme. For all the broad side of our barke lay in the water, and we had much adoe to recouer it, but God of his mercy deliuered vs. Mariners here may doe you good seruice all the winter otherwayes: and merchants here will be gladder to ship their goods in vs giuing good freight. One merchant at this present is content to pay 20. rubbles for twentie camels lading freight to Astracan. Such barques as must passe these seas, may not pass about five foote of water, because that in many places ces are very shallow waters. Wee mind hereafter to make the Russian boats more strong, and they shall serue our turnes very well.

And whereas some in times past tooke great paines, trauell and care, and could not haue their desire in the getting of the Shaughes letters of priuiledge: Now, I trust (with Gods helpe) they may be obtained: which being had, will be beneficiall to the company, and great quietnes to those that shal remaine here, although heretofore things haue chanced ill, as the like in other countries hath bene. But I doubt not, this priuiledge once gotten and obtained, we shall liue in quietnesse and rest, and shall shortly grow into a great trade for sikkes both raw and wrought, with all kind of spices and drugs, and other commodities here, as to M. Anthonie Ienkinson is well known, who (I doubt not) hath long agoe thoroughly aduertised the Companie thereof.

The truest of the slaughter of Thomas Alcock your seruant, is not certainly known. Some thinke it was by the meanes of a noble man, with whom your sayd seruant was earnest in demanding of your debts: vpon whose words he was so offended, that he procured his death. But other doe thinke verily, that in rising from the Court without companie, false knaues lay in waite, thinking he had much about him, and so slew him. I doubt not though this misfortune hath chanced, that things shall come well to passe, and that we shall be better beloued when we shall be more known.

Honest merchants are glad of our being here, and seeke to grow in acquaintance with vs, being glad to further vs in that they may, & haue spoken in our fauours to the chiefe of this Countrey: one being a noble man, with whom your Agent and I are entred into friendship, who is at this time in great fauour with the Shaugh. He hath here and in other places of these parts set a good say in things since the kings death: he is well known to M. Ienkinson, his name is Cozamomet. Also another Duke named Ameddin-beck is our great friend: And his sister is the Shaughes wife. These two haue promised your Agent by their lawe, not onely to procure to get the Shaughes priuiledge, but also that I shall haue the debts paid me of those that went from hence to Casbin, if we would send one with them. In consideration whereof, I was vpon short warning (for want of a better) appointed by your Agent M. Richard Iohnson, all excuses laied apart, presently to put my selfe in readinesse, and to depart in company with these noblemen: with charge, when God should send me to Casbin, to vse my discretion with their aduise, for the recovering of your debts and priuiledge. I shall haue with mee one interpreter and two bought seruants: one of which partly understandeth this tongue, and may be put in trust whatsoeuer should become of me. I haue receiued 6. tunens in ready money, 200. shaughes is a tunen, reckoning euery shaugh for sixe pence Russe. I haue further receiued two timbers of Sables, one to be sold, the other to bee giuen to Thomas the Shaugh: and haue order further to giue as I shall see good to those that shall further my suite, and as occasion seruet. And so as much as I am commanded to go, I shall willingly do my best, putting my trust in God that he will send me well to speed in this tourney.

For all kind of wares bought or sold, you shal thoroughly be aduertised by your Agent Richard Iohnson, whose reckonings or accounts at no hands I might see or be priuite vnto. Your karleis were good and well sorted, they are and will be sold from 150. shaughes, to 160. the piece. Two hundred pieces were sold vnder, that needed not: one 100. pieces at 146. and 147. the piece but more would haue bene giuen, if circumspection had bene bled. They were sold to those noble men aforesayd, when as yet it was not known that I should haue gone with them. They may stand vs much in stead, as they haue promised vs their good wils in that they may doe. Here is at this time bought for England, 11. packes of rawe silke, 25. and 26. batmans being in euery packe: The batman being 7. pound, which may be 6. pound and a halfe of English waight, being bought here from 66. to 70. shaughes the batman. It is fine and good, litle course at this time was to be had. And where course silke might be had being at Grosin, we could not send thither: for that time was neglected at the first. When wee shall haue siders here to remaine in Sommer, we may buy it at the first hand of the countrey people that bring it to sell hither, and to other places, I would to God the Companie could find the meanes to haue a vent to make sales for the one halfe that we may buy here. The Companie may haue for 30. or 40. thousand pounds yearly. And as appeareth by your Agents wordes being at Varas, he and others sawe there so great abundance, that by report of diuers, you may bestow (if it were not for the Turkes) for a two hundred thousand pounds: besides silke of all colours dyed in graine, bound vp in pound waights, I thinke 15. of our ounces to their pound waight, and here sold for 23. shaughes, at 6. d. the shaugh, may be 11. s. 6. pence.

From Astracan in 7. or 8. dayes, wee may saile with our barke to a place named Gilan: the which place in time to come, (I thinke) shall serue our purpose best to goe vnto. Alom is there good cheape, being brought from thence hither to Shamaki, and sold here for two bills their batman, which may be 5. pence in our money: and so I haue bought to be sent home 223. batmans for example. And at Gilan there is rawe silke enough for the companies stocke. I beleue, if any great store of wares be sent from you, that must be the place: & from thence a man may trauell in 4. daies to Casbin, and there make quicke and better sales, at which place your commodities are to be sold. For there be the chiefe and best merchants, and diuers other cities round about, to wit, Teueris, Ardouil, and Caishan, being the heart of the countrey, where there is more ciuilitie and merchants are better bled. Concerning this point I haue inquired of diuers merchants both Russes and others that haue bene in those parts, and found them all agreeing in one tale, and perceiue the same to be true, and that all kind of wares come from thence into these parts, And from Casbin to Ormus, is about 30. daies trauielling with camels. I haue written the prices of wares in my letter to the gouernour both for spices and some drugs which I do know.

Thre moneths I neuer left speaking to the Countrey men to bring some. Your Agent will send some home for example.

This day being the 26. of Aprill I departed towards Casbin: God giue me a good houre and well to speed, with a mery heart in returning againe, as my hope is I shall. I haue written my mind to M. Glouer your Agent, what Russian wares I thinke best to be bought for this Countrey, and to send some one hither that hath the Russe tongue, for we haue need. And the companie shall do well hereafter in taking of seruants to be sent hither, to see that they be such as haue discretion, and be something broken in the world, and scene in the trade of merchandise, and one (if they can get some such) as can speake the Portingall tongue, may do them as good seruice, as those that shall be here two yeeres before him: for then we may buy a slave that can speake this language and the Portingall tongue also, which shall then interpret vnto vs in all your secret doings, not making the Russes priuy: for they are soye that we doe trade into these partes, for we are better beloued then they are: because they are giuen to be drunkards, they are much hated of these people. It is to be wished that none should serue your two ships in these parts that be giuen to that kind of vice: And that your chiefe Agent and Factor should be able to rule and gouerne himselfe, that no dishonestie should be imputed to him and vs. By his euill blage he paid here 24. rubbles, being in this Countrey 4. tumens for a boy, that he was charged to haue conueied away from a Tesicke one of this countrey men, who willed him to sweare that he knew not where the boy was become, and he should not pay it. If he were honest he might do your two ships good seruice because of his Russian tongue.

Your London reds are not to be sent hither, for they will not giue about 18. shaghes their arshine. Here be reds of more orient colour, being Venice die. The people are giuen much to weare cloth: the common people specially weare karfeis, and the merchants of more wealth weare broad cloth. You shall doe well to send fine or sixe broad clothes, some blackes, pukes, or other sad colours, that may be affoorded at 20. shaghes the arshine, and not aboute. It is here reported that King Philip hath giuen the Turkes a great ouerthrow at Malta, and taken 70. or 80. of his chiefe captains.

A letter of M. Arthur Edwards, written the 8. of August 1566. from the towne of Shamaki in Media, to the right worshipfull the Gouernours, Consuls, Assistants, and generalitie of the companie of Russia, &c. Shewing his accesse vnto the Emperour of Persia, his conference with him, his obtaining of a priuiledge, with diuers other good obseruations.

Right worshipfull Sirs, my bounden dutie remembred, with most humble commendations and like request to God for the preservation of your good healths, with the rest of the companie, &c. It may please you to understand, that the last letter which I sent you from hence was of the 26. of April of this present yere by Richard Iohnson at my departure towards Casbin: to which cite I came the 25. of May following, not slackning any day, houre, nor moment, to procure and make friends for the speedie bringing me before the presence of the Shaugh, being the 29. day of the same moneth brought before him, with whole maiestie I was in talke (as I thinke) two houres. He willed me twise to come neerer him, demanding what were my requests: and hauing heard them, he promised me his gracious letters. Afterwards he called me twise againe to come neerer him, and talked with me of our Queenes maiestie and Countrey, and what commodities we had, and what other commodities we desired: and then of other countries adioyning to vs and their commodities, as also of king Philip, what overthrow he gaue the Turks at the siege of Malta. And how long we had traueld into Russeland and Moscovia, and in what space we might saile out of England into Russeland, & how many weekes trauell it is from Colmogro to Astracan: and then came to discourse of Russeland, and what townes the Emperour had wonne, declaring vnto me himselfe most of our commodities. In the end he willed that your worships should send him of all sorts of clothes, but of one especially which maidens do make (as he sayd:) He named it Karengi, I thinke it is Westerne dozens died into scarlets. Time will not permit mee to write at large the conference which I had with his maiesty. It was strange to his people (knowing our religion) to see me so long in talke with him, willing his Secretarie before mee to write what he was delicious of: to wit, of London clothes, three or foure of all sorts for example, being well shoyne and dyed, Clolets in graine and fine reds be most woyme, but other good colours will away, when they shall see them. I wore a garment of London russet, being much esteemed. You shall doe well to send such sorts as be liuely to the sight, and some blacks for womens garments, with some Oyenge colours and cadweis. Here is much broad cloth woyme. They talke much of London clothes, and they that know the wearing, are desirous of them before the cloth of the womens making, for they find it nothing durable. If or when it cometh to weare on the theed, it renteth like paper. Here is much Venice cloth woyme, being cemplified a yard and a halfe broad, and sold here from 24. to 30. shaughs their arshine, being longer by two inches then the Russe arshine is. I wish also that you send some good chamlets & beluets died in graine, with purple colours & fine reds: because these are most woyme. Also some blacks with other colours: some cloth of gold, tiffur & botky, some beluets wrought with gold, with sattins and damaskes, most purple, and reds of all sorts. You may not forget to send some Westerne karses, to wit, dozens, which be thicked well, and close shut in the weauing, being died into fine reds, and some scarlets: for I thinke there is no such cloth for their caps.

Your worships shall understand, that after my first departure from the presence of the Prince, I neglected no time in daily attendance on them, who had my priuiledge in writing, that I might haue it in readinesse at such time as I should againe bee called before the presence of the Shaugh, which was the 29. of June last. I was in apparell that he gaue vnto me, with other garments to mine interpreter, and one of your seruants, and then I receiued your letters of priuiledge, according to my desire, sealed and armed with the Shaughs owne hand. Praise bee God who hath wrought with me, and for me, in all my doings.

with two Ambassadors in companie with his maiestie, who sayd vnto me that if my letters were not to my mind, in time to come they should be mended. Whereupon I made my reuerence, and gaue his highnesse most humble and heartie thanks, saying, that with as much speed as might bee, our Queenes Maiestie should vnderstand of his goodnesse towards her Merchants, which I thought would write their letters of request vnto his Highnesse, in such forme & order as by them should be thought meete and requisite for their good assurance in the trade of merchandises: who replied with these wordes; when wee shall see their reasonable requests, we will shew them our farther good will, and so I departed.

The Shaugh promise to increase the tribute.

Since the receiuing of the Shaughs letters, I haue eaten in company of good Dukes and others, who befoze would not come neere me. And euery day some would come to my Shop, and eate and drinke with me out of mine owne dish. Likewise in riding from Casbin hither, on the way when I sate downe to dinner, they would come and eate with mee vnbidden, when I wished them further off: for I feared them that, which gladly I would haue eaten my selfe. I doubt not but we shall liue here from hencefoorth in quietnes: for now in all places where I come, I am friendly bled with the best.

I was asked by the Shaugh if you were able to bring him yearly one hundred thousand pieces of karkies, and clothes. And I answered him, saying, your worships were able to furnish his countrey with two hundred thousand. Whereat his Highnesse reioyced: for the Turkes Ambassadors the last yere, as diuers haue told me, did put the Shaugh in despair, saying, that the Turke would not permit any cloth to be brought into his countrey.

There is a citie in Syria named Aleppo, wherein continually are many Venetians dwelling, besides other that come peerele and there buy wools, gals, tallow, saffron, skins, cotton wooll, and other wares, and great store of spices. Also the Armenians peerele receiue at the Venetians hands, karkies in barter for rawe silks, giuing sometimes 60. pieces of karkies for 70. batmans of silke of this countrey, and 40. pieces for Grosin silke. And karkies sold commonly for ready money in Aleppo, at 11. and 12. buckets the piece, (the bucket being here woorth 12. shillings) may cost the first peny 13. 2. and 144. Shaughs a karkie. By report it is one moneths trauel from this towne of Shamaky to Aleppo, and from thence to Tripolis, six dayes iourney: and from Tripolis to Venice by water, a moneth or five weekes sailing. As I learne, from hence to Venice may easily be trauelled in lesse then three moneths. Therefore I wish your worships to procure some trustie and assured friend there, to whom from hence letters may be sent. For I can haue them here to put in suerties to deliuer my letters, and to bring answere. If I had any other here with me, I would nothing haue doubted to haue brought you the Shaughs letters that way.

Aleppo a citie of great trade.

Armenians barter with the Venetians

The distance from Shamaky to Aleppo.

The Armenians and other are desirous to barter with vs, giuing silke for karkies, and also will serue vs of all kind of spices, we giuing them sufficient warning to fetch it in the Indies; and will deliuer it vs in Shamaky at these prizes.

Armenians and other, desirous to barter silke and spices for karkies.

Pepper this towne batman for 18. Shaughs, euery Shaugh is sixpence.

Peaces large for 40. Shaughs, and 45. the batman.

Cloues for 40. Shaughs the batman.

Nutmegs for 16. and 18. Shaughs the batman.

Sinamon for 40. Shaughs the batman. I doubt not but there will be profite and good done in spices, with drugs and other like in time.

From Casbin to Ormus is six weeks trauel, and from hence to Casbin is 16. dayes with camels laden: but if one trauell with a good Mule vnladen, it may be gone in seuen or eight dayes. And I thinke to Ormus and other places, may be trauelled in like order and proportion, with catel vnladen. But here in all places as men trauel, they must carie their owne prouision on horses, which they are to buy, and thus they trauell but a footepace.

The Shaugh himselfe is desirous to bargain with you, who will giue money, silke, and other wares as we will, and take our wares as we may affoord them, willing me himselfe to bring such wares as we might gain by him. The Armenians by report, and as I perceiue, bring from Aleppo peerele, foure, five, and six thousand pieces of karkies and clothes, besides those which other men bring. If your Worships might procure and find vent of sales for rawe silke, and silke dyed in graine, besides other silkes wrought and made here, by which, profite may be made: then you might send a great substance of wares hither. But I feare you shall be hindered by the Venetians if they may: for I know it will grieue them that you doe trade into these partes: for in short time it shall cleane alter their trade, and hinder the sales of their clothes in Aleppo and other places adioyning. You shall vnderstand that 60. batmans of silke is a Mules lading: and as it is reported, one village of the Armenians yeerely carrieth 400. and 500. Mules lading of silke to Aleppo, and bringeth thence 800. or a thousand Mules laden with karkies & Venice clothes. And 18. pieces pieces of karkies are a Hules lading. But I wish you not to send about 2000. pieces of karkies, although I haue bene willed to write for more. If I might haue had any understanding what your Wozships had written for in your letters sent this peere, I should in this my letter haue beene better able to haue answered you. They which be now in Astracan, might haue written some thing vnto me hither, if it had pleased them, or else haue sent me such letters of mine, as I hope some of my friends haue written to me: for here are arrived eight weekes past, two boates with wares and Russes, by whom they might haue written, had it bene but 3. or 4. lines. They promised the Russes to write, but promise was not kept. I would be sory that any boat should depart out of these partes, and not write vnto them, waping how all things stand. Thare they haue bought a boat, which cost 40. rubbles, and shipped certaine wares to come hither. God send them in safetie. I do tarte their comming, or els I had thought to haue come to Astracan in those boates which departed hence lately.

We departed
from Casbin
the 15. of July.

The fiftenth of July last, I departed from Casbin, and came to this towne the 29. of y^e same. And the fourth of August I found meanes to arrest the fastest knaue in this countrey, to wit, the Customier for 22. tumens, and 100. shaughs, (200. shaughs is a tumen.) I haue caused him to put in suerties for his fourth comming at all times, what ende I shall haue with him, God knoweth, the debt will be recouered, but not yet, for he must pay the Shaugh 1000. rubbles. These partes as yet are in no way for lacke of a Gouernour or head to rule, which I thinke shall bee the Mursey. Within 5. or 6. dayes we shall know, for it is time, because men are in feare to trauell for being robbed. If there were a prince plac'd, I should soone get in your debts, for they dare not disobey the Shaughs letters or priuiledge: wherein he hath not onely written that our debts shall be paid, but also that we shall be taken heed to, so as we need not to doubt (God willing) in time to come, to be here as wel vsed as we are in Russeland. The bills of debts that Rich. Iohnson left with me, had neither the parties name nor summe of money in two of them, and in other bills but his owne name. If I had not vsed discretion in causing to be written in our priuiledge, that such debtes as are owing, should be paid any of vs in the absence of the other, some men would not haue paid one penie, but onely to Richard Iohnson, who hath written but his owne name onely in the bills. I receiued in Casbin of Forackan in part of 29. tumens, 300. shaughs in money: the rest he will deliuer me here in silke, and this is all that I haue receiued to this day. And as for Hawrambecks twelve tumens, I make accompt, that if I could ride to speake with him, I should be paid in money and wares. Touching Ackons money, by meanes of Duke Ameddinbeck, who first owed the debt, because they meant not to pay a penie, he did rather seeke to hinder my sute then to further mee, but I found out a present remedie: for God sent me friends that were alwayes about the Shaugh, and daily put on his apparell, who opened all my sute, and brought mee to the presence of the Shaugh before that Cozomomer sawe the Shaughs eyes. But Cozomomer in the end was my friend: for he was sent for, and declared vnto the Shaugh what good merchants we were, vsing trueth in all our doings, and how we were in great fauour with the Emperour of Russia, and what good commodities wee might bring into his Countrey, with other talke. And daily he was sent for to the Shaugh about the affaires in those partes, for no man was able to aduise the Shaugh of the state and affaires of those Countreys so much as hee was. He owed your Wozships tenen tumens and 48. shaughs, which was not all this time to be gotten at his hands: for hee was at great charges in riding to Casbin, and giuing great gifts since his comming, which he twice declared vnto me. I feeling his grieve became Physicion to ease his paine, and forgauē him his debt aboue sayd, in recompence of ten pieces of karkies, that were promised him by Richard Iohnson and me, to giue him at the comming of our goods, in consideration that he should with speed doe what lay in him, to dispatch me away: for I perceiue hee procured other that did helpe me in my sute to delay me of, till time he had his purpose. I neuer was in quiet, till I had the Princes priuiledge, and had got mee out of Casbin: for victuals, and all other things are very deare there, because they are brought thither from farre off. As for all other smal debts (which may be about 7. tumens) when our Merchants are come hither, we shall seeke to get them in as we may. I wish your Wozships to send some bullion to bee coynd here, it will please the prince there, and be profitable to you. Silke is better cheape by two or three shaughs the batman; then it was the last peere. You shall vnderstand that I haue written two letters of all my proceedings, which I sent from Casbin long since: to wit, the 24. and 29. of June last, by one of your seruants to Gilan, there to take ship and to goe to Astracan, and to deliuer the same vnto your Factors, which might haue bene to their quietnes and mine, long agoe. But I am right sorie to heare since my comming hither, that he hath plaid the loitering merchant in Gilan, not going in those boats that went first, but taried for the last boats. But I will teach him, to the example of other, how he shall make haste hereafter in such affaires. The karkies which you sent last, being being bought of M. Quirles, were good and full lengths and well sorted. The Princes Amba- sador of Gilan was in Casbin, at my being there. I hope in God, if I remaine here, and may goe to Gilan, to obtaine for your worships the like priuiledge at the kings hand there also. For I haue somthing mured the matter, being put in such comfort, that I doubt not the getting thereof with small charges, which I had done at this time if I had had other here with me to put in trust: for from Casbin to Gilan is but 5. dayes riding, which Countrey may be profitable to your Worships. There is in that Province good store of silke, better cheape, & better in goodnesse then this countrey silke is. Also great store of Alom, bring there sold this townes batman, for one bitt and a halfe. I haue made reckoning, al charges bozne from hence to Colmogro, & from thence freight into England at three pounds the tunne, al charges accounted, will not stand you in aboue 18. and 20. shillings the hundreth. You haue peerly by report two or three hundred tunnes lading. Other commodities there for England I heare not of. As for gals here to bee bought, there is no profit to be done by them. They be brought from Aleppo, and sold here not vnder 3. or 4. shaughs their batman, being six pounds English waight. Graine that you die scarlet withall is worth the batman ready mony, 200. shaughs, reckoning the shaugh for 6. pence Russe, it may be 6. rubbles their batman. Your worships may lend some portion of mony, if you may buy, as I thinke you may, for 12. and 13. a pound the berries, so you shall gaine both in the price and waight. If one English- man more had bene here with me, to whom I might haue deliuered our bills of debtes and other things, whatsoeuer should haue chanced of me, I would then haue become seruant to mine Interpreter, and so haue gone to Ormus and Aleppo, which both ioyned on the borders of this countrey, being the chiefe Par towne, whereunto from all places merchants resort. And thus would I haue spent 4. or 5. months in traouelling for further knowledge of things for to haue certified your worships of. I hope in God to vse things in such order, that peerly you shall haue returne of your goods from hence, as you haue forth of Russeland, and in those ships. For if we may, as I doubt not with diligence, prouide to make sales in time, and with speed receiue silke at the Shaughs hand, and other mens, that it may be sent from hence to be in Astracan at the beginning of Aprill, from whence it may be sent to Colmogro in three moneths and lesse, and there to be ready with the rest of your goods by the end of June for your ships to receiue, that will be time inough. This I doubt not to bring to passe within a yeere or two, when we are thoroughly seled in these parts, and better known. Moreover you shall vnderstand, that at my last being in the presence of the Shaugh, it was sayd to mee that M. Anthonie Ienkinson did proffer to take all the rawe silke in those parties, deliuering cloth and other commodities for the same. I assure you there is in those parts to be had three or foure thousand hozes lading, euery hozse load being 50. or 60. batmans, beside silke of Grosin. Great abundance of silke at times is sent out of these parts, to wit, 4. or 5.

 hundred hozse ledes at a time by the Turkes, who bring great store of siluer to be coined, to wit, Dollars at ten shaughs the piece. The Hungarie Duck is at 12. shaughs. And hauing money in readines at the time of the yeere, they buy silke the better cheape, when the countrey men bring it first to be sold. If your worships may bargain with the Venecians to take silke at your hands, or otherwise deale with them, I doe not mistrust but to haue at the Shaughs hand six batmans of silke for two pieces and a halfe of karkies. Your good aduise hercin, and in other matters, I trust you will write with convenient speed. Master Anthonie Ienkinson hath deserued great commendation at all your worships hands: for the good report of his well and wise doings in these parts, was oftentimes a comfort to me to heare thereof, and some good helpe to me in my procedings. To this day I neuer heard from any of our merchants. God graunt me in health to see your worships, for I haue had a carefull trauell, with many a sorrowfull day and vniquiet sleepes.
 Neither had I the company of one English person, to whom sometimes I might haue eased my pensine heart, as God well knoweth, who hath deliuered me from mine enemies. Thus almighty God graunt you in health and wealth long to liue.

Your humble seruant at commandement during life, Arthur Edwards.

 priuiledge, but also the Gouernours names, with the Consuls, Assistants and generalitie. Also such commodities as the Prince or Emperour of the Countrey hath written in one of his letters directed to your Worships to be sent him, with other notes which I thought good to be remem-byed, as may appeare hereafter following. Your priuiledge is written, graunted, and giuen in the names of these five persons following: to wit, sir William Garrard, sir William Chester, gouernours, sir Thomas Lodge, master Anthony Ienkinson, master Thomas Nicols and Arthur Edwards.

1 First, it is granted that you shall pay no maner of customes or tols, any kinde of wayes, now, nor in time comming, vnto his heires after him. And that all English merchants, such as you shall appoint now and here after, shall and may passe and repasse into all places of his dominions and other countries adioining in the trade of merchandize, to buy and sell all maner of commodities, with all maner of persons.

2 Item, that in all places where any of our merchants shall haue their resort, or abiding, his chiefe Gouernours, Rulers and Iustices shall take heed vnto vs, being our aide & defence against all euil persons, punishing those that shall do vs any wrong.

3. Item, that for all such debtes as shall be owing by any maner of person, iustice shall be done on the partie, and we paid at the day.

4 Item, that no maner of persons of whatsoeuer estate or degree they be of, shall be so hardie as to take any kind of wares, or any gifts, without any leaue and good will.

5 Item, if by chance medley any of our merchants or seruants, as God forbid, should kill any of his subiects, that no part of your goods shall be touched or medled withall, neither any partie but the offendour, and true iustice to bee ministred, and being any of vs, not to suffer without the Princes knowledge and auise.

6 Item, that all such debtes as are now owing, or here after shall be, are to be paid vnto any of vs, in the absence of the other, be the partie dead or alieue.

7 Item, that no person returne any kind of wares backe againe, being once bought or sold.

8 Item, that when God shall send your goods to those, presently his people shall helpe vs on land with them.

These articles before written, I trust in God wil content your minds, vntill your farther letters be hitherto written vnto the Prince, who I am assured will graunt your farther reasonable requests, which his maiestie hath promised. For I moued the question, declaring vnto him that I thought your Shippes would write your letters of requests, to craue his farther good will, as should be thought meet for your better assurance in the trade of merchandize: you will hardly beleue what long and gracious talke he had with mee, which I assure you continued two houres, which was strange vnto the people & other merchant strangers. For betwixt euery question that his maiestie moued, when I had answered him, hee would talke with his Nobles and other his seruants, hauing some knowledge of our Westerne parts & commodities, and then againe would demaund other questions. He caused his Secretarie to write the articles before named, in all of his foure letters giuen me (whereof two as I required, are in the Turkish tongue to be sent you.) On the backe side of one, hee hath written what wares his Maiestie would haue you to send him. He held me one houre within night before I departed from him.

These be the names of the wares or commodities which on the backe side of one of his letters the Shaugh hath written to you to be sent him.

First, some cloth of Gold, with cloth of Tissue, and cloth of Bocky, as Veluets wrought with gold.

Item, good beluets, to wit, crimosins, purples, reds, greenes and blackes. These colours his maiestie requireth, for they are most woynie. And though there be some of these wares made in his citie of Cassan, yet nothing like in goodnes, to those that you may procure for him. Small profite I thinke will be in these wares: yet for diuers considerations, as also to satisfie the Princes mind, I wish you to send some, and those that be especiall good.

Item, good damasks and sattins of all sortes, with an hundred pieces of good chamlets, which are woorth here 80. shaughs the peece, at five pence the shough, and those likes to bee of those colours aboue written, to wit, crimosins, purples, reds, greenes, blackes, with some light watchet colours.

Item, three or foure complete harnesses that wil abide the shot of a handgun with 10. or 12. targets of Steele, being good.

Item, ten or twelue good shirts of male being very good or else none, that may abide the shot of an arrow, and two buffe iekins.

Item, ten or twelue pieces of Westerne karkies, being thicked well and close shut in the weaving, and dield into scarlets and fine reds. I thinke there wil be no such cloth for noblemens caps.

The

The prince named them *karangies, saying, that matrons did make them, & is delicious of them.
Item, six pieces of fine Holland cloth for the Prince, with some other for noble men, of a lower price.

* By the word karangies, I thinke they meane harties.

Item, twentie handguns being good, some of them with fire locks, and also six good bags, with locks to trauel withall.

Item 100. bysshes for garments (none made of swines haire,) for gifts, and otherwise to be sold.

Item, six stone bowes that shoot lead pellets.

Item, a mill to grind cozne in the field as they goe, finely denised: for Cozomomet willed me to write for one to be sent, to giue the Prince.

Item, the Prince requireth of all sortes and colours of London clothes, I with you to send no lesse then 40. or 50. for I know they will be sold to profite, especially such cloth as may be affoorded for 20. shauzhs the arshine, which is longer by two of nine inches then Russia arshine is. Let there be fine skarlets, violets in graine, fine reds, blacks, bytowne blewes, foure or five of euery sort, for the prince and other lordes: the rest of other colours liuely to the sight, as London rustlets, tawnies, lion colours, good liuely greens, with other, as you shall thinke good: for the prince desireth to see of all sortes, which will be an occasion that the Venetians and Turkes shall bee in lesse estimation then they are: for they themselves do feare, and secretly say the same. And truly the Princes subiects intend to enter into trade with vs for spices and other commodities that they were wont to sell vnto the Venetians and Turkes.

Thus I commit you all to God, who send you health with increase of worship. Written in Astracan the 16. of June, 1567.

Arthur Edwards.

The way and distances from Saint Nicholas, to the Caspian Sea.

If you goe straight from Saint Nicholas to the Caspian Sea, you must goe to Vologhda by water, as by the easiest passage, and that is accomplished, passing day and night, in foureteene dayes and foureteene nightes, in boates cut out of a tree: (the boates are called Stroogs) 1100, versts it is.

By horse and sleds in 8. dayes you may passe it in Winter. In Summer the way is dangerous by meanes of marishes and bogs, and not safely then to be passed. Then from Vologhda to Yeraslaue, 180, versts ouer land. This Yeraslaue standeth vpon the riuer of Volga, 180, versts I say distant from Vologhda.

To the Caspian sea are 2700, versts from Yeraslaue.

So from S. Nicholas to the Caspian sea, are } 3800, 80, versts.

The iourney from S. Nicholas to Yeraslaue is accomplished in foureteene dayes by water, and two dayes by land. } 16, dayes.

From thence to Astracan men trauell by water in 30, dayes and 30, nightes.

So between S. Nicholas and the Caspian sea, are } 46, dayes iourney.

There passe downe Volga euery Summer, 500, boats great & smal, from all the vpper partes of the riuer, whereof some be of 500. tunne. They go for Minerall salt and for Sturgeon.

The salt lieth in rocks (and is whitish red, and in fine sand) as it were 30. miles from Astracan toward the Caspian sea. They dig it themselves and pay nothing for it, but to the prince a pemp a poob, viz. 40. pound waight.

The Sturgeon which they call Ocetera is taken fiftie miles on this side Astracan. Along the riuer the space of 20. miles, they make their booties in plaine grounds, & fish for the space of three monthes, viz. from the end of May till the end of August, and hauing salt they vse to salt them.

The riuer is there 5, or 6. miles broad, but with some Islands.

The riuer below Yeraslaue, where it is most narrow, is a mile broad from side to side.

The riuer runneth vpon red clay, all woods of birch and oke on the riuer sides, saue about the townes of the fishing places.

Dwina from S. Nicholas to Vking runneth all on chaske and sand: the fish are sweete & fat. The Mene a fish with a great head a foot long breedeth about Vologda, and is fat and delicate.

Between Vobsko and Nouogrod, the space of an 180. miles, groweth flaxe: the whole soile in length is so imployed, and as much in breadth: this is vpon a flat soile.

The hempe groweth about Smolensko vpon the Polish border, 300. miles in compasse: much of the soile is so imployed.

Of this hempe they bring in Winter to Vologda and Colmogro, and we set in worke in making of cables about 100, men.

The Russians do spin and hatchell it, and the English carre it in threed and lay the cable. And one cable of those is woorth two of Danzick, because the Danzickers put in old cable and rotten stiffe, which in fowle weather is found of no strength.

Sosnoua, a tree that cureth the wolke with the shavings of the wood, groweth in these parts, and of the barks they make ropes as big as a mans arme for their boats.

The Samoeds lacking linnen make handkerchiefs and towels of the very wood of this tree. The

The wood of this tree is as heauie as hollie, and the shauings tough.

Rose Island in S. Nicholas Baie is full of Roses damaske and red, of violets and wild Rose-marie: This Island is neere 7. or 8. miles about, and good pasture, and hath the name of the roses. The snow here about the midd of May is cleared, hauing bin two moneths in melting, then the ground is made dry within 14. dayes after, and then the grasse is knee high within a moneth. The after September the frost cometh in, the snow is a yard deepe vpon plaine ground. The Island hath Firre and Birch, and a faire fresh spring neere the house built there by the English.

The description of Rose Island.

The way discovered by water by vs Thomas Southam & Iohn Sparke, from the towne of Colmogro, by the Westerne bottome of the Baie of S. Nicholas, vnto the citie of Nouogrod in Russia, containing many particulars of the way, and distance of miles, as hereafter foloweth. Anno 1566.

Departed from Colmogro about 10. of the clocke aforenoone in a Lodioz Barke, which we hired to bring vs along the coast to a place called Soroka, & in the said barke we hired 6. mariners, and a boy to conduct vs to the place before heard.

The Lodioz barke was of the burden of 25. tunnes or thereabout, where-with we hailed downe the river of Dwina, the winde being then calme, vnto a monasterie called S. Michael where we were constrained to anker because of a contrary wind which there met vs.

From Colmogro to this monasterie are 50. versts or miles of Russia, at which place we tarried till the 21. day in the morning, and then hauing the wind somewhat faire, we set saile and departed thence.

A verst is but 3. quarters of an english mile.

21 We departed from the monasterie of S. Michael, hauing the wind somewhat faire, and arrived at Rose Island, ouer and against the monasterie of S. Nicholas, the 22. day at 2. of the clocke in the morning, which is 35. miles distant from the monasterie of S. Michael. By reason of contrary wind and tide we were constrained to tary there all that day.

23 We departed from the monasterie of S. Nicholas at 7. of the clocke in the evening, & came to an anker at the Bearons, & continued there vntill halfe an houre past 10. of the clocke, and then set from thence, the wind being South: our course was West vntill 5. of the clock in the morning, when as we came to an anker against Newnox towne, where we continued vntill the 25. day.

The said towne of Newnox is from the monasterie of S. Nicholas 35. miles.

25 We departed fro Newnox hauen at one of the clocke in the after noone, the wind at South and Southeast, and our course North-west and by West.

The point of Tolstick which is the headland before the entrance of Newnox hauen, and the headland of Seusemski lie next Southeast and by South, North-west and by North. We came to an anker therethis day at 4. of the clock in y afternoone, being from Newnox hauen 15. miles, where we continued in harbour til the 27. day of the moneth, by reason of contrary winds.

27 We departed from Seusemski in the morning at 5. of the clocke, the wind next at East and by North, and our course North-west and by West.

The said land of Seusemski & the headland going into Owna river lieth East and by South, west and by North, and between them is 25. miles.

This day at Sunne set we came to an Island called Sogisney passing betwixt it & the maine, with the wind at South and by East, our course was West and by South, being 85. miles from Owna river.

Being past the said Island 10. miles, the wind came contrary, whereupon we returned to the Island of Sogisney, where we remained vntill the 29. day.

29 The 29. day we departed from Sogisney aforelaid, at 5. of the clocke in the afternoone, the wind at East north-east, & our course was South-west & by west, passing by an Island called Anger, being 30. miles from Sogisney, and keeping on our course, we came by the headland of an Island called Abdon, being from the Island of Anger 15. miles, where we found many rocks: and if the great prouidence of God had not preserved vs, wee had there perished, being fallen amongst them in the night time, and our pilot none of the perfected, which was contrary to his profession as we found it.

But whosoener will trauell that way must either keepe hard aboord the shore, for that there is a chanell which goeth along the coast within the rocks, or els giue the headland a birth of 6. miles at the least, and to goe a leaboard all: for there are ledges of rocks that lie fise miles from the headland.

We gaue the headland a birth of 3. miles, notwithstanding there lay two rockes two miles to le a boord of vs, so that we were inclosed with them, and late vpon the highest of them: but it pleased God to make it calme, and giue vs the day also, or els we had miscaried.

30 We departed from the headland of the Island of Abdon, at 4. of the clocke in the morning, directing our course West, and at 10. of the clocke before noone, we arrived at a monasterie named Solofky, which is 15. miles from Abdon.

At this monasterie we continued untill the 31. day of this moneth. We had here deliuered vs by the chiefe monkes of the monasterie, their letter and house seale, and a seruant of theirs to conduct vs safely through the dangerous riuer of Owiga.

The people of all those parts are wild, and speake another kind of language, & are for the most part all tenants to the monasterie. The effect of the letter was, that they should be ready to helpe and assist vs in all dangerous places, and carie our boats and goods ouer land in places needfull, as in deed they did, as hereafter shall appeare.

Note, that at our being at the monasterie, there was no Abbot for the place as then chosen: for 15. dayes before our arrival there, the Abbot was sent for by the Emperour, and made Metropolitane of the realme, as he now is. The number of monkes belonging to the monasterie are at the least 200.

31 We departed from the monasterie of Solofky, as is aforesayde, to a faire stone house of theirs, which is 5. miles from the monasterie, lying from it South and by West.

1 We departed from the Stone house at 3. of the clocke in the morning: our course was West for 60. versts, and then passing betwixt diuers and sundry rocks, with many small Islands round about vs for the space of 20. miles, keeping most commonly the same course still, we then shaped a new course, and yet sundry times shifting, but we alwayes kept the South west, and nearest of all South south west, vntil we came within two miles of the entrance of the riuer Owiga, where we were to beare in, West and by North.

From the riuer Owiga, to the Islands and rocks before mentioned, are 20. miles.

We arrived about 4. of the clocke in the after noone within the riuer of Owiga, at a place named Soroka, at which place we forooke our barke or Lodja, & continued there in making provision for small boates to carie vs by the riuer vntill the 3. day of the same.

3 We departed from Soroka at two of the clocke in the afternoone, with 3. boates and 12. men to rowe, and set the foresaid boates by the riuer of Owiga, which we hired.

We went this day 7. miles to a place called Ostroue, where we lay all night, but in the way 4. miles from Soroka, at a place where the water falleth from the rocks, as if it came steepe downe from a mountain, we were constrained to take out our goods and wares out of the said boates, and caused them to be caried a mile ouer land, and afterwards also had our boates in like sort caried or drawen ouer land by force of men which there dwelled, being tenants to the monasterie aforesaid.

And when our boats were come to the place where our wares were laid, we lanchd our boats and laded our wares againe, and went to the place before named, where we continued and remained that night.

We departed from Ostroue in the morning before Sunne rising, rowing and setting by the riuer 5. miles, where we came to a place whereas we were againe constrained to take out our wares, and to carie them and our boats three miles ouer land, so that with rowing, drawing and setting, we went this day 7. miles more to a place called Sloboday, where we lay all night.

5 We departed from Sloboday in the morning at Sunne rising, and at sixe of the clocke in the afternoone, we came to a village called Paranda, which is from Sloboday 30. miles, where we remained all that night.

6 We departed from Paranda at 6. of the clocke in the morning, and all that day what with setting and drawing our boats, we went but 11. miles, for we twise unladed our wares, & drew our boats ouerland, in one place a mile & an halfe, in another place as it were the eight part of a mile, and so we came to a place called Voyets, where we caried all that night.

7 We departed from Voyets at 4. of the clocke in the morning, & so came to an Ozero or lake, called after the name of the riuer, & vnto a place called Quequenich, we rowed all this day, and came thither by one of the clock in the afternoone, which is 25. miles from Voyets, and there we remained all night to hire men and boats to carie vs forward on our iourney.

Here departed backe from vs the seruant which we had at the Monasterie, being sent by the monkes to go thus far with vs. And after that he had hired the boats and taken the mens names that should conduct vs, & giuen them charge to deliuer vs with all things in safetie, at a place being a little towne called Pouensa, then hee departed from vs without taking any reward for his paines, for so he was charged and commanded by the monkes.

8 We departed from Quequenich at sunne rising, & all that day rowed vpon the lake amongst many many Islands. The inhabitants doe there report that there are as many Islands in their lake, as there are dayes in the yeere. In the evening we came to a village named Tellekina, which is 60. miles from Quequenich.

The lake very full of Islands.

9 We departed from Tellekina in the morning at 5. of the clocke, and so entering into a river, we went that day 13. miles. In one place we caried our boates and goods ouer land 3. miles. At evening we came to a place called Oreiche na maelay, where we lay all night.

10 We departed thence at 5. of the clocke in the morning, and so rowing, came to a place where the river ended, being 20. miles distant from the place where wee lay all night, at which place wee forsooke our boates and unladed our wares, and sent a man to the towne of Pouensa, which was seuen mile off, for horses to cary vs and our wares to the said place. The horses came, and we laded our goods, and at sixe of the clocke in the afternoone wee arrived at the towne of Pouensa, with all things in safetie.

This towne of Pouensa standeth within one mile of the famous lake of Oзера of Onega, which is 320. miles long, and in some places 70. miles ouer. But where it is narrowest it is 25. miles ouer, being fed with many goodly rivers which fall into it. Hard aboard the shoze within 6. miles, you shall haue 40. and 45. fathoms of depth.

The famous lake of Onega.

Here it is to bee noted that from this place of Pouensa unto the village of Soroka downe those dangerous rivers which wee came through, at no time of the yeere can or may any man cary or transport any goods that come from Nouogrod, or the Narue, and such other places: for in the Sommer it is impossible to cary downe any wares by reason of the great fells of water that doe descend from the rocks. Likewise in the Winter by reason of the great force and fall of waters which make so terrible railes, that in those places it neuer freezeth, but all such wares as come from Nouogrod to Pouensa, are transported by land to a place called Some in the Winter, which Some standeth on the sea side, as doth Soroka. The ready way from Pouensa by land to this place of Some, with the distance of miles I will shew here after.

12 We departed from Pouensa at 9. of the clocke in the morning, with 2. small boats which we hired to cary vs to a place called Toluo upon the lake of Onega, being 50. miles from Pouensa, where we arrived the 13. day in the morning, where wee bought a boate that caried vs and all our wares from thence to the Citie of Nouogrod.

14 We departed from Toluo at 3. of the clocke in the afternoone, and at the evening arrived at a certaine Island named Salasalma, upon the said lake 7. miles from Toluo, and by reason of contrary winds we there taried untill the 16. day of this moneth.

16 We departed from Salasalma, at 8. of the clocke in the morning, and came to an Island the 17. day in the morning, named Vorrionia, where wee continued by reason of contrary winds, untill the 21. day of the said moneth, and it is 60. miles from Salasalma.

21 We departed from Vorrionia Island two houres before day, and arrived at S. Clements Monasterie at 2. of the clocke in the after noone, being from Vorrionia 48. miles.

S. Clement his Monasterie.

22 We departed from S. Clements Monasterie at the break of the day, hauing a faire wind all along the lake: we sailed without striking of saile untill two houres within night, and then entered into a river called Swire, at a Monasterie called Vosnessino Christo, five miles from the entrance of the river, where we taried all night. It is from S. Clements Monasterie 160. miles: the stream of that river went with vs.

23 We departed from Vosnessino Christo before Sunne rising, and valed downe the river sometime sailing, and sometime rowing, so that this day wee went 90. miles and lay at night at a place called Vassian.

24 We departed from Vassian at the break of the day, and came to a place called Selucax, where we lay all night, and is 10. miles from Vassian.

S. Sermaz.

25 We departed from Selucax at 4. of the clocke in the morning, and entered upon the Lake of Ladiskaie, the wind being calme all that day sailing 3. houres, and then it was with vs, so that we sailed and rowed that day 10. miles, along upon the said lake, and entered into the river of Volhuski, which river hath his beginning 20. miles above Nouogrod, and runneth through the midst of the Citie, and so falleth into this lake, which is farre longer then the lake of Onega, but it is not so broad. This lake falleth into the sea that commeth from the Sound: where any vessel or boat, hauing a good pilot, may goe through the Sound into England.

The river of Volhuski. The lake of Ladiskaie.

As soone as we were entered into the river, we came to a Monasterie called S. Nicholas Medued, where we lay all that night.

26 We departed from S. Nicholas Medued, at five of the clocke in the morning, rowing and drawing our boates all day, and came at night to another Monasterie called Gosnopoly, which is 30. miles from S. Nicholas Medued, where we lay all that night.

The Monasterie of Gosnopoly.

27 We departed from Gofnopoli at 6. of the clocke in the morning, and at evening came to a place called Moislau, where we lay all night, being 46. miles from the Monasterie of Gofnopoli.

28 We departed from Moislau, and the saide day at night came to a place called Gruffina, 35. miles from Moislau where we lodged.

29 We departed from Gruffina in the morning, and the same day at evening came to a place called Petroe Suetoe, where we lay all night, being 40. miles from Gruffina.

The Citie of Nouogrod.

30 We departed from Petroe Suetoe in the morning, and at two of the clock in the afternoone we arrived at the Citie of Nouogrod, being twentie miles from Petroe Suetoe. Here we found William Rowlie Agent to the company, who was there stayed with all his company, and was not licenced to depart thence for the Mosco, by reason that the plague was then in the Citie of Nouogrod. Unto him we deliuered all the wares that wee brought from Colmogro, for by the way we sold not a peny worth, the people of the countrey euery where be so miserable.

The right way to bring and transport wares from Nouogrod to Rose Island into S. Nicholas bay, where our Ships yeerely lade, with the distance of miles from place to place, is as followeth:

20 Miles from Nouogrod to Petroe Suetoe.

40 Miles from thence to Gruffina.

35 Miles from thence to Moislau.

46 Miles from thence to the Monasterie Gofnopoli.

15 Miles from thence to Ladega towne.

15 Miles from thence to Selunaz ouer the lake of Ladega, albeit there be many villages all along the lake.

180 Miles from Ladega towne by the riuer of Swire, vnto the Monasterie of Vosnessino Christo, albeit there are many villages vpon the riuer: for within euery five or six miles you shall haue villages or small townes.

160 Miles from Vosnessino Christo to S. Clements Monastery, albeit there be many villages all along the lake of Onega.

48 Miles from thence to Voronia.

67 Miles from thence to Toluo towne: and there are diuers villages al along the lake where the carriers may lie, and haue meate for man and horse.

50 Miles from thence to Pouensa, where Onega lake endeth.

The way from Pouensa to Some towne is this:

30 Miles from Pouensa to Mastelina.

10 Miles from thence to Tellekina.

30 Miles from thence to Toluich.

35 Miles from thence to Carraich.

20 Miles from thence to Varnich.

10 Miles from thence to Ostrouo.

15 Miles from thence to Lapina.

20 Miles from thence to Some it selfe.

Note, that from the Citie of Nouogrod vnto the towne of Some is 936. miles, and from the towne of Some vnto the Monasterie of S. Nicholas or Rose Island, ouer and against where our Ships do ride, is iust as many miles as is Soroka village from S. Nicholas, as the Russes doe account it, as also we do iudge it, namely 325. miles. So that from Nouogrod to S. Nicholas road, is by our account 1261. miles or versts.

Travel by Sleds.

Furthermoze it is to be noted that all such wares as shall be bought at Nouogrod, and sent to Some towne, must be sent by sled wey in the Winter: for if any ware should be sent from Nouogrod by water in the spring of the yeere after the yce is gone, then must the said wares remaine at Pouensa towne al that Summer, by reason that in the Summer there is no way to goe from Pouensa vnto Some towne.

At Pouensa there are many warehouses to be hired, so that if there were as much goods as ten ships could carry away, you might haue warehouses to put it in: but if there should remaine much ware all the Summer, to be carried in the Winter to Some towne, then horses are not easily to be gotten at that place to carry it thither: so that your wares once bought at Nouogrod, you must haue carriers there to carry it to the towne of Some by Sleds, whereof you may there haue 2000. if you will, by the report of the Russes.

2000. Sleds
belonging to one towne.

For from Nouogrod yerely there go many Sleds in the Winter to fetch salt from Some, with carriers and empty Sleds there to buy it, and to bring it to Nouogrod to sell it in the market or otherwise.

From Nouogrod vnto Some towne you may haue a pood of wares carried for eight pence or nine pence: but in any wise your wares must be sent from Nouogrod by the first of January, so that that the wares may bee at Some by Candlemas, or ſoone after : for if your wares ſhould tary by the way vntill the 15. of february when the Sunne is of ſome power, then is it dangerous : for the heate of the Summe in the day cauſeth the deepe lakes of Ladega, and ſpecially of Onega to cleaue: and if there ſhould come then a ſudden thaw, as oftentimes in that time of the yeere doeth, then doe theſe lakes open and breake, whereby many men are loſt, and both men and horſe drowned, although other riuers do remaine frozen a long time after.

So good cauſes
for ſeaſonable travell.

In the towne of Some alſo there are many warehouſes, whereof we cannot be deſtitute for the reſpoſing of our wares, as alſo as many barkes as you wil to tranſport your wares from thence to S. Nicholas road, and that for thre pence a poods carpage : ſo that from the Citie of Nouogrod vnto S. Nicholas road you may haue wares caried for two altines. The pood commeth vnto 23. altines the tunne.

Provided alwayes, that you buy your wares there your ſelfe, and ſend it thence: for there is no hope that the natives will buy their wares from Nouogrod to Some, in hope to ſell vnto vs, conſidering the great trade that they haue at the Narue, which is within 180. miles off them.

An Act for the corporation of Merchants aduenturers for the diſcouering of new trades, made in the eight yeere of Queene Elizabeth.

Anno 1566.

Whereas diuers very good Subiects of this Realme of England in the latter ende of the reigne of the late right high and mightie prince our Soueraigne Lord king Edward the ſixt, at the gracious incouragement, and right good liking of the ſaid king, and by his Maieſties liberall example, did at their aduenture, and to their exceeding great charges, for the glory of God, the honoz and increaſe of the reuenues of the Crowne, and the common vtilitie of the whole Realme of England, ſet forth thre ſhips for the diſcouery by Sea, of

Iſles, lands, territories, dominions, and Seigniories vnknownen, and by the Subiects of the ſaid late king not commonly by ſeas frequented : and after that Almighty God had called to his mercie the ſaid king, who died beſore the finiſhing and ſealing of his moſt ample and gracious letters of priuiledges promiſed to the ſaid Subiects, as wel in conſideration of the ſaid enterpriſe, as for diuers other reſpects it pleaſed our late ſouereigne Q. Mary, at the humble ſuites of the ſame Subiects, to graunt by her letters Patents vnder the great Seale of England, bearing date at Weſtmiſter the 26. day of february, in the ſecond yeere of her raigne, for the conſiderations mentioned in the ſaid letters Patents, to the ſaide Subiects being ſpecially named in the ſaide letters Patents, and to their ſucceſſors, that they by the name of Merchants aduenturers of England, for the diſcouerie of lands, territories, Iſles, dominions, and Seigniories vnknownen, and not beſore their late aduenture or enterpriſe, by ſeas or Nauigations comonly frequented, ſhould be from thenceforth one body, and perpetual felowſhip and communaltie of themſelues, both in deed and in name, and that the ſame felowſhip and communaltie from thenceforth ſhould and might haue one or two gouernours, foure Conſuls, and 24. aſſiſtants, of the ſaid felowſhip and communaltie of Merchants aduenturers, and that they by the name of the Gouernour, Conſuls, aſſiſtants, felowſhip, and communaltie of Merchants aduenturers, for the diſcouery of lands, territories, Iſles, dominions, and Seigniories vnknownen, by the ſeas and Nauigations, and not beſore their ſaid late aduenture or enterpriſe, by ſeas frequented, ſhould or might be able in the lawe to implead and to bee impleaded, to anſwere and to be anſwered, to defend and to be defended, beſore whatſoeuer Iudge or Juſtice tempoꝛall or ſpiritual, or other perſons whatſoeuer, in whatſoeuer court or courts, and in all actions, real, perſonal, and mixt, and in euery of them, and in all plaints of Nouel deſeiſon, and alſo in all plaints, ſutes, quarrels, affaires, buſineſſe, and demaunds whatſoeuer they be, touching and concerning the ſaid felowſhip and communaltie, and the affaires and buſineſſe of the ſame, only in as ample maner and forme, as any other corporation of this Realme might doe, giuing alſo, and granting vnto them by the ſaid letters Patents, diuers authorites, powers, iuriſdictions, prebeminences, franchiſes, liberties and priuiledges, as by the ſame letters Patents moze at large will appeare. And among other things mentioned in the ſaid letters Patents, whereas one of the thre ſhips, by the ſaid felowſhip beſore that time ſet forth for the voyage of diſcouery aforeſaid, named the Edward Bonauenture, had arriued within the Empire and dominion of the high and mightie Prince Lord Iohn Vaſiliwich, Emperour of all Ruſſia, Volodimersky, great duke of Muſky, &c. who receiued the Captaine and Merchants of the ſaide ſhippe very graciouſly, granting vnto them them freely to traffique with his subiects in all kinde of merchandizes, with diuers other gracious priuiledges and liberties: therefore the said late Queene by the same letters Patents, for her heires and successors, did graunt that all the maine lands, Isles, ports, hauens, creeks and riuers of the said mighty Emperour of all Russia, and great duke of Moisco, &c. and all and singular other lands, dominions, territories, Isles, ports, hauens, creeks, riuers, armes of the seas, of al and euery other Emperour, king, prince, ruler, or gouerner whatsoeuer he or they be, before the said late aduenture or enterprize not knownen, or by the aforesaid merchants and subiects of the said king and Queene, by the seas not commonly frequented, nor any part or parcell thereof, and lying Northwards, North-eastwards, or North-westwards, as in the said letters patents is mentioned, should not be visited, frequented nor haunted by any the subiects of the said late Queene, other then of the said company and fellowship, and their successors, without expresse licence, agreement, & consent of the Gouerner, Consuls, and Assistants of the said fellowship, and communaltie, or the more part of them, in maner & forme, as is expresse in the saide letters patents, vpon paine of forfeiture and losse aswell of the ship and ships, with the appurtenances, as also of the goods, merchandizes, and things whatsoeuer they be, of those the subiects of the said late Queene not being of the saide fellowship and communaltie, which should attempt or presume to saile to any of those places, which then were, or after should happen to be found and traffiqued vnto, the one halfe of the same forfeiture to be to the vse of the said late Queene, her heires & successors, and the other halfe to be to the vse of the said fellowship & communaltie, as by the same letters patents more plainly will appeare.

Since the making of which letters patents, the said fellowship haue, to their exceeding great costes, losses and expences, not onely by their trading into the said dominions of the saide mighty prince of Russia, &c. found out conuenient way to saile into the saide dominions: but also passing thow the same, and ouer the Caspian sea, haue discovered very commodious trades into Armenia, Media, Hyrcania, Persia, and other dominions in Asia minor, hoping by Gods grace to discover also the countrey of Cathaia, and other regions very conuenient to be traded into by merchants of this realme, for the great benefite and commodities of the same.

And forasmuch as diuers subiects of this realme, vnderstanding the premises, and perceiuing that now after the charge and trauel aforesaid, diuers wares and merchandizes are brought by the saide fellowship into this Realme, out of the dominions already discovered, which bee within this realme of good estimation, minding for their peculiar gaine, utterly to decap the trade of the saide fellowship, haue contrary to the tenor of the same letters patents, in great disorder traded into the dominions of the said mighty prince of Russia, &c. to the great detriment of this common wealth: And for that the name by which the saide fellowship is incorporated by the letters patents aforesaid, is long, & consisteth of very many words: Therefore be it enacted by the Queenes most excellent Maiestie, the Lords Spiritual and temporall, & the commons in this present parliament assembled, and by authoritie of the same, that the said fellowship, company, societie & corporation made or created by the said letters patents, shal at al time & times from henceforth be incorporated, named and called onely by the name of the fellowship of English merchants, for discovery of new trades, and by the same name for euer shall and may continue a perpetuall body incorporate in deede and name, and onely by the same name from henceforth, shall implead, and be impleaded, answer and be answered, defend and be defended, sue and bee sued, in whatsoeuer courts and places, and shall and may by the same name bee enabled to purchase, haue, holde, possesse, receiue, and enioy whatsoeuer manors, landes, tenements, rents, reuerfions, seruices, & hereditaments not exceeding a hundred marks yeerely, not being holden of the Queenes maiestie, her heires, or successors by knights seruice in Capite, and all goods, merchandizes, chattels, and other things whatsoeuer, and shall and may by the same name make and do all things as any other corporation may do, and also shall haue and enioy all and singular the liberties, priuiledges, iurisdiccions, franchises, preeminences, powers, authorites, and things, and may doe and execute all other matters and things in the saide letters patents mentioned, or in any wise contained. And that no part nor parcell of the maine lands, Isles, ports, hauens, roades, creeks, riuers, armes of the seas of any Emperour, king, prince, ruler or gouernor whatsoeuer he or they be, before the said first enterprize made by the merchants of the saide corporation, not knownen by the merchants and subiects of this Realme, or by them not commonly by seas frequented, and lying from the City of London Northwards, North-westwards, or North-eastwards, nor any part or parcell of the maine lands, dominions, Isles, ports, roades, hauens, creeks, armes of the Seas, that now be subiect to the said high and mighty prince Lord Iohn Vasiluich, his heires or successors, or to the Emperour, chiefe gouernour or ruler of the said countrey of Russia for the time being, his heires or successors, nor the countreies of Armenia maior or minor, Media, Hyrcania, Persia, or the Caspian sea, nor any part of them shall be sailed or traffiqued vnto, visited, frequented, or haunted by any person being or that shalbe a subiect or denizen

nizen of this realme, by themselves, their factor or factors, or any other to their vse or commoditie, by any wayes or meanes, directly or indirectly, other then by the order, agreement, consent, or ratification of the gouernour, Consuls and assistants of the saide fellowship and communitie, or the moze part of them, and their successors for the time being: vpon paine that euery person and persons offending in this behalfe, shall forfeit and loose, Ipso facto, euery such ship and ships, with the appurtenances, and all such goods, Merchandizes, and things whatsoeuer, as by any such person or persons shalbe by any wayes or meanes, directly or indirectly, prouided, caried, conducted, brought or exchanged, in, at, to, throught or from any of the places prohibited, as is aforesaide, contrary to the true intent of this statute: the one moitie of all which forfeitures to bee to our said Soueraigne Lady the Queenes Maiestie, her heires and successors, and the other moitie thereof to the sayde fellowship of English Merchants for discouery of newe trades, and their successors, to be seized and taken wheresoeuer they may be found, by any person or persons, to the vse of our said Soueraigne Lady, her heires and successors, and of the said fellowship of English merchants for discouery of newe trades, and of their successors, or the same or the value thereof to bee demanded or sued for by the Queenes highnesse, her heires and successors, or by the saide fellowship of English Merchants for discouery of newe trades, or their successors, or their attorney or attorneis, or by any person or persons being of the same fellowship of English Merchants for discouery of newe trades, or their successors in any court of Record, or in any other Court or courtes within this Realme, or els where, by Action of debt, action of detinue, bill, plaint, information, or otherwise: in which suite no essoine, protection, wager of lawe, or innuention shall be allowed, for, or on the behalfe of the partie or parties defendant.

¶ Prouided alwayes, that whereas diuers Subiects of this Realme being not of the fellowship aforesaid, haue heretofore made aduentures to and from some of the places prohibited by the said letters patents, that the said subiects, their heires, executors, administrators and assignes, or any of them shall not be impeached, impleaded, troubled, sued, nor molested for the same in their goods or persons in any manner of wise, either by our saide Soueraigne Lady, her heires or successors, or the said fellowship, or their successors.

¶ Prouided also, that it shall be lawfull for any subiect of this Realme, hauing presently any shipping, goods, wares, or ready money, remaining at or in any place, of or within the dominion of the said mighty prince of Russia, or in any other of the places prohibited to be visited or traffiqued vnto by this statute or the said letters Patents, to fetch, bring, and conuey the same, or cause the same to be brought or conueyed from thence by sea or otherwise, before the feast of S. Iohn Baptist, which shalbe in the yeere of our Lord God 1568, any thing conteined in this statute, or in the said letters Patents to the contrary notwithstanding.

¶ Prouided also, that it shall be lawfull for any of the subiects of this Realme, to saile to the port, towne, territozie, or castle of Wardhouse, or to any of the coastes, townes, hauens, creekes, riuers, Islands, and land of Norway for trade of fishing, or any other trade there vled by the subiects of this Realme, any thing in this statute to the contrary notwithstanding.

And for the better maintenance of the Haue and Hariners of this Realme, be it prouided and enacted, that it shall not be lawfull to the saide fellowship and company, nor to any of them to carpy and transport, or cause to be caried and transported any commodie of this Realme to their newe trade, but onely in English ships, and to be sailed for the most part with English Hariners, nor also to bring into this Realme nor into Flanders from their saide newe trade, any merchandizes, or other commodities but in English ships, and sailed for the most part by the English Hariners, on paine to forfeit for euery such offence two hundred pounds, whereof the one moitie shall be to the Queenes Maiestie, her heires and successors, the other moitie to the head officers of any port towne, hauing any hauen or harborough decayed, by what name soeuer they bee incorporate, to the reparation of such harborough, that will sue for the same in any Court of Record, by action, bill, plaint or information, wherein no essoine, protection, or wager of lawe for the defendant shall be admitted or allowed.

¶ Prouided also, and be it enacted, that no manner of person or persons shall from hence forth carrie or transport, or cause to be caried or transported out of this Realme of England, any manner of clothes or karkies into any of the partes where the said fellowship and societie is prouided to trade by this Act, before the same clothes and karkies shall be all dyessed, and for the most part died within this Realme, vpon paine of forfeiture for euery such cloth and karkie, otherwise caried and transported, five pounds: the one halfe thereof to the Queenes Maiestie, her heires and successors, the other halfe to the Master and Wardens of the Clothworkers in the Citie of London for the time being, by what name soeuer they be incorporate that wil sue for the same.

¶ Prouided also that whensoeuer the said societie or company shall willingly withstand, and discontinue continue wholly by the space of three yeeres in time of peace, the discharging of their merchandizes at the roade of S. Nicholas bay in Russia, and doe not discharge their said merchandizes at some other port or roade lying on that North coast of Russia, or other terricorie nowe subject to the saide mightie prince of Russia, &c. hitherto by the subjects of this realme not commonly frequented, that then during the time of any such discontinuance and withdrawing, as is aforesaid, it shalbe lawfull to all the subjects of this realme to trade to the Narue onely in English bottoms, any thing in this Act to the contrary notwithstanding.

Provided also, that every of the Queenes Maiesties Subjects inhabiting within the Citie of Yorke, the townes of Newcastle vpon Tyne, Hull and of Boston, hauing continually traded the course of merchandize by the space of ten yeeres, and which before the 25. of December that shalbe in Anno D. 1567. shal contribute, ioyne, and put in stocke, to, with, and amongst the said company, such summe & summes of money, as any of the said company, which hath thoroughly continued and contributed to the saide newe trade, from the yeere 1552. hath done, and before the saide 25. of December 1567. shall do for the furniture of one ordinary, full and iustre portion, or share, and do in all things behaue himselfe as others of the said societie be bound to doe, and hereafter shall bee bound to do by the priuiledges, ordinances and statutes of the saide company, shall from the same 25. day of December 1567. be, and be accompted free, and as one of the said societie and company, and subject to the priuiledges, ordinances and statutes of the saide company, reasonably made and to be made, any thing in this present Act to the contrary notwithstanding.

A very brieue remembrance of a voyage made by M. Anthony Ienkinson, from London to Moscouia, sent from the Queenes Maiestie to the Emperour, in the yeere 1566.

The fourth day of May in the yere aforesaid, I embarked my selfe at Grauesend in the good ship called the Harry of London, and hauing had a prosperous voyage arrived at the bay of S. Nicholas in Russia the 10. day of Iuly following, and immediately I sent in post to the Emperour to aduertise of my coming, and traueiling then thowoe the countrey, I with my company came to the Mosco where the Emperour kept his court, the 23. of August, and forthwith gaue the Secretarie to vnderstand of my arrivall, who aduertised the Emperours Maiestie of it, and the first day of September, being a solemne feast among the Russes, I came before the Emperours Maiestie, sitting in his seate of honour, and hauing kissed his hand, and done the Queenes Maiesties commendations, and deliuered her Graces letters and present, he bad me to dinner, which I accepted, and had much honour done vnto me both then and all the time of my abode in Russia.

The Priuiledges graunted by the Emperour of Russia to the English merchants of that company: obtained the 22. of September, Anno 1567. by M. Anthony Ienkinson.

One onely strengthener of all things, and God without beginning, which was before the world, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost, our onely God in Trinitie, and maker of all things, whom we worship in all things, and in all places, the doer and fulfiller of all things, which is the perfect knowledge giuer of the true God, our Lorde Iesus Christ, with the comforter the holy Spirit, and thou which art the strengthener of our faith, keepe vs together, & giue vs health to preserve our kingdome, thou giuer of all good fruites, and helper of all Christian beleeuers.

We great lord by the grace of God, and great duke Iohn Vasiluich of all Russia, Volodimer, Mosco, Nouogrod, Cazan, Astracan, Plesco, Smolensko, Tweria, Youngoric, Vadika, Bulgar, Sybier and others, Emperour and great duke of Nouogrod of the lower land, of Chernygo, Rezan, Polotski, Rostoue, Yereslaue, Bealozer, Oudoria, Obdoria, Condensa, and lord of many other lands, and of all the North parts, commander and lord of Liffe-land.

Whereas our sister Queene Elizabeth, by the grace of God, Queene of England, France and Ireland, hath written to vs her letters, that wee would graunt her merchants, William Gerrard, William Chester, Rowland Heyward, Lawrence Hulsie, Iohn Marth, Anthony Ienkinson, William Rowly, and their company of England, to come in ships into this kingdome, and these merchants, William Gerrard and his company haue required of vs that we would graunt and licence them to come into our countrey of Dwina, with all kind of wares at wil, to our city of Mosco, and to all our castles in our kingdomes, we for our sisters sake Elizabeth, by the grace of God, Queene of England, France and Ireland, haue licenced her merchants, William Gerrard and his his company to passe in ships to our kingdome of Colmogro, and to the land of Dwina, and to all other our inheritances in the North parts, with all kinde of wares to our city of Mosco, and to all castles and townes in our kingdome. And sir William Garrard & his company desired of us, that we would grant them licence to passe to our inheritance of Cazan and Astracan, and into our inheritance of Nouogrod the great, and to our inheritance of Lissland to Narue and Dorpe, and to other our castles and townes of Lissland, with all kinde of wares, and the trade to be without custome, whitch request we haue granted to sir William Garrard and his company, and haue giuen them licence to passe to our inheritance of Cazan and Astracan, and Nouogrod the great, and into our inheritance of Lissland, Narue and Dorpe, and other places of our inheritance in Lissland with all kinde of wares, to buy, barter and sell at will, without custome: and what wares sceter they bring out of England, or out of any other countrey, needfull or necessary, that they shall bring all those wares needfull or necessary to our treasury, & those wares there to be opened, and then to take out of the same, such wares as shalbe needfull for our treasury, and the rest being deliuered againe, to sell and barter at their pleasure, and to sell none of the fine wares before they be seene by our chancellers, except soytting clothes, and other wares not meet for our treasury: and when our chancellor will send our treasure out of our treasury with them, they shall take it with them, and so sell and barter it for wares meet for our treasury, and bring it to our treasury, and they to take no other mens wares to barter or sell with them, nor yet our people to buy or sell for them their wares: and if those English merchants do desire to passe out of our kingdome of Astracan to Boghar, Shamaky, Chaday, or into any other countreys, or els to go into their owne countrey, then they to take their treasure with them, and to barter and sell it for wares necessary for our treasury, and to bring it and deliuer it to our chancellor, and when they come backe againe to our inheritance of Cazan and Astracan, or to any other of our castles and townes, that then our captain of Cazan and Astracan, and all other our people of charge shall not holde them, but with speed let them passe without taking custome of them or their wares, and without opening or looking vpon them in any wise: and when they haue not our treasure with them, that then likewise no custome shalbe taken of them nor their wares to be seene of any man.

And likewise we haue granted them to buy and sell in all our kingdomes and castles, with all kinde of wares: and we haue also licenced them, that when those English merchants do desire to buy & sell with our merchants wholly together, that they shall haue liberty so to do wholly together: and they that do desire to sell their owne wares by retaile in their owne house, that then they sell it in their owne house by retaile to our people & other strangers, as they can agree: and weigths and arshinds to be kept in their house with our seale, and they themselves to barter and sell their owne wares: and no Russe merchant in Mosco, or any other place in our kingdome to sell for them any wares, nor to buy or barter any wares for them, nor couler any strangers goods. And whereas those merchants of England, sir William Garrard and his company do desire to sell their wares at Colmogro, Dwina, Vologda, Yeraslane, Costrum, and in Nouogrod the lower, Cazan, Astracan, great Nouogrod, Plesko, Narue, Dorpe, and in other our townes & castles, they shall haue their will to sell it: and of their wares of England and Russeland no custome shalbe taken, neither they nor their wares shalbe stayed in any place: and when they depart out of Mosco, to aduertise our chancelor thereof, and not to giue any note or inuention of any kinde of their wares they carry away: and when the English merchants, sir William Garrard and his company do come vpon the sea, and by misfortune haue their ships cast away vpon those coasts of the North parts, then we will their goods to be sought out with trueth, and to be deliuered to sir William Garrard and his company, which as then shall be found in our countrey: and if that sir William Garrards company be not in the Mosco nor in our countrey, then we will and command that those goods of theirs shall be layd vp in a place of safegard vntill such time as the said sir William Garrard of his company come to demand the same: and then at their comming we will that it shall be deliuered. And whereas heretofore we haue giuen sir William Garrard and his company in this our kingdome of Mosco the new castle by the church of S. Maxim behinde the market, they shall there still holde their house as heretofore we haue giuen them, paying no custome for the same: and we also do licence them to keepe one Russe porter or two, or els of their owne countrey, and those porters shall dwell with them, and not sell for them, nor barter, nor buy for them: And also I haue granted them to buy a house at Vologda and at Colmogro, or in any other place where they can chuse for themselves any good harbour, and there they to set vp those houses in those places at their owne charges: and in Vologda or the other houses to keepe two or thre porters of their owne, or els two or thre Russes, and their wares to be layd vp in those houses, and to sell their owne wares at will: and the porters without them to sell none of their wares, neither yet to buy any for them. And our officers of Colmogro and Dwina, and of other our castles & townes shall not looke ouer their wares, nor take any custome thereof: neither shall those English merchants sir William Garrard and his company be iudged by any of them. And when the English merchants shall send from our kingdome their owne people into their owne countrey by land or ouer other kingdomes whatsoeuer they be, they may without ware send their owne people at their pleasure. And when any matter of law doth fall out in their trade of merchandise, then they shall be iudged by our chancellers, and law shall be done with equitie betwixt our people and them: and when they cannot be iudged by law, they then shall be tried by lots, and whose lot is first taken out, he shall haue the right. And if it happen any of those merchants to haue any matter of law in any other part of our dominions for trade of merchants, then our capitaines, iudges, and chiefe officers shall heare the matter, and adiminister iustice with equitie and trueth, and where law can take no place, to be tried by lots, and his lot that is first taken out to haue the right, and for their matters of law no custome to be payed.

Triall by lots.

The rmer of Obtrassifiable.

Furthermoze, we for our sisters sake Elizabeth haue granted, that none beside sir William Garrard and his company, out of what kingdome soeuer it be, England or other, shall come in trade of merchandise nor otherwise to Colmogro, nor to the riuer Ob, nor within Wardhouse, nor to Petzora, nor Cola, nor Mezen, nor to the abbey of Petchingo, nor to the Island of Shallawy, nor to any mouth of the riuer of Dwina, nor to any part of the North countrey of our coast. And if any merchant, out of what countrey soeuer it be, doe come with ship or shippes, busses, or any other kinde of vessel to any of our harbours, within all our North parts, we will that then the people and goods, ship or shippes, shall be confiscate, and forfeited to vs the Emperour and great Duke.

Giuen in our kingdome and house of Mosco, the yeere from the beginning of the world 7076, in the moneth of September, and in the 34 yeere of our reigne, and in our conquest of Cazan 16, and in our conquest of Astracan 15.

A letter of M. Henrie Lane to M. Richard Hakluyt, concerning the first ambassage to our most gracious Queene Elizabeth from the Russian Emperour anno 1567, and other notable matters incident to those places and times.

Voyagefull sir, because I finde you haue the successe and proceedings of Ossep Napea the first ambassadour of the Russian Emperour to the Maiesties of King Philip and Queene Marie, at what time and at his returne I was remaining in Russia, & do not finde that the perfect knowledge of the first ambassage from thence to this our Souereigne Ladie Queene Elizabeth is come to your hands, betwene whose Highnesse and the ambassadours I was interpreter, I thinke good to expresse it. In August Anno 1567 arriued at London with their retinue two especiall authorised messengers, named Stephen Twerdico, and Theodore Pogorella, with letters and presents to her Maiesty, at that time being at Orelands, where diuers of the chiefe merchants of the Russian company did associate them, and I there doing my duetie and office of interpreter, her Maiesty gaue them audience. First they reheated the long stile and Maiesty of their Master, with his most friendly and hearty commendations to her Highnesse, and then they testified the singular great ioy and pleasure that he conceived to heare of her most princely estate, dignitie and health: and lastly, they deliuered their letters and presents. The presents sent vnto her Maiesty were Sables, both in paires for rippets, and two timbars, to wit, two times fortie, with Luserns and other rich furs. For at that time that princely ancient ornament of furs was yet in vse. And great pittie but that it might be renewed, especiall in Court, and among Magistrates, not onely for the restoring of an olde worshipfull Art and Companie, but also because they be for our climate wholesome, delicate, graue and comely: expressing dignitie, comfortinge age, and of longer continuance, and better with small cost to be preserved, then these new silks, shaggies, and ragges, wherein a great part of the wealth of the land is hastily consumed.

These ambassadours were appointed lodging and entertainment by the Hoscomie company at their house then in Seething Lane, and were sundrie times after permitted to be in presence.

And

And in May 1568 tooke their leaue at Greenwich, where they vnderstood and had the Queenes Maiesties minde, letters and reward. At the latter part of her talke, her Highnesse considering that our trade to Saint Nicholas since the beginning had bene offensive to diuers princes, states, and merchants Eastward, vsed these speeches or the like: Who is or shall be more touched by detractours, with flying tales and vnttrue reports, then Princes and Rulers, to the breach of loue and vnitie? your Master and I in things that passe by word and writing, I doubt not will keepe and performe promises. If he heare the contrary of me, let him suspend his iudgement, and not be light of credit, and so will I. These words they termed her Maiesties golden speech: and kneeling downe, kissed her hand, and departed.

The letters that these two messengers brought, were deliuered to me by my Lord Treasurour, being then Secretarie, to be translated, the copies whereof I had, but now cannot finde. The copie of the Queenes Maiesties letter I send inclosed herewith vnto your worship. I also haue sent you a copy of a letter written from the king of Polonia to the Queenes Maiestic, with other letters from some of our nation and factours, declaring the displeasure for our trafficke to the Russes from anno 1558 to the yere 1566, especially by the way of the Narue: in which yere of 1566, hauing generall procuration and commission from the Company, I was in the Low country at Antwerpe and Amsterdam, and sometimes in company with Polacks, Danes, and Easterlings: and by reason I had bene a lodger in Russia, I could the better reply and proue, that their owne nations and the Italians were most guiltie of the accusations written by the king of Poland.

This king Sigismundus (whose ambassadours very sumptuous I haue seene at Mosco) was reported to be too milde in suffering the Polcouites. Before our trafficke they ouerranne his great dukedome of Lithuania, and tooke Smolensco, carrying the people captiues to Mosco. And in the yere 1563, as appeareth by Thomas Alcocks letter, they suffered the Russe likewise in that Duchy to take a principall city called Polorzko, with the lord and people thereof. Likewise the said Sigismundus and the king of Sweden did not looke to the protection of Lithuania, but lost all, except Rie and Reuel, and the Russe made the Narue his port to trafficke, not onely to vs, but to Lubec and others, generall. And still from those parts the Polcouites were furnished out of Durland by enterlopers with all arts and artificers, and had few or none by vs. The Italians also furnished them with engines of warre, and taught them warrelike stratagemes, and the arte of fortification. In the dayes of Sigismund, the Russe would tant the Polacks, that they loued their ease at home with their wiues, and to drinke, and were not at commandement of their king. This Sigismund had to wife the daughter of Ferdinando, Charles the sixtes brother, and he died without issue. Since which time their late elected king Stephanus Barore kept the Russe in better order, and recovered Polorzko againe in the yere 1579. Thus with my heartie farewell I take my leaue of your worship.

The Ambassage of the right worshipfull Master Thomas Randolfe, Esquire, to the Emperour of Russia, in the yeere 1568, briefly written by himselfe.

In this voyage went Thomas Bannister, & Geoffrey Ducker, for their voyage into Persia.

The 22 day of June, in the pere of our Lord 1568, I went aboard the Harry, lying in the road at Harwich with my company, being to the number of fortie persons or thereabout: of which the one halfe were gentlemen, desirous to see the world.

Within one dayes sailing, we were out of the sight of land, and following our course directly North, till we came to the North Cape, we sailed for the space of twelue dayes with a prosperous winde, without tempest or outrage of sea: having compassed the North Cape we directed our course flat Southeast, having upon our right hand Norway, Wardhouse, Lapland, all out of sight till we came to Cape Gallant: and so sailing betweene two bayes, the two and thirtieth day after our departure from Harwich, we cast ancre at Saine Nicholas road. In all the time of our voyage, moze then the great number of Whales ingendering together, which we might plainly beholde, and the Sperma Ceta, which we might see swimming vpon the sea, there was no great thing to be woondered at. Somt times we had calmes, wherein our Partners fished, and tooke good store of diuers sorts. At S. Nicholas we landed the 23 of July, where there standeth an abbey of Monks (to the number of twentie) built all of wood: the apparell of the Monks is superstitious, in blacke hoods, as ours haue bene. Their Church is faire, but full of painted images, tapers, and candles. Their owne houses are low, and small roomes. They lie apart, they eat together, and are much giuen to drunkennesse, vnlearned, write they can, preach they doe neuer, ceremonies in their Church, and long in their prayers.

The abbey of S. Nicholas of 20 Monks.

At my first arriual I was presented from their Prior with two great rie loaves, fish both salt and fresh of diuers sorts, both sea fish and fresh water, one sheepe aliue, blacke, with a white face, to be the more gratefull vnto me, and so with many solenne wordes inuiting me to see their house, they tooke their leaue.

The English house at S. Nicholas.

Towne or habitation at S. Nicholas there is none moze then about foure houses neere the abbey, and another built by the English Company for their owne vse.

This part of the countrey is most part wood, sauing here and there pasture & arable ground, many riuers and diuers Islands vnhabited, as the most part of the countrey is, for the coldnesse in Winter.

The riuer of Dwina.

S. Nicholas standeth North-east: the elevation of the pole 64 degrees. The riuer that runneth there into the sea is called Dwina, very large, but shallow. This riuer taketh his beginning about 700 miles within the countrey, & vpon this riuer standeth Colmogro, and many praty villages, well situated for pasture, arable land, wood, and water. The riuer pleasant betwene his hills of either side inwardly inhabited, and in a maner a wilderness of his firre trees, and other wood.

Colmogro.

At Colmogro being 100 verstis, which we account for thre quarters of a mile euery verst, we taried thre weeks, not being suffered to depart before the Emperour had word of our coming, who sent to meet vs a gentleman of his house, to conuey vs, and to see vs furnished of victuals, and all things needfull, vpon his owne charge.

The allowance of meat and drinke was for euery day two rubbles, besides the charge of boats by water, and foure score post horses by land, with about 100 carts to carry my wines, and other cartage.

Colmogro is a great towne builded all of wood, not walled, but scattered house from house. The people are rude in maners, and in apparell homely, sauing vpon their festiual, and marriage dayes.

The people of this towne finding commoditie by the English mens traffike with them are much at their commandement, giuen much to drunkennesse, and all other kinde of abominable vices.

An English house with lands at Colmogro.

In this towne the English men haue lands of their owne, giuen them by the Emperour, and faire houses, with offices for their commoditie, very many.

Of other townes vntill I come to Vologda, I write not, because they are much like to this, and the inhabitants not differing from them.

I was five whole weeks vpon the riuer of Dwina till I came to Vologda, being drawn with men against the streame, for other passage there is none.

Vologda standeth vpon the riuer of Vologda, which commeth into Dwina. The towne is great and long, built all of wood, as all their townes are.

In this towne the Emperour hath built a castle inuironed with a wall of stone, and bricke, the walles walles faire and hie, round about. Here (as in all other their towne) are many Churches, some built of bricke, the rest of wood, many Hons and Runnes in it : a towne also of great traffike, and many rich merchants there dwelling.

From hence we passed by land towards Mosco in posse, being 500 versts great, which are equall with our miles. In their towne we waited or lay, being post towne.

The countrey is very faire, plaine & pleasant, well inhabited, cozne, pasture, meadowes enough, riuers, and woods, faice and goodly.

The description of the inland of Moscouie.

At Yeraslaue we passed the riuier of Volga, more then a mile ouer. This riuier taketh his beginning at Beal Ozer, & descendeth into Mare Caspium, portable thowow of very great vessels with flat bottomes, which farre passe any that our countrey vseth.

To saile by this riuier into Mare Caspium the English company caused a barke to be built of 27 tunns, which there was neuer scene before: This barke built, and ready rigged to the sea with her whele furniture cost not the company aboue one hundred marks there.

To Mosco we came about the end of September, receiued by no man, not so much as our owne countrey men suffered to meet vs, which bzod suspicion in me of some other course intended, then we had hitherto found.

This arrivall at Mosco.

We were brought to a house built of purpose by the Emperour for Ambassadors, faire and large, after the fashion of that countrey.

A special house at Mosco, built for Ambassadors.

Two gentlemen were appointed to attend vpon me, the one to see vs furnished of victuals, and that we lacked nothing of the Emperors allowance : the other to see that we should not goe out of the house, nor suffer any man to come vnto vs, in which they left nothing vndone that belonged to their charge. But specially he that looked to our persons so straightly handled vs, that we had no small cause to doubt that some euill had bene intended vnto vs. No supplication, sute, or request could take place for our liberty, nor yet to come to his presence.

Hauiing passed ouer 17 weeks in this sort, the Emperour sendeth word that we should be ready against Tuesday the 20 of Februarie, at eight a clocke in the morning.

The houre being come that I should goe to the Court, the two gentlemen Pristauers (as they call them) came vnto me appparelled more princely then before I had euer scene them. They presse vs to depart, and mounted vpon their owne horses, and the Ambassadors vpon such a one as he had borrowed, his men marching on foot, to their great grieve.

Two Pristauers.

The Ambassadors (being my selfe) was conueyed into an office where one of the chancellors doeth vse to sit, being there accompanied with the two foresayd gentlemen : I taried two long houres before I was sent for to the Emperour. In the end message being brought that the Emperour was set, I was conueyed by my gentlemen by a paire of staires thowow a large roome, where face by my estimation 300 persons, all in rich attire, taken out of the Emperors wardrobe for that day, vpon threerankes of benches, set round about the place, rather to present a maiestie, then that they were either of quality or honor.

At the first entry into the chamber I with my cap gaue them the reuerence, such as I iudged their stately sitting, graue countenances, and sumptuous apparell required, and seeing that it was not answered againe of any of them I couered my head, and so passing to a chamber where the Emperour was, there receiued me at the dooze from my two gentlemen or gouernors, two of the Emperors counsellors, and shewed me to the Emperour, and brought me to the middle of the chamber, where I was willed to stand still, and to say that which I had to say. I by my Interpreter opened my message as I receiued it from the Queene my Mistresse, from whom I came, at whose name the Emperour stood vp, and demanded diuers questions of her health and state : whereunto answer being made, he gaue me his hand in token of my welcome, and caused me to sit downe, and further asked me diuers questions.

This admission to the Emperors presence.

This done, I deliuered her Maiesties present, which was a notable great Cup of silver curiously wrought, with verses grauen in it, expressing the histories workmanly set out in the same.

The Queens present.

All being sayd and done (as appeared) to his contentment, he licenced me and my whole company to depart, who were all in his presence, and were saluted by him with a nod of his head, and sayd vnto me : I dine not this day openly for great affaires I haue, but I will send thee my dinner, and giue leaue to thee and thine to go at liberty, and augment our allowance to thee, in token of our loue and fauor to our sister the Queene of England.

The Emperors speech to the Ambassadors.

I with reuerence tooke my leaue, being conueyed by two other of greater calling then those that brought me to the Emperors sight, who deliuered me to the two first gentlemen, who conducted me to the office where I first was, where came vnto me one called the Long duke, with whom I conferred a while, and so returned to my lodging.

Within one houre after in comes to my lodging a duke richly appparelled, accompanied with littie persons, ecy of them caryng a luttier dish with meat, and covered with silver. The duke first deliuered twenty loaves of bread of the Emperours owne eating, hauing tasted the same, and deliuered euery dish into my hands, and tasted of euery kinde of drinke that he brought.

This being done, the duke and his company sate downe with me, and tooke part of the Emperours meat, and filled themselves well of all soys, and went not away from me unrewarded.

Within few nights after the Emperour had will to speake secretly with me, and sent for me in the night by the Long duke: The place was farre off, and the night colde, and I hauing changed my apparell into such as the Russes do weare, found great incommoditie thereby.

20 second conference with the Emperour.

Hauing talked with him about three houres, towards the morning I was dismissed, and so came home to my lodging, where I remained about six weeks after, before I heard againe from the Emperour, who went the next day to Slouoda, the house of his solace. After the end of which six weeks, which was about the beginning of April, the Emperour returned from Slouoda aforesayd, and sent for me againe to make repaire vnto him. And being come, I dealt effectually with him in the behalfe of our English merchants, and found him so graciously inclined towards them, that I obtained at his hands my whole demands for large priuileges in generall, together with all the rest my particular requests. And then he commended to my conduct into England, a noble man of his, called Andrew Sauin, as his Ambassadour, for the better confirmation of his priuileges granted, and other negotiations with her Maiesty. And thus being dispatched with full contentment, the sayd Ambassadour and my selfe departed, and imbarked at S. Nicholas about the end of July, and arriued safely at London in the moneth of September following.

Andrew Sauin Ambassadour to the Queene.

A copie of the priuiledges granted by the right high and mightie Prince, the Emperour of Russia, &c. vnto the right worshipfull fellowship of English merchants, for the discouerie of new trades: and higher sent by Thomas Randolfe esquire, her Maiesties Ambassadour to the sayd Emperour, and by Andrew Sauin his Ambassadour in the yere of our Lord God 1569.

O God euerlasting, and without and before the beginning, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost, the blessed Trinitie, our onely God, maker, and preferuer of all things, and replenisser of all things euery where, who by thy goodnesse doest cause all men to loue the giuer of wisdom our onely Mediatour, and leader of vs all vnto blessed knowledge by the onely Sonne his word, our Lord Iesus Christ, holy and euerlasting Spirit, and now in these our dayes teachest vs to keepe Christianitie, and sufferest vs to enjoy our kingdome to the happy commodity of our land, and wealth of our people, in despite of our enemies, and to our fame with our friends.

We Iohn Vasiluich by the grace of God, great lord, Emperour, and great duke of all Russia, Volodemer, Moscovia, Nouogrod, Emperour of Cazan, Tuersky, Vgorsky, Permisky, Vadsky, Bulgaria, and many others, lord and great duke of the Low countrey of Nouogrod, Chernigowsky, Refansky, Polotsky, Rastow, Yeraslaue, Bealosera, Owdorsky, Condinsky, and all Siberland, great commander of all the North parts, lord of Leisland, and many other Northward, Southward and Westward.

Whereas our sister Elizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, hath written vnto vs her letters for her merchants, who hath made sute that we should grant our goodnesse to the merchants which are of one Company, and giue them free leaue to come to traffike in our kingdome to Colmogro, and to the countrey of Dwina, and to our great citie of Moscovia, and to all the cities in our dominions, and thozow our countrey to Boghar, to Persia, Casbin, and Charday, and to all other countreys.

We Iohn Vasiluich Emperour and great duke of all Russia (for our sister Elizabeths sake, Queene of England) haue giuen and granted to the English merchants, the Gouernours, Consuls, Assistants & fellowship, sir Wil. Garrard Knight, Rowland Harward Alderman, Ioh. Thammworth Esquire, Iohn Riuer Alderman, Henry Beecher Alderman, Consuls: Sir Wil. Chester Knight, Edward Iackman Alderman, Lionel Ducker Alderman, Edward Gilbert, Laurence Huse, Francis Walsingham, Clement Throgmorton, Iohn Quarles, Nicholas Wheeler, Thomas Banister, Iohn Harrison, Francis Burnham, Anthony Gamage, Iohn Somers, Richard Wilkinson, Ioh. Sparke, Richard Barne, Robert Woolman, Thomas Browne, Thomas Smith, Thomas Allen, Thomas More, William Bully, Richard Yong, Thomas Arkinson, Assistants: Iohn Merth Esquire, Geofrey Ducker, Francis Robinson, Matthew Field, & all the rest of their company and fellowship, and to their succours and deputies, to come with ships and other vessels into into our Countrey, at Colmogorod, & Dwina, and to all the North parts now being ours, or that hereafter shall at any time be in our possession, by sea, river or land, euen to our great Citie of Mosco, in all the townes of our Countrey, to Cazan and Astracan, to Nouogorod the great, to Plesko & Leifland, Vriagorod, to Narue, and all other townes of Leifland. 2 And to passe through our land to Boghar, Persia, Casbin, Charday, and other Countreys: And where soeuer they come there to be and abide freely, and to barter and bargain freely all wares of sale, without custome of all people, and Marchants strangers whatsoeuer.

And if so be they bring any fine wares out of Englands, or any other Countrey from Boghar, Persia, Casbin, or from any other place, & those their wares that come by the way of Narue, or any other part into our Dominion, to bring the same wares into our treasure, and our Treasurers to view the same wares, and to take into our Treasure of the same such as shall be needfull for vs. And all such wares as we shall not need, our Chancellour to redeliuer & same: And after the view of our Chancellours, to barter it freely to whom they will, not selling any of their wares needfull for vs, before our Chancellour haue seene the same. And all other grosse and heavy wares that shall be needfull to our vse, not being brought to Mosco, to declare & tell our Chancellour of the same wares: And to giue a note thereof by name, and how much they leaue there, not brought to Mosco: and then if we neede not the said wares, the English Marchants, their seruants & Factors, to conuey their wares the neereff way to Viting the great, and so to Colmogorod, or elswhere at their pleasure, there to barter and sell the same. But those wares that shall be needfull for our Treasure, they shall not hide from vs in any case.

And when our Chancellours shall send our aduventure, with the said Marchants or their Factors, they to take our aduventures with them, and to sell, & to barter for such wares as shall be meete for our Treasure, and to returne it into our Treasure.

And when we shall sende any aduventure into England then our Chancellour to giue them a peeres warning, that their ships may be provided thereafter, that by taking in of our wares, they leaue not their owne behind them.

And to take our aduventure peereley when they goe into Persia.

Neither shall the English marchants receiue or colour any of our peoples goods, nor barter nor sell it in any wise: likewise our people not to barter for the said English marchants or occupy for them.

3 And when they shall come into our Empire of Casan and Astracan, and other places of our Dominions, then our Captaines of Casan and Astracan, and our authorized people, quietly to let them passe, not taking any toll or custome of their wares, nor once to make search thereof.

And when we shall send no aduventure with them, yet to suffer them freely to passe, not viewing their wares, nor taking any kinde of custome. And whatsoeuer English marchant will bargain without Marchants or Factors wares for ware to barter the same at their pleasure.

And whatsoeuer their Marchant or Factors will sell their wares at their house at Mosco, which house I granted them at S. Maxims at the Mosco, they to sel the ware to our people, either strangers as they may best utter it, keeping within their house, arshines, measures, and waighes vnder scales.

4 We haue granted them the saide house at S. Maxims in the halfe free, and without standing rent, as heretofore we did graunt it the said English Marchants, sir Wil. Garrard, and the Company, maintayning in the said house one housekeeper a Russe, and two Russe seruants, or some of their owne countrey men, and none other Russes besides the aforesayde. And the said housekeepers that shall liue at their house with the English marchants, neither to buy nor sel any wares for them, but that the said marchants themselues or their factors, shall buy, sell, and barter their owne wares: And our Moscouie marchants not to take the said Englishmens wares to sell them in our townes, nor to buy any wares for them, neither the English marchant to colour any Russes wares at any towne.

5 And whatsoeuer English marchant will sell his wares at Colmogorod, Dwyna, Vologda, Yeraflaue, Castran, Nouogorod the lower, Casan, Astracan, Nouogrod the great, Vopsko, the Narue, Vriagorod, or at any other townes, they to sel their wares there at their pleasure: And of all wares aswell of other countreis as of Russia, no officer or other to take any custome, neither in any place to stay them in any wise, neither take any kinde of toll of them for their wares whatsoeuer.

6 And whatsoeuer marchant shall bargain or buy any wares of English marchants: The said Russe not to returne those wares vpon the marchants hands againe, but to giue ready money for the said wares, otherwise they to craue the Iustice to giue right, and to execute the lawe vpon the same with all expedition. And when the English marchants or factors shall trauaile from Moscouie coule after the dispatch of their wares and businesse, then to shew themselves vnto our Chancelours, whatsoeuer wares of theirs shall goe from Mosco, they not to shew the same wares to any our officers, nor pay no custome nor toll in any place.

7 If it so happen the English marchants haue any wracke, and the shippes be brought to any port of our Dominions, we to command the said goods to be enquired and sought out, and to be giuen to the English merchants, being here abiding at that time in our Countrey, the factors, seruants, or deputies, of the Company aforesayd, to whom we haue granted this our gracious letter.

And if there happen none of the English merchants, factors, seruants, or deputies to be in our Countreys at such time, then we wil all the said goods to be sought out and bestowed in some conuenient place, and when any of the Company aforesayd, bringing these our letters, shall come for their goods, we to command their goods to be restor'd vnto them.

8 Likewise we haue granted leaue to the English merchants, their Gouernours, Consuls, and assistants, namely, sir William Garrard knight, Rowland Hayward, and to the Companie, to builde houses at Vologda, Colmogro, and the seaside, at Luangorod, at Cherell, and in all other places of our Dominions, as shall be needefull for their trade. And they to keepe at the said house one housekeeper, a Russe, and two or thre men to keepe their wares at the said houses, making sale thereof to whom they will, they, their Factors or deputies: the said housekeeper not to buy or sell for them.

9 Also we haue giuen and granted to the English Merchants, their house which they haue by our goodnesse at S. Maximes in the Zenopski, and other their houses in the towne of Zenopski, made for the better assurance of their goods, and all such as they shall set vp hereafter shall be of the // Opressini, and will make them knowne to all them of Opressini.

10 And whereas by our goodnesse we haue granted them a Ropehouse at Vologda, being farre from the English Merchants house, now we haue giuen them to build a house for that vse by the said English house, and haue giuen and granted them (of our goodnesse) ground, one hundred and fourescore sadowe long, and fiftie sadowes in breadth, according to their owne request.

11 Also, we haue of our goodnesse giuen and granted to the English Merchants, leaue to buy them a house at Wichida, and there to search out mines of yron. And where they shall happily find it, there to set vp houses for the making of the same yron: and to make the same, of our goodnesse haue granted them woods, five or sixe miles compasse about the sayd houses, to the making of the sayd yron, and not to excede these bounds and limits: And where they shall cut the sayd wood, not to set vp any village or farme there, bringing the artificers for making of their yron, out of their owne Countrey, and to learne our people that arte, and so freely occupying the said yron in these our Dominions, transporting also of the same home into Englands, allowing for euery pound one dingo, or halfe penie.

12 And if any of the said yron shall be needfull for our workes, then we to take of the said yron to our worke, vpon agreement of price, paying money out of our Treasurie for the same: And when the said English Merchants or Factors shall send their owne people out of our Realme into their Countrey, ouer land through any Countrey whatsoever, freely to send the same with our words.

13 Also, we of our goodnesse haue granted, that if any man misuse the said English, the Factors or seruants, or the said English Merchants, their Factors or seruants abuse any other at Moscouie, or any other out townes whatsoever within our Dominions in trade of Marchandise or otherwise, then they to haue by right iustice in all such matters of our counsaile the Opressini without all let or delay: But if our Justice may not agree the parties, then lots to be made, and to whose lotte it shall fall, to him the right to be giuen, and that only our counsaile at Moscouie, and none of our Capitaines, or authozied people, or officers in any other our townes, giue iudgement vpon the said English Merchants for any thing.

14 Also, if any stranger shall haue matter of controuersie with any English Merchant, Factor or seruant, abiding within these our Realmes, or contrariwise any English Merchant, Factor or seruant, against any other stranger, in all those causes our Counsaile of the Opressini, to giue them Justice, and to make an agreement & end betweene the parties, without all delay: And none to deale therein, saue our Counsaile of the Opressini. 15 And if any man haue action against any English Merchant being absent, that then in his absence it shall be lawful for any other Englishman at his assignation to answer his cause.

16 If any Englishman happen to be wounded or beaten to death, or any Russe or stranger slaine or beaten, 17 Or any stolen goods to be found in the said English houses, then our Counsellors to cause the guiltie persons to be sought out, and to doe right and Justice in the cause, and the partie that is guiltie, if he deserue punishment, to be corrected accordingly after his offence: That the said English Merchants, factors and seruants, sustaine thereby no hinderance or damage.

18 And whatsoeuer English Merchant, Factor, servant, or de putie, shall be guilty of any fault, deserving our displeasure, then our Counsellors to cause the guiltie partie to goe vnder suerties, and their goods to be sealed and kept, vntill our pleasure be further knowen, and our Counsaile to examine their offence, and so to repozt it vnto vs, that we may commaund what shall be done therein, and none other to be arrested or haue their goods sealed, which are not guiltie of that offence, nor to stay or apprehend them in any of our Dominions for the same.

19 If any English Merchant, Factor or servant shall offend, it shall be lawfull for their Agent to doe iustice vpon the said partie, or to send him home into England at his pleasure.

20 If any English Merchant, Factor or servant, haue lent or hereafter shall leuue money to any of our people, or credite them with wares, and so depart into any forreigne Countrey, or die before the debt be due to be payde, then our people and Merchants to paye the sayde debt, to whom soeuer shall be appointed to the sayd rcome or charge, and the saide English Merchant, factor, or servant, to bring his bill of debt to our Counsell, to shewe them what is due, and what money is owing them for any wares: and thus to doe truly, not adding any whit to the debt, and our Counsell to command the debt to be discharged vnto the English Merchant, factor, or servant, without delay.

21 And whatsoeuer English Merchant shall be arrested for debt, then our Counsell to commaund the partie vnder arrest to be deliuered to the Agent: and if he haue no suertie, to binde the Agent with him, for the better force of the bond.

And if any Englishman be indebted, we will the Creditor not to cast him in prison, or to deliuer him to the Sergeant, lest the officer lose him, but to take ware in pawne of the debt.

22 Also of our goodnes, we haue granted the English Merchants to send our Commission to all our Townes, Captaines, and authorized men, to defende and garde the said Merchants from all theues, robbers, and euill disposed persons,

23 If in comming or going to and fro our dominions, the Merchants, the factors, or seruants be spoyled on the sea, our Counsell shall send our letters, and will them to be sought out, and where they shall finde the goods, cause it to be restored againe, and the offender to be punished, according to our commandement.

24 Also of our goodnes, we haue granted the saide Merchants to take by Wokers, Packers, Mlayers, and such like labourers, as shall be needefull for them, paying for their hiee as the labourers and they shall agree.

25 We like wise of our goodnes, haue licensed the English Merchants in our Townes of Mosco, Nouogorod the great, and Plesko, that the Coiners of the said Townes shall melt Dollers, and coine money for them, without custome, allowing for coales, and other necessaries, with the workmanship,

26 Also of our goodnes, we haue granted to the sayd English Merchants, to take poste horse at needfull times, leauing with our officers a note how many they take, and not else, in no case hindring or diminiting our treasure.

27 Also for our sister Queene Elizabeths sake, we of our goodnes haue granted to the merchants within written, this our letter, and to their successors, that no Englishman, nor any other stranger, come without the Queenes leaue to Colmogorode, the riter of Vob, Vasiagy, Pechora, Cola, Mezena, Pechingo, Zeleuetskyes Island, the riter of Shame, nor to no other haue of Dwina, nor to any part of the northside of Dwina, by hetherward of Wardhouse, to any haue, with shippe, Buss, or any other vessel, nor to occupie in any kind of waies, but only the said English companie, and their successors, to whom we of our goodnes haue granted this priuiledge.

28 Also that no English Merchant, without the Queenes leaue, shall come with any wares, to the Narue, or Vriogorod.

29 And whatsoeuer English Merchant, stranger, or other, of whatsoeuer Countrey he be, shall come with any shippe, Buss, or any other vessel, to any of the said hauens, of the north side, to any part of Dwina, by North the Narue, or Vriogorod, without the Queenes leaue or knowledge, not being of the company aboute written, we to apprehende and take the same vessel from those strangers and Merchants, the one halfe to vs the Emperour, and great Duke, and the other halfe to the company of English Merchants.

30 Also of our goodnes we haue granted the said company of English merchants, that no English merchants or strangers shall passe through our dominions, to Boghar, Persia, Casbin, Charday, or other Countreys, saue onely the company of English merchants, and our owne messengers.

31 Also whatsoeuer Englishman, comming out of England or any other Countrey, into our dominions, without the Queenes leaue, and knowledge, not being of the sayd company, written within within those our letters, mind, and purpose, to abide in our realme, contrary to the Queenes will and pleasure, or any way abuse himselfe, the Agent shall freely send him home, to the Queene his Soueraigne: which if the Agent of himselfe be unable to do, let him pray for ayd of the captaines and officers of our towne there being, and so send him to prison, and will the sayd captaines not to hinder the sayd Agent from sending home such euill persons into England.

32 And if any man within our countrey runne away to any other towne or place, the English merchants and factours, to haue free libertie to apprehend him, and take their goods from him againe.

33 And as for our priuilege giuen to Thomas Glouer, Ralfe Rutter, Christopher Bennet, Iohn Chappell, and their adherents, we haue commanded the same priuileges to be taken from them.

34 As to we of our goodnesse haue granted the sayd company of English merchants, their successors, seruants and deputies, that doe or shall remaine at Mosco, or else where within our dominions freely to keepe their owne law: and in any wise none of ours to force them to our law or faith against their will.

Moreover, besides and with the company of English merchants, we permit all strangers, to trade to our towne of Narue, Iuanogorod, & other our townes of Liefland, as they haue done beforetime. Given from the beginning of the world 7077, in the moneth of Iune 20, Indiction 12, the yere of our lordship and reign 35, and of our Empire of Rusland 23, Cazan 17, Astracan 15.

Other speciall grants by his Maiesties priuate letters at the sute of M. Randolfe Ambassadour.

Releasement out of prison of Fitzherbert, that was accused for writing of letters against the Emperour.

Liberty giuen to Thomas Greene that was accused and troubled upon suspicion of his dealing with the Ambassadour, and licence giuen to him to trafficke as he was accustomed.

Andrew Atherton and his sureties released at the Narue and his seruant at the Mosco, that were in trouble for sending the merchants letters into England.

A letter granted to Thomas Southam to the Councell, for iustice against them that stole the pearles.

His Maiesties fauor promised to the Artificers, and liuings to be appointed them as they can best deserue.

A letter to the merchants that went into Persia, to passe freely without impeachment in his dominions, as also letters of fauour to the great Shaugh of Persia.

A grant vnto the company that at what time soeuer they send to the discovery of Cataya, they shalbe licenced to repaire vnto this countrey, and haue such conductes and guides, mariners, vessels, men and victuals as they shall stand in need of.

It is also promised by Knez Alfanas, and Peter Gregoriwich in the Emperours name, that if Benet Butler or any English man complaine, deface, hinder in way of trafficke or otherwise go about to discredit the worshopfull company, and their doings, that therein they shall not be heard, and the doers to be punished, as in such cases they shalbe iudged to haue deserved.

Certaine persons granted to be sent home into England that serued the company, and were practisers against them in that countrey.

A Commission giuen by vs Thomas Randolfe Ambassadour for the Queenes Maiestie in Russia, and Thomas Bannisser, &c. vnto Iames Bassendine, Iames Woodcocke and Richard Browne, the which Bassendine, Woodcocke, and Browne we appoint ioyntly together, and aiders, the one of them to the other, in a voyage of disco- uery to be made (by the grace of God) by them, for searching of the sea, and border of the coast, from the riuer Pechora, to the Eastwards, as hereafter followeth Anno 1588. The first of August.

Nprimis, when your barke with all furniture is ready, you shall at the beginning of the yere (as soone as you possibly may) make your repaire to the Ea-sterne part of the riuer Pechora, where is an Island called Dolgoieue, and from thence you shall passe to the Eastwards alongst by the Sea coast of Hugoric, or the maine land of Pechora, and sailing alongst by the same coast, you shall passe within seven leagues of the Island Vaigats, which is in the straight, almost halfe way from the coast of Hugoric, vnto the coast of Noua

Noua Zembla, which Island Vaigats and Noua Zenbla you shall finde noted in your plat, therefore you shall not need to discouer it: but proceed on alongst the coast of Hugory, towards the riuer Obba.

There is a Bay betweene the sayd Vaigats, and the riuer Obba, that doth bite to the Southwards, into the land of Hugory, in which Bay are two small riuers, the one called Cara Reca, the other Naramsy, as in the paper of notes which are giuen to you herewith may appeare: in the which Bay you shall not need to spend any time for searching of it, but to direct your course to the riuer Ob (if otherwise you be not constrained to keepe alongst the shoze) and when you come to the riuer Ob you shall not enter into it, but passe ouer vnto the Easterne part of the mouth of the sayd riuer.

Cara Reca,

Naramsy Reca,

And when you are at the Easterne part of the mouth of Obba Reca, you shall from thence passe to the Eastwards, alongst by the border of the sayd coast, describing the same in such perfect order as you can best do it. You shall not leaue the sayd coast or border of the land, but passe alongst by it, at least in sight of the same, untill you haue sailed by it so farre to the Eastwards, and the time of the yeere so farre spent, that you doe thinke it time for you to returne with your barke to Winter, which trauell may well be 300 or 400 leagues to the Eastwards of the Ob, if the Sea doe reach so farre as our hope is it doth: but and if you finde not the said coast and sea to trend so farre to the Eastwards, yet you shall not leaue the coast at any time, but proceed alongst by it, as it doth lie, leauing no part of it vnsearched, or serue, vntill it be some bay, or riuer, that you doe certainly know by the report of the people, that you shall finde in those borders, or els some certaine tokens whereby you of your selues may iudge it to be so. For our hope is that the said border of land and sea doth in those space after you passe the Ob, incline East, and so to the Southwards. And therefore we would haue no part of the land of your Starreboord side, as you proceed in your discouery, to be left vndiscouered.

But and if the said border of land do not incline so to the Eastwards as we presuppose it, but that it doe proue to incline and trend to the Northwards, and so ioyne with Noua Zembla, making the sea from Vaigats to the Eastwards but a bay: yet we will that you do keepe alongst by the said coast, and so bying vs certaine report of that forme and maner of the same bay.

And if it doe so proue to be a bay, and that you haue passed round about the same, and so by the trending of the land come backe vnto that part of Noua Zembla that is against Vaigats, where as you may from that see the said Island Vaigats, if the time of the yeere will permit you, you shall from thence passe alongst by the said border and coast of Noua Zembla to the Westwards, and so to search whether that part of Noua Zembla doe ioyne with the land that sir Hugh Wilmoughbie discouered in anno 53, and is in 72 degrees, and from that part of Noua Zembla 120 leagues to the Westwards, as your plat doeth shew it vnto you: and if you doe finde that land to ioyne with Noua Zembla, when you come to it, you shall proceed further along the same coast, if the time of the yeere will permit it, and that you doe thinke there will be sufficient time for you to returne backe with your barke to Winter either at Pechora or in Russia, at your discretion: for we refer the same to your good iudgements, trusting that you will lose no time, that may further your knowledge in this voyage.

Note you, it was the 20 of August, 56 y^e the Serchthrift began to returne backe from her discouerie, to Winter in Russia, and then she came from the Island Vaigats, being forcibly driuen from thence with an Easterly winde and yce, and so she came into the riuer Dwina, and arrived at Colmogro the 11 of September, 56. If the yce had not bene so much that yere as it was in the Streights, on both sides of the Island Vaigats, they in the said pinnesse would that yeere haue discouered the parts that you are now sent to seeke: which thing (if it had pleased God) might haue bene done then: but God hath reserved it for some other. Which discouerie, if it may be made by you, it shall not only proue profitable vnto you, but it will also purchase perpetuall fame and renoume both to you and our countrey. And thus not doubting of your willing desires, and forwardnesse towards the same, we pray God to blesse you with a lucky beginning, fortunate successe, and happily to end the same. Amen.

Necessarie notes to be obserued, and followed in your discouerie, as hereafter followeth.

When your barke with all furniture and necessaries shall be in readinesse for you to depart to the sea (if it be that you take your barke at S. Nicholas, or any part of Dwina Reca) you shall from thence, euen as timely in the spring as the yce will permit you, saile, & make all expedition that may be, vnto the mouth of the riuer Pechora (as your commission commission both leade you) and as you passe by the coast all alongst (notwithstanding the plat that sheweth you the description of the said coast, from Dwina unto Vaigars) yet you shall seeke by all the meanes that you can, to amend the same plat, vsing as many obseruations, as you possibly can do: and these notes following are to be obserued by you principally.

1 First, that you do obserue the latitude as often, and in as many places as you may possibly do it, noting diligently the place where you do so obserue the same.

2 Also that you doe diligently set with your compasse, how the land doth lie from point to point, all alongst as you goe, and to vse your iudgements how farre there may be betweene ech of them.

3 Item, that you do alwayes vse to draw the proportion, and biting of the land, as well the lying out of the points, and headlands, vnto the which you shall giue some apt names (at your discretion) as also the foyme of the Bayes, and to make some marke in drawing the foyme, and border of the same, where the high cliffes are, and where low land is, whether sandy hilles, or whatsoever: omit not to note any thing that may be sensible and apparant to you, which may serue to any purpose.

4 In passing along by any coast, that you keepe your lead going often times, and sound at the least once euery glasse, and oftener if you thinke good as occasion doth serue, and note diligently the depth with the maner of the ground, and at euery time, how farre the same sounding may be from the next shoie to it: and how the next point or headland doth beare from you. And in the sea after you set off from your port, you shall orderly at the end of euery foure glasses sound, and if you finde ground, note the depth and what ground, but if you can finde no ground, you shall also note in what depth you could finde no ground.

5 Also that you do diligently obserue the flowing, & ebbing in euery place, and how the tides do set, which way the flood doth come, and how much water it doth high in euery place, and what force the same tide hath to driue a ship in an houre, as neere as you can iudge it.

6 Also that you doe seeke to obserue with the instrument which I deliuer you herewith, according as I taught you at Rose Island, the true platfoymes, and distances, in as many places as conveniently you may, for it serueth very aptly your purpose.

7 Also that you take with you paper and ynke, and keepe a continuall iournall or remembrance day by day, of all such things as shall fall out worthy the knowledge, not forgetting or omitting to write it, and note it, that it may be shewed and read at your returne.

8 These orders if you shall diligently obserue, it will be easie for you to make a plat and perfect description of your discouery, and so shall your notes be sufficient to answer that which is looked for at your hands. But withall you may not forget to note as many things as you can learne and understand by the report of any people whatsoever they be, so that it appertaine any way to our desires. And thus the Lord God prosper your voyage. Amen.

Certaine letters in verse, written by Master George Turberuile out of Moscouia, which went as Secretarie thither with Master Tho. Randolph, her Maiesties Ambassadour to the Emperour 1568, to certeine friends of his in London, describing the maners of the Countrey and people.

To his especiall friend Master Edward Dancie.

My Dancie deare, when I recount within my brest,
My London friends, and wonted mates, and thee about the rest:
I feele a thousand fits of deepe and deadly woe,
To thinke that I from land to sea, from blisse to bale did go.
I left my native soile, full like a retchlesse man,
And vnacquainted of the coast, among the Russes ran:
A people passing rude, to vices vile inclinde,
Folke fit to be of Bacchus traine, so quaffing is their kinde.
Drinke is their whole desire, the pot is all their pride,
The sobrest head doth once a day stand needfull of a guide.
If he to banquet bid his friends, he will not shyinke
On them at dinner to bestow a douzen kindes of drinke:
Such licour as they haue, and as the countrey giues,
But chieflly two, one called Kuas, whereby the Mouske liues,
Small ware and waterlike, but somewhat tart in taste,

Therest is Mead of bonie made, where with their lips they baste.
 And if he goe vnto his neighbour as a guest,
 He cares for little meate, if so his drinke be of the best,
 No wonder though they vse such vile and beastly trade,
 Sith with the hatchet and the hand, their chiefest gods be made.
 Their Idoles haue their hearts, on God they neuer call,
 Vnlesse it be (Nichola Bough) that hangs against the wall.
 The house that hath no god, or painted Saint within,
 Is not to be resorted to, that roofo is full of sinne.
 Besides their priuate gods, in open places stand
 Their crosses vnto which they crooche, and blesse themselves with hand.
 Deuoutly downe they ducke, with forehead to the ground,
 Was neuer more deceit in ragges, and greasie garments found.
 Almost the meanest man in all the countrey rides,
 The woman eke, against our vse, her trotting horse bestrides.
 In sundry colours they both men and women goe,
 In buskins all, that money haue on buskins to bestoe.
 Ech woman hanging hath a ring within her eare,
 Which all of ancient vse, and some of very pride doe weare.
 Their gate is very brane, their countenance wise and sadde,
 And yet they follow fleshy lustes, their trade of liuing badde.
 It is no shame at all accounted to be vile Anothers bedde, they make no care their follies to concile,
 Is not the meanest man in all the land but hee,
 To buy her painted colours doeth allow his wife a fee.
 Wherewith she deckes her selfe, and dyes her tawnie skinne,
 She pranks and paints her smoakie face, both brow, lip, cheeke, & chinne.
 Yea those that honest are, if any such there bee
 Within the land, doe vse the like: a man may plainly see Upon some womens cheekes the painting how it lies,
 In plaister soyt, for that too thicke her face the harlot dyes.
 But such as skillfull are, and cunning Dames indeede,
 By dayly practise doe it well, yea sure they doe exceede.
 They lay their colours so, as he that is full wise,
 May easily be decei'd therein, if he doe trust his eyes.
 I not a little muse, what madnesse makes them paint
 Their faces, waying how they keepe the stooue by meere constraint.
 For seldom when, vnlesse on Church or marriage day
 A man shall see the Dames abroad, that are of best aray.
 The Russe meanes to reape the profit of her pride,
 And so he mews her to be sure, she lye by no mans side.
 Thus much, friend Vancie, I did meane to write to thee,
 To let thee weete in Russia land, what men and women bee.
 Hereafter I perhaps of other things will write
 To thee, and other of my friends, which I shall see with sight:
 And other stufte besides, which true report shall tell,
 Heane while I ende my louing lines, and bid thee now farewell.

To Spencer.

IF I should now forget, or not remember thee,
 Thou Spencer mightst it a foule rebuke, and shame impute to mee.
 For I to open shew did loue thee passing well,
 And thou weest he at parture, whome I loathd to bid farewell.
 And as I went thy friend, so I continue still,
 No better prooffe thou canst then this desire of true good will.
 I doe remember well when needes I should away,
 And that the Post would licence vs, no longer time to stay:
 Thou wrongst me by the fist, and holding fast my hand, Didst craue of me to send thee newes, and how I liked the land,

It is a sandie soile, no very fruitfull vaine,
 Noze waste and wooddie grounds there are, then closes fit for graine, Yet graine there growing is, which they vntimely take,
 And cut or eare the corne be ripe, they mowe it on a sticke,
 And laying sheafe by sheafe, their haruest so they dry,
 They make the greater haste, for feare the frost the corne destroy,
 For in the winter time, so glarie is the ground,
 As neither grasse, nor other graine, in pastures may be found,
 In coms the cattell then, the sheepe, the colt, the cowe,
 Fall by his bed the Howlike then a lodging both allowe,
 Whom he with fodder feeds, and holds as deere as life:
 And thus they weare the winter with the Howlike and his wife,
 Seven months the Winter dures, the glare it is so great,
 As it is May before he turne, his ground to sowe his wheate,
 The bodie eke that die buried lie they then,
 Laid vp in coffins made of firre, as well the poorest men,
 As those of greater state: the cause is lightly found,
 For that in Winter time, they cannot come to breake the ground,
 And wood so plentous is, quite throughtout all the land,
 As rich, and poore, at time of death allurd of coffins stand,
 Perhaps thou mused much, how this may stand with reason,
 That bodie dead can incorrupt abide so long a season,
 Take this for certaine troche, as soone as heate is gone,
 The force of colde the body binds as hard as any stone,
 Without offence at all to any living thing:
 And so they lye in perfect state, till next returne of Spring.
 Their beasts be like to ours, as farre as I can see
 For shape, and shewe, but somewhat lesse of bulke, and bone they be.
 Of warlike taste, the flesh not firme, like English beefe,
 And yet it seru's them very well, and is a good reliefe:
 Their sheepe are very small, sharpe singled, handfull long,
 Great store of fowle on sea and land, the moorish reedes among.
 The greatnes of the store doeth make the prices lesse,
 Besides in all the land they know not how good meate to dresse.
 They vse neither broach nor spit, but when the stoue they heate,
 They put their victuals in a pan, and so they bake their meate,
 No pewter to be had, no dishes but of wood,
 No vse of trenchers, cups cut out of birche are very good,
 They vse but wooden spoones, which hanging in a case
 Each Howlike at his girdle ties, and thinks it no disgrace.
 With whistles two or three, the better man the more,
 The chiefeest Russies in the land, with spoone and kniues doe goe,
 Their houses are not huge of building, but they say,
 They plant them in the softest ground, to shift the snow away,
 Which in the Winter time, each where full thicke doth lie:
 Which makes them haue the more desire, to set their houses hye,
 No stone worke is in vse, their roofes of rafters bee,
 One linked in another fast, their wals are all of tree.
 Of matts both long, and large, with mosse put in betweene,
 To keepe the force of weather out, I neuer earst haue seene
 A grosse deuise so good, and on the rooffe they lay
 The birchen barke, to rid the raine, and sudden howzes away.
 In euery roome a stoue, to serue the Winter turne,
 Of wood they haue sufficient store, as much as they can burne,
 They haue no English glasse, of lices of a rocke
 Nighe Sluda they their windowes make, that English glasse doth mocke,
 They cut it very thinne, and sow it with a ched
 In pretie order like to panes, to serue their present need.
 No other glasse, good faith doth giue a better light:

And sure the rocke is nothing rich, the cost is very slight.
 The chiefest place is that, where hangs the god by it,
 The owner of the house himselſe doth neuer sit,
 Unlesſe his better come, to whom he yealds the ſeat:
 The ſtranger bending to the god, the ground with brow muſt beat.
 And in that very place which they moſt ſacred deeme,
 The ſtranger lies: a token that his gueſt he doth eſteeme.
 There he is wont to haue a beares ſkinne for his bed,
 And muſt, in ſtead of pillow, clasp his ſaddle to his head.
 In Ruſſia other ſhift there is not to be had,
 For where the bedding is not good, the boaiſters are but bad.
 I muſed very much, what made them ſo to lie,
 Such in their countrey Downe is riſe, and feathers out of crie:
 Unleſſe it be becauſe the countrey is ſo hard,
 They feare by niceneſſe of a bed their bodies would be mard,
 I wiſht ther oft with vs, ſauce that I ſtood in feare
 Thou wouldeſt haue loathed to haue layd thy ſunmes vpon a beare,
 As I and Stafford did, that was my mate in bed:
 And yet (we thanke the God of heauen) we both right well haue ſped,
 Loe thus I make an ende: none other newes to thee,
 But that the countrey is too colde, the people beaſtly bee.
 I write not all I know, I touch but here and there,
 For if I ſhould, my penne would pinch, and eke offend I feare.
 Who ſo ſhall read this verſe, coniecture of the reſt,
 And thinke by reaſon of our trade, that I do thinke the beſt.
 But if no traffique were, then could I boldly pen
 The hardneſſe of the ſolle, and eke the maners of the men.
 They ſay the Lions paw giues iudgement of the beaſt:
 And ſo may you deeme of the great, by reading of the leaſt.

To Parker.

My Parker, paper, pen, and inke were made to write,
 And idle heads, that little do, haue leiſure to indite:
 Therefore, reſpecting theſe, and thine aſſured loue,
 If I would write no newes to thee, thou might'ſt my pen repproue.
 And ſithence fortune thus hath thou'd my ſhippe on ſhoze:
 And made me ſeake another Realme vnſeene of me befoze:
 The maners of the men I purpoſe to declare,
 And other priuate points beſides, which ſtrange and geazon are.
 The Ruſſie men are round of bodies, fully ſar'd,
 The greateſt part with bellies bigge that ouerhang the waſte,
 Flat headed for the moſt, with faces nothing faire,
 But browne, by reaſon of the ſloue, and cloſeneſſe of the aire:
 It is their common uſe to haue oz els to ſheare
 Their heads, for none in all the land long lolling locks doth weare, Unleſſe perhaps he haue his ſouereigne prince diſpleaſ'd,
 For then he neuer cuts his haire, vntill he be appeaſ'd,
 A certaine ſigne to know who in diſpleaſure be,
 For enery man that viewes his head, will ſay, Loe this is he,
 And during all the time he lets his locks to grow,
 Dares no man for his life to him a face of frienſhip ſhow.
 Their garments be not gay, nor handſome to the eye,
 A cap aloft their heads they haue, that ſtandeth very hie,
 Which Colpack they do terme. They weare no ruffes at all:
 The beſt haue collers ſet with pearle, which they Rubaſca call.
 Their ſhirts in Ruſſie long, they worke them downe befoze,
 And on the ſleeues with coloured Silks, two inches good and more,
 Aloſt their ſhirts they weare a garment iacket wiſe
 Hight Onoriadka, and about his burlie waſte he tyes

His porckies, which in stead of better breeches be:
 Of linnen cloth that garment is, no cobbie is to see.
 A paire of yarnen stocks to keepe the colde away,
 Within his boots the Ruffie weares, the heeles they underlay
 With clouting clamps of Steele, sharpe pointed at the toes,
 And ouer all a Shuba furd, and thus the Ruffie goes,
 Well burned is the Shube, according to his state,
 Some Silke, of Siluer other some: but those of poorest rate
 Do weare no Shubs at all, but grosser gownes to sight,
 That reacheth downe beneath the calfe, and that Armacha hight:
 These are the Ruffies robes. The richest vse to ride
 From place to place, his seruant runnes, and followes by his side,
 The Cassacke beares his felt, to force away the raine:
 Their bridles are not very bzaue, their saddles are but plaine.
 No bits but snaffles all, of birch their saddles be,
 Much fashioned like the Scottish seates, broad flakes to keepe the knee
 From sweating of the horse, the pannels larger farre
 And broader be then ours, they vse short stirrups for the warre:
 For when the Ruffie is pursued by cruel foe,
 He rides away, and suddenly betakes him to his boe,
 And bends me but about in saddle as he sits,
 And therewithall aims his race his following for he hits.
 Their bowes are very short, like Turkie bowes outright,
 Of sinowes made with birchen barke, in cunning maner dight.
 Small arrowes, cruel heads, that fell and forked bee,
 Which being shot from out those bowes, a cruel way will see.
 They seloome vse to shoo their horse, unlesse they ride
 In post vpon the frozen fouds, then cause they shall not slide,
 He sets a slender calke, and so he rides his way.
 The horses of the countrey go good fourescore vcriss a day,
 And all without the spurte, once picke them and they skippe,
 But goe not forward on their way, the Ruffie hath his whyppe
 To rappe him on the ribbes, for though all booted bee,
 Yet shall you not a paire of spurres in all the countrey see,
 The common game is chesse, almost the simplest will Both giue a checke and eke a mate, by practise comes their skill.
 Again they dice as fast, the poorest rogues of all
 Will sit them downe in open field, and there to gaming fall.
 Their dice are very small, in fashion like to those Which we doe vse, he takes them vp, and ouer thumbe he throwes
 Not shaking them a whit, they cast suspiciouly,
 And yet I deeme them voyd of art that dicing most apply.
 At play when Siluer lacks, goes saddle, horse and all,
 And eche thing els worth Siluer walkes, although the price be small.
 Because thou louest to play friend Parker other while,
 I with thee there the weary day with dicing to beguile.
 But thou weart better farre at home, I wist it well,
 And wouldest be loath among such lowes so long a time to dwell,
 Then iudge of vs thy friends, what kinde of life we had,
 That neere the frozen pole to waste our weary dayes were glad,
 In such a sauage soile, where lawes do beare no sway,
 But all is at the king his will, to saue or els to slay.
 And that sans cause, God wot, if so his minde be such,
 But what meane I with Kings to deale: we ought no Saints to touch.
 Conceiue the rest your selfe, and deeme what liues they lead,
 Where lust is Lawe, and Subiects liue continually in dread,
 And where the best estates haue none assurance good
 Of lands, of liues, nor nothing falles vnto the next of blood.
 But all of custome doeth vnto the prince redowne,

And all the whole reuenuē comes vnto the King his crowne,
 Good faith I see thee muse at what I tell thee now,
 But true it is, no choice, but all at princes pleasure bow.
 So Tarquine ruled Rome as thou rememberst well,
 And what his fortune was at last, I know thy selfe canst tell.
 Where will in Common weale doth beare the onely sway,
 And lust is Lawe, the prince and Realme must needs in time decay.
 The strangeness of the place is such for sundry things I see,
 As if I would I cannot write eeh priuate point to thee.
 The colde is rare, the people rude, the prince so full of pride,
 The Realme so storied with Monks and nunnēs, and priests on euery side:
 The maners are so Turkie like, the men so full of guile,
 The women wanton, Temples stufte with idols that defile.
 The Seats that sacred ought to be, the customes are so quaint,
 As if I would describe the whole, I feare my pen would faint.
 In summe, I say I neuer saw a prince that so did raigne,
 Nor people so beset with Saines, yet all but vile and vaine.
 Wilde Irish are as ciuill as the Russies in their kinde,
 Hard choice which is the best of both, ech blooy, rude and blinde,
 If thou bee wise, as wise thou art, and wilt be rul'd by me,
 Lie still at home, and couet not those barbarous coasts to see.
 No good befallēs a man that seeks, and findes no better place,
 No ciuill customes to be leard, where God bestowes no grace.
 And truely ill they do deserue to be belou'd of God,
 That neither loue nor stand in awe of his assured rod:
 Which though be long, yet plagues at last the vile and beastly sort
 Of sinfull wights, that all in vice do place their chiefest sport.
 A diu friend Parker, if thou list, to know the Russes well,
 To Sigismundus booke repaire, who all the trueth can tell:
 For he long earst in message went vnto that sauage King,
 Sent by the Pole, and true report in ech respect did bring.
 To him I recommit my selfe, to ease my penne of paine,
 And now at last do wish thee well, and bid farewell againe.

The fourth voyage into Persia, made by M. Arthur Edwards Agent,

Iohn Sparke, Laurence Chapman, Christopher Faucet, and Richard Pingle, in the yeere 1568. declared in this letter written from Casbin in Persia by the foresaide Laurence Chapman to a worshipfull merchant of the companie of Russia in London. Anno Domini 1569. Aprill 28.

Worshipfull sir, my duetie alwayes rememberd, and your prosperous health, and good successe in all your affaires wished, to the glory of God, and your owne hearts desire, &c. May it please you to vnderstand that your Agent M. Arthur Edwards and we departed from Yeraslaue in July 1568. and the 14. of August arrived at our port called Bilbil, with your ship the Grace of God, and the goods in her in good safetie, God bee thanked for it, finding there neither the people so ready to ayd vs for the bringing of her in, & unlading of the goods, nor yet so obedient to the Shaughs priuilege, as the worshipfull company haue bene informed. Our goods brought vpon land, we were compelled to open & sel as they would set the price, or otherwise it would haue bene worse for vs. Being so satisfied to their contentment, we were speedily aided with camels by the prince Erasbee Sultan his appointment, to carry our goods to Shamaki, to which place we attained the first of September, finding it so thoroughly furnished with all manner of commodities by occasion of our late comming, and by such as came before vs, that no man would aske to buy any one pice of karkie of vs, and lying then the space of one whole moneth before your Agent Arthur Edwards would disperse vs abroad with the goods, such as came out of Russia after wardes, had brought their goods to that and other places, and spoiled those sales wee might haue made, being sent abroad in time conuenient, being no little hinderance to the worshipfull, as also great grieve vnto vs to see. To conclude, through our dayly calling vpon him, he bent himselfe for Casbin, taking with him the greatest summe of the goods, and two of the worshipfull seruants, to witte, Iohn Sparke and my selfe, to helpe and procure the better sale for the same: and leauing at Sha-

Christopher Faucet: and Richard Pingle.

maketh Christopher Faucet and Richard Pingle with three hundred and fiftie pieces of karkies in their handes, supposed to be solde there or in Arrash before hee should be able to make his returne from Casbin, which, so farre soorth as I can vnderstand, hee for the greatest part vsolde. And being vpon our way, at a certaine towne called Ardouil, we chanced to barter nine pieces of karkies with those merchants for fourescore and foure battemans of cynamom, selling the karkies at one hundred and fiftie shawghs the piece.

And being at that present not farre from Teueris, called the principall place in this countrey for bettering of cloth or karkies, by much intreatie I perswaded your Agent to send thither to prooue what might be done, and receiuing from him foure and fiftie pieces of karkies, as also his commission for the sale of the same; I proceeded on that voyage my selfe, and one Tolmach in company with me, finding in that place great store of broad cloth and karkies brought thither, some part by the Turkes who be resident there, some by the Armenians, who fetch them at Aleppo, and some by the townesmen, who trauell vnto Venice and there buy them, so that no man offered me one penie more then a hundred and fourtie shawghs for a karkie: and hauing speciall commission and charge from your Agent not to stay there aboute the space of leuen dayes after my arriuall there, but to repaire to Casbin with all speed, and furthermore, hauing regard to keepe by the price of the woorthfull commodities, according to their desire, I found meanes to barter them away for spices, such as were there to be had, neither in goodnesse nor yet in price to my content: neuer thelesse, considering the colde sales which were there, as well for your karkies, as also the hot newes, that Ormuz way was shut by by occasion that the Indians do warre against them, which is true in deed: and againe the desire that the woorthfull hath to haue such commodities bought, I thought it necessary to buy them, the prices and weight whereof appeareth at large by my accompt sent to the woorthfull, and is, as I thinke, the whole summe of spices bought at this time.

Warre against

The gouernment of Gro-zin his sper-chant.

It chanced me in that place to meet with the gouernours merchant of Grozin, who was not a litle desirous to bargin with me for a hundred pieces of karkies for his master called Leuontie, and offering me so good bands for the paiement of the money or like to the merchants contentment vpon the deliuey of them, as in any place within all this countrey is to be had: and offering me besides his owne letter in the behalfe of his master, that no custome should be demanded for the same, and the obtaining also at his masters hand as large a priuilege for the woorthfull to trauele into all parts of his dominion, as the Shaugh had giuen them, and hearing good report made of him by the Armenians also, and that he was a Christian, I was much more the willing to bargin with him, and sold him a hundred pieces for a hundred and threescore shawghs a piece, to be paid to the merchant in Grozin either in money or like to his contentment, within three dayes after the deliuey of the karkies there, hauing a band of him made by the Metropolitans owne hand, for the performance of the same, which is as sure as any here is to be deuised: and vpon the same I sent my Tolmach from me backe to Shamaki, with such goods as I bought at Teueris, and to the end hee might cause the woorthfulls seruants there to see this bargin accomplished. At whose arriuall there, as I do perceiue, the Captaine would not accomplish his bargin to take them, but saith, hee hath no need of them: such is the constancie of all men in this countrey, with whomsoever you shal bargin. If the ware be bought, and they doe mislike it afterwards, they will bring it againe, and compel you to deliuey the money for it againe, regarding the Shawghs letters, which manifesteth the contrary, as a straw in the winde: by meanes whereof, the woorthfull may know whether all be true that hath bene written of this countrey people or not.

The generall inconstancie in the merchants and dealers of those parts.

I am informed by all the brokers in Teueris, that the way once open to Ormuz, from whence cometh no such store of spices as the woorthfull doeth looke for, that here will be put a way in Teueris, some for money, and other some for barter, to the number of three hundred or foure hundred pieces of karkies, being in coulers and goodnesse to the examples here sent you, the rest of the karkies to make them by a thousand, and broad cloths to the summe of a hundred, bee as many as will be put away peereily in this countrey, so farre as yet I can perceiue.

The trade betweene the Ve-nerians and the Armenians not easily to be broken.

To breake the trade betwixt the Venetians and the whole company of the Armenians it is not possible, vnlesse the woorthfull will finde some meanes to receiue of them perely to the number of 100. catters or mules lading, and deliuey them for the same one third part money, the rest cloth and karkies fitted in coulers meete for this countrey: the examples, as aboue said, are sent vnto you.

At Amadia sixe dayes iourney from Teueris, grow abundance of galls, which are brought by perely by the Venetians, and be solde there for two bisses the Teueris batteman, which as your Agent here saith, maketh sixe pound English weight, but I doubt it wil not so be proued. Neuer thelesse it is supposed much good will be done by buying of them: which might at this present haue partly bene proued, if so be that some could do but halfe that which hath bene written.

Touching drugges, I finde many as well at Teueris, as also in Casbin, but the goodnesse nothing like to such as be brought into England out of other places : & the price is so high that small gaine will be had in buying of them : albeit, if I had bene furnished with money, as I might haue bene, if some would, I would haue bought some, to the ende the goodnesse of them might haue bene seene in England. At my coming to Casbin I found no manner of sales of any commodities made, but all lying there whole, and newes giuen out (as your Agent saith) that y^e Shaugh would buy all such commodities as he had, and giue him silke and spices for the same : but by report the Shaugh neuer took cloth into his treasure all the dayes of his life, and will not now begin : his whole trade is in raw silke, which he selleth alwayes for money to the Armenians and Turkes, and such other as vse to buy it : thus hoping of that which is not like to be had, he hath diuinen off the time, not tending to any other places : by means wherof the worshipfull goods lie vnfold to this day to their great hindrance, which I for my part am not a little sorry to see.

Babylon is from hence fiftene dayes iourney, whereas by true report be great store of Dates, and sold for a bisse the batman, the commoditie fit for England, and the place so neere vnto vs might easily haue bene knowen, if hee, whose deeds and sayings differ much, had bene willing to the same. Cassan also is but seuen dayes iourney from hence, & a place by report where most store of spices be at all times to be had, euery and aboute any place in this countrey : it could not be granted by him to be seen and prooued at this time : if this be losse to the worshipfull, referre it to the want of one which can do that which he speaketh in words.

dayes iourney
from Casbin.

To trauell in this countrey is not onely miserable and uncomfortable for lacke of townes and villages to harbour in when night cometh, and to refresh men with wholesome victuals in time of need, but also such scarcitie of water, that sometime in thre dayes iourney together, is not to be found any drop fit for man or beast to drinke, besides the great danger we stand in for robbing by these infidels, who doe account it remission of sinnes to wash their hands in the blood of one of vs. Better it is therefore in mine opinion to continue a beggar in England during life, then to remaine a rich Merchant seuen yeeres in this Countrey, as some shall well find at their coming hither.

By commandement of the Agent also I went to Gilan, as well to see what harbor was there for your ship, as also to vnderstand what commoditie is there best sold, and for what quantitie. I found the way from hence so dangerous and troublesome, that with my pen I am not able to note it vnto you : no man traueleth from hence thither, but such poore people as need constraineth to buy Rice for their reliefe to liue vpon, and they lay not aboute twentie batmans vpon a catter, and it lieth no lower then the skirts of the saddle, and he caryeth very hardly that cometh there with the same.

This voyage to Gilan.

The towne of Laighon, which was the chiefe place in all that land, haue I seen, and Langro and Rosar also, which be now ouerrun by the Shaugh and his power, and he so spoiled, & the people so robbed, that not one of them is able to buy one karlie. The best commoditie there to be bought, is raw silke, and is sold in the Summer time for 38. Shaughs the Laighon batman, which is litle about 40. li. waight, and for ready money : also there is to be had what store of Alom you will, and sold there for one bisse the Tueris batman.

In these partes be many Turkie merchants resident, which giue an outward shew, as though they were glad of our coming hither, but secretly they be our mortall enemies, searching by all meanes to hinder our sales, because we should the sooner giue ouer our trade thither, which in proesse of time I hope will growe to better perfection. They wish vs to go to Hallape with the rest of our commodities vnfold, where they say we shall haue good intertainment in spite of the great number of Aenettians which be there resident, and the custome but two in the hundred, and our karlies to be sold presently, had we neuer so many, for twelue duckets, which maketh of this money 165. Shaughs : but by such as know the place, market and custome, it is reported to vs credibly to the contrary, and that such karlies as ours be, are not sold for aboute 8. duckets there : the custome thirtie in the hundred and more, that no place in the world is so well furnished with good cloth and karlies, and of so brane colour as that place is, supposing it to be craftily purposed of them, to bring vs into trouble, which God defend vs from.

The malice of the Turkish
merchants.

The price of spices be these, at this present enhanced by reason y^e way is shut to Ormus, which when God shall send open, I purpose (God willing) to see, and at my returne to aduertise the worshipfull what benefit is there to be had in all points, so neere as I can learne : Pepper 25. Shaughs the Tueris batman : Cloues 50. Shaughs, Long pepper 25. Shaughs, Dates large 50. Shaughs Ginger 24. Shaughs, ready money all, or els looke not vpon them. And the best sort of rawe silke is sold for 60. Shaughs the Tueris batman. Thus for want of further matter to enlarge, I ende for this time, beseeching God to preserve you in continuall health.

Notes

Notes concerning this fourth voyage into Persia, begun in the moneth of July 1568. gathered by M. Richard Willes from the mouth of Master Arthur Edwards, which was Agent in the same.

When he came first to the Sophies presence, at his court in Casbin, bringing his interpreter with him, and standing farre off, the Sophie (sitting in a seat roiall with a great number of his noble men about him) bad him come neere, and that thise, until he came so neere him that he might haue touched him with his had. Then the first demand that he asked him was, from what countrey he came: he answered, that he came from England. Then asked hee of his noble men, who knew any such countrey? But when Edwards saw that none of them had any intelligence of that name, he nam'd it Inghilterra, as the Italians call England. Then one of the noble mē said Londro, meaning thereby Londō, which name is better known in far countries out of Chzistendom, then is the name of England. When Edwards heard him name Londro he said that that was the name of the chiefe citie of England, as was Tueris of the chiefe city of Persia. He asked him many things more, as of the realme of England, maruelling that it should be an Island of so great riches and power, as Edwards declar'd unto him: of the riches & abundance of our merchandize he further understood by our traffike in Moscouia and other countreys. He demanded also many things of the Quenes maiestie, and of the customes and lawes of the realme: saying oftentimes in his owne language, Bara colla, (that is to say) Well sayd. He asked also many things of king Philip, & of his wars against the Turke at Malta. Then he demand'd of him what was the chiefe cause of his resort into his realme. And being certifi'd that it was for the trade of merchandize, he asked what kind of merchandize he could bring thither. Such (sayd hee) as the Venetian merchants do, which dwelling in our country in the city of Londro send to Venice, & from thence into Turkie by Halepo & Tripoli in Syria, from whence, as by the second and third hands, with great charges of many customs and other things thereunto pertaining, they are at the length brought into your countrey and cities of Persia. What merchandize are those? sayd the Sophie. Edwards answered, that they were great abundance of fine karkies, of broad clothes of all sorts & colours, as skarlets, violets, and other of the finest cloth of all the world. Also that the Venetians brought out of England not onely such clothes ready made, but further more great plenty of fine wooll to mingle with their wools, of which they could not otherwise make fine cloth: affirming that there went out of England yearly that waies, aboue two hundred thousand karkies, and as many broad clothes, beside fine wooll & other merchandize, beside also the great abundance of like clothes, the which were caried into Spaine, Barbarie, & diuers other countries. The Sophie then asked him by what means such merchandize might be brought into Persia. Right well sir (said he) by the way of Moscouia, with more safety and in much shorter time then the Venetians can bring them: first from England to Venice, and from thence into Persia by the way of Turkie. And therefore if it shal please your maiestie to grant vs free passage into all your dominions, with such priuileges as may appertaine to the safeguard of our liues, goods and merchandize, we will furnish your countries with all such merchandize and other commodities, in shorter time, and better cheape then you may haue the same at the Turks hands. This talke and much more was between the Sophie and Edwards for the space of two houres: all which things liked him so well, that shortly after he granted to the sayd Arthur Edwards other priuileges for the trade of merchandize into Persia, all written in Azure and gold letters, and deliuered unto the lord keeper of the Sophie his great seale. The lord keeper was named Coche Califay, who sayd that when the Shaugh (that is the king or prince) did sit to seale any letters, that last priuiledge should be sealed & deliuered to Laurence Chapman. In this priuiledge is one principall article for seruants or merchants: That if the Agent do perceiue that vpon their naughtie doings, they would become Buformen, that then the Agent where soeuer he shall find any such seruant or seruants, to take them and put them in prison, and no person to keepe them or maintaine them. This article was granted in respect of a custome among the Persians, being Hahumetans, whose maner is friendly to receiue and wel entertaine, both with gifts and liuing, all such Christians, as forsaking their religion, wil become of the religion of the Persians. In so much that before this priuiledge was granted, there was great occasion of naughty seruants to deceiue and rob their masters, that vnder the colour of professing that religion, they might liue among them in such safetie, that you might haue no lawe agaynst them, either to punish them or to recouer your goods at their hands, or elsewhere. For before the Sophie (whom they say to be a maruelous wise and gracious prince) seemed to fauour our nation, and to grant them such priuiledges, the people abused them very much, and so hated them, that they would not touch them, but reuiled them, calling them Casars and Gawars, which is, infidels or misbelieuers. But after they saw how greatly the prince fauoured them, they had them afterward in great reuerence, and would kisse their hands and vse them very friendly. For before they tooke it for no wrong to rob them, defraud them, beare false witness against them, and such merchandizes as they had bought or sold, make them take it againe, and change it as often as them listed. And if any stranger by chance had killed one of them, they would haue the life of two for one slaine, and for the debts of any stranger would take the goods of any other of the same nation, with many other such like abuses, in maner vnknown to the prince, before the complaints of our men came vnto him for reformation of such abuses: which were the cause that no merchant strangers of contrary religion durst come into his dominions with their commodities, which might be greatly to the profite of him and his subiects.
